"The officers selected by me originally for the Expedition represented every branch of the Control, except the Barrack. They were found able to deal with any Control duties they were called on to perform, and they worked in perfect harmony together.

"The experience gained from this service in Canada must, in my opinion, be considered as favourable to the Control system. Called upon, with a much diminished establishment, to deal suddenly and within a period of six months with a Fenian raid, with the Red River Expedition, with the disposal and shipment home of a vast quantity of stores, and with the changes consequent on the withdrawal of the troops, the Department has met the calls made upon it, in addition to its ordinary duties, with a quickness, united action, and success which may fairly be attributed to the union of the several branches into one Department under one Head; while the power afforded to the Controller of utilising any officer for any work for which he was at the moment most wanted, was found in many instances very necessary, and unquestionably enabled a lesser staff to be maintained, and emergencies to be better met and overcome."

* The restriction was subsequently removed as regards stores other than munitions of war, but not till too late to be of much avail.

and stores had to be landed from her at Sault St. Marie. The "Warbuno" was a small craft, capable of carrying but a company of 50 men. Anything shipped in her had to be landed at Sault St. Marie.

Sault St. Marie is a rapid on the St. Mary River, which runs from Lake Superior to Lake Huron, and divides British from American territory. The canal through which vessels have to pass to avoid the rapid is unfortunately on the American side. The "Portage" road, on the Canadian side, is upwards of 2½ miles long.

A possible difficulty with the United States Government was foreseen; and the owners of the steamer "Algoma," on making their first trip of the season, were directed not to return into Lake Huron, but await orders on the Lake Superior side.

This was most fortunate, as just afterwards the "Chicora" was refused permission to pass through the canal. She landed her stores on the Canadian side, and returned to Collingwood. The restriction was taken off immediately for all stores not munitions of war, but not before a large collection of every description had been made at the Sault. This collection was constantly being added to by the Lake Huron steamers bringing more on from Collingwood.

The American propeller "Brooklyn" was hired at Detroit to assist the "Algoma" on Lake Superior; and in addition the American steamers "Clematis," "Union," and "Arctic" were chartered.

Notwithstanding this assistance, nearly one month elapsed before the Force, with all its stores and supplies, was landed at Prince Arthur's Landing.

Stores damaged
cient.

There was no cover or protection for the stores and supplies lying at the Sault beyond what could be given by tarpaulins. They were all carted from one end of the Portage to the other by the transport, sent there for the purpose under Captain Nagle, and shipped as quickly as possible in the first steamer arriving.

In consequence of the shallowness of the water, the steamers had to lay a long way off, and everything had therefore to be put on board by means of a scow. On arriving in Thunder Bay they had again to be landed by a scow, then carted to the camping ground.

Many of the supplies and stores had come from great distances—the biscuit as far as from Quebec; and the packages, though of the ordinary description used in this country, proved, from the difficulties which occurred at Sault St. Marie, and from the constant handling and transshipment, not sufficiently strong for the service. The result of this was considerable loss.

Distribution of Force.

The Force was thus finally distributed :—

Royal Artillery, Royal Engineers, and 1st Battalion 60th Rifles, proceeded to Fort Garry, and returned without delay.

The 1st Ontario Militia proceeded to Fort Garry, leaving one company encamped at Fort Frances until the 1st September, when it proceeded on to Fort Garry.

The 2nd Quebec Militia proceeded to the Lower Fort Garry, or Stone Fort, with the exception of one company, which remained at Prince Arthur's Landing until the return of the Regular troops to the province of Quebec, where it likewise returned.

PROVISIONS.

The ration.

The ration, as laid down in the Standing Orders issued at Toronto on the 14th May, 1870, by Colonel Wolseley (copy annexed, and marked A), consisted of 1 lb. of biscuit, or 1½ lb. bread, or 1½ lb. flour; 1 lb. salt pork, or 1½ lb. fresh meat; 2 ozs. of sugar; 1 oz. of tea; ½ oz. of salt with fresh meat; ⅓ pint of beans, or ¼ lb. preserved potatoes; ⅓ oz. pepper. When fresh vegetables were obtainable, 1 lb. was issued as the ration. In camp, when no very hard work was being done, this ration was found to be ample; but when working on the roads and in the boats, the men could eat from 1½ to 2 lbs. both of biscuit and pork, and on any similar Expedition the ration should be increased. The ration of tea might perhaps be reduced to ⅔ oz. per man per day, if the troops are together in considerable numbers. The sugar should be increased to 3 ozs.

Biscuit.

The biscuit was chiefly obtained from Quebec, delivered there at 3¼ cents per lb. It was that known as No. 1, and was of excellent quality, as indeed were all the supplies without exception. The barrels in which it was packed proved, as already stated, not sufficiently strong, especially as it was found necessary to abandon the original idea of transferring it to bags at Thunder Bay, and instead to take the barrels through to Red River.

Fresh bread.

Fresh bread was issued at the camps at Prince Arthur's Landing, the Matawan Bridge, the Dam-site, Fort Frances, and lastly at Fort Garry. For this purpose, six field oven, Aldershot pattern, were sent with the military stores, and seven men of the Army Service Corps were bakers. Three ovens were worked at Prince Arthur's Landing, and fresh bread was issued there throughout the time the Expedition lasted. Two were worked at the Matawan Bridge, and one of these afterwards taken on to the Dam-site. Another was taken on by one of the first brigades of boats, and worked at Fort Frances. At Fort Garry and the Lower Fort, brick ovens were found, and worked at once.

The bread was invariably beautifully baked, and was much relished by the troops, especially at Fort Frances, where it was issued to them going and returning, and after they had been for many days on biscuit.

At the Dam-site, or Ward's Landing, where two men of the Army Service Corps worked but one oven, 470 ration loaves of $1\frac{1}{2}$ lb. each were turned out on the 17th July, the oven not holding more than 90 or 100 rations. No. 1144, Serjeant Joseph Jarvis, Army Service Corps, had charge of all the field ovens at different times. From a statement rendered by him (annexed and marked B), it appears that on the average 100 lbs. of flour yielded 135 lbs. bread.

The flour was of the very best brands; that taken in the Expedition boats was in half barrels containing 98 lbs.; these were stronger and more handy than the whole barrels, yet from the rough usage they had to receive also required an immense deal of re-coopering. The price, exclusive of freight, was 4 dollars 75 cents the whole barrel of 196 lbs. Flour.

The salt pork was supplied at 29 dollars 98 cents per barrel of 200 lbs.; it was that known as mess pork, the best quality. Like the flour, that taken in the boats was in half barrels of 100 lbs. each. Hardly a complaint was heard of its quality; it was generally pronounced excellent. Salt pork.

The rough handling and the intense heat of the sun caused much trouble and anxiety on account of the pork; it had constantly to be re-coopered and re-brined. The loss from it becoming bad was nevertheless trifling. On the arrival of two companies of the 1st Militia at Fort Garry, they returned several barrels into store in a stinking state. As this was exceptional, a Court of Enquiry was held, and it was found they had wittingly drawn off the brine at one of the first "portages" they had come to, so as to lighten their loads. They were condemned to pay 140 dollars.

Some of the pork barrels were hooped with iron, others with wood. The iron were the best for the purpose, as the wooden hoops, standing out from the barrel, hurt the men's backs when portaging.

Fresh beef was supplied at Thunder Bay, and along the road to Shebandowan Lake, at $19\frac{3}{4}$ cents per lb. The contract was very well fulfilled. Fresh beef.

At Fort Frances, on the westward journey, three head of cattle were obtained from the Hudson Bay Company at a charge of 6d. sterling per lb. We were unable to obtain any returning, and the garrison left there were rationed on salt pork. In the same way, at the Hudson Bay post at the mouth of the Winnipeg River, Fort Alexander, the troops had fresh meat going, but not returning. Whilst at Fort Garry, the troops had fresh meat issued to them daily.

The sugar was that known in the market as "dry crushed," and was contracted for on the recommendation of Mr. Donald Smith, of the Hudson Bay Company, as being that used by the Company. The price at Montreal was $12\frac{1}{4}$ cents per lb. It is white sugar, and almost equally as good as "loaf." The packages were excellent, water-tight, iron-hooped barrels of two sizes; the larger contained on the average about 100 lbs., the lesser 80 lbs. Of all the packages containing supplies, these were acknowledged to be the best. Sugar.

The tea, purchased at 38 cents per lb., was, I believe, the very best black tea obtainable in Canada or elsewhere. It was packed in the ordinary tea-chest, and was covered with matting. It was understood, from the best information that could be obtained, that this would be sufficient protection; but our experience shows that more is required to withstand the wet and damp, and the rough work of the portages. I would recommend, in addition to the matting, a stout waterproof cover. Tea.

On the route, much was preserved by the tins supplied each boat, and referred to hereafter under the head of "Packages."

The beans supplied were the ordinary white bean, an excellent vegetable. The cost was $2\frac{3}{4}$ cents per lb. A general objection was raised to the time they required for cooking—a great objection when an hour's halt was all that could be allowed for dinner. They were sewn up in bags containing about 100 lbs. These bags proved not strong enough for the purpose, and considerable losses were the consequence. Beans.

Preserved potatoes.

The preserved potatoes sent from England were exactly what was required ; with boiling water, a few minutes was all that was necessary to prepare them. They were contained in tins hermetically sealed ; these tins were again in wooden cases, making a good strong package adapted to the service. Once the tin was out of the case, it was not sufficiently strong, was soon broken, and damp would then spoil the potatoes.

There were 56 lbs., or 224 rations, in a tin. On being opened, some of the potatoes were found to be damaged, probably caused by the tins not being quite air-tight, and the wet and damp, to which everything was exposed, getting in.

Fresh vegetables.

Fresh vegetables were supplied from Collingwood to the troops so long as they were on the Thunder Bay road. On the return of the troops they were obtained from the Hudson Bay Company's post, Fort William. Between Shebandowan and Fort Garry, none were supplied the troops.

Miscellaneous supplies. Spirits.

3,000 lbs. of tobacco and 2,000 lbs. soap were taken on the Expedition, and issued to the troops at Thunder Bay on repayment.

It will be observed that spirits formed no part of the ration, and nothing of the kind was procurable by the men whilst on the route. Tea only was used, and I believe every man returned in as good if not better health than when he left.

Packages.

In each boat, in addition to the packages already described as containing the provisions, there were placed several round tin canisters of different sizes, which were used for the tea, sugar, pepper, &c., after the larger packages were opened. These tins were particularly useful, not only from being very handy and convenient, but also being water-proof the groceries were protected from wet and damp. There was a small size capable of holding 1 lb. of pepper, and others that held from 12 to 15 lbs. tea, and from 30 to 40 lbs. sugar.

About 10 bags (ordinary 2-bushel bags) were placed in each boat, and were used for flour, biscuit, beans, &c., as their own packages became broken and useless. The texture of these bags was hardly tight enough, though they answered fairly. On any future occasion, the stoutest canvas bag procurable should be taken.

From the hurried manner in which the supplies had to be procured, it was found impossible to obtain a sufficient number of half pork barrels ; but should a similar Expedition ever be organized, it would be very desirable that all the biscuit, as also the flour, should be packed in half pork barrels, or, better still, the "fish barrel," of which large quantities are manufactured at Collingwood. Both descriptions are water-tight, and have the extra advantage of holding a smaller quantity than the ordinary flour barrel, and of therefore being more portable.

A supply of empty half pork barrels was received at Thunder Bay before the final departure of the troops from Shebandowan ; these were used as far as possible for biscuit, and this biscuit kept in admirable condition.

FORAGE.Forage.

In consequence of the large transport establishment required on the Thunder Bay Road, hay, oats, and ox-feed had to be provided. These were supplied under contracts made by the Dominion Government at Collingwood and Owen's Sound, and at the following prices :—Hay, 12 dollars 62 cents per 2,000 lbs. ; oats, 34 cents per bushel ; ox-feed, 26 dollars per 2,000 lbs.

The first ration issued to the horses was 10 lbs. oats and 12 lbs. hay. This was soon found to be far from sufficient ; the horses could not do on it the severe work required of them. The ration was therefore gradually increased up to as much as 16 lbs. of oats and 17 lbs. of hay, or in fact to as much as they could eat.

The oxen were fed on hay and ox-feed, and received such quantities as they required.

FUEL, LIGHT, AND WATER.Fuel, light, and water.

No light was issued on the Expedition ; and from the nature of the country through which the troops passed, the men were able to help themselves to wood and water ad libitum.

LAND TRANSPORT.Land transport.

From Thunder Bay to Shebandowan Lake is a distance of 48 miles. To connect these waters, the Dominion Government were, at the time of the starting of the Expedition, making a road. Everything required for the Expedition, boats included, had therefore to be carted this distance. For the purpose a train was organized, and 150 horses, 36 oxen, 50 wagons, 30 carts, with the necessary harness, were purchased.

81 of the horses were taken from the batteries Royal Artillery stationed in Canada. Horses. All the horses were fine animals, and did the severe work admirably; only five of them died.

The oxen were fine animals also, but not as useful as the horses. Much of the road Oxen. was "corduroyed," and this hurt their feet. Shoeing was tried, but the sticky clay found on many parts of the road invariably drew off the shoes; there was little work, therefore, got out of these animals.

The wagons were principally built at Markham, near Toronto, and were well Wagons. adapted to the work. The box was made of 1 inch pine lumber, with a floor of $1\frac{1}{4}$ inch, the dimensions being—length 9 feet 10 inches, width 3 feet 6 inches, depth 1 foot 2 inches. The distance between axles was 5 feet $9\frac{1}{2}$ inches; between wheels, 5 feet 3 inches; diameter of hind wheel, 4 feet 6 inches; fore wheel, 3 feet 9 inches. The tire was $1\frac{3}{4}$ inches wide. Total weight of wagon, 980 lbs. Weight of a hind wheel, 105 lbs., and of a fore wheel 95 lbs. They were well and strongly-built, required but little repair, and were all in fair serviceable condition on the termination of the Expedition.

When the wagons were used for the conveyance of boats the boxes were taken off, the axles were connected by long "reaches," and on the axles wooden cradles were erected to raise the boats over the wheels, and they were thus carried keel upwards.

The box carts, like the oxen, were not adapted to the service; they could carry Carts. but little, and were hard upon the horses. The dimensions of box were—Length, 5 feet 4 inches; width, 3 feet 4 inches; height, 1 foot $1\frac{1}{2}$ inch; diameter of wheels, 4 feet 6 inches; width of tire, 3 inches.

The harness, double and single, purchased at Toronto, was well made and serviceable, Harness. excepting the collars, which were generally found to be too small; consequently galled necks became common, and a great number of horses were daily shown as non-effective. Some breast-harness was at once sent for, and this enabled us to work the horses with sore necks.

I would advise, on all occasions, breast-harness being in reserve, for use when the collar galls.

The establishment consisted, in addition to the officers mentioned on page 3, of a Transport Veterinary Surgeon and 2 Head Teamsters, with wages at 40 dollars per month each; Establishment. 5 Assistant Head Teamsters, 2 at 30 dollars and 3 at 28 dollars per month; a Shoeing Smith, at 35 dollars; a Collar Maker, at 35 dollars; and 96 Teamsters, at 22 dollars per month.

The road being newly cut through the forest, and being unmade, it was found this Additional transport was not sufficient for the work to be done,—21 additional Teamsters were hired therefore hired by the month at Collingwood, with their teams, and brought to Thunder transport. Bay. This system was found to work admirably, as the farmers not only worked willingly, but naturally were more careful of their horses than the other teamsters; they were paid 3 dollars per diem, were provided with passages from and to Collingwood, and free rations for man and horse.

The other teamsters having been collected together in a hurry could not be expected Teamsters. to be a good class of men, and there was some little trouble with them at first. Two of them were brought before a Magistrate, and committed to the prison at Sault St. Marie, for disobedience of orders in driving furiously, and this had a wholesome effect on the others, and they generally behaved well afterwards. They had to endure great hardships, going daily over the worst of roads in very bad weather.

It rained almost every day whilst we were in the district.

On the return journey of the troops from Fort Garry, Captain Buller's Company of Transport the 1st Battalion of the 60th Rifles, marched from Fort Garry to the north-west angle between of the Lake of the Woods, where they were met by Captain Scott's Company of the Fort Garry 1st Ontario Militia, en route from Fort Frances to Fort Garry. The distance of this and north- land journey was about 110 miles. west angle, Lake of the Woods.

The country cart was hired for transport, and could travel over 80 miles of the road. The cart was a simple floor on two wheels, its only peculiarity being the absence of tires to the wheels. As it is only used on the soft prairie roads, tires are not required. For 30 miles there was no road, and the path lay through woods and swamps, and for this distance pack-horses had to be used.

I annex (marked D.) Captain Buller's description of the pack-saddle.

WATER TRANSPORT.

The distance to be travelled by water was about 560 miles. For this purpose 140 Boats. boats were provided by the Dominion Government. These boats varied considerably in size, and were built in all parts of the provinces of Quebec and Ontario. Some were "carvel," others "clinker" built. The average length may be taken as being about 32 feet and 6 feet beam. Each boat could fit up two masts, and six oars were generally used.

The boat equipment is laid down in paras. 3 and 4 of the Standing Orders (Enclosure A).

125 of these boats left M'Neill Bay, Shebandowan Lake, conveying troops. In addition there were provided for the use of the Colonel Commanding and other Staff Officers a light "gig" and three large bark canoes.

Statement C. annexed shows the number of persons and quantity of stores, over and above the boat equipment and personal equipment of the officers and men, embarked.

Baggage.

Each officer was limited to 90 lbs. baggage, which he carried in two waterproof bags, such as are used by the men of the Army Service Corps.

Voyageurs.

To manage the boats, 400 voyageurs were engaged by the Dominion Government; only two men were, however, put into each boat. In addition to these, Indian guides had to be engaged at different points along the route. Many of the men engaged were found to be perfectly useless, knowing little or nothing of the management of boats; the best and most useful of all were the Irroquois Indians hired at Caughnawaga, near Montreal.

The boats and voyageurs not required for the conveyance of the troops were employed forwarding a reserve of supplies to Fort Frances.

STORES.

Arms and ammunition.

There were landed at Thunder Bay four 7-pr. bronze mountain guns, with about 800 rounds of ammunition, 309,550 rounds of small-arm ammunition, in addition to 60 rounds carried by each man; 100 stand of rifles and accoutrements were also received there as a reserve.

It was feared that the Fenians might make an attack on Prince Arthur's landing, and therefore a larger quantity of ammunition was sent forward than was estimated as requisite for the expedition.

Immediately on the arrival of the troops, a strong stockade was built, under the superintendence of Lieutenant Heneage R.E., within which was erected a magazine, and here, during the summer, the ammunition was kept.

The Artillery carried with them to the Red River two of the guns, with 150 rounds for each. A reserve of 111,000 rounds small-arm ammunition was distributed throughout the boats.

For the protection of the ammunition in the pouches whilst en route, waterproof bags were constructed, to hold 10 pouches with belts; these answered well.

Arm chests to hold 10 rifles were made, and one put into each boat. There were some complaints of the rifles getting wet in these boxes, but on the whole they answered the required purpose.

The two guns and the reserve ammunition were handed over to the Militia at Fort Garry. The two guns, with the ammunition and arms left at Prince Arthur's Landing were taken back to Quebec with the troops on their return.

Camp equipment.

In consequence of the peculiar nature of the service, the smallest possible quantity of stores were taken on the Expedition.

For a brigade of boats, consisting of 3 Officers, 50 men, and 12 or 13 voyageurs, there would be but 1 tent for the Officers, 4 for the soldiers, and 1 for the voyageurs.

For cooking purposes Flanders kettles and frying-pans were used.

Besides axes, spades, and shovels, a few tools for engineer purposes were all the stores taken on the march.

Clothing and necessities.

A free kit was issued to the soldiers, consisting of 1 serge frock, 1 pair serge trousers, 1 pair oxford boots, 2 pairs worsted socks, 2 flannel shirts, 1 housewife, 1 woollen night-cap, 1 cap cover with peak, 1 mosquito net, 1 clasp knife, 1 tin cup, 1 tin plate.

Each soldier had also issued to him 2 grey blankets—field service—and 1 waterproof sheet. Waterproof bags were provided for holding 10 blankets, and used in the boats. The field service grey blanket was found to be too poor an article for this service; there was little or no warmth in it.

HOSPITALS.

Two hospital marquees were pitched for hospital purposes at Thunder Bay. A large supply of medical comforts were sent for use in this hospital, as well as the necessary equipment for 36 patients.

No hospital diets were issued; whilst in hospital the patients drew their field rations. "Extras" were issued as required. With each brigade of boats there was forwarded a box containing a small supply of comforts for use on the march. Diets.

An establishment for 36 patients was also taken on to Fort Frances; but bell tents only were used, the marquees being considered too heavy to be taken on the journey. The equipment, comforts, &c., at Fort Frances were finally sent on to Fort Garry; those at Prince Arthur's Landing were brought back to Canada.

CASH.

At Thunder Bay and along the route all payments were made in Canadian Bank or Provincial notes brought from Toronto for the purpose. Funds.

At Fort Garry funds were raised, principally through the Hudson Bay Company, by draft on the Staff Paymaster, Montreal.

Extraordinary field allowance was issued for six months. Field allowance.

Free rations were issued to the soldiers. Officers paid the usual ration stoppage of 1½d. per diem, and when receiving "extras" from hospital paid the stoppage of 1s. Stoppages.

POSTAL ARRANGEMENTS.

As there were no established means of communication along the route, arrangements were made with the Hudson Bay Company to place Indians with light canoes at different points, and by them the mails were regularly forwarded during August and September. Mails.

EXPEDITION.

As stated in the preamble, the first detachment of troops arrived at Thunder Bay on the 25th May. There was a small wharf or jetty off the landing-place, but not a sufficiency of water for the large steamers to lay alongside, consequently all the men, horses, and stores had to be brought from the vessels in a large flat-bottomed scow. The scow was generally worked by a rope from the vessel to the wharf. For five weeks we had the services of a small tug, and she was of great use in landing stores and towing the scow when the steamers anchored at too great a distance for the rope to be used, and also in towing the boats up the Kemanistaquia River to the first rapid, about 10 miles from the mouth.

At Prince Arthur's Landing we found a few buildings belonging to the Public Works Department, and occupied by their employés. This department, under the superintendence of Simon J. Dawson, Esq., in a few days erected for our use two large store sheds, as well as stabling for a large number of horses. In addition to the sheds, four hospital marquees were pitched as store-houses, but notwithstanding this, we had always quantities of stores exposed to the weather.

Thunder Bay is now connected with Shebandowan Lake by a good road, the length of which is 48 miles. On the arrival of the troops the state of the road was about this—30 miles of it was considered as made, but from the nature of the ground in heavy weather many parts became almost impassable; 12 miles were cut through the forest, but the road not sufficiently cleared of stumps, or the swamps sufficiently corduroyed to be fit for the passage of troops or laden wagons; the remainder of the distance had not been touched—the trees were standing.

Fine bridges had been built over the Kemanistaquia and Matawan Rivers, where the road crosses them (21½ and 26 miles from Thunder Bay), but a bridge had not been commenced over the Oskondagee Creek, 38 miles from the Bay.

As not only all our stores but also all our boats had to be got over this road, it became a matter of the utmost importance to assist in making it. Troops were therefore posted at different points where the Public Works Department required them. The first troops to work on the road were two companies of the 60th Rifles, who left Thunder Bay on the 28th May and encamped at Kemanistaquia River. The weather then became very bad, and the prospect of our getting over the road appeared to be hopeless.

About a dozen boats had been carted as far as the Matawan Bridge, and safely launched in that river, when it was suggested to Colonel Wolseley that the remainder might be sent to this point via the Kemanistaquia River into which the Matawan flows, and so save our land transport.

Much opposition was raised to this plan, as it was said the dangers on the river were so great that the boats would all surely get severely damaged; the trial was however successfully made by Captain Young, of the 60th Rifles, and the other boats were then sent that way, manned by soldiers and voyageurs. It was then found practicable to send the boats and stores by the Matawan River to a point $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles further on the road, and which was named "Young's Landing." From here about 5 miles the river was again found to be navigable, but the road passed more than a mile from the river; a lane was cut to it, and that point was called "Calderon's Landing." From Calderon's Landing to the Oskondagee Creek boats and stores could be taken by water. From the Oskondagee to the Dam-site everything had to be carted. The Dam-site was three miles from the Lake and on the river running out of it. From here everything went by water to M'Neill Bay, the starting point on Shebandowan Lake.

At all these different points camps had to be formed, as strong fatigue and road parties were requisite. At several of the posts, under Mr. Dawson's superintendence, stables and sheds were erected for horses and stores.

The first troops encamped on the road on the 28th May; the last embarkation at Shebandowan was on the 1st August, so that for two months the small force were scattered over 50 miles of country, and much care and trouble were necessary to keep them well and fully supplied.

Had the land transport only been used we could not possibly have got away for ten days or a fortnight later, and this delay would have made a great difference in the return journey. Working road and river together was a most happy thought.

On the final embarkation of the Expeditionary Force, one company of the Quebec Militia remained as a garrison at Prince Arthur's Landing.

It was found on loading the boats at M'Neill Bay that they could carry 60 days' supplies. The Colonel Commanding then altered his arrangements for halting the brigades on different portages, as laid down in para. 12 et seq. of Standing Orders, and directed all to proceed at once to Fort Frances. A reserve of 200 barrels biscuit, 200 barrels ($\frac{1}{2}$) flour, 200 barrels ($\frac{1}{2}$) pork, 74 bags beans, 26 chests tea, 28 barrels sugar, was forwarded after them to Fort Frances by the spare boats and voyageurs, as stated on page 8.

From M'Neill Bay to Fort Garry the route taken by the Expeditionary Force is, roughly, a distance of 560 miles. There were along the route 42 portages, varying in length from 40 to 1,800 yards; over these the boats and stores had all to be conveyed. Trees were cut and laid down as "skids," over which the boats were hauled; the stores were carried on the mens' backs. Rope slings were provided, so that barrels slung between poles might be carried by two men; but they soon gave the preference to the "portage strap," and carried their loads, like the Indians, on their backs, with the straps passing round their foreheads.

At Fort Frances on Rainy River, a dépôt was formed, under charge of Commissary Mellish, and protected by a company of the Ontario Militia. The stores not required for the troops were finally taken over by the Public Works Department for the use of men employed road-making between Fort Garry and the Lake of the Woods.

Along the route there was little Control duty to be performed. As each brigade arrived at Fort Garry the Officer Commanding was called upon to account for the supplies and stores he had received at M'Neill Bay or Fort Frances, and the same plan was adopted on the return journey.

The first brigade of boats left M'Neill Bay on the 16th July, and the last with Regular troops on the 21st July. They arrived at Fort Frances on the 4th and 8th August respectively.

On the 20th August the whole of the Regular troops had arrived at Fort Alexander, at the mouth of the Winnipeg River. On the 24th August they occupied Fort Garry, and the two Militia Regiments arrived in a few days.

On the 29th August the first brigade began its return journey, and the whole of the regular troops had safely embarked at Thunder Bay on the 6th October.

Whilst at Fort Garry there was little difficulty in obtaining supplies. Everything requisite can be brought in from the neighbouring State of Minnesota. Fine wheat and vegetables are grown in the Red River Settlement. When beef is required in large quantities the cattle must be imported.

conclusion.

The arrangements made for the Militia wintering in Fort Garry have already been reported to you.

The conduct and qualifications of the Officers and men who served under my orders shall be separately reported on, though here I am bound to say that I am indebted to them all for their hearty co-operation; the zealous manner in which they worked was the secret of our success.

I believe the Control system has proved itself on this occasion to be a sound one ; the Officers of the old Departments worked together under one head with the greatest unanimity, and undoubtedly there was much saving of time and trouble throughout in there being one Department instead of several.

There was no Officer of the Pay Sub-Department with the Force, but the Officers, with one or two exceptions, had all the custody of money at some period during the time the Expedition lasted.

I have the honour to be, Sir,

Your obedient Servant,

M. BELL IRVINE,

Assistant Controller.

*Lieutenant-Colonel Martindale,
Acting Deputy-Controller in Canada, Quebec.*

APPENDIX.

A.

Toronto, 14th May, 1870.

1. THE Expeditionary Force will proceed from the end of the Thunder Bay Road to the Lake of the Woods in boats. It will move by detachments, consisting of one or more companies. To each company a brigade of 5 boats will be attached.

2. The boats will be numbered, 1, 2, 3, &c., &c., and the brigade will be distinguished by letters beginning at A.

3. In each boat there will be the following tools and equipment:—2 felling axes, 1 pick axe, 1 spade, 1 shovel, 2 hand axes, 2 flanders kettles, 1 frying pan, 2 sails, 2 boat-hooks, 2 spare oars, “making eight in all,” 4 rowlocks, 1 set of blocks (single and double), 1 boat lamp, 6 thimbles for setting poles, 1 dipper, 1 rubber bucket, 1 boat-sponge, 2 cans paint (black and white), 5 lb. assorted boat-nails, 1 double tin oil can, 1 tin, with pitch, 1 tarpaulin, fenders, 60 fathoms tow line, 1 can mosquito oil, &c., &c.; spare plank and tools necessary for repairs. There will also be the cooking utensils, &c., of the boatmen, for which the coxswain of each boat will be responsible. In every boat there will be 30 days’ rations for the soldiers and boatmen, besides, also, about 1 ton of surplus stores.

4. With each brigade of boats there will be a carpenter’s chest of tools, and a fishing net.

5. The scale of rations for every one will be as follows:—1 lb. of biscuit, or $1\frac{1}{2}$ lb. of soft bread, 1 lb. of salt pork, or $1\frac{1}{2}$ lb. of fresh meat, 2 oz. of sugar, 1 oz. of tea, $\frac{1}{2}$ oz. of salt when fresh meat is issued, $\frac{1}{3}$ pint of beans, or $\frac{1}{4}$ lb. preserved potatoes, $\frac{1}{8}$ oz. pepper; the ration of flour, when issued, to be $1\frac{1}{2}$ lb.

6. In each boat there will be three voyageurs, one of whom will be the coxswain, and have entire charge of managing the boat.

7. The officer or non-commissioned officer in command of the men in each boat will render him every assistance in doing so, and any one going counter to his advice must understand that he is taking upon himself a grave responsibility which may possibly affect the safety of the whole party.

8. No one, under any pretence, will be allowed to sit on the gunwale of the boats, and all must learn to sit steadily, moving as little as possible when the boat is under weigh, particularly in rapid water. When under sail the sheets must never be made fast, they must invariably be held by the hand.

9. To prevent supplies being sent to wrong places, it must be remembered that all stores belonging to the Expedition have been divided into three classes, X., Y., Z., and marked accordingly; those marked Z. are to be taken with the force when it finally starts from Fort Francis; those marked Y. are to be left at Fort Francis, and those marked X. at Fort William.

10. Officers commanding companies will not allow, under any pretence whatever, any person not belonging to the force to be carried in the boats, unless he has a written permission, signed by the officer commanding the force or by Lieutenant-Colonel Bolton.

11. The officer in immediate command at the Shebandowan end of the road will be held strictly responsible that no unauthorized person embarks. He will attend at the departure of each brigade of boats to see this order rigidly carried out.

*12. Detachments will be posted temporarily at various portages along the route for the purpose of facilitating the transport of supplies to Fort Francis.

*13. They will carry out this duty as follows: They will daily send back to the nearest portage in rear a sufficient number of boats to carry 15 tons of stores; all the boatmen to be employed on this service, supplemented by as many soldiers as the Officer Commanding on the spot may consider necessary; all soldiers to take their arms and accoutrements with them.

*14. One officer will invariably accompany the boats upon this duty, and will take with him at each trip supplies sufficient for the crews for three days, together with a portion of tools, &c. The remainder of the detachment to be employed daily in carrying over the portage at their post the 15 tons of stores brought up by the boats on the previous day, and loading them in the boats sent back to receive them by the detachment in front.

*15. The day after each detachment has reached its position it will commence operations by sending back for the surplus stores of the detachment in rear. This will be continued daily until all the reserve supplies for Fort Francis have been sent forward.

16. The greatest possible care will be necessary in loading and unloading the boats to guard against their being injured. The Indian voyageurs having had great experience in loading canoes, their advice is to be attended to in this matter.

17. Every one concerned must remember that the success of the undertaking depends upon these boats; and if those provided are rendered unserviceable, they cannot be replaced.

The Colonel Commanding will therefore have no alternative but to leave behind the crews of any boats that are rendered unfit for use.

* Not carried out, vide page 10 of Report.

18. Colonel McNeill will be stationed at the Shebandowan end of the road. Special instructions will be issued to him for his guidance.

19. Mr. Meyer will be the Control Officer there, to superintend the shipment of stores. He will be responsible for the loading of the boats, and will decide also the description and amount of stores to be sent with each, in addition to those laid down as forming the equipment of each boat. He will hand over to the Captain of each company, the evening before he starts, the complete equipment of his brigade of boats, receiving a receipt from him for it. The Officer commanding the company will make an exact copy of the list in his pocket-book, specifying therein how he has distributed the stores, &c., by boats, and the name of the officer or serjeant in charge of each boat.

20. Mr. Meyer will also hand over to every officer commanding a company, rations complete for his men and voyageurs for 30 days, taking a receipt for the same; a list of these provisions to be also entered by the captain in his pocket-book. These provisions must be distributed throughout the boats, so that in each boat there will be 30 days' rations for every one in it.

21. Mr. Meyer will also hand over to every officer commanding a company, as much surplus supplies (about 2,000 lb. weight for each boat) as his boats can conveniently carry—Mr. Meyer to be the judge on this point—giving him an accurate list of the articles, which will be sent on with the stores when they are passed forward beyond the portage where the Company is to be temporarily stationed on the line of route. This list will be signed as correct, or otherwise, by all the officers commanding at the several portages when the stores pass through their posts; any article deficient to be noted on the list.

22. After the last detachment has left, the stores noted in the margin will be shipped with as little delay as possible at the rate of 15 tons a day. One, or, if possible, two days before the last 15 tons are to be despatched from Shebandowan Lake, Colonel McNeill will notify in writing, to all the posts in advance, stating when the last of the reserve stores will be sent through. He will send a written Memorandum with the last 15 tons, saying they are the last.

Upon receipt of this information (which will be signed by the Officer Commanding each Detachment, and forwarded on to the next post) Officers Commanding at all posts on the line between Shebandowan and Fort Francis will proceed without delay to the latter place, taking on with them their boats and all their equipments, and the remains of the thirty days' provisions sent originally with them.

23. Upon reaching Fort Francis, they will complete their boats with 30 days' rations for all persons in them, and will embark such surplus stores as the Control Officer, Mr. Mellish, may indicate.

24. As soon as the detachment left at Bear Portage reaches Fort Francis, the 200 men of the 1st Battalion 60th Rifles, which had been stationed there during this movement, will start for the Rat Portage to work at it.

25. By these arrangements the last detachment (that left at Shebandowan Lake) will reach Fort Francis the day after the last 15 tons of the reserve supplies to be stored there reach that place.

26. The detachments from Fort Francis will severally start from thence as soon as relieved by the detachment coming up in rear.

27. Fresh instructions will be issued at Fort Francis with reference to the forward movement from that place.

28. In case of a man falling seriously ill, or being seriously injured whilst the troops are moving to their several stations, the Medical Officer with the detachment will decide whether the illness or injury is of such a nature as to prevent the man from proceeding further. If he pronounces the man as likely to be unfit for work for some time to come, he is to be left behind at the nearest portage where a detachment is to be stationed, in charge of a non-commissioned officer and one man, who will take their arms, accoutrements, &c., &c., with them. A week's provisions to be left for the three men. All Officers Commanding detachments passing by them to see that they have always that quantity in their possession.

As soon the detachment to be stationed at the portage where the sick man has been left arrives, he will be sent with the returning boats to the rear, to be forwarded on to the hospital at Fort William.

If there is no Medical Officer with the detachment, the sick man will be left behind in a similar manner until the arrival of a detachment having a doctor with it.

In both cases the non-commissioned officer and private left with the man will proceed on to join their company as soon as the man has been sent to the rear.

The Officer Commanding the 12th detachment, whilst en route between his post at the Kashaboiwe Portage and Fort Francis, will use his own discretion as to whether he will send serious cases of illness to the hospital at Fort William, or take them on with him to Fort Francis. If he can possibly do so he should send them to the former place.

29. Officers commanding detachments, from the time of their embarking at Shebandowan, will keep a journal of their route, entering the exact hour they start each morning, the hours they halt for meals and start again, the time they reach their halting place for the night, giving the name of the place, the state of the weather, whether they used oars or sails during the day, &c., &c. All irregularities committed by their men to be recorded. They will also state whether they found the fires made by the previous detachment still burning or not.

Barrels of flour
Barrels of pork.
Bags of biscuits.
Chests of tea.
Barrels of sugar.
Bags of beans.
Tins of pepper.
Bags of salt.
Tins of potatoes.

30. The officers commanding the several detachments posted at the portages will encamp their men in as compact order as possible on the end of the portage nearest to Fort Francis, except when from the marshiness of the ground, or other peculiar causes, there are good reasons for departing from this order.

They will pile up their provisions close to the landing place, at the Fort Francis side of the portage, covering them over with the boat tarpaulins, and doing everything in their power to protect them from the weather.

The boats will remain on the Shebandowan side of the portage, every precaution being taken to secure them at night by their painters to the shore. When there is a good beach they should be hauled up for the night, being launched every morning.

31. Each detachment will have a guard, consisting of at least three men per company. They will mount with arms and accoutrements. Up to Fort Francis the arms for the other men will remain in their arm chests, unless when for special reasons the officers commanding detachments may consider it necessary for the men to keep their arms in the tents.

The arms, if kept in these arm chests, must be frequently inspected by the Captains of companies, to see that they are free from rust, and in good and serviceable order.

32. The greatest possible precautions to be taken to guard against the woods being set on fire.

The cooking places will be established as near the water as possible, and no other fires are to be allowed in the camp without the express permission of the officer commanding the detachment, who will assure himself, before giving such permission, that there is no danger to be apprehended.

When on the move, officers commanding companies will be held responsible that all fires are extinguished previous to their leaving a camp.

33. As a rule, the reveille will sound at 3 A.M. every morning, and the boats will start as soon after that as possible, the men to have some hot tea before starting. The boats of each brigade must keep as near together as possible, the Captain with his Bugler being in the leading boat; the senior Subaltern and a Serjeant in the rear boat.

A halt of one hour will be made at 8 A.M. for breakfast; another halt of an hour at 1 p.m. for dinner. Officers commanding companies may, of course, depart a little from these hours for meals, but under no circumstances is more than an hour to be allowed for each meal. They will always halt for the night at least one full hour before dark, so that there may be ample time to establish the camp for the night. When on the move it is not advisable to pitch tents except when it rains or threatens to do so—even then the smallest possible number should be pitched.

34. When it is necessary to track the boats, the crew will be divided into two parties, each consisting of four or five soldiers and one voyageur. Serjeants are not to be employed in tracking.

These two parties to relieve one another every two hours. Officers and non-commissioned officers in charge of boats will see that the men returning to the boats after tracking, put on their serge frocks at once, which are not to be removed for at least half an hour afterwards.

35. All officers belonging to this Force will be most careful in impressing upon those under their command the great necessity there is for cultivating the good will of the Indians and others employed as voyageurs.

Colonel Wolseley will punish with the utmost severity any one who ill treats them.

The same rule applies to all Indians who may be met on the line of route.

It must be remembered that the Government has made a treaty with them securing the right of way through their country; all are therefore bound to protect them from injury, and it is of special importance that our intercourse with them should be of the most friendly nature.

No Indians but those actually attached to the Force are to be allowed to pass the night in our camps.

G. J. WOLSELEY, Colonel,
Commanding Expeditionary Force.

ADDITIONAL INSTRUCTIONS.

1. It is possible that some of the men embarked at Shebandowan Lake as voyageurs may be found to be incapable of managing boats.

Officers commanding brigades of boats will send back, by the first opportunity that presents itself any such soi-disant voyageurs.

It is not enough that they should be able to row, but they must be capable of skilfully managing a boat. We require no assistance in rowing, and passengers cannot, under any circumstances, be allowed to accompany the Expedition. Mr. Dawson has been requested to explain this order to all engaged as voyageurs.

2. Before starting each morning after leaving Shebandowan, the Subaltern in charge of the last boat with a couple of men will go round the camp to see that nothing has been left behind.

3. At every portage officers or non-commissioned officers in charge of boats will invariably check over the articles as they are put into their boats to see that they agree with the lists in their pocket books.

4. No one to go beyond 150 yards from the halting places.

NOTE by Captain Redvers H. Buller, 1st Bn. 60th Royal Rifles, on the Pack Saddles used in the Red River Settlement.

Those of our horses (about half the lot, the rest having common Mexican saddles) that had pack saddles were equipped as follows:—two pairs of $1\frac{1}{2}$ -inch square oak sticks about 18 inches long were “halfened” into one another, forming two St. Andrew crosses, the upper limbs of which were 4 inches long; the last 8 inches of the lower limbs being beveled off on the inside, they (the crosses) were screwed about 12 inches apart on to two plates of 1 inch thick deal about 18” by 9”. Under each plate was fastened a canvas pad stuffed more or less full of the wild grass of the country, according to the back of animal. The pads were, in some cases, in one, thrown over the back; in some cases single, one under each side of the tree. Under these, again, it was usual when they were forthcoming, to fold a blanket or buffalo robe, but this was not necessary.

The saddle was secured by a crupper and girth of hide.

The loads were then enclosed in “pac flêches,” or undressed half hides, in which, about 12 inches from the upper edge on each side the centre, two slits were cut the same distance apart as the cross trees of the saddle, and through them two loops were passed and secured inside by a stick being passed through them.

The “pac flêches,” thus arranged, were folded and laced over the loads and hung one on each side, the loops being knotted so as to allow the load to hang nearly parallel to the animal’s sides, and the whole was then secured by a raw hide surcingle.

When nicely balanced loads thus packed were very firm; our horses fell again and again, and forced through trees and so on, but never moved them.

When not well balanced the load either fell off or galled the horse.

The jolts sent our horses through the surface of the bogs, so I can form no idea of what the horses could have carried on a good road. Grant told me that from 180 lbs. to 250 lbs. was the usual thing in the Rocky Mountain country.

I should add that a seizing of raw hide secured the joint of the cross-trees.

CORRESPONDENCE Relative to the Recent Expedition to the Red River Settlement: with Journal of Operations.

No. 1.

The War Office to Lieutenant-General the Honourable James Lindsay.

Sir,

24th March, 1870.

I AM directed by Mr. Secretary Cardwell to transmit, for your information and guidance, the inclosed extract of a letter from the Colonial Office, containing instructions on certain points connected with your mission to Canada. Mr. Cardwell desires me to request that you will report home your intended arrangements as soon as you are in a position to do so, in order that the proper instructions may be given to the Admiralty and other departments concerned.

Enclosure in No. 1.

The Colonial Office to the War Office.

(Extract.)

23rd March, 1870.

IT is possible that General Lindsay may be required by Sir John Young to send to the Red River Territory a detachment not exceeding 200 infantry and a small force of artillery, in company with a larger body of Canadians, to maintain order in that settlement during the process of its annexation to Canada.

The British Force should leave the Red River Territory at latest at the end of September, so as to embark for England during the season of 1870, unless they form part of a Regiment which is to remain in the Dominion.

General Lindsay will consult Sir J. Young with regard to the selection of the force itself, and of the officer who is to command it, on whose firmness, prudence, and judgment much may depend.

The selection of the officer will be still more important if, as is possible, the Canadian Government should desire him to act as the first Civil Lieutenant-Governor of the district.

General Lindsay will of course be responsible for all arrangements affecting the safety and health of the troops.

No. 2.

The War Office to Lieutenant-General the Honourable James Lindsay.

Sir,

24th March, 1870.

WITH reference to my letter of this day's date, enclosing copy of a letter of instructions for your guidance in your present mission to Canada, I am directed by Mr. Secretary Cardwell to add, with reference to so much of the letter from the Colonial Office as relates to a possible military expedition to the Red River Territory, that although Her Majesty's Government do not sanction or contemplate the detention of the troops in the Red River Settlement during the winter of 1870-71, yet it will be your duty, before the troops leave for it, to ascertain from the Canadian Government that precautions will be taken sufficient in your judgment to ensure the practicability of housing and victualling them during that period, if, from any unforeseen circumstances, that detention should take place.

You will, however, take care that in making these enquiries you do not hold out to the Dominion any hopes of the Imperial Government consenting to their being so kept.

I am, &c.

EDWARD LUGARD.

Sir,

28th April, 1870.

I AM directed by Mr. Secretary Cardwell to transmit for your information, and that of the expedition which may proceed to the Red River, the accompanying Maps (40 mounted and 40 unmounted) of that Territory and its approaches; and also 80 copies of a smaller Map, showing the last part of the route.

Eighty copies of notes upon the country, from Lake Superior to the Red River Settlement, and on the Settlement itself, are also forwarded herewith.

*Telegram from Lieutenant-General the Honourable James Lindsay

Ottawa, 28th April, 1870.

FOR military reasons, and to leave garrisons at Fort Francis and Fort William, I request authority to send 350 of the 60th Regiment instead of 200. I have arranged with Canadian Government that all extra expenses of more than 250 Regulars shall be borne by Canada.

I propose to give free rations and no [?] working pay, about sixpence per man per day, also extra kit necessary for this service, about fifty shillings.

(Telegram sent 2nd May, 1870).*

IF the Expedition shall eventually be determined upon there will be no objection to your sending the additional number you propose of the 60th Regiment, all extra expenses being paid by Canada.

No. 6.

Lieutenant-General the Honourable James Lindsay to the War Office.

Sir, Montreal, 15th April, 1870.

I HAVE the honour to inform you that I have been to Ottawa and seen the Governor-General.

The Delegates from Red River had not arrived when I left, on the 11th April, and His Excellency was not in a position therefore to say whether he would require troops to go to that settlement or not.

I have, however, ascertained what supply and transport arrangements the Canadian Government has already entered into, and am looking into the whole question thoroughly, so as to be prepared to assume the "responsibility for all arrangements affecting the safety and health of the troops."

I have, &c.

JAMES LINDSAY, Lieutenant-General,
Commanding Ontario and Quebec.

No. 7.

The War Office to Lieutenant-General the Honourable James Lindsay.

Sir, 5th May, 1870.

THE Secretary of State for War has received your telegraphic message of 28th ultimo in the following words:—

"FOR military reasons, and to leave garrisons at Fort Francis and Fort William, I request authority to send 350 of the 60th Regiment instead of 200. I have arranged with Canadian Government that all extra expenses of more than 250 regulars shall be borne by Canada.

"I propose to give free rations and no [?] working pay, about sixpence per man per day, also extra kit necessary for this service, about fifty shillings."

and by his direction I have replied as follows:—

"IF the Expedition shall eventually be determined upon, there will be no objection to your sending the additional number you propose of the 60th Regiment, all extra expenses being paid by Canada."

Mr. Cardwell has not learnt from the Secretary of State for the Colonies that the Expedition has been positively resolved upon; but considering the season, already so far advanced, and the shortness of the interval during which it will be possible to march to and from Fort Garry, it is quite right that you should have taken all preliminary measures so as to be prepared to move without delay, so soon as the definite instructions shall be given you.

The Secretary of State for War has no objection to your increasing the force in the manner you propose,—on the terms mentioned in your message. He presumes that you will have communicated by post the full particulars of the arrangement, and will have informed him clearly not only as to the agreement between you and the Government of the Dominion for the ultimate payment, but also as to the charge which is likely to fall upon the estimates voted for the present year. It is important that he should be fully informed upon this point, while Parliament is still sitting.

The arrangement you propose as to food, clothing, and working pay, appears to him satisfactory.

I am directed to remind you that so far as the Secretary of State for War is yet informed, there is no intention that any part of the Imperial Force shall remain at Fort Garry during the winter; and he is not prepared to authorize you to hold out any such expectation to the Government of the Dominion. At the same time it is not possible to foresee what circumstances may arise to render a return impossible, and it is above all things necessary to make such arrangements that no risk shall be incurred of any part of the Expeditionary Force being exposed to suffering from hunger, or severity of climate. Provisions, in ordinary times, are cheap at Fort Garry, being easily purchased in the State of Minnesota; but I am directed to remind you that it will not do to rely on this source of supply for the present Expedition, and that the stores hitherto kept at Fort Garry by the Hudson's Bay Company are in all probability long since exhausted.

I am, &c.
EDWARD LUGARD.

No. 8.

Lieutenant-General the Honourable James Lindsay to War Office.

Sir, Head-Quarters, Montreal, 27th May, 1870.
I HAVE the honour to inform you that upon my arrival in Canada on the 5th April, I proceeded, in compliance with the instructions contained in Lord Granville's letter of 23rd March, 1870, to confer with the Governor-General on the subject of sending a military expedition to Red River, and beg to enclose you the correspondence that ensued.

- Inclosure No. 1.—To Governor-General, 11th April.
- „ 2.—From Governor-General, 20th „
- „ 3.—To Governor-General, 23rd „
- „ 4.—From Governor-General, 27th „
- „ 5.—To Governor-General, 27th „
- „ 6.—From Governor-General, 2nd May.
- „ 7.—From Governor-General, 7th „

I felt from the first that the force, though mixed, was an Imperial one, and that I was responsible for everything connected with it, I therefore looked into the details of its organization, supply, equipment, and transport, the division of expenses, and plan of operations.

I was thus prepared to comply at once with his Excellency's official requisition to start the Expedition, which I received on the 9th May, and I issued the enclosed General Order (Inclosure No. 8) on the 10th, announcing the composition and organization of the force.

The strength of the different corps is as follows:—

Corps.	Officers.	Men.
Royal Artillery	1	19
Royal Engineers	1	19
1st Battalion 60th Rifles	21	352*
Army Service Corps	12
Army Hospital Corps	8
1st (Ontario) Battalion of Militia	27	355
2nd (Quebec) Battalion of Militia.	27	292†

* 29 of these serjeants, and 10 buglers. † To be completed to 350.

The detachment of Royal Artillery has four muzzle-loading rifled 3-pr. mountain guns, with 200 rounds a gun, but probably only half this equipment will be taken beyond Fort William.

Colonel Wolseley's appointment to the command has the full approval of his Excellency the Governor-General and his Government, and I consider it very fortunate that an officer who knows Canada and its Volunteers so well, and who has so much ability and experience, should have been available for this service.

Brevet Lieutenant-Colonel Bolton, R.A., who I have appointed Deputy-Assistant Adjutant-General and Senior Staff Officer, is a man of capacity, and has the advantage of having passed through the Staff College.

Assistant Controller Irving has been specially selected at the War Office for this service, and Colonel Wolseley writes me that he has every confidence in him.

Surgeon-Major Young accompanies his regiment, and acts as Principal Medical Officer.

Colonel Fielden is in command of the 60th Rifles, and is the next officer in seniority to Colonel Wolseley. He is an excellent officer, and his regimental experience has already been brought into play in getting the Militia battalions into shape.

In organizing the Staff and Control, I have kept in view the withdrawal of the regulars from Fort Garry before the end of August, and have desired to facilitate, as much as possible, the assumption of these duties by the Militia.

Lieutenant-Colonel Jarvis (Deputy Adjutant-General Militia, 4th District), a regular officer on half-pay, formerly Adjutant of the Staff College, will succeed to the command, while Major McLeod and Captain Peebles respectively will take over the Staff and Control duties. I have ordered Colonel Wolseley to see that these officers learn their duties.

Until, however, this withdrawal shall take place, the Force will preserve its distinctly Imperial character, and I shall be responsible for it.

For this reason I have been very anxious that the two Battalions of Militia should come up, as far as possible, to the standard of Her Majesty's Regular Forces, that the Field Officers should be carefully chosen, none but strong and drilled men accepted, and that their personal equipment should be good.

I also desired to get the men together early, in order that they might be instructed.

The division of the Militia portion of the Force into two battalions, one from Ontario, the other from Quebec, and the apportionment of the number of volunteers required (700) between seven Militia Districts in the Provinces of Ontario and Quebec was, I presume, made for sectional and religious reasons. This political measure has greatly delayed the formation of the Quebec Battalion, which, as I write, still wants 58 to complete, though I have assisted it in every possible way by lending Staff Serjeants from the Royal Canadian Rifles, and by hastening the discharge of other men of that Corps, that they might volunteer to the Militia for the Expedition.

Of the 292 men in its ranks, not more than one-fourth at most are French Canadians.

Both Militia Battalions were formed at Toronto, where a wing of the 60th has been quartered all winter. Colonel Wolseley joined the Force there on the 5th May with his Staff and Control.

I now proceed to refer to the Supply and Transport arrangements.

On my arrival I found that the Canadian Government had already purchased provisions, horses, and forage; ordered boats and carriages, and hired teamsters. I thought it best that they should complete the transactions into which they had entered, and finding that the number of boats, vehicles and horses, was insufficient, I begged the Canadian Government to get more of those supplies, and to hand over the whole of them to the Control when completed, and that arrangements for all future purchases should be made by the Control. I also considered it expedient that the Government should hire the necessary Indians and voyageurs. They were required in great numbers, and could therefore only be obtained from various and remote places; so that this transaction could be better performed by the Government than by the Controller.

Collingwood, the natural point of departure for Lake Superior, is connected with Toronto by rail, so that, so far, there was no difficulty.

I early directed the attention of the Dominion Government to the necessity of control over steamers in both lakes, informing them that I considered it their duty to furnish the necessary transport, and on the 28th of April, I applied for a permanent steamer to be stationed on Lake Superior. Having proceeded to Collingwood on 5th May, with my Controller, I ascertained that no arrangement had been made. The Canadian Government would not trust to my hiring steamers, but, consequent on the urgency of my representation, they placed the duty in the hands of the Postmaster-General. This took me again to Ottawa.

In the meantime the difficulty respecting the canal at Sault St. Marie came up, and found the Government unprepared, though on the 28th April I had specially begged that it might be provided against. As His Excellency will report, doubtless, fully on this subject to the Secretary of State for the Colonies, I need not go into it.

The arrangements for the Lake Transport are now complete and in operation. They have, however, been much complicated by the unfriendly action of the United States Government, in closing the canal at Sault St. Marie. Owing to the firm remonstrance of the Governor-General it is now open, but Colonel Wolseley had been already obliged, between the 14th and 16th May, to send 200 men of the 1st Battalion Militia, with horses and wagons, to carry everything across the portage.

Besides the Supply and Transport of the Expedition, I undertook its Equipment, excepting the personal equipment of the Militia, articles for which were, however, drawn from our Stores on repayment.

I believe that since the Canadian troops were handed over to me at Toronto, everything has been done to instruct them, and that the arrangements for the health and safety of the whole Force have been carefully considered and prepared.

The necessity for going twice to Ottawa to spur on the authorities, and the difficulty towards the close of a busy Session of getting the Government to attend to my business, and my visit to Toronto and Collingwood, have prevented my reporting to you earlier. I have, for the same reason, been prevented until the other day going into the division of expenses between the two Governments.

I send, in another despatch, a copy of a communication that I have addressed to the Governor-General on that subject, and I also, by this mail, report separately my instructions to Colonel Wolseley, and the general plan of operations.

I have, &c.

Inclosure 1 in No. 8.

MEMORANDUM by Lieutenant-General the Honourable James Lindsay, dated Ottawa, 11th April, 1870.

1. In the event of the Dominion Government determining to send an expedition to the Red River Settlement, and on its being decided that Her Majesty's Troops shall form part of the Force, I submit that it should consist of 1,000 men, of which one-fourth should be composed of regular infantry, with a proportion of Royal Artillery and Engineers, the remainder of the Force being provided by the Dominion Government.

2. I beg to submit the name of Colonel Wolseley, Deputy Quartermaster-General in British North America, as the Commander of the combined Force.

3. With reference to Colonial portion of the Force, it may be worthy of consideration by the Dominion Government, whether they will be disposed to avail themselves of the services of the Royal Canadian Rifles. This Regiment is to be disbanded immediately, and there is no doubt that some of the officers, and many of the rank and file, will be anxious to remain in Canada.

Many of the latter will be, doubtless, glad to settle in the country, and form a body of loyal settlers.

It is for the Government to consider whether it would be expedient to engage these men for a year's service, with the promise of an allotment of a specified number of acres, and free rations for the first year of possession.

If the Government have any views with reference to these men, either as regards the Red River Expedition, or with reference to the formation of a Colonial Military Force, I suggest that they should give the subject a very early and serious consideration.

4. The number of Volunteer Militia to be raised for service in the Red River Territory, will depend upon the intentions of Government with reference to the above paragraph.

At all events, it appears necessary that a force of from 700 to 800 men should be prepared.

I am given to understand that it is proposed to select a quota from each Militia District, from those who have volunteered for the expedition.

I urge that no time should be lost in bringing these men together in one or two localities, in order that they may be organized in companies and drilled; that officers and men should become acquainted with one another, and that the Force should be thus brought into a state of discipline.

If possible they should be placed in barracks.

5. I strongly recommend that the officers selected to command battalions should be men who have served in the Army, or should be men well-known, as qualified for the command of men, and for knowledge of the arrangements of an embodied regiment.

The selection of Field Officers and Captains will also require very careful consideration.

I think it necessary that I should be informed of the views of the Dominion Government, as to the method in which it is proposed to officer this Force.

Some officers of the Royal Canadian Rifles will be available for any purpose to which they may be appointed.

6 It is fully understood that the regular portion of the Force is to return from Red River before next winter: it is therefore necessary that the Dominion Government should select an officer to command one of the battalions, to act as second in command to Colonel Wolseley, whom the Dominion Government may consider qualified to assume entire charge of the Force when the latter leaves the settlement.

7. In the event of any unforeseen circumstances necessitating the retention of the Regular Troops at Fort Garry during next winter, what precautions will be taken to ensure the practicability of housing them, and the remainder of the Force?

8. It is indispensable that the organization of the Expeditionary Force should be at once entrusted solely to me.

I will, in that case, assume all responsibility in the matter.

9. As it is understood that, previous to my arrival, the Militia and other departments, in order to save time, have purchased stores, boats, &c., &c., I have to request the fullest possible information as to the articles, and amounts already purchased or contracted for; the places where they are now stored; or where and when they are to be delivered.

I will then take steps for having them duly inspected.

10. I intend appointing a Control officer to take charge of all duties connected with feeding, and the transport of the Force.

I expect this officer to reach Montreal next week.

It will be necessary that all the stores in the preceding paragraph should be handed over to him.

11. All further purchase of stores, &c., &c., &c., for this Expedition by the Dominion Government, to cease from this date, except for such articles as I may consider, and deem it advisable for the public service should be purchased by them, in which case I will specially apply for them.

12. I understand that 100 boats have been, or are now being built.

If the Force is to consist of 1,000 men, 100 boats will just carry that number, no allowance being made in the calculation for any loss of boats.

I am of opinion that a considerable margin should be allowed for such losses, in consideration of the extremely severe work they will have to endure, and the damage to which they must necessarily be exposed in taking them over the numerous portages, and the running the many dangerous rapids along the route.

It will also be necessary to keep open the communication between Forts William and Francis, after the Force has finally started from the latter place, for the purpose of forwarding on stores and provisions.

An additional number of boats will therefore be required for this service.

Under these circumstances I consider it indispensable that at least 40 more boats should be at once contracted for, to be built with the least possible delay.

As the Public Works Department is already in communication with the principal boat builders in these provinces, I think that these 40 additional boats should be procured by that Department.

13. Forty carts or wagons are said to have been provided for the conveyance of boats and stores from Thunder Bay to Shebandowan Lake.

The importance of getting them rapidly over this part of the journey cannot be too highly estimated.

It is necessary that two months' provisions should precede the main body of the Force, and that they should be stored at Fort Francis before the troops make their final start from thence.

It appears indispensable that 40 more carts should be provided to avoid delay, and to provide for casualties.

It is also desirable that a few huts should be erected at Fort William and Shebandowan Lake, for the purpose of sheltering the stores.

14. It has been stated that some small number of men to act as mounted police, have been already enrolled for service in the Red River Territory.

It is understood that the officer to command them has been already nominated; the fullest information is requested as to what has been already done in this matter, if it is intended that these men are to form part of the Expeditionary Force.

I am all the more anxious on this point, because I consider it to be a sine quâ non that no one should accompany this Expedition who has been in any way personally connected with the Honourable Mr. Macdougall's party, or with the Red River affairs, during the recent unfortunate disturbances in that territory.

JAMES LINDSAY, Lieutenant-General.

Inclosure 2 in No. 8.

The Deputy of the Minister of Militia to the Military Secretary.

*Department of Militia and Defence,
Ottawa, April 19, 1870.*

Sir,

WITH reference to the Memorandum of Lieutenant-General Lindsay of the 11th instant, submitted by you on the same day, I am directed by the Honourable the Minister of Militia and Defence to furnish the following replies to the various paragraphs thereof, with a request that his Excellency the Governor-General may be pleased to transmit the same to the Lieutenant-General Commanding:—

1. With reference to the proposed Expedition to the Red River Settlement, the Dominion Government will supply the proportion of the force suggested in the 1st paragraph as hereinafter explained (paragraph 4).

2. The Canadian Government learn with much satisfaction that the Lieutenant-General Commanding intends to appoint Colonel Wolseley as Commander of the combined force.

3. With reference to the Royal Canadian Rifles, the Canadian Government do not intend to avail themselves of the proffered services of the men of that corps.

4. Measures have been taken for the raising of a force of between 700 and 800 men as proposed in the 4th paragraph.

The inclosed copy of an Order in Council of the 16th instant (A) and of the Report of the Adjutant-General of Militia annexed to it, will afford a full reply to the 4th paragraph.

It shows that a quota of the proposed force is to be selected from each Militia District from those who volunteer for the Expedition so soon as the men have been duly mustered in their respective districts. The Lieutenant-General Commanding will be informed of their readiness to meet at such place or places as he may be pleased to direct.

5. In the selection of Field Officers and Captains, every care will be taken that fully competent officers will be appointed.

Each of the battalions mentioned in the above Order in Council will be commanded by men who have served with the army, and who are well known as qualified for the command of men, and for their knowledge of the arrangements of an embodied regiment. The selection of those gentlemen has been made from the Deputy Adjutants-General of the Militia of the Dominion of Canada, one from the Province of Ontario, and one from the Province of Quebec, the former being Lieutenant-Colonel Jarvis, Deputy Adjutant-General for Military District No. 3, and the latter, Lieutenant-Colonel Casault, Deputy Adjutant-General for Military District No. 7, both of whom have considerable military experience as British military officers.

6. Either of the above officers selected to command the two battalions, is considered well qualified to act as second in command to Colonel Wolseley, and to assume the entire charge of the force when the latter leaves the Red River Settlement. As a matter of course the senior would take the command.

7. The information required by paragraph 7 is furnished by the memorandum of Mr. S. J. Dawson herewith annexed (B).

8. By paragraph 8 of the Report the Adjutant-General of Militia attached to the Order in Council of the 16th instant, it will be seen that so soon as the number of men to be furnished by the Canadian Government have been duly mustered in their respective districts, they will be placed at the disposal of the Lieutenant-General Commanding as suggested by him, with a view to his assuming all responsibility in the matter.

9. The information required by this paragraph has been already furnished in a Report made to Lieutenant-General Lindsay by Lieutenant-Colonel Wily, of which Report a copy is hereto attached (C).

10. All stores that have not already been transferred will be handed over to the Control Officer by Lieutenant-Colonel Wily, who has been instructed to furnish any further information that may be required with reference thereto, and who for such purpose is placed entirely at the disposal of the Lieutenant-General Commanding.

It is suggested, as already stated in a letter to the Military Secretary, that no expenses for transport, nor any large expenditure connected with the Expedition to Red River should be incurred, nor any contract entered into for the same without previous communication with the Dominion Government, so as to avoid any undue advantage being taken by contractors, or extravagant charges being made by them. Lieutenant-Colonel Wily has been instructed to give every required assistance to the Control Officer.

11. No further purchase or acquisition of stores beyond those already contracted for, as shown by Lieutenant-Colonel Wily's Report (C) will be made, except on application of Lieutenant-General Lindsay.

12 and 13. Besides the information afforded in reference to this paragraph by Mr. Dawson's Report (B), instructions have been given to Mr. Dawson for the erection of huts at Fort William and Shebandowan Lake, for the purpose of sheltering the stores, &c., for the building of five additional boats, is complete, the required number (140), as well as for the making of 40 carts.

14. A mounted police force of 50 men is to be sent for service in the Red River territory. It will be commanded by Captain Cameron, R.A., with instructions to increase the force to 200 men from the people at Red River. Captain Cameron was on service in the Artillery at Halifax, and was seconded, at the request of the Canadian Government, at the Horse Guards, for the purpose of his proceeding to Red River as the head of the police. With regard to the concluding paragraph, care will be taken that the suggestions therein made be duly carried out.

Respecting the letter of the Military Secretary (Lieutenant-Colonel Earle) of the 13th instant, inclosing Memorandum of Colonel Wolseley of the same day, referred by you on the 16th instant, the Honourable the Minister of Militia and Defence directs me to state that a copy of the parts thereof relating to the Hudsons Bay Company has been transmitted to the agent of that Company, and that so soon as an answer is received it will be duly communicated to you, and that the subject of a negotiation with the Rainy Lake Indians will have due consideration from the Canadian Government.

I have, &c.

GEO. FUTVOYE.

Deputy of Minister of Militia and Defence.

B.

MEMORANDUM by S. J. Dawson, in reference to Sections 7, 12, and 13 of General Lindsay's Report of 11th April, 1870.

Ottawa, 14th April, 1870.

1st.—In regard to section 7, as soon as order has been re-established in the Red River Settlement, there could, I am confident, be no difficulty in housing a force of 1,000 men, by stationing a portion thereof at the Stone Fort, a part at Fort Garry, and the balance in buildings near the latter place.

At the Stone Fort an area of about six acres is enclosed within the walls, a considerable portion of which is laid off in lawn and garden, the Fort contains several substantial stone buildings. The largest is a handsome edifice, I should say about 100 feet in length, with verandahs running completely round it.

Besides this building, which was evidently intended to accommodate a military force, there are other storehouses and buildings of considerable dimensions.

Within the enclosure too, temporary houses could easily be put up.

At Fort Garry, the area enclosed within the walls is not so large as at the Stone Fort, but the number of buildings is greater and some of them are large. Apart from the other buildings there is in this Fort a barrack, which, to the best of my recollection, should accommodate from 150 to 200 men.

The town of Winnipeg, close adjoining Fort Garry, contains a population of about 1,500, and in it are many large stores and houses which could be converted into barracks.

Besides, just opposite Fort Garry, on the east bank of the Red River, are extensive buildings belonging to the diocese of St. Boniface, at present used as nunneries, schools, colleges, &c. Doubtless some of these could be obtained, if necessary, for the accommodation of the troops.

Upon the whole, I think there can be no difficulty in housing 1,000 men in the Red River Settlement, either within or in close proximity to the forts.

The Hudsons Bay Company, I have no doubt, would readily vacate the Stone Fort, and accommodate their people in adjoining buildings, and I believe they would be the best agents to employ in providing accommodation for the troops.

2nd.—In regard to Section 12, the suggestion as to providing additional boats has already been acted on by the Government.

The total number being built, most of which are now in readiness to be sent to Thunder Bay, is 135, besides which two first-class "North Canoes" have been ordered at Fort William for the special use of the Officer Commanding the Force.

The annexed Statement shows the number and capacity of the boats.

3rd. In respect to Section 13, as wagons are being arranged for, I confine myself to the concluding paragraph, which is as follows:—

"It is also desirable that a few huts should be erected at Fort William and Shebandowan Lake, for the purpose of sheltering the stores."

In order that these may be provided with the least possible delay, I would suggest that 40,000 feet (B.M.) of sawn lumber of suitable dimensions, should be sent to Fort William on the opening of the navigation. This would provide for the buildings at Thunder Bay. Those at Shebandowan Lake should be of logs covered with scoops.

These buildings can best be put up in connection with the works now in progress.

I may remark that temporary stables will be required at Thunder Bay, and at various points on the Thunder Bay Road.

REPORT of Lieutenant-Colonel Wiley.

Department of Militia and Defence,Store Branch, Ottawa, 12th April, 1870.

Sir,

IN accordance with instructions received from the Honourable the Minister of Militia and Defence in relation to the supplies named in the margin, I have now the honour to report that, acting on the Minister's instructions as conveyed in his letter bearing date 21st March last, at once proceeded to Toronto and made the following arrangements respecting them, viz. :—

With Mr. Robert Spratt, of Toronto, for flour, hay, and oats (see letters numbered 1, 2, and 3 respectively).

One thousand half barrels of flour have been purchased and will be ready for delivery at Collingwood by the time specified. The purchase of the other thousand half barrels will be completed in a few days. The flour is to be inspected as extra superfine, and is to be made of the best white fall wheat. The hay is bought, and will be pressed and ready for delivery at Collingwood at the date required. Five thousand of the six thousand bushels of oats required were secured, and are now stored at Owen Sound, ready for shipment on the opening of the navigation.

Messrs. W. Ramsay and Co. have engaged to supply the pork required (see Agreement numbered 4).

One thousand five hundred barrels have been received and are now in process of daily delivery as it is being inspected and repacked; 1,000 barrels will be stored at Toronto, the balance of it is to go to Collingwood, where it will be ready for shipment on the opening of the navigation, as much of the pork as it has been possible to obtain half barrels for, will be re-packed in such packages.

Messrs. Rice, Lewis, and Son, of Toronto, have contracted to deliver 1st May next, the wagons, carts, and harness needed (see letters numbered from 5 to 8 respectively).

The contractors write me to-day that they cannot find, either here or in the United States, the seasoned timber required for the manufacture of the broad-tyred wheels contracted for. On consultation with Mr. Dawson, he has decided that the common-tyred wheel will do, and I have forwarded the contractors instructions accordingly. Broad-tyred wheels not being in use in this country, those ordered being a speciality, no previous provision is made for their manufacture, as is the case with the ordinary wagons.

Two of the wagons have been ordered to be built with springs for conveyance of passengers provided with seats for the accommodation of from 6 to 8 each. Five other wagons are to be adapted for oxen.

Mr. Bond, of Toronto, has undertaken to procure the 70 horses (see letters numbered 7 and 10).

Mr. Winters, of Collingwood, will provide the oxen (see letters numbered 11 and 12).

The animals are all to be concentrated at Collingwood by the 1st May next, provided with the necessary teamsters. All required accommodation for them can be had at the last-named place.

Inclosure 3 in No. 8.

Lieutenant-General the Honourable James Lindsay to His Excellency the Governor-General.

Sir,

Ottawa, 23rd April, 1870.

I HAVE the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your Military Secretary's communication of the 20th April, forwarding to me replies from the Minister of Militia and Defence to the various points in my Memorandum of the 11th of April.

While the replies are generally satisfactory, and are calculated to assist the conduct of the arrangements for the organization of the Expedition to the North-West Territory, there is one point which I think it my duty to submit for your Excellency's consideration, and at the same time take the opportunity of explaining my views for carrying out the service to be performed in the most efficient manner.

I extremely regret the decision at which the Dominion Government has arrived in declining the services of a portion of the Royal Canadian Rifles, who might be inclined to settle in the territory.

This Expedition is one of considerable difficulty and magnitude, owing to the number of men composing the Regular Force, to the character of the country through which the Force will have to pass, and to the time occupied by the constant changes caused by the alternate navigation of lakes and rivers with numerous portages and dangerous rapids, and above all to the distance of Fort Garry from the base of operations. Such an expedition requires of both officers and men engaged in it habits of order and military training necessary if the country can be peaceably occupied, and still more so in the event of there being any opposition.

I am certainly of opinion that if the Militia Force proposed for the expedition was under arms for a considerable period previous to taking the field, military training, added to the natural capacity of the men, well chosen for their backwood habits, for a rough life, they would form a very valuable and capable force.

I must, however, call your Excellency's attention to the state of affairs as they actually exist.

This Expedition has been in the contemplation of the Dominion Government for several months, yet it was only upon the 15th of April, and after the receipt of my Memorandum of the 10th April, which was sent in within a few days of my arrival in this command, that the Adjutant-General of Militia submitted a plan for raising two regiments of Militia for service in the North-West.

The companies composing these two Corps will be formed by men volunteering from the different regiments in each of the seven Militia Districts, and the officers appointed to each company will be selected from officers of the Districts. Companies will, therefore, be organized, in which neither officers nor men know any thing of each other, and will not, until they have been for some time together, have any military cohesion, nor have that knowledge and confidence in each other so necessary in the conduct of a military operation. These regiments can hardly commence any military training before the end of the first week in May, and only a short time before they should proceed to Fort William, en route to the Red River. The consequence is that a force must either be started inadequate to the service to be performed, or else delay must take place in the advance of the force while the two regiments are undergoing the necessary military training; for the few days during which the Militia Force assemble for annual training every year cannot be considered sufficient for a service of this description, the men composing it being brought together as above described.

With respect to the number of Militiamen it is proposed to send, viz., 700 rank and file, they are, as I am advised at present, and in the event of there being no opposition, amply sufficient. But I have to observe that no margin is left for casualties previous to the Expedition starting, and I think that not less than 800 rank and file should be assembled, though not more than 700 rank and file need be sent to the North-West. But at all events, in consequence of the distance from the base of operations, and the necessity of having reserves of men and stores, it will be necessary to garrison Fort Francis and Fort William, as a measure of security. In this case I shall require an additional 140 men, to be found by the Dominion Government. The total Militia Force, therefore, required to proceed with the Expedition will be 840 men exclusive of officers and non-commissioned officers, and 100 men as a margin from which casualties may be replaced before the Expedition starts.

But it is essential, as far as the information as to the state of affairs in the Red River Settlement can guide the arrangements, that the possibility of opposition should be considered, and although I do not anticipate, for many reasons, that much extraneous aid could be rendered to the insurgents, yet the probability of their receiving assistance from the roving and lawless societies which are to be found in the United States, cannot be ignored.

When Colonel Wolseley arrives at Fort Francis, which he will do in advance of the main body of the Expeditionary Force, he will, it is hoped, by previous concerted arrangements obtain intelligence of the state of affairs in the settlement, and at once report to me thereon. But I think it necessary that arrangements should at once be made for a reserve of a Militia Battalion which shall, if necessary, be ready to assemble at a moment's notice. I do not propose to call this battalion out until it becomes necessary to send it to Fort William, and that would depend upon information received from Colonel Wolseley. The most effective way to organise such a reserve would be to name some battalion in Ontario, whose numbers should be made up to 400 men by volunteers from other regiments of Militia in the same district.

Reviewing, therefore, the whole circumstances as above pointed out, I cannot say that I feel satisfied with the arrangements as they at present exist with respect to the efficiency of the force to be employed, and considering the moral effect of a body of trained soldiers, and their efficiency in the event of opposition, I trust your Excellency will agree with me in thinking that as a portion of Her Majesty's troops are to be employed, it would be desirable to obtain the sanction of the Imperial Government to increase the number of the 1st Battalion 60th Rifles to be employed from 200 to 400 rank and file. This measure would augment the confidence of the loyal settlers, decrease that of the insurgents, and give greater security for success.

In the event of this being acceded to, I should not require the additional 140 men from the Militia to which I have above adverted.

I understand that the Imperial Government are prepared to bear the expense attending the employment of 250 regular soldiers on this expedition; any expense, therefore, consequent upon an increase of the regular force would fall upon the Dominion Government. But the employment of the extra number of regulars would in fact be cheaper than the additional number of Militiamen above required (viz., 140), inasmuch as the Government would not have to pay the men, but they will have to give 200 men free rations instead of 140 men. There will be the personal equipment of the men in respect of mocassins, shirts, water-bottles, field allowance for officers, &c., which must fall upon the Dominion Government according to the present arrangement under which the expense is to be apportioned. Other stores, such as blankets, waterproof sheets, &c., for the additional force, I am prepared to serve out from the Imperial stores.

The force to be employed upon the expedition would therefore stand thus:—

1st Battalion 60th Rifles	400
Artillery and Engineers	40
Militia (all ranks)	780
	<hr/>

I request that your Excellency will favour me with the decision of the Dominion Government upon this proposal with as little delay as possible, as it will be necessary to communicate by telegraph to the Imperial Government for authority.

I am glad to observe that the Dominion Government do not propose that the police force, which is to be placed under Captain Cameron, should form part of or accompany the Expedition until the force is established in Fort Garry and the Red River Territory.

I have, &c.

No. 9.

Lieutenant-General the Honourable James Lindsay to War Office.

Sir,

Head-Quarters, Montreal, 27th May, 1870.

I HAVE the honour to enclose you a copy of my instructions to Colonel Wolseley. Before issuing them I submitted to the Governor-General the paragraphs referring to the withdrawal of the troops, and the relations with the Lieutenant-Governor of Manitobah. His Excellency saw no objection to them.

These instructions, read in connection with Colonel Wolseley's orders to the force, which I also enclose, will explain the nature of the operations in hand.

I also enclose you a copy of a report I addressed to the Governor-General on the 23rd May, to be laid before his Ministers, which shows how far these operations are already in progress.

I have nothing to add to it. I expect to hear shortly from Colonel Wolseley at Fort William, and shall keep you constantly informed of what is going on. But as Colonel Wolseley proposes to push through himself to Fort Francis at once, organizing the boat service and passage of supplies and troops as he goes along, I shall not get any further reports from him for some time.

I have, &c.

JAS. LINDSAY, Lieut.-General,

Commanding Ontario and Quebec

Inclosure 1 in No. 9.

EXPEDITIONARY FORCE TO RED RIVER.

INSTRUCTIONS for the guidance of Colonel Wolseley.

THE Governor-General having called upon me to furnish a detachment from Her Majesty's Army in Canada, for the purpose of forming, in conjunction with the Dominion Militia, an Expeditionary Force to the North West Territory, now called Manitobah, I have appointed you to the command.

1. The object of the expedition is explained in the following Extract of the Governor General's Speech, in which he closed the Session of the Parliament at Ottawa, on the 12th May last.

"The Military Expedition which it is necessary to send, will gratify and give confidence to all loyal and well-disposed persons."

"Her Majesty's Troops go forth on an errand of peace, and will serve as an assurance to the inhabitants of the Red River Settlement and the numerous Indian tribes that occupy the North-West, that they have a place in the regard and the counsels of England, and may rely upon the Imperial protection of the British Sceptre."

2. The Force will consist of about 1,140 men, and will be composed of detachments of the Royal Artillery, and Royal Engineers, Army Service Corps, and Army Hospital Corps, 7 companies of the 1st battalion 60th Rifles, and two regiments of Canadian Militia, of 350 rank and file each.

The Force will embark at Collingwood, on Lake Huron, as soon as the Dominion Government have made the necessary arrangements with respect to transport.

3. It will be necessary to disembark armed men and munitions of war at Sault St. Marie, and to re-embark them on Lake Superior, as the American Government will not permit them to pass through the canal, which is in the United States Territory.

As there is always a probability of an incursion of Fenians when so near the American Territory, it will be necessary that you should have a strong force of militia at this point, for the security of your stores, and to remain there until they are all gone forward. The armed steamer "Rescue" has been placed under your orders with this object.

4. The officer in command, and other officers, should cultivate cordial relations with the officers of the United States Army stationed at the Sault.

5. At Thunder Bay you will have for some time a large dépôt of stores, and an hospital, and it is also your base of operations.

It will be necessary to secure your position against the possibility of a raid either from the Lake or the land side. You should prepare temporary defences. A strong company should, when the main body of the Force has moved forward, remain at this post, the Commander of which should be carefully selected for his discretion.

6. At Fort Francis you should collect stores for three months' consumption, which should be there before the Force again moves forward, so as that one month's consumption should be taken in the boats from that place, with a reserve of two months left in store.

An hospital should be established here, and good diet obtained if possible. A strong garrison, under a Commander of discretion, should be left here until the approach of winter.

7. The detail of the arrangements for an advance of the Force, and transport of stores from Thunder Bay, are left to your discretion. But care must be taken not to encamp on American ground, which is, during a portion of the route, on the opposite banks of the rivers and lakes.

8. In the event of your being able to go over the route to Fort Francis previous to the advance of the troops, it would be desirable that the Hudson's Bay agent should send a messenger to Fort Alexander, and the Red River extremity of Winnipeg Lake, to obtain information as to the state of affairs in the settlement, and as to the probability of obtaining supplies of fresh meat on arrival at Fort Garry.

9. Fort Francis being close to the American frontier, and within reach of the mines at Vermillion Lake, which are probably worked by Irishmen, precaution should be taken against predatory attack, and also against desertion.

10. Strict instructions should be given to officers and non-commissioned officers in charge of boats, to control the men in order to prevent accidents, and they should not interfere with the voyageurs, who should receive respectful treatment. It will be better to lose some time than to risk life unnecessarily.

11. In your progress you should leave the means of keeping up the communication with the rear by distributing a certain number of boats on the lakes, by which means you will be enabled to transmit messages to me, and send for any further supplies you may require.

12. Before you arrive at Fort Garry, it would be desirable that some of the workmen of the civil engineers should have gone forward to make a road through the swamps, from the north-west angle of the Lake of the Woods; and after your arrival it would be desirable to employ some of the men of your Force in completing this line of communication, so that it may be used by the Regular Force on its return.

13. After you are established in Fort Garry, a portion of the boats should be employed in bringing up supplies from Fort Francis, so that you may have a month's upply in Fort Garry, in addition to supplies of fresh meat and vegetables which you may get in the settlement, while there should be sufficient left in Fort Francis for the return journey of the Regular Force in September, and for the company remaining there.

14. You will make all necessary arrangements for housing the Militia Force during the winter, the expense of which will be borne by the Dominion Government. You will also take into consideration the possible contingency of a portion of the Regular Force remaining there.

15. It is the present intention of the Governor-General to visit the settlement in August, in which case I hope to accompany him.

In the event of my not being able to do so, you will order the Regular Force to commence its homeward march on or about the 20th August, and no order, except one received from me, in concurrence with the Governor-General, is to prevent you from carrying this into effect.

15A. During your advance from Toronto you will take no orders from any one except me, and I shall not interfere with your arrangements, relying on, and having the greatest confidence in your discretion.

16. The Lieutenant-Governor will probably arrive at Fort Garry soon after you are established there. He will be in the same relative position with respect to the Officer Commanding Her Majesty's troops and who is placed in command of the Dominion Force, as the Lieutenant-Governor of the Provinces of Ontario and Quebec are as regards myself, and will have no control over you, which can only be exercised by the Governor-General through the Lieutenant-General Commanding.

17. As, however, the territory of Manitobah is cut off by distance from immediate communication with the Governor-General, should the Lieutenant-Governor require exceptional military duties of you he must furnish you with a requisition in writing, detailing the object, and you will use your own discretion as to the course you may think it necessary to pursue.

18. Should any difference of opinion arise between the Lieutenant-Governor and yourself you must act upon your own discretion, and record it officially.

19. After your first arrival it is very desirable that the force should be encamped and kept together, and that you should keep a certain force under arms daily on duty, and at a later period recommend the distribution of the force for the winter in the manner you think best in a military point of view.

20. It will be part of your duty to take care that the Militia Staff Officers, and those officers attached to the force, are instructed in their duties by the Imperial Staff and Control Officers, so that they may undertake the duties efficiently on the removal of the Regular portion of the Force.

21. On the Regular Troops finally quitting the Settlement you will direct the Assistant Controller to take stock of all supplies and Imperial stores that remain, and deliver them over to the Militia Storekeeper, as well as all articles not required by the troops on their return; thus finally closing the account between the Imperial and Canadian Governments as regards supplies at Fort Garry. If not required, you have authority to dispose of them to the best advantage.

22. As regards supplies of fresh meat on your arrival at Fort Garry, I shall be guided to some extent by information which I have already asked for, and shall do all that I can to obtain an immediate supply, but this should not induce you to relax your own efforts in that direction. The Controller will alone be responsible for feeding the force until the 30th September. I have suggested that the Dominion Government should assume the responsibility after that date.

23. In conclusion, it will doubtless occur to you that owing to the mixed character of the Force, and its inexperience in the nature of the service, the proximity of the United States frontier, the peculiar character of Indians and voyageurs, great care will be required in enforcing strict attention to orders. Indians should be ceremoniously treated.

24. The Imperial character of the force, with entire freedom from all sectional feelings, should be maintained.

25. The possibility of opposition should be provided for, whatever news you may receive.

26. It is most important that none of the persons who had during the last winter taken part in the troubles at Red River should accompany the Expedition, and you will do all that lays in your power to prevent them doing so. I have to recall to your memory that both in public and in private certain of those gentlemen have expressed themselves anxious to take the opportunity of the advance of the Expedition to pay off their scores. You will therefore discountenance them in a public manner should they attempt so to fasten themselves upon you.

The Dominion Government has appointed Captain Cameron to take up a body of men to act as mounted police, but you will not permit him to precede or accompany your force.

JAS. LINDSAY,

Lieutenant-General Commanding.

Inclosure 2 in No. 9.

STANDING ORDERS for the Red River Expeditionary Force.

Toronto, 14th May, 1870.

1. THE Expeditionary Force will proceed from the end of the Thunder Bay Road to the Lake of the Woods in boats. It will move by detachments, consisting of one or more companies. To each company a brigade of 5 boats will be attached.

2. The boats will be numbered, 1, 2, 3, &c., &c., and the brigade will be distinguished by letters beginning at A.

3. In each boat there will be the following tools and equipment:—2 felling axes, 1 pick axe, 1 spade, 1 shovel, 2 hand axes, 2 flanders kettles, 2 frying pans, 2 sails, 2 boat-hooks, 2 spare oars, "making eight in all," 4 rowlocks, 1 set of blocks (single and double), 1 boat lamp, 6 thimbles for setting poles, 1 dipper, 1 rubber bucket, 1 boat-sponge, 2 cans paint (black and white), 5 lb. assorted boat-nails, 1 double tin oil can, 1 tin, with pitch, 1 tarpaulin, fenders, 60 fathoms tow line, 1 can mosquito oil, &c., &c.; spare plank and tools necessary for repairs. There will also be the cooking utensils, &c., of the boatmen, for which the coxswain of each boat will be responsible. In every boat there will be 30 days' rations for the soldiers and boatmen, besides, also, about 1 ton of surplus stores.

4. With each brigade of boats there will be a carpenter's chest of tools, and a fishing net.

5. The scale of rations for every one will be as follows:—1 lb. of biscuit, or $1\frac{1}{2}$ lb. of soft bread, 1 lb. of salt pork, or $1\frac{1}{2}$ lb. of fresh meat, 2 oz. of sugar, 1 oz. of tea, $\frac{1}{2}$ oz. of salt when fresh meat is issued, $\frac{1}{3}$ pint of beans, or $\frac{1}{4}$ lb. preserved potatoes, $\frac{1}{8}$ oz. pepper; the ration of flour, when issued, to be $1\frac{1}{2}$ lb.

6. In each boat there will be three voyageurs, one of whom will be the coxswain, and have entire charge of managing the boat.

7. The officer or non-commissioned officer in command of the men in each boat will render him every assistance in doing so, and any one going counter to his advice must understand that he is taking upon himself a grave responsibility which may possibly affect the safety of the whole party.

8. No one, under any pretence, will be allowed to sit on the gunwale of the boats, and all must learn to sit steadily, moving as little as possible when the boat is under weigh, particularly in rapid water. When under sail the sheets must never be made fast, they must invariably be held by the hand.

9. To prevent supplies being sent to wrong places, it must be remembered that all stores belonging to the Expedition have been divided into three classes, X., Y., Z., and marked accordingly; those marked Z. are to be taken with the force when it finally starts from Fort Francis; those marked Y. are to be left at Fort Francis, and those marked X. at Fort William.

10. Officers commanding companies will not allow, under any pretence whatever, any person not belonging to the force to be carried in the boats, unless he has a written permission, signed by the officer commanding the force or by Lieutenant-Colonel Bolton.

11. The officer in immediate command at the Shebandowan end of the road will be held strictly responsible that no unauthorized person embarks. He will attend at the departure of each brigade of boats to see this order rigidly carried out.

12. Detachments will be posted temporarily at various portages along the route for the purpose of facilitating the transport of supplies to Fort Francis.

13. They will carry out this duty as follows: They will daily send back to the nearest portage in rear a sufficient number of boats to carry 15 tons of stores; all the boatmen to be employed on this service, supplemented by as many soldiers as the Officer Commanding on the spot may consider necessary; all soldiers to take their arms and accoutrements with them.

14. One officer will invariably accompany the boats upon this duty, and will take with him at each trip supplies sufficient for the crews for three days, together with a portion of tools, &c. The remainder of the detachment to be employed daily in carrying over the portage at their post the 15 tons of stores brought up by the boats on the previous day, and leading them in the boats sent back to receive them by the detachment in front.

15. The day after each detachment has reached its position it will commence operations by sending back for the surplus stores of the detachment in rear. This will be continued daily until all the reserve supplies for Fort Francis have been sent forward.

16. The greatest possible care will be necessary in loading and unloading the boats to guard against their being injured. The Indian voyageurs having had great experience in loading canoes, their advice is to be attended to in this matter.

17. Every one concerned must remember that the success of the undertaking depends upon these boats; and if those provided are rendered unserviceable, they cannot be replaced.

The Colonel Commanding will therefore have no alternative but to leave behind the crews of any boats that are rendered unfit for use.

18. Colonel McNeill will be stationed at the Shebandowan end of the road. Special instructions will be issued to him for his guidance.

19. Mr. Meyer will be the Control Officer there, to superintend the shipment of stores.

He will be responsible for the loading of the boats, and will decide also the description and amount of stores to be sent with each, in addition to those laid down as forming the equipment of each boat. He will hand over to the Captain of each company, the evening before he starts, the complete equipment of his brigade of boats, receiving a receipt from him for it. The Officer commanding the company will make an exact copy of the list in his pocket-book, specifying therein how he has distributed the stores, &c., by boats, and the name of the officer or serjeant in charge of each boat.

20. Mr. Meyer will also hand over to every officer commanding a company, rations complete for his men and voyageurs for 30 days, taking a receipt for the same; a list of these provisions to be also entered by the captain in his pocket-book. These provisions must be distributed throughout the boats, so that in each boat there will be 30 days' rations for every one in it.

21. Mr. Meyer will also hand over to every officer commanding a company, as much surplus supplies (about 2,000 lb. weight for each boat) as his boats can conveniently carry—Mr. Meyer to be the judge on this point—giving him an accurate list of the articles, which will be sent on with the stores when they are passed forward beyond the portage where the Company is to be temporarily stationed on the line of route. This list will be signed as correct, or otherwise, by all the officers commanding at the several portages when the stores pass through their posts; any article deficient to be noted on the list.

22. After the last detachment has left, the stores noted in the margin will be shipped with as little delay as possible at the rate of 15 tons a day. One, or, if possible, two days before the last 15 tons are to be despatched from Shebandowan Lake, Colonel McNeill will notify in writing, to all the posts in advance, stating when the last of the reserve stores will be sent through. He will send a written Memorandum with the last 15 tons, saying they are the last.

Upon receipt of this information (which will be signed by the Officer Commanding each Detachment, and forwarded on to the next post) Officers Commanding at all posts on the line between Shebandowan and Fort Francis will proceed without delay to the latter place, taking on with them their boats and all their equipments, and the remains of the thirty days' provisions sent originally with them.

23. Upon reaching Fort Francis, they will complete their boats with 30 days' rations for all persons in them, and will embark such surplus stores as the Control Officer, Mr. Mellish, may indicate.

24. As soon as the detachment left at Bear Portage reaches Fort Francis, the 200 men of the 1st Battalion 60th Rifles, which had been stationed there during this movement, will start for the Rat Portage to work at it.

25. By these arrangements the last detachment (that left at Shebandowan Lake) will reach Fort Francis the day after the last 15 tons of the reserve supplies to be stored there reach that place.

26. The detachments from Fort Francis will severally start from thence as soon as relieved by the detachment coming up in rear.

27. Fresh instructions will be issued at Fort Francis with reference to the forward movement from that place.

28. In case of a man falling seriously ill, or being seriously injured whilst the troops are moving to their several stations, the Medical Officer with the detachment will decide whether the illness or injury is of such a nature as to prevent the man from proceeding further. If he pronounces the man as likely to be unfit for work for some time to come, he is to be left behind at the nearest portage where a detachment is to be stationed, in charge of a non-commissioned officer and one man, who will take their arms, accoutrements, &c., &c., with them. A week's provisions to be left for the three men. All Officers Commanding detachments passing by them to see that they have always that quantity in their possession.

As soon the detachment to be stationed at the portage where the sick man has been left arrives, he will be sent with the returning boats to the rear, to be forwarded on to the hospital at Fort William.

If there is no Medical Officer with the detachment, the sick man will be left behind in a similar manner until the arrival of a detachment having a doctor with it.

In both cases the non-commissioned officer and private left with the man will proceed on to join their company as soon as the man has been sent to the rear.

The Officer Commanding the 12th detachment, whilst en route between his post at the Kashaboiwe Portage and Fort Francis, will use his own discretion as to whether he will send serious cases of illness to the hospital at Fort William, or take them on with him to Fort Francis. If he can possibly do so he should send them to the former place.

29. Officers commanding detachments, from the time of their embarking at Shebandowan, will keep a journal of their route, entering the exact hour they start each morning, the hours they halt for meals and start again, the time they reach their halting place for the night, giving the name of the place, the state of the weather, whether they used oars or sails during the day, &c., &c. All irregularities committed by their men to be recorded. They will also state whether they found the fires made by the previous detachment still burning or not.

30. The officers commanding the several detachments posted at the portages will encamp their men in as compact order as possible on the end of the portage nearest to Fort

Francis, except when from the marshiness of the ground, or other peculiar causes, there are good reasons for departing from this order.

They will pile up their provisions close to the landing place, at the Fort Francis side of the portage, covering them over with the boat tarpaulins, and doing everything in their power to protect them from the weather.

The boats will remain on the Shebandowan side of the portage, every precaution being taken to secure them at night by their painters to the shore. When there is a good beach they should be hauled up for the night, being launched every morning.

31. Each detachment will have a guard, consisting of at least three men per company. They will mount with arms and accoutrements. Up to Fort Francis the arms for the other men will remain in their arm chests, unless when for special reasons the officers commanding detachments may consider it necessary for the men to keep their arms in the tents.

The arms, if kept in these arm chests, must be frequently inspected by the Captains of companies, to see that they are free from rust, and in good and serviceable order.

32. The greatest possible precautions to be taken to guard against the woods being set on fire.

The cooking places will be established as near the water as possible, and no other fires are to be allowed in the camp without the express permission of the officer commanding the detachment, who will assure himself, before giving such permission, that there is no danger to be apprehended.

When on the move, officers commanding companies will be held responsible that all fires are extinguished previous to their leaving a camp.

33. As a rule, the reveille will sound at 3 A.M. every morning, and the boats will start as soon after that as possible, the men to have some hot tea before starting. The boats of each brigade must keep as near together as possible, the Captain with his Bugler being in the leading boat; the senior Subaltern and a Serjeant in the rear boat.

A halt of one hour will be made at 8 A.M. for breakfast; another halt of an hour at 1 p.m. for dinner. Officers commanding companies may, of course, depart a little from these hours for meals, but under no circumstances is more than an hour to be allowed for each meal. They will always halt for the night at least one full hour before dark, so that there may be ample time to establish the camp for the night. When on the move it is not advisable to pitch tents except when it rains or threatens to do so—even then the smallest possible number should be pitched.

34. When it is necessary to track the boats, the crew will be divided into two parties, each consisting of four or five soldiers and one voyageur. Serjeants are not to be employed in tracking.

These two parties to relieve one another every two hours. Officers and non-commissioned officers in charge of boats will see that the men returning to the boats after tracking, put on their serge frocks at once, which are not to be removed for at least half an hour afterwards.

35. All officers belonging to this Force will be most careful in impressing upon those under their command the great necessity there is for cultivating the good will of the Indians and others employed as voyageurs.

Colonel Wolseley will punish with the utmost severity any one who ill treats them.

The same rule applies to all Indians who may be met on the line of route.

It must be remembered that the Government has made a treaty with them securing the right of way through their country; all are therefore bound to protect them from injury, and it is of special importance that our intercourse with them should be of the most friendly nature.

No Indians but those actually attached to the Force are to be allowed to pass the night in our camps.

G. J. WOLSELEY, Colonel,
Commanding Expeditionary Force.

Inclosure 3 in No. 9.

Lieutenant-General the Honourable James Lindsay to His Excellency the Governor-General.

Sir,

Montreal, 23rd May, 1870.

I HAVE the honour to inform your Excellency that on Saturday, the 21st May, Colonel Wolseley left Collingwood for Thunder Bay with the greater part of the Red River Expeditionary Force, and that the remainder of the Regulars were to follow him to-day, 23rd May.

Eighty-eight horses, 46 teamsters, and 80 voyageurs accompanied this part of the force.

Four Companies of the 1st Battalion Militia had been provisionally sent to the Sault St. Marie under Lieutenant-Colonel Bolton, Deputy-Assistant Adjutant-General, upon the receipt of the news that the American Government had closed the Canal against Canadian ships for the purpose of forwarding stores across the portage and preserving them from attack.

The three remaining Companies of that Battalion will leave Toronto with 12 teamsters and 24 horses on Friday, the 27th May, or the following day.

The 2nd Battalion Militia will then go on in the regular trips of the "Algoma" and "Chicora," or in the "Prince Alfred" or "Rescue," together with the remainder of the horses and oxen.

It is hoped that the Force, men, stores, &c., will have left Collingwood by the 1st June.

At Thunder Bay a military post with hospital will be established, and a line of communication with Fort Francis will be opened.

The Force will then be passed through to Fort Francis (where another military will be established), beyond which it will not advance until sufficient supplies shall have been collected there to enable it to start with about 30 days' supplies in the boats, leaving a reserve of not less than 60 days at Fort Francis.

The forward movement will then be made to Fort Garry.

I enclose a copy of Colonel Wolseley's orders to his Force, which explains the general nature of the operations.

It is presumed that upon the Force reaching Fort Garry the Lieutenant-Governor will appear upon the scene; Colonel Wolseley will then be ready to give every assistance in his power to the Militia portion of his Force in laying in supplies for the winter, and arranging for housing the Canadian troops as comfortably as possible, &c. He will require authority, however, to incur the necessary expense, as already pointed out in my letters R. R. 30, R. R. 31 of 17th May, 1870

Colonel Wolseley has my imperative orders to arrange for the regular part of the force to leave Fort Garry upon its return to Canada between the 20th August and 1st September. With this view I have desired him to make it a special point to instruct the Militia Staff and Control Officers in their duties.

Colonel Wolseley has also been instructed to take orders on all subjects from me only, but as he will be separated from me, I have, of course, left something to his discretion. On the subject of the return of the troops, however, I have given him no latitude whatever.

I have, &c.

I HAVE laid before Mr. Secretary Cardwell your letter of the 27th ultimo enclosing copies of a correspondence which had passed between yourself and the Governor-General of Canada, on the subject of sending a Military Expedition to Red River, and detailing the measures which you had taken for organizing and preparing the Expedition.

Mr. Cardwell observes that you have not had time to make the communication to him as to the probable estimate of the expenditure connected with this Expedition, which, as stated in my letter to you of the 5th ultimo,* he would expect to receive by post.

Sir,

22nd June, 1870.

I AM directed by Mr. Secretary Cardwell to state to you that he has received with satisfaction the full and detailed accounts which your despatches by the last mail give of the arrangements made by you, in conjunction with the Government of the Dominion of Canada, for the conduct of the expedition to Fort Garry. These arrangements seem to Mr. Cardwell to be judicious, and well calculated to meet the difficulties which necessarily attend such an expedition.

By a telegraphic message Mr. Cardwell authorized you to retain the Rifle Brigade in Canada until the close of the autumn, in consequence of the increased force which you had thought it expedient to detach for the expedition, and the possibility that the discomfited Fenians might direct some effort against some portion of the expedition, and render it desirable for you to have a larger force of regulars left at your command than would have been the case if the original intention, with respect to that battalion, had been persevered in.

The Secretary of State does not anticipate that any other expense will have been caused by this change than that to which reference was made in my despatch of the 16th instant,† directing you to exercise your discretion in filling up the "Crocodile" as far as possible.

Head-Quarters,

Montreal, 3rd June, 1870.

Sir,

I HAVE the honour to enclose you a copy of a letter that I addressed to His Excellency the Governor-General, on the subject of the division of expenses of the Red River Expedition between the Imperial and Canadian Governments.

* No. 7.

† Not printed.

The first object of this letter is to lay down what expenses should be shared between the two Governments in certain proportions, and the second to get a statement in detail of all such expenses already incurred by Canada.

I have not said anything to the Governor-General as to the charges consequent on the Command and Administration of the force.

The expenses under these heads will be small only, and should, I submit, be borne by the Imperial Government, who have assumed through me the responsibility for the safety of the expedition.

If there is any delay in giving me the statement, I shall send a Control Officer to Ottawa to get it, and go there myself to hasten matters.

On its receipt I shall furnish you with an approximate estimate of the funds required from Parliament.

I understand that it is decided that the Imperial Government will pay one-fourth of the General Expenses.

I infer this not only from the despatches between the Secretary of State for the Colonies and His Excellency the Governor-General, but from the proportion which the Regulars bear to the Militia.

In arriving at this proportion, the 140 additional Regulars must count with the Militia, for the Canadian Government has engaged to pay all their extra expenses.

I have, &c.
JAS. LINDSAY, Lieutenant-General,
Commanding Ontario and Quebec

Inclosure 1 in No. 13.

Lieutenant-General the Honourable James Lindsay to His Excellency the Governor-General.

Sir,

Montreal, 21st May, 1870.

I HAVE the honour to draw your attention to the necessity of coming to an early understanding as to the division of the expenses of the Expedition to the Red River Settlement between the Imperial and Canadian Government.

I understand that the Imperial Government has agreed to meet the expense entailed by 250 Regulars joining the Expedition, and the Secretary of State for War has sanctioned the employment of 140 additional Regulars in lieu of an equivalent number of Militia, provided that all extra expenses of more than 250 Regulars shall be borne by Canada.

There is a certain class of expenses which can be kept entirely separate without difficulty, such as pay, personal equipment for men (see inclosure A), and field allowance for Officers.

These expenses would, in the case of Regulars, fall at once on Army funds, those applying to the 250 Regulars remaining chargeable thereto, while any extra expense on this account for the 140 additional Regulars would be recovered from Canada.

In the case of Militia these expenses would fall at once on Canada, and remain chargeable to her.

But the general expenses will have to be brought into one statement, in order that the expenditure may be hereafter adjusted according to the proportion which may be agreed upon between the two Governments.

It is first necessary, however, to decide what expenses should be admitted in this "Red River Expedition General Account," and it is desirable to do so at once, as I see that the funds provided by the Canadian House of Commons "for opening communication with, establishing a Government in, and providing for the settlement of Manitobah," are included with those granted for the Expedition in one sum.

The expenses attending the transportation of the Expedition are therefore necessarily mixed up with those for opening up the new province.

I apprehend that it is perfectly clear that the making, improving, and keeping in order, the roads and portages, under Mr. Dawson, are expenses which are not chargeable to the Military Expedition, but form part of the system of communication which is to connect the provinces, in order that the Dominion may be independent of the route through the United States.

The expenses, however, entailed by providing, placing, and maintaining land and inland water transport for the Expedition on the route, in full working order throughout the summer, or until the Regulars shall have returned to Thunder Bay, appears to me to be in a great measure, but not altogether, chargeable to the Expedition, because the value of this transport at the conclusion of the Expedition will have to be taken into account.

As regards the supplies, stores and "matériel," and "personnel" for transport for the expedition, the arrangement which I understand to be in force is as follows:—

The Dominion Government will in the first instance pay—

1st. For all which has been obtained by their agents, including cost of carriage to Collingwood.

2nd. For the steamers hired by them on Lakes Huron and Superior.

3rd. The pay of voyageurs and teamsters until arrival at Thunder Bay.

The Control Department will in the first instance pay for all supplies, &c., obtained by it, including carriage.

All further supplies, &c., are to be obtained by the Control Department, which also provides all stores and equipments for the expedition, except personal equipment of the Militia.

The further arrangements which I propose are, that—

1st. To avoid a broken period the Control Department will not commence to pay the teamsters and voyageurs until the 1st June next.

2nd. The Control Department will in the first instance pay all claims on account of the expedition, while at the Sault St. Marie, at Thunder Bay, along the route to and at Fort Garry, until the Regular Troops leave Fort Garry—say until the 30th September next.

From this will of course be excepted any money payment to the Militia, and to Mr. Dawson, and the workmen employed under him,

3rd. The Control Department will further make all payments on account of that part of the expedition which does not remain at Fort Garry until the expedition terminates.

4th. The Control Department will make advances from the Treasury chest to the Agents of the Dominion Government at Thunder Bay and Fort Garry, until the Regular Troops leave the last of those places, should you now signify to me that the Dominion Government wish this to be done.

I desire therefore to be made acquainted with the views of the Canadian Government on this subject; and by way of bringing under view the whole of the expenses, which will become the subject of adjustment afterwards, I request to be furnished with a detailed tabular statement as soon as possible up to the 31st May, of the expenditure incurred up to that date by the Dominion Government on account of the expedition.

I will inform you in the same way what expenses have been incurred by the Control Department.

I bring this subject before your Excellency in order that a principle may be arrived at on which a further adjustment may be made, and that I may be able to furnish the Secretary of State for War as soon as possible with an approximate estimate of the charge which will fall upon the Imperial Government.

It is essential that I should do this while the Imperial Parliament is sitting.

I have, &c.

JAMES LINDSAY, Lieut.-Gen. Commanding.

War Office to the Colonial Office.

Sir,

21st June, 1870.

I AM directed by Mr. Secretary Cardwell to transmit, for the information of Earl Granville, the accompanying copy of a despatch, with its inclosure, which has been addressed to this office by Lieutenant-General the Honourable James Lindsay, on the subject of the division, between the Imperial and Canadian Governments, of expenses of the Red River Expedition.

Mr. Cardwell considers it important that he should be informed, before the Session closes, of the exact state of the expenditure on this account, and that while the detailed particulars will no doubt be transmitted to this office by General Lindsay, he is desirous to know whether he may proceed upon the assumption that the arrangement on which the Expedition has been sanctioned by Earl Granville is, that the expense of 250 regular troops only shall be a charge on the Imperial Exchequer, and that there will be no advance expected from the Military Chest for the expenditure of the Forces of the Dominions.

I am, &c.

EDWARD LUGARD.

No. 15.

The Colonial Office to the War Office.

Sir,

Downing Street, 23rd June, 1870.

I AM directed by Earl Granville to acknowledge your letter of the 21st of June, requesting to be informed whether Mr. Cardwell may proceed on the assumption that the arrangement on which the expedition to the Red River has been sanctioned by Lord Granville is, that the expense of 250 regular troops only is to be a charge on the Imperial Exchequer, and that there will be no advance expected from the Military Chest for the expenditure of the Forces of the Dominion.

I am to state that according to Lord Granville's construction of the correspondence which has passed between the Imperial and Canadian Governments, the Imperial expenditure is to be limited to the cost of 250 British Troops; and that he has never held out to the Canadian Government any expectation of advances from the Military Chest.

As, however, the language of the telegrams leaves an opening for argument, it may be well to explain the state of the correspondence for General Lindsay's information.

The force originally proposed was not more than 1,000 men. A confidential minute of the Canadian Privy Council, which reached the Secretary of State on the 2nd of March, stated that it was believed "that a force of 1,000 men of all arms would be more than sufficient."

On the 11th of April, Sir John Young proposed, by telegraph, that Canada should pay "a reasonable proportion, say three-fourths of the Expedition," of this force (presumably not more than 1,000 men).

On the 20th of April, Lord Granville telegraphed the condition that "Her Majesty's Government should pay only the expense of British Troops not exceeding 250" (i.e. one-fourth of 1,000 men), and Canadian Government the "rest, not sending less than 500 men."

On the 28th of April, Sir J. Young telegraphed that 390 of the Troops should be British Regulars, and that "Canadian Ministry agreed to this, and still engaged to pay three-fourths of Expedition."

And General Lindsay telegraphed at the same time to the War Office that he had "arranged with the Canadian Government that all extra expenses of more than 250 Regulars shall be borne by Canada."

Afterwards the number of the expedition was raised above 1,000, so that three-fourths of it would be more than 250.

Lord Granville considers that Sir John Young's telegram of the 28th of April was intended as a request that the composition of force should be altered, coupled with an engagement that this alteration should not impose on Her Majesty's Government any increase of pecuniary liability beyond the expense accepted by him of 250 men. And it is plain that this was also General Lindsay's understanding. He anticipates that it will be found to be that this is also the view of the Canadian Government, who could not have intended, while appearing to limit the responsibility of the Home Government, to give themselves in effect an indefinite power of increasing it by augmenting their own force.

Lord Granville will send a copy of this correspondence to Sir John Young.

I am, &c.

FREDERIC ROGERS.

No. 16.

The War Office to Lieutenant-General the Honourable James Lindsay.

Sir,

23rd June, 1870.

I AM directed by Mr. Secretary Cardwell to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 3rd instant, enclosing the copy of one which you had addressed to the Governor-General, on the subject of the division of expenses of the Red River Expedition between the Imperial and Canadian Governments, and stating that so soon as you received the information therein asked for, you would furnish the Secretary of State with an approximate estimate of the funds required from Parliament. In reply, I am desired by Mr. Cardwell to state that he communicated your letter and its enclosures to the Secretary of State for the Colonies, and has received from him the answer, which I enclose, and from which you will learn the view of Her Majesty's Government as to the agreement between the Imperial Government and the Government of the Dominion, as regards the expenses of the Expedition.

I am desired by Mr. Cardwell to request that, if the estimate to which you refer has not been already dispatched, you will forward it at the earliest possible opportunity.

The form must be that adopted for the annual estimates, under the heads applicable to this service; covering the whole cost of the expedition from its commencement to the period at which the extraordinary charges may be expected to cease. The proper proportion of the expenditure should, as far as may be practicable, be ascertained in Canada in communication with the Colonial authorities, in order that it may be known as accurately as possible what amount will have to be provided from Imperial resources.

You will be so good also as to transmit by the earliest opportunity, if not already transmitted, an abstract of actual expenditure, Colonial and Imperial, to the end of May, and, so long as the joint expedition lasts, you will transmit a similar abstract monthly, by the earliest opportunity after the last day of each succeeding month.

I am to add that it would be desirable that arrangements should be made by which the monthly statements of expenditure should be seen by an Officer on behalf of the Colonial Government, and their accuracy confirmed by him, in order that when the final settlement is made, there may be no questions in dispute on matters of fact.

I am, &c.

Inclosure 1 in No. 17.

Lieutenant-General the Honourable James Lindsay to His Excellency the Governor-General.

Sir, Montreal, 7th June, 1870.

REFERRING to my Report, R. R. 40, of 23rd May, 1870, I have now the honour to inform your Excellency that Colonel Wolseley arrived at Sault St. Marie on Monday, 23rd May.

He reports that the United States garrison there consists of 250 men, and that our Officers and the United States Army Officers are on the most cordial terms.

The position of our Camp, though low, is otherwise favourable, and very strong.

The impression there is that an attempt will be made by Fenians to destroy some of our vessels on Lake Superior, and as a precautionary measure, a guard is put upon every vessel, and half the men are accoutred at night.

Colonel Wolseley reached Thunder Bay on the 25th May.

He reports the camping ground as limited, but dry. A recent fire had caused very great damage, and as some of the smaller bridges had been burnt, some delay would be occasioned.

The steamers have to anchor 400 yards from the Wharf. A good scow had been built on the spot for landing stores and horses. The weather was fine.

I now inclose a copy of the last Report received from Colonel Wolseley, dated 27th May, at Prince Arthur's Landing, which gives a very complete account of the road to Shebandowan. Also a copy of a telegram received from him this day, and dated Prince Arthur's Landing, 1st June.

From Lieutenant-Colonel Bolton, D. A. A. G., who is at Sault St. Marie, I have several Reports.

It was on the 19th May that the Officer Commanding the United States troops at Fort Brady informed him that the Canal was open to the passage of vessels on certain conditions.

On the 24th May much delay and inconvenience resulted from the proceedings of the Captain of the "Francis Smith," and the correspondence on that subject is enclosed.

This failure of the "Francis Smith" to fulfil her engagement necessitated the despatch of an agent to other points to try and hire a vessel in her place.

On the 28th May the United States Commanding Officer declined to allow the "Prince Alfred" to pass through the Canal, though she had been disarmed.

On the same day Lieutenant-Colonel Bolton reports a case of scarlet fever in camp, but otherwise all well.

Colonel Fielden, 60th Rifles, who is in command at Toronto, completing the arrangements there, reports under date 29th May:—

"The Ontario Battalion has made great progress, and is complete in numbers. Its men have begun to practice with ball.

"The Quebec Battalion does not fill. Four men have volunteered to it from the "Corps at the Sault."

His latest Reports are dated 1st and 5th June. I inclose a copy of them.

From these documents your Excellency will learn that in the course of the present week Colonel Fielden, with the last part of the men, supplies, stores, horses, boats, &c., will leave Collingwood for Prince Arthur's Landing on Thunder Bay.

I beg, however, to draw very particular attention to what Colonel Fielden says respecting the want of voyageurs.

I have, &c.

Inclosure 2 in No. 17.

Prince Arthur's Landing, Thunder Bay,
Friday, 27th May, 1870.

YESTERDAY morning I started off on horseback along the road in company with Mr. Russell, the engineer, who has been employed upon it all the spring. The following will describe what I saw:—

One mile from the bay there is a bad sandy hill with steep gradient, and so deep that it is very hard upon horses. It is part of the old road, which was badly laid out as far as I can judge.

A road is now being made round it which will be a great improvement; it is at present the only really bad pitch on the 31 miles that I inspected between the bay and the Kaministiquia River (called 21½ miles, but in my opinion at least 23 miles). The road is very fair as a clay or sand road; there are no bad places wherever it passes through swamps; it has been ditched and fascined. There are four settlers on this section who have begun clearances for farms on ground that has been burnt over many years ago, and over which fire has evidently passed several times since. The fire which raged through these woods for three days last week has done a great deal of harm to the road, it burnt the greater number of the culverts and small bridges. All these have been repaired since so as to be passable for teams, and although as a permanent work they are poor affairs they will answer our purpose very well. The most serious damage done has been where the road has been cut out along the hill sides, where the made portions have fallen in from the crib work being burnt through.

The fire has in many places gone right through the fascines and corduroy work on the raised parts of the road where it runs through low ground; all this damage has now been temporarily repaired in such a manner that wagons have been going over it yesterday and to-day. The bridge over the Kaministiquia River is a very good one about 360 feet long; river unfordable. From thence to the bridge over the Matawin River (about five miles), the road is of a different character, being only made wide enough for one wagon. It is in some places still rough but it is quite practicable for any wagon. Beyond the Matawin, for the five or six miles that I went, the road is in some places very bad, but they are at work upon it, and when the bad places have been corduroyed over (which they will be within three or four days) all wagons can go over it easily. At present ox wagons go over it to within four miles of where the boats are to be launched. A creek of about 70 feet in width has yet to be bridged over there, upon which work will be begun to-morrow or Monday. Altogether the road is better than I expected, although somewhat longer, for instead of being 40 it is certainly 45 or 46 miles long. To-morrow morning I intend starting off two companies of 60th. One to be stationed at the bridge over Kaministiquia River, where I am going to establish a depôt of provisions, moving on all my stuff there, or at least as much of it as I can until all the road is ready for traffic. The other company I intend stationing at a lake 15 miles from here. Both these companies are to work on the road. I am starting off one or two boats to-morrow as an experiment; those I am going to send on to Matawin Bridge, where I shall land them to prevent fire. There is no clearance there, so I dare not make any large collection of stores there. At Kaministiquia Bridge there is a large safe clearance where I can collect any quantity of stores in safety. Fire is a serious element that must come into all our calculations.

All the men are busy from morning until evening at fatigue labour, unloading the boats and stacking away the provisions, &c., so I shall not be able to begin my stockade work at present. I hope the weather which is still lovely may continue so until all the stores are landed, for with a wind blowing on shore the captains of these steamers are afraid of coming in near the shore, and even the tug fellow is in a funk about his "bottom," for a regular sea sets in sometimes which bumps the boats about.

Mr. Simpson, M.P., started to-day for Fort Francis, in a canoe with five Indians, where he is to make a treaty for right of way with the Indians. A man whose name I forget was sent there overland during the winter by the Ottawa Government, to open negotiations with these Indians, so I expect that Simpson will find everything cut and dry for him. Hopkins was quite wrong about the number of Indian voyageurs we can get here; he said we might get 20 or 30. Mr. McIntyre says he will send off at once and get us about 100 first-class men to act as pilots. Simpson's crew return at once from Fort Francis, so he sends me back by them all the news he can regarding the state of affairs there and beyond. Money tells me that he had the most dreadful work with the captain of "Francis Smith," he was drunk all the time and would interfere with him in loading the bullocks and horses; the consequence was that two horses had been badly gored by the bullocks. I am sending you an official asking for a veterinary to be sent here, as there are some horses hors de combat from kicks and colds. I daresay that I could allow him to return in the course of a month.

I am, &c.

Inclosure 3 in No. 17.

Telegram from Colonel Wolseley to Lieutenant-General the Honourable James Lindsay.

Dated Prince Arthur's Landing, 1st June, 1870.

TEN more wagons, besides those already supplied, are urgently required, as carts are of little use. Propeller "Clematis" arrived 4 P.M. on the 31st with Royal Artillery and Royal Engineers, four guns and ammunition and half Company 60th. Propeller "Amora" arrived this morning at 9.30, with one Company and a half of 60th, all well. Weather very hot.

Enclosure 4 in No. 17.

Lieutenant-Colonel Bolton to Lieutenant-General the Honourable James Lindsay.

Sir,

Camp Sault St. Marie, 20th May, 1870.

I HAVE the honour to report to you, for the information of the Lieutenant-General, that the steamer "Francis Smith" arrived here this afternoon, troops, &c., as per margin.

The officer in command, Major Robertson, 1st Battalion 60th Rifles, reported to me that the delay in his arrival had arisen from the drunkenness of the master of the vessel; that they had been in considerable danger.

It is said the ship's compasses were out of order.

There were only two small boats on board, no life-preserving belts, and no means of lowering even what boats they had.

I had an interview with the Captain, who declined proceeding to Fort William. I wrote to him on the subject (copy of a letter attached, and received a reply, copy attached).

As I was informed that it was considered important that the 60th should not remain at the Sault, I shall embark half in the "Algoma" and half in the "Brooklyn," although these vessels were intended to take the troops and stores which are due here to-morrow (25th) in the "Prince Alfred," and I have instructed Deputy-Assistant Commissary-General Fuller to try to hire a steamer on Lake Superior to take on the cargo of the "Francis Smith" and of the "Prince Alfred."

I have reported these events to Colonel Wolseley, and in a private letter to Colonel Cumberland.

The Captain of the "Francis Smith" had his clearance for Fort William, and he showed me a telegram received from Colonel Cumberland, which he declared to be his only instructions.

I have, &c.

Lieutenant-Colonel Bolton to Captain of the "Francis Smith."

Sir,

Camp Sault de St. Marie, 24th May, 1870.

WITH reference to our conversation in the office on board your steamer the "Francis Smith" this afternoon, I have to request that you will proceed to Fort William, first disembarking the troops, &c., and passing the canal to-morrow morning, then placing your vessel at the Lake Superior end of the Sault Portage, where the "Algoma" is lying, when I will re-embark the troops and equipage.

I request that you will acknowledge the receipt of this letter, stating what you intended to do, or not to do. You can be furnished with an experienced pilot here, and I request your authority to place one on board (in writing).

Inclosure 6 in No. 17.

Captain of the "Francis Smith" to Lieutenant-Colonel Bolton.

Sir,

Sault St. Marie, 24th May, 1870.

NOT having received any instructions before my departure from Collingwood to proceed beyond the "Sault," I did not effect insurance upon the "Francis Smith" for Lake Superior, and the insurance now held on the "Francis Smith" only covers as far as this point, consequently I could not think of proceeding to Fort William without a special guarantee of 65,000 dollars, and also a stipulated amount for conveyance. In the event of your not complying with my request within two hours, I shall charge for the "Francis Smith" at the rate of 500 dollars for every twenty-four hours after 10 P.M. to night. Also, should you decide to disembark the troops here and the freight, I require that you should certify my manifest for conveyance of some to the Sault, otherwise I must hold the freight subject to regular charges on freight and passengers.

I beg to thank you for your kindness in offering to furnish me with an experienced pilot, and shall be most happy to accept of his services should you and I come to an understanding.

I have, &c.

W. H. SMITH, Master.

Inclosure 7 in No. 17.

Colonel Fielden to the Deputy Adjutant-General, Montreal.

Sir,

Toronto, 1st June, 1870.

I HAVE the honour to report for the information of the Lieutenant-General Commanding that I went yesterday morning to Collingwood with three Companies and Head-Quarters of the Ontario Rifles, and three Companies of the Quebec Rifles.

On arrival they immediately embarked on board the "Chicora" and "Prince Alfred." The "Chicora," in addition to 224 officers and men, took 40 horses, and a considerable quantity of provisions direct to Thunder Bay, and 14 Boats.

A weak Company of the Quebec Battalion went on board the "Chicora," and I recommended (by letter) to Lieutenant-Colonel Bolton that he should send forward a Company of the Ontario Battalion with its own Head-Quarters from the Sault, retaining instead the Company of Quebec Rifles.

The "Algoma" will sail on Saturday with Head-Quarters and about 114 officers and men of the Quebec Battalion, about 60 voyageurs, 28 horses and oxen, with boat and freight.

By the boat of the following week I propose to take the remaining Company of the Quebec Battalion (and as many recruits as we may be able to obtain within the time), about 5 horses, 10 oxen, and some barrels of biscuits, with boats, if any remain still at Collingwood.

I cannot ascertain if additional boats or provisions are to be sent here from Quebec or Montreal, but suppose that all have already arrived.

The men embarked in excellent order yesterday; those remaining here are making fair progress.

They have commenced target practice.

The order for musquito nets for the Volunteers has been received, and will be put in force at once, though the difficulty of additional charges has arisen, the makers saying that the quantity of material now required cannot be procured at the original price.

Surgeon Nelson, of the French Volunteer Battalion, I have informed Lieutenant-Colonel Williams, 60th Rifles, will be available till Saturday to attend to the Hospital of the 60th Rifles, on which date it will be easy to provide civil attendance both for the remaining Companies of Volunteers and the Detachment 60th Rifles if necessary.

In the ranks of the Ontario Rifles are several medical men holding diploma, and in regular practice in their own districts. One of these was appointed to take medical charge of the men in the "Chicora," a second I attached to the French Companies in the "Prince Alfred."

I have, &c.

R. F. FIELDEN, Colonel,
1st Bn. 60th Rifles.

Inclosure 8 in No. 17.

Colonel Fielden to the Deputy Adjutant-General, Montreal.

Sir,

Toronto, 5th June, 1870.

I HAVE the honour to report for the information of the Lieut.-General Commanding that the "Algoma" left Collingwood yesterday at 4 o'clock P.M., with the following:—viz., Head-Quarters and 120 officers and men of the Quebec Battalion, 62 voyageurs, 26 horses and oxen, 12 boats, and a large quantity of provisions for the expeditionary force.

The "Rescue" left the day before yesterday, with a barge in tow having a large quantity of hay on board.

The men of the Quebec Battalion behaved well. I did not notice any irregularity or drunkenness whatever, and the Officers were very attentive to their duties, from their leaving the Crystal Palace to the time of the companies being embarked on board the "Algoma."

I have every reason now to believe that this Battalion will be complete in numbers before I leave with the last two companies next Friday, as is my present intention.

And unless something very unforeseen should occur, the whole of the material for the expedition will have left Collingwood for Thunder Bay, Fort William, when the "Chicora" gets under weigh on Friday, the 10th instant.

It is to be hoped that the voyageurs will be in time for the next boat. A considerable number are still called for.

Veterinary-Surgeon Tozer reported himself this day. He was unable to arrive yesterday in time for the "Algoma."

Captain Dundas and Lieutenant Buller of the 1st Battalion 60th also proceeded in "Algoma."

It will I fear be impossible for me to obtain the services of a medical officer for the party to leave by the "Chicora," nor do I find any among the men of the Quebec battalion who have any knowledge of physic. I should be glad, therefore, if I may be furnished by return of post with a list of such medicines as might be possibly required during the short voyage.

I expect to have 100 men and 6 officers with me; should I not receive such a list on Thursday morning, I will apply to the civil practitioner now looking after the troops in this place.

I have, &c.

No. 18.

Lieutenant-General the Hon. James Lindsay to the Secretary of State for War.

Sir,

Montreal, 1st July, 1870.

IN continuation of the inclosure of my letter E 2464, of 10th June, 1870, I have now the honour to submit a copy of a report that I have addressed to His Excellency the Governor-General, respecting the progress of the Red River Expedition.

I have, &c.

JAS. LINDSAY, Lieut.-General,
Commanding Ontario and Quebec.

Inclosure in No. 18.

The Military Secretary to his Excellency the Governor-General.

Sir,

Montreal, 29th June, 1870.

1. SINCE the Lieut.-General Commanding addressed his Report R. R. 55 of 7th June, to his Excellency the Governor-General, respecting the progress of the Red River Expedition, Colonel Wolseley has reported the arrival, at Prince Arthur's Landing, of the whole of the troops, supplies, stores, and transport, with the exception of two companies of the Quebec Rifles, which left the Sault under Lieut.-Colonel Bolton, to join him on the 19th June, clearing out that point entirely.

2. The Lake Transport Service was considerably delayed by the failure of the "Francis Smith" to fulfil her engagement; and, had not Lieut.-Colonel Bolton taken the most energetic measures to replace her, by hiring steamers on Lake Superior, the expedition would have come to a standstill.

3. Since Colonel Wolseley returned from his first reconnoissance of the road—reported to you in R. R. 55—his troops have been employed in landing stores, opening communications and drains in camp, building a magazine with a wharf near it, constructing a palisaded redoubt 25 feet by 15 feet for protection after the expedition shall have moved forward, gun and rifle practice, learning to row, and the use of the Army Signal System.

On the 28th May, the day after their arrival, 2 companies of the 60th were detached towards the Kaministiquia Bridge to work on the road, and a third company followed on the 2nd June. Of these 1 company was ordered on the 16th June to go 2½ miles beyond the Oskondigee Creek to work on the road.

4. On the 2nd June the first line of wagons (5) with supplies started. The first line of wagons with boats started on the 3rd. Twenty-eight boats in all have been sent by road and two of them have been badly damaged by careless driving.

5. The weather up to the 4th June was very hot and fine; under these circumstances there is great danger from fire, the very ground appearing to burst unaccountably into flame.

The fine weather was succeeded by a week of rain and storm; and on the 6th June 12 boats broke from their moorings in Thunder Bay and came ashore, one was badly injured.

6. The health and spirits of the troops are very good, and the rations are excellent.

7. The personal equipment of the Militia is still incomplete. They have only one pair of trousers each, and those very thick ones.

Their free kit boots, issued by the Canadian Government, have turned out badly, and the men are discontented at being made to pay for the boots from Army Stores sent up to replace them. This question has already been represented to the Militia Department and calls for immediate action.

8. Colonel Wolseley's attention has been principally engaged by the road to Shebandowan, and his means of transport for his supplies and boats to that point.

His Excellency will be able to form an opinion as to the state of the road from the following extracts of Reports of recent reconnoissances made of it, and from the tracing which accompanies this Report.

Colonel Wolseley, writing on the 9th June, says:—"I started from camp on Monday morning, 6th, at 4:30 A.M., to ride along the road as far as I could. It poured with rain all Monday, Tuesday, and yesterday, up to about 4 P.M. At the present moment the road may be said to end at the Oskondigee Creek, 75 feet wide. It is still unbridged, but a gang of men reached there on Monday evening to construct a bridge, which will not take long, although there is difficulty about timber, as the fire has not only destroyed all that had been prepared for it during the winter, but also all the large trees in the neighbourhood. For the last eight or nine miles before reaching that creek the road is only a track, and is impassable for loaded wagons in wet weather. My horse was tired out in going over it at a walk. Strong gangs of men are now working at it; and I think that by the 25th inst. it will be open for traffic. Wherever it is corduroyed it is good; but wherever the road passes over simple marl or clay it is hopelessly bad during such weather as we had for the last three days.

"Assistant Controller Irvine was with me, and we camped for the night on the bank of the Oskondigee, which they call 37 miles from this place, but which is really, I am sure, a good 40 miles. On Tuesday we crossed the Creek on a temporary raft. I walked on to a hill from whence I could obtain a peep beyond; but as the road was only an execrable track after it had gone about a mile from the Creek, I halted, but sent Assistant Controller Irvine on. He got on about 2½ or 3 miles when the track became so bad and swampy that he turned back. It is cut up to the 'Dam site.' A strong gang has now been turned on to it, and I hope it will be passable for wagons by the time we require it."

Lieutenant-Colonel McNeill, reporting to Colonel Wolseley on the 16th June, says:—

"Left the camp at 4:30 A.M. on the 14th June, and proceeded to the bridge over the Oskondigee Creek, arriving there about 5 P.M. Walked to camp, about a mile further on, and ordered a canoe to be at the 'Dam site' the next morning.

"15th, walked to the 'Dam site,' and embarked at 10 A.M. Poled up five short rapids, and tracked up one rapid, reaching the point on the lake to which the road will eventually be brought at 11 A.M. At this place there is a fair camping ground. Immediately to the right, on entering the Lake, there is a Sandy Bay, and on the bank there is a favourable position for forming a depôt of stores. The distance from the Oskondigee Creek to the 'Dam site' is 5½ miles; of this rather more than 4 miles have been cleared of timber, and a rough wagon-road formed. The remaining mile has not yet been touched. The distance from the 'Dam site' to the Lake is 3 miles, and no portion of this has yet been cleared. It will require at least one week's labour to complete a fair wagon-road from the Oskondigee Creek to the 'Dam site.' I started from the Creek at 6 P.M., and reached the camp at Thunder Bay at about 1 o'clock the next morning, the distance being about 38 miles. The whole line of road has suffered much from the recent heavy rains. Between the Matawin and Oskondigee Creek there are 2 miles in one place and about 1 in another that are almost impassable, and it will be at least a week or ten days before horse transport can be employed on this part of the line. Between the Kaministiquia and Matawin Rivers there are two or three bad places, amounting in all, in distance, to about a mile and a half."

9. With regard to the transport, the carts provided are useless for carrying supplies, and are only suited for work about the camp.

To replace them, in part, 10 wagons have been sent up by Lieutenant-Colonel Wily. Some farmers' wagons, with teams and drivers complete, have also been hired by the Control Department, near Collingwood, by the day, and sent to Thunder Bay.

The road, however, has been so bad, in consequence of its incompleteness, and of wet weather, that it has been only possible to put 1,000 lb. loads into each wagon, and many horses have been on the sick list from exposure and over-work on deep roads. As the ration of forage has been increased, and as a Veterinary-Surgeon and Collar-maker have arrived, improvement in their condition may be expected.

10. Colonel Wolseley has always desired to test the feasibility of passing boats up the Kaministiquia and Matawin, so as to relieve his Land Transport.

Mr. Dawson did not think this possible, but Mr. McIntyre, Hudson Bay Company's Officer at Fort William, declared the route perfectly practicable, and gave his own voyageurs and guides for the attempt.

The experiment was commenced on the 4th June by Captain Young and 34 men of the 60th in six boats, and his progress is detailed by that officer as follows:—

"Left the camp, Thunder Bay, at 6:45 A.M., on the 4th, and were towed to Fort William. We left Fort William at about 9 A.M., and rowed up the Kaministiquia to Point Meurons, where we arrived at 12 noon, and halted to dine. We proceeded again about 1:45, and after rowing about 2 miles further, came to rapids, where we had to lay the oars aside and take to poling and tracking for 6 miles further, where we camped.

"We started early on the 5th and arrived at Portage Parisie at 9 A.M. Portage “ 350 yards, but the Indians managed to take the boats up the rapid, so that only the stores, rifles, &c. were carried by land. We went on again at 10:30 A.M. and poled and tracked until 12 noon, when we had to run ashore from a violent thunderstorm. We stopped at 1 P.M. for dinner, at the point where White Fish River meets the Kaministiquia, and went on again at 2:20, tracking and poling, also a little rowing, but very little of the latter, and arrived at the foot of the Kakabeka Falls about 6 P.M. and camped; for the last half a mile the carvel boats had to be taken up by the Indians alone, and the men of the detachment belonging to them marched along the bank through the bush.

“ On the morning of the 6th it rained heavily, so we did not get to work until 8 A.M., after breakfast, when the Indians began to cut a portage road, and our men to take stores, &c., across the portage, which I found to be about 1,750 paces; after dinner a considerable part of the road being made we carried the boats up to the top of a rocky hill, the angle at least 45°, it was very hard work, especially with the carvel boats, the red boats (flat bottom) being got over with considerably less difficulty. We got the stores, boats, &c., over the portage by 7 P.M.

“ Early on the 7th we embarked everything and pulled for about a quarter of a mile to another portage which I made to be 1,100 paces; this portage was very rocky, and it took us until 5 P.M. to get boats, stores, &c., over and re-embark. We then went on for about 1½ mile to another portage, where, however, the Indians got the boats up and our men portaged the stores; this occupied us until 7 P.M., when we camped.

“ The following morning, the 8th, when I met you and Colonel* Irvine, was very wet, and continued so until late in the afternoon, when the Indians took the two carvel boats up the remainder of the rapid. The river rose considerably (at least two feet) from the previous rain.

“ On the morning of the 9th we started again at 4 A.M. and went on to Portage de L'Isle, which is over an island and very short, only about 50 paces, then we went on to another portage a couple of hundred yards off, where the stores, &c., were disembarked. After breakfast the Indians felled trees and made a portage road, about 700 paces. When it was finished we got the boats over and re-embarked, but soon came to another portage of about 500 paces, and got stores &c., over and dined. The Indians then made another road and we took the boats over, and went on again through several rapids, very close together, when the men of the detachment had, in very nearly every case, to disembark, and the Indians took the boats up assisted by tracking lines hauled by our men until about 6:30 P.M., when we camped.

“ This morning, the 9th, we started about 7:30, the men having previously breakfasted. It rained hard until 6:30, so I thought it advisable not to go on, but as it cleared about 6:30 I had tea made and gave the men breakfast and came on here (Kaministiquia Bridge) without much difficulty, except at one place, where a portion of the stores were carried overland for 400 paces, the Indians poling the boats up the rapid with the remainder. The route which we came by would, I consider, be very destructive to the clinker built boats.

“ In accordance with your instructions I propose going to the Matawin Bridge tomorrow morning, and must, I fear, leave all the boats there. The Indian voyageurs say it would be impossible to take the large boats to the Shebandowan Lake, but they have been prevailed on by C. Gaumon, Mr. McIntyre's agent, to go on to the Matawin Bridge. They say it is a very hard bit of road, and though only five miles it will take us a day and a half.”

Notwithstanding these gloomy prognostications, on the 12th June Captain Young reported the safe arrival of his boats at the Matawin Bridge. He says, “The water in the river being very high, we had no portages.”

On the 13th June, Captain Young left the Matawin Bridge early in one of the Red Ottawa flat-bottomed boats, and for 4 miles did not meet with any difficulty worthy of mention; he then came to a bad rapid, where he made a portage road of 120 yards. For about 4 miles above there is a succession of rapids, up which they managed to pole and track, making a short portage of 20 yards. They then came to a rapid where the river runs through a gorge with perpendicular sides, and water so rough and rocky, with falls, that it was impossible to track or pole. On looking from the highest accessible point, the river, for at least three-quarters of a mile, seemed in the same state, and the banks were so rough, and the ascent so abrupt, that a portage road could not be formed. Captain Young considered it impossible to take the large boats by this route unless a regular road is made, and even then the assistance of many men would be required, as the highest point is more than 120 feet above the river.

11. The practicability of this water communication having been shown, Colonel Wolseley determined to send the whole of his boats by that route, and to devote his Land Transport to supplies. Mr. Dawson acceded to this arrangement, but declined the assistance of soldiers, as he had plenty of voyageurs.

12. Colonel Wolseley's plan is, therefore, to collect all his boats by the water route, at a point on the Matawin River, 5 miles below the Dam site. Over these 5 miles they will be transported by the road which is now being pushed forward; and from the Dam site, where the road is to end, they will be poled up into Lake Shebandowan.

Meantime depôts of supplies have been formed at the Kaministiquia and Matawin Bridges, where there are clearings which promise a partial immunity from the danger of fire. From these points the supplies will be carried by road to the Dam site, whence Mr. Dawson has guaranteed to get them up to the Lake in some flat-bottomed Ottawa boats as fast as they can be delivered to him.

* Qy. Assistant-Controller?

13. The point to which this plan had been carried out at the date of Colonel Wolseley's last Report, 19th June, is as follows:—

35 days' rations for 1,500 men were in dépôt either at the Kaministiquia or Matawin Bridges.

50 boats had reached the Matawin Bridge; 10 were to leave on the day he wrote, and 12 were to follow very shortly.

Colonel Wolseley says:—"When I have 100, or even 80 boats on the Lake, and provisions for 1,500 men for 60 days there, I shall move off by detachments.

"I am still in hopes of being able to leave Fort Francis for Fort Garry on the 1st August."

14. From the above account his Excellency will see that the advance of the force is entirely dependent upon the completion of the road from the Matawin Bridge to the Dam site, the terminus now fixed upon; and upon Mr. Dawson being able to carry out his engagement to take the supplies as fast as delivered to him from that point up into Lake Shebandowan.

A letter from Mr. Simpson dated Fort Francis, 10th June, was received at Prince Arthur's Landing on the 17th, and says, "that the latest news there from Fort Garry was "in April, when all was quiet; that the Indians would resist any Fenian raid; that there "would not be much trouble in making a treaty for right of way; that only two men had as "yet been obtained as guides; that the Indians were to hold a grand Council on the 20th "June; that the portages would be cut, and drift wood cleared from the French River by "the crews of the canoes leaving Fort Francis that day for Fort William; that by this means "there would be water enough in the French river for the boats; that the Hudson Bay "Company's Agent, Mr. McKenzie, would put plenty of storage at the disposal of Colonel "Wolseley at Fort Francis; that the road from north-west angle of the Lake of the Woods "to Fort Garry was reported impassable by Indians and Hudson Bay Company's officials; "that the route from Fort Francis to Fort Alexander would take about 11 days, for boats "laden with 80 pieces of 90 lbs. each; that the portages on the route were all in good "order; that the Hudson Bay Company's brigade of boats left Fort Francis for York "Factory; that he (Mr. Simpson) had had a long trip, arriving on the 8th June; weather "very wet, and head winds."

No. 19.

Lieutenant-General the Hon. James Lindsay to the Secretary of State for War.

Sir,

Montreal, 15th July, 1870.

REFERRING to my letter of the 7th July, respecting the division of the general expenses of the Red River Expedition, I have now the honour to enclose you a copy of a communication which I have addressed to the Governor-General on the subject, with the view not only of informing His Excellency of my proceedings in the matter, but of arranging that any further representation from the Canadian Government should be made to the Colonial Office and not to me.

The construction to be placed upon the telegrams that have passed is certainly open to argument, and Canada may contend that she has read them in a way more favourable to herself than I have done.

I assume that Her Majesty's Government will be glad to avoid any discussion of this kind, if the interests with which it is charged justify it in doing so.

I venture therefore to express my belief that there would be no ground left for dispute if the Imperial Government engaged to pay one-fourth of the total of the general expenses of the whole force sent, instead of the share of 250 regulars only.

Indeed, the Secretary of State for the Colonies is reported to have said in the House of Lords that England would pay one-third.

The difference which either proportion would make in the sum to be found by the Imperial Government is small, considering the object in view. Its exact amount can easily be ascertained from the detailed accounts I send home by this mail.

I have, &c.

Comm. in Brit. North America.

Enclosure in No. 19.

Lieutenant-General the Hon. James Lindsay to the Right Hon. Sir John Young.

Sir,

Clifton House, 10th July, 1870.

SINCE addressing my letter, R.R. 60, of 14th June, to your Excellency, in reply to the Minister of Militia's letter 2008, of 4th June, I have been informed by the Secretary of State for War, of the construction placed by Her Majesty's Government upon the correspondence that has passed, as to the proportion in which England and Canada should bear the general expenses of the Red River Expedition, and I believe that a copy of a letter, dated 23rd June, from the Secretary of State for the Colonies to the Secretary of State for War, containing those views, has already been sent direct to your Excellency.

I have now the honour to enclose a copy of a further letter that I have addressed to the Secretary of State for War, reporting the divergence of the Canadian Government's views from mine on this subject, and explaining the manner in which I propose, notwithstanding, to divide the sum total of the Estimates.

My opinion, as to the pecuniary responsibilities of the Imperial Government in the matter, has been framed, not only after a careful perusal of the telegrams that have passed, but with the engagement before me, made by the Canadian Government in the Minister of Militia's letter 1817 of 26th April, a copy of which I enclose.

This letter was written in reply to my letter to you, R.R. 7, of 23rd April, in which I pointed out the desirability of increasing the number of Regulars to be employed in the Expedition, and in which I said, "Any expense, consequent upon an increase of the "Regular Force, should fall upon the Dominion," and a reference to the letter itself will show that I went into considerable detail as to the nature of these expenses.

Whatever other points therefore "the language of the telegrams may leave open for "argument," the one of the payment by Canada of all additional expenses incurred by the employment of 140 extra Regulars appears to be conclusively settled by the Minister of Militia's letter of 26th April.

The number of men to compose the force was originally proposed by Canada to be 1,000, and I accepted that number on first arrival, and until a better knowledge of the nature of the service, and the state of preparation of the Militia caused me to recommend a slight increase.

It is upon the number and the proportion that the 250 Regulars originally asked for, and authorized, bear to it, that the share of Canada was fixed at three-fourths. I cannot reconcile the statement reported to have been made in the House of Lords by Lord Granville that England would pay one-third, with the correspondence that has passed, and can only suggest that his Lordship has taken that proportion as the one existing between 250 Regulars and 500, the minimum force to be sent by Canada, mentioned in one of his telegrams.

I have taken steps to find out what part of the road expenses may be fairly attributed to the Expedition, and when these shall have been ascertained, they can of course be added at any time to the general account.

In submitting these remarks to your Excellency, my intention is merely to put you in possession of the grounds upon which I have proceeded in dividing the general expenses of the Expedition.

Should they appear insufficient to the Canadian Government, I presume that any representation to the Imperial Government, that may be thought necessary, will be made by your Excellency to the Colonial Secretary.

I have, &c.

Sir,

War Office, 18th August, 1870.

I AM directed by Mr. Secretary Cardwell to acquaint you that a telegram to the following effect has been sent to you this day:—

Lieutenant-General the Hon. James Lindsay to the Secretary of State for War.

Sir,

Head-Quarters, Montreal, 19th August, 1870.

I HAVE the honour to transmit, in continuation of the enclosure of my letter, E 2484, of 1st July, 1870, a copy of a further report, R.R. 137, of 18th August, upon the progress of the Red River Expedition, that I have addressed to His Excellency the Governor-General.

Colonel Wolseley arrived at Fort Francis, all well, on the 4th August.

I also transmit a report of 16th July, by Colonel Wolseley, upon the causes of delay experienced by the Expedition, a copy of which I have submitted to the Governor-General.

I have, &c.

Commanding Ontario and Quebec.

Enclosure 1 in No. 21.

The Military Secretary to the Military Secretary to His Excellency the Governor-General.

Sir,

Montreal, 18th August, 1870.

1. MY Report, R.R. 75, of 29th June, 1870, detailed the progress of the Red River Expedition up to the 19th June.

2. On the 28th June the Lieutenant-General paid a visit to Thunder Bay remaining to the 3rd July, between which date he rode to the Shebandowan Lakes and returned by the river.

3. On the 5th July, Colonel Wolseley moved his Head-Quarters to Matawin, in order to superintend more readily the passage of supplies and boats. Before leaving, he selected a company of the Quebec Militia to form the garrison of Prince Arthur's Landing and its redoubt till the return of the Expedition.

4. I have now the honour, by desire of Lieutenant-General Commanding, to enclose a copy of a Report from Colonel Wolseley of the 16th July, 1870, in which he recalls the cause of the great delays that have taken place, and describes the manner in which the boats and supplies have been passed from Lake Superior to Lake Shebandowan. The amount of assistance given to Mr. Dawson in the shape of Military Labour is as follows :—

	Number of days' work done.			Total.
	Serjeants.	Corporals.	Privates.
60th Rifles—
From 27th May to 16th July	291½	217½	3,295½	3,804½
Ontario Rifles—
From 5th June to 15th July	135½	150	1,244	1,529½
Quebec Rifles—
From 9th June to 16th July	99	67	774½	940½
	526	434½	5,314	6,274½

The hard work which the troops have had to do has not hurt their health ; this may be attributed to the absence of liquor and to the good food they have received. Even at the " Dam Site " and at the Shebandowan Lake, the troops had fresh meat and bread. The cattle were slaughtered at Oskondagee Creek, and the meat sent daily.

The bread was baked in camp at a field-oven, which had been already used 7 weeks at Prince Arthur's Landing.

On the 17th July this oven, worked by two men, turned out 470 rations of bread in 1½ lb. loaves in 12 hours.

5. Several fearful storms took place at different times making the road temporarily impassable, and raising such a swell in McNeill's Bay that it was impossible to load the boats and start the brigades.

6. Delays have also arisen from the difficulty of getting the Indians to work on Sunday. In fact, as nothing could be taken up the rapids between the Dam Site and the lake without the assistance of the Indians, the force was completely at their mercy, and they seem to have regulated their own day's work. Colonel Wolseley by good management brought these men to terms and, notwithstanding their notions respecting work, speaks highly of their usefulness and civility.

7. On the 16th July, Colonel Wolseley had at length overcome all the difficulties of the road and transport, and after a great deal of trouble in fitting out the boats with their gear, which was in an endless state of confusion, started his first detachment of troops for Fort Francis. It was under the Command of Colonel Fielden, 60th Rifles, and was divided amongst 3 brigades of boats.

The numbers were 150 military all ranks, 34 voyageurs, and 1 guide, in 17 boats; 60 days supplies and all necessary stores, ammunition, and equipments for the men, both soldiers and voyageurs, were on board each boat, besides some reserve stores, &c., &c.

8. The following is a tabular statement showing how this operation was conducted from 16th July to 23rd July :—

Lieutenant-Colonel McNeill reports later that the number embarked from 23rd July to 1st August were as follows :—

Forty-two officers, 505 men, 120 voyageurs, and 8 guides, making a total for the Expedition of 87 Officers, 1,048 men, 256 voyageurs, 15 guides. Grand total 1,406.

9. After L Brigade had started on the 22nd July, Colonel Wolseley reports that the following supplies for all embarked, being 731 men, had been sent on, distributed throughout the different brigades :—

85	days rations of	biscuit or flour,
66	"	pork,
71	"	sugar,
69	"	tea,
71	"	beans or potatoes,

Also a field hospital for 35 men in bell tents, and a field bakery for Fort Francis, and all necessary medical comforts and stores.

The brigades that were to follow would, in addition to the minimum of 60 days' rations per man embarked, take on a certain amount of extra supplies, so that Colonel Wolseley expected that, when all should have been embarked, provisions to last the force up to the 30th September would have left Shebandowan Lake with it.

He would thus be entirely independent of any food, such as fresh meat, that might be got by the way as a reserve; and to meet the wants of the returning Regulars, Colonel Wolseley arranged with Mr. Dawson to send on to Fort Francis by 15th September 20,000 rations complete, commencing directly the last detachment had left. Reports that this operation is in progress have been received.

10. On the 23rd July, Colonel Wolseley himself started from Shebandowan in a light canoe with the intention of catching up the leading brigades.

Colonel Fielden had orders to go slowly, improving the portages, and in any case to close up the Regulars so as to make a show of force on arriving at Fort Francis.

Brigades M and N were to start on the 23rd July, and O and P, if possible, on the following day, thus completing the Ontario Battalion.

11. Colonel Wolseley would therefore see $\frac{3}{4}$ of the force under weigh, leaving Lieutenant-Colonel McNeill at Shebandowan to start the remainder.

This officer has reported that he did not get the last of the Ontario Battalion off till the 26th July, but that he despatched the last detachment of the Quebec Battalion under Lieutenant-Colonel Casault on the 1st August, and intended to leave himself on the 3rd August; and barring accidents, to join Colonel Wolseley at Fort Francis by the 9th August—3½ days.

12. After Colonel Wolseley had started, he sent back to Lieutenant-Colonel McNeill to send him on all available boat carpenters with their tools and material, as the boats appear from their rough work to have been much shaken. This was accordingly done.

13. Colonel Wolseley, before leaving Shebandowan, wrote that his further movements depended upon the intelligence as to the state of affairs in Manitoba that he might receive at Fort Francis.

If he felt confident that there would be no opposition he would at once push forward to Fort Alexander in the same order as that in which he advanced to Fort Francis, hoping to reach Fort Alexander about 16th August.

His intention was to halt there, probably two days, so as to close up the Regulars before finally advancing to Fort Garry.

14. The following telegram from Colonel Wolseley at Fort Francis, dated 4th August, shows how far and with what success the leading brigades of the Expedition have pushed their way :—

“ We arrived here this morning all well ; very few Indians here ; weather very fine, “ but were detained two days on Rainy Lake by contrary winds.

“ First detachment will leave for Rât Portage to-morrow.

15. You will see by this that the Expedition is going down the Winnipeg River. The road from the N.W. corner of the Lake of the Woods to Fort Garry is not made, and the excited and divided state of the people in the settlement prevent their setting to work to complete it.

16. Colonel Wolseley is indebted to Mr. Donald Smith of the Hudson’s Bay Company for arranging that the Expedition shall have 3 head of cattle at Fort Francis, 1 or 2 at Rât Portage, and 12 to 15 at Fort Alexander.

17. The mission of Lieutenant Butler, 69th Regiment, by Minnesota to Fort Garry, and thence up the Winnipeg River to meet the Expedition, has been most useful to Colonel Wolseley, who has now for the first time reliable information respecting the state of affairs in Manitoba, the non-existence of any road to the N.W. angle of the Lake of the Woods, the real difficulty of the Winnipeg rapids, and the possibility of getting supplies in the settlement.

With proper intelligence on these points Colonel Wolseley can now advance surely, and the Lieutenant-General does not doubt that, thanks to the energy and vigour which have been imparted to the whole force by its Commander, he will be able to report to his Excellency on the 1st September, or shortly after, that the Expedition has reached Fort Garry.

I have, &c.

Enclosure 2 in No. 21.

Colonel Wolseley to the Military Secretary, Montreal.

Camp, Ward’s Landing, 3 miles from Shebandowan Lake, 16th July, 1870.

Sir,

I HAVE the honour to report for the information of the Lieutenant-General Commanding in British North America, that the first detachment, strength as per margin, under the command of Colonel Feilden, 1st Battalion 60th Rifles, embarked in 17 boats at Mc Neill’s Bay, Shebandowan Lake, to-day, and started at 9 o’clock, P.M. They have with them complete rations for 60 days.

I hope to be able to get off the rest of the force in detachments of about 100 daily. I regret extremely that so much delay has occurred in starting the expedition from Shebandowan Lake, but I humbly submit that it was not in any way attributable to want of energy or arrangement on the part of the military, but has been occasioned by circumstances over which they could exercise no control whatever.

I take the liberty of briefly recounting the two most salient of the causes which in my opinion have kept us back.

1st. The original plan of military operation was based upon the belief that the regular troops (more than one-third of the whole force), were to have left Collingwood for Thunder Bay in the first week of May, whereas they did not leave that port until the 21st, 25th, and 26th of that month. This delay is attributable, in my opinion, to two causes: 1st, the slowness of the Dominion Government in making arrangements for conveying the force and its equipment across the lakes; and 2ndly, to the action taken by the United States authorities in closing the canal at Sault Ste. Marie to our shipping.

I trust you will pardon my briefly recapitulating the circumstances bearing upon the arrangements made for lake transport.

The Lieutenant-General having proceeded to Collingwood on the 5th of May, and made all preliminary arrangements for the despatch of the regular troops and a considerable number of horses, bullocks, &c., by the steamers “Chicora” and “Francis Smith,” on the 7th and 9th of that month respectively, and having telegraphed to Ottawa for authority to close with the advantageous offers he had received from the owners of those steamers, was instructed to hold on and to make no arrangements, as the Postmaster-General would undertake the duty of hiring steamers. The Lieutenant-General having therefore no authority to enter into any agreement with the owners of the “Chicora,” that steamer started immediately on her regular trip for Thunder Bay. Although she had no military equipment on board, she was prevented by the United States authorities from passing through the canal at Sault Ste. Marie; she therefore returned to Collingwood.

Lake Transport arrangements as proposed by the Lieut.-
General Commanding.

First cause of delay.

This action on the part of the United States Government necessitated the organization of a Land Transport Service at the Sault for the conveyance of all our supplies from the lower to the upper end of the Portage, a distance of about 3½ miles. The steamer "Algoma" had most fortunately succeeded in passing through the canal on the 6th May, and had been kept on Lake Superior in order to render us independent should the canal be closed to our shipping.

Organization of Land Transport for the Sault.

It was not until late at night on the 12th May, that I received instructions from Ottawa authorising me to send forward troops. By the early train next morning I despatched Lieutenant-Colonel Bolton to Collingwood to superintend fitting up the "Chicora" (which had just returned to that port), for the conveyance of as many horses as she could carry. She sailed on the day following with the troops and horses noted in the margin, together with a large amount of stores.

7 officers, 100 rank and file, 24 horses.

The steamer "Wanbano" followed on the 16th with two additional companies of militia, all to be stationed at the Sault Ste. Marie until the troops and stores had passed through; for having been informed that it was possible the Fenians might attempt to destroy our stores whilst in transit through that place, I considered it necessary to be strong there.

The subsequent despatch of the force had to conform to the dates of sailing of the regular line of steamers, plying in their accustomed manner, one upon every fifth day, between Lakes Huron and Superior, those vessels never being entirely at our disposal, but carrying private freight and passengers along with our stores. On the 17th May I was informed in a telegram from the Lieutenant-General that our vessels when not laden with military stores would be allowed to pass through the canal. After that date at every trip made by the "Algoma" or "Chicora" they carried as many troops, boats, horses, stores, &c., as could be placed on board, until everything intended for the Expedition had arrived at Prince Arthur's Landing, Thunder Bay. The troops and all military equipment, whilst en route through the Ste. Marie river being disembarked, in every instance, at the lower end of the rapids, and carried by wagons to a point above, where they were again embarked on the same vessels.

Despatch of the main body.

The 1st Detachment, under my own personal command, disembarked at Prince Arthur's Landing on the 25th May, and the last reached that place on the 21st June.

Disembarkation at Prince Arthur's Landing.
Accumulation of Stores at the Sault Ste. Marie.

During this operation at some times large accumulations of stores took place at the Sault, as the "Prince Alfred" gunboat, the "Wanbano," the "Francis Smith," and "Rescue" all discharged cargoes there, and did not go through the canal. There were no means for protecting from the weather the stores thus delivered by those boats, and the regular line of steamers were unable to do anything towards relieving the pressure, as they arrived so full that nothing of any consequence could be shipped in them. Lieutenant-Colonel Bolton, Deputy-Assistant Adjutant-General, whom I had left in command there, seeing that the stores would be destroyed if left exposed to the sun and rain, shipped them in American bottoms for their destination, making the best arrangements he could with the American owners for that purpose.

Shipment of Stores in American vessels.

You will perceive by the above statement that a week was thus lost in despatching the first detachment, owing to the non-approval by the Dominion Government of the arrangements made in the first instance by the Lieutenant-General Commanding for lake transport, and that considerable delay was subsequently occasioned by the closing of the canal to our vessels.

The second important cause of delay was, I consider, the want of a road between Thunder Bay and Shebandowan Lake, by means of which we could have sent forward our supplies. The original plan of military operations was based upon the belief that the road between those places would be open for traffic along its entire length before the 1st June. I write this on the 16th July, and it is now only cut out as far as this camp (about 3 miles from the lake), whilst some miles of it between the Oskondagee Creek and Young's Landing are still practically useless as a highway for constant and heavy traffic.

Second important cause of delay.

On the 26th May, the day after my arrival, I rode as far as it was practicable for wheeled transport, a distance only of about 28 miles; the total distance by road (as marked out) to the lake being at least 47 miles. Beyond that it was a matter of difficulty to go on horseback, and could not be accomplished without danger to the horse.

First inspection made of the road.

On the 6th June I again rode along it, and penetrated as far as the Oskondagee Creek, a distance of about 38 miles, the last 7 or 8 miles being totally unfit for transport purposes.

Second inspection of road.

The Oskondagee Creek (about 75 feet wide) was still unbridged. From thence to the Dam Site, a distance of about 5 miles, the road was cut out through the woods for half that distance, but the stumps had not been taken out of the ground.

On the 15th June the road was again inspected by Lieutenant-Colonel McNeill, who reported that between the Matawin and Oskondagee Rivers there were still about 3 miles that were almost impassable. The latter river had been bridged, and the road cut to within 1½ miles of the Dam Site, the remaining space being still untouched.

Third inspection of road.

On the 21st June I rode to our furthest camp, half-way between the Oskondagee and Dam Site, and found the road between the Matawin and Oskondagee still practically impassable for wagons. A few, drawn by bullocks, daily passed over, but no organized transport in the world could have existed if ordered to work over it regularly with ordinary loads. There were several places that on horseback were only passed with difficulty. Beyond the Oskondagee the road was not then cut all the way to the Dam Site.

Fourth inspection of road.

Road inspected by the Lieut.-General Commanding.

On the 1st July I accompanied the Lieutenant-General when he inspected the road. He saw for himself upon the occasion, the hopeless condition which it was in, and as his horse struggled through the swamps between the Matawin and Oskondagee Rivers, he could well appreciate the difficulties of my position. As he will doubtless remember, the road beyond the latter river, with the exception of the first two miles, was then still impassable for all descriptions of wagons.

I have thus given a general outline of the condition in which I found the road when I first landed, also upon the several dates when I subsequently inspected it, and its state now that it is about to cease being made use of by the force under my command.

Difficulties of constructing a road.

In doing so, I have no intention of imputing to anyone a want of zeal or energy in pushing it forward. Mr. Dawson, of the Public Works Department, as well as the engineers working under his orders, have been untiring in their exertions to get the road in working order. He has had to contest with great difficulties. Fires have raged twice over considerable portions of it, consuming culverts, cribwork, retaining walls, and corduroy work. Heavy rains have swamped it at other times, carrying away bridges, and rendering it impassable for days. I have at all times placed the men under my command at Mr. Dawson's disposal for employment upon the road, stationing companies anywhere he desired for this purpose. Since the 5th June there has been 5,433 days' work performed by soldiers upon the road. I have assisted him in every way in my power, carting sand for him, transporting supplies for the men from place to place, and latterly furnishing his working parties with provisions from the depôts I had formed in advance of the Matawin for the use of the troops in their final start.

Military labour performed upon the road from 27th May to 16th July:—

1st Bn. 60th 3,804½

2nd Quebec Rifles 940½
Total 6,274½

Description of road.

The road is of clay throughout. No metalling has been attempted upon it anywhere. Gravel is only to be found at a very few places, and for miles in some localities even sand is only to be obtained by carting it from a distance. At many points it was necessary to carry the road over swamps and peat mosses, where deep drains and heavy facine work were indispensable.

It crosses two considerable rivers and numerous streams, over which bridges and culverts had to be constructed. Some districts through which it passed are entirely of red clay of a most tenacious nature, which is quite impervious to water. After rain at such places it is cut up by the first ten teams that pass over it, in such a manner as to stop all traffic, and for days afterwards the wear and tear upon horses is so great that I have had more than once to stop altogether moving wagons over it. Except in the very finest weather these clay districts are destructive to draught cattle. Upon many occasions more than one-third of the horses have been on the sick list from galled shoulder, exhaustion, &c., occasioned partly by the inferior description of harness supplied by the Dominion Government, and partly by the strain of working over such heavy roads. I may here add that rain seems to be the rule and fine weather the exception in this portion of Her Majesty's dominions. It rained upon 15 days in June, and of the 16 days that are already passed in July it has rained upon eight of them. It pours at times in a manner I have seldom seen equalled even in the tropics. The only portions of the road that stand continuous traffic are those that have been corduroyed, for although they are rough and only suitable for slow draught, still they are passable in all weather.

The grades are tolerably good, as fair as could be expected, where all heavy cuttings and embankments have been avoided.

This general description of the road will convey some idea of the difficulties those responsible for its construction have had to contend with, and of those which we have had to overcome in getting our warlike material and other stores from Thunder Bay to Shebandowan Lake.

The plan which I adopted for the transport of boats and stores was as follows:—To begin with boats, 28 were sent over the road as far as the Matawin Bridge upon our first arrival, and I am now bringing up a few more in that way, as I have considered it necessary to add one boat to each brigade to increase the amount of provisions sent with it, and there is not now time to bring them up by water. Previous to our arrival here, I had been led to believe by everyone who had any previous knowledge of the country, that the only way of getting boats forward to Shebandowan Lake was by carting them over a road to that place. I was informed repeatedly that they could not be taken up the Kaministiquia river. After landing, every day's stay in the country taught me more of its geography.

Despatch of boats by river route.

Mr. McIntyre, the Hudson's Bay Company's Officer at Fort William, gave me most valuable information, and from him I learnt that it was quite feasible to send up all my boats by the river. As the general opinion of everyone connected with the Public Works Department was most decidedly against the attempt, I felt that, as a stranger to the country, I was assuming to myself a grave responsibility in making it; but already doubting the possibility of the road being finished in sufficient time to fulfil all our requirements, I considered it worth while to risk a few men and boats in determining the point. I despatched Captain Young, 60th Rifles, with his company (two Indians for each boat as guides being furnished by Mr. McIntyre) on this service. The result was a complete success. Of all those that subsequently came up the Kaministiquia route only one has been wrecked. This boat service was of great use in drilling the men to the use of boats and their management in rapid water on portages, &c., a knowledge that will be of such great importance to them hereafter. The boats were thus taken from Thunder Bay to Shebandowan Lake by water, except for the distance of five miles, where there are such a series of heavy rapids and falls that I considered it more prudent to have them carried on wagons. Had I not been able thus to have made use of river, the departure of the Expedition would have been still much further delayed.

The stores have been transported in wagons as far as the Matawin Bridge (27 miles), and from thence by the troops in boats to Young's Landing, a point two miles further on the road (where it leaves the river), from thence they are carted to Calderon's Landing (a distance of about $4\frac{1}{2}$ miles), and again embarked in boats and taken to the Oskondagee Creek. (Between Young's Landing and Calderon's Landing there were too many portages to admit of the stores being sent by river profitably.)

From thence to Ward's Landing (5 miles) they were carted like the boats. At Ward's Landing they were again embarked and taken by the troops in flat-bottomed boats, piloted by Indians, to McNeill's Bay in the Shebandowan Lake, and there finally shipped.

It is almost needless to point out that the frequent change of conveyance from boat to wagon, and vice versa, has necessarily led to waste from the breakage of barrels, &c., and from the impossibility of providing cover for the stores at all places where bulk was broken. Every endeavour has been made by Mr. Dawson to meet our requirements in this respect. Storehouses of a rude nature have been erected at five points along the line of route to the lake, besides the extensive sheds and shanties constructed for a similar purpose by him at Prince Arthur's Landing.

The troops along the line of road as far as the Matawin Bridge have been almost exclusively fed upon fresh meat and bread. Bakeries were established at Prince Arthur's Landing, the Matawin Bridge, and Ward's Landing. I have never before been with any force in the field so well fed as this one has been up to the present moment. The rations good and ample.

The absence of any spirituous liquor as part of the daily issue, is marked by the excellent health and spirits of the men, and I may add by a remarkable absence of crime.

The work performed by the men up to their arrival here has been very considerable, so much so, that many companies already begin to present a ragged appearance. This work has been especially hard upon the Militia, from the fact of their having to work in thick winter trousers when the thermometer has sometimes stood over 90° in the shade. Only one pair of trousers was supplied to each man by the Department of Militia and Defence. I have made repeated application for a pair of light serge trousers per man to be given in addition to the heavy ones, and I am glad to say that they have at last arrived, and are now being distributed. Lately each militiaman was furnished with a pair of linen trousers, but they are of a most inferior description, and last only a short time. They are quite unsuited for a climate such as this one, where it rains nearly every other day.

Speaking generally, the personal equipment supplied to the Militia by the Canadian Government is much inferior to that furnished to the Regular Troops from our own Military Stores.

I beg to add that I have left at Prince Arthur's Landing a sufficient garrison to man the parapets and to work the guns mounted in the redoubt I had constructed there. It is of sufficient strength to hold out against any number of Fenians that could possibly be brought against it.

I trust that the Lieutenant-General will pardon the prolixity of this report, but I have thought it necessary to go into details for the sake of all those who have worked so hard and unremittingly towards attaining the primary object of this expedition, that is, getting it started from Shebandowan Lake properly equipped to meet all contingencies, whether of war or peace.

The Militia have vied with the Regulars in their exertions to push everything forward, and the Regulars by their good conduct and the manner in which they have worked, have set them an example that they may have been justly proud to follow.

Colonel G. J. Wolseley to the Military Secretary, Montreal.

Detachment Royal Artillery and Royal Engineers, 2 companies 1st Bn. 60th
 Royal Rifles, under command of Colonel Feilden.

Sir, Fort Francis, 9th August, 1870.
 1. I HAVE the honour to report, for the information of the Lieutenant-General Commanding in British North America, that the first detachment of this force, strength as per margin, arrived here in three brigades (17 boats in all) under Colonel Feilden, 60th Rifles, on Thursday last the 4th instant. I also arrived upon that day.

On the 5th instant, two more brigades of boats with two companies of 60th Rifles arrived. All these brigades left for Rat Portage on the same day that they arrived. I regret to say that strong winds had delayed these boats for two days on the lakes.

On the 6th and 7th the wind blew so hard from the west that no boats could get here. On Monday the 8th instant four more brigades arrived, carrying the remaining three companies of the 60th Rifles and one company of the 1st Militia. The 60th Rifles left the same day; the company of the 1st Militia landed and encamped, as it is to form the garrison of this place until the regulars return next month. The site selected for their camp is near the buildings constituting Fort Francis. It is on a grassy bank, about 35 feet above the river.

To-day (9th) another brigade of the 1st Militia arrived and went on towards the Winnipeg River.

2. I am happy to say there are no sick. I never saw the men looking healthier or in better spirits.

3. The hard work they have undergone has, without doubt, improved their physique, but it has been ruination to their clothing; the rowing has worn out their trousers, and the "portaging" has destroyed their boots.

4. I have given strict orders to all brigades descending Rainy River to be most careful in avoiding the United States territory.

5. I have instructed Colonel Feilden to be cautious in approaching Rat Portage, lest any armed resistance should be attempted by the rebel French half-breeds from Fort Garry. He will send forward a light boat, well armed, having Lieutenant Butler of the 69th Regiment on board (who has lately come from thence) for the purpose of reconnoitring, keeping the rest of his men at a distance from the place until all is reported quiet there. I have considered these precautions necessary, as I have been reliably informed that some of Riel's followers have been lately seen several times in that vicinity.

6. As the Government of Ottawa was unable to furnish me with any important information regarding the position of affairs in Manitoba, the arrival of Lieutenant Butler on the day that I came here, bringing news direct from Red River Settlement up to 24th July, was most opportune. The greater part of the news that reaches Canada comes from rebel sources, or is percolated through sympathizing channels. The information derived from a British officer who was an uninterested observer, uninfluenced by party or sectional feelings, was therefore of the greatest value to me when arranging for my advance beyond this place. As it was possible that Lieutenant Butler might have failed in getting through to meet me, I had made arrangements for a loyal half-breed, named "Joseph Monkman" to leave the Red River Settlement upon the latest date that he could possibly do so, so as to meet me here at the end of July. He faithfully fulfilled his mission, bringing me letters from the Bishop of Rupert's Land of the 18th July, and others from Henry Prince, the chief of the Swampy Indians, also bringing valuable information regarding supplies of fresh meat, which I wish to secure immediately as I reach the settlement.

7. The day I arrived here I sent you the letters I have received detailing the condition of affairs in the Red River Settlement, and I also sent you a report from Lieutenant Butler giving an account of his journey and experience at Fort Garry.

8. With the 60th Rifles' boats which have arrived up to this present time, there have been 120 voyageurs, 12 of whom have proved worthless, I have therefore sent them back from this place.

In other words, although a selection was made from the number of men engaged as voyageurs, in order to obtain those who really knew how to manage boats in rapid water, yet one-tenth of those selected have been reported to me as useless. I have fortunately been able to supply their places here with good Indians.

9. Lieutenant Butler also brought me six good guides for the Winnipeg River, and Mr. Monkman brought me two, Henry Prince also sent me two, and I am in hopes of being able to obtain several more at Rat Portage. According to the last news from Red River, the loyal people, who are most anxious for the arrival of the troops, were getting up a subscription to defray the expense of sending six or eight boats to assist us in getting down the Winnipeg. As they were to be manned by experienced guides, I am looking forward to their help most anxiously.

I intend leaving this to-morrow myself, and unless detained by contrary winds on the lake, I hope to be at Rat Portage in three days.

I have &c.

Telegram dated Fort Garry 24th, via St. Cloud, 31st.

To Lieutenant-General Lindsay,

REACHED Stone Fort at eight on the morning of yesterday, 23rd of August, with 60th Rifles and detachment of Artillery and Engineers all well. Halted late in evening about six miles by road and nine by river from this place. Received certain information that armed rebels still hold Fort Garry. Our arrival was unexpected, as Bishop Taché had assured Riel that we should not come here until the Governor had arrived. I took measures for preventing the news of our arrival preceding us. It rained heavily last night; landed early at Point Douglas this forenoon, and marched about two miles to this place. Upon reaching the village inhabitants said that Riel was still in the fort and intended resistance. Could see guns mounted on the bastion and on gateway; advanced with all due precaution, and found that Riel and his handitti had just left; some of his counsellors escaping were arrested by our skirmishers, but have since been released; large stores of ammunition, numerous loaded muskets, and several field pieces found. Have been welcomed by the inhabitants as their deliverer from the opposition and plunder to which they have been subjected for months past.

No difficulty about supplies. Barrack accommodation small, and may have to billet one-third of troops, as logs and timber are very scarce. Brigades of volunteers to-morrow, others following. First detachment of 100 men of 60th leave by Winnipeg River on 29th August. All the regulars will have left by same route by 1st of September. If you wish to send me any orders telegraph to N. S. Kittson, who will send me the message by bearer of this; he will wait 24 hours for answer.

To General Lindsay,

FIRST detachment of two companies 60th Rifles left to-day, viâ the Winnipeg River, another Company leaves by same route to-morrow, and another by Snow's Path and north-west corner of Lake of the Woods. Nothing yet heard of Governor's whereabouts; everything perfectly quiet and orderly. The rebel ring-leaders have bolted across the frontier. I see no reason whatever to apprehend difficulties requiring military interference. Orders sent by express to-day to Prince Arthur's Landing desiring the company there to come here. If arrangements can be made for their conveyance, and provided no orders are received from you to the contrary, they can come viâ North-West Corner and Lake of the Woods. Please send them instructions at once upon receipt of this to prevent complication. Four companies of Militia have arrived to date. Health of every one is excellent. Some official of P. W. works should come here at once to look after construction of barracks. Mr. Dawson not yet arrived. I expect him daily. Could not instructions be sent to him by telegraph to do so?

Enclosure 2 in No. 24.

Colonel G. J. Wolseley to the Military Secretary, Montreal.

Sir,

Fort Garry, August 24th, 1870.

I HAVE the honour to report, for the information of the Lieutenant-General Commanding in British North America, that I left "Fort Alexander," at the mouth of the Winnipeg River, at 3 P.M. on the 31st August with the whole of the Regular Troops of the Force under my command. I waited half a day at Fort Alexander, hoping to be joined by two companies of the Volunteers, but as they did not arrive I proceeded without them.

I encamped that night on "Elk Island" in Lake Winnipeg, about 18 miles from Fort Alexander, and the next day sailed with a fair wind and reached the north of the Red River at 1 P.M. the 22nd instant, encamping that night on the right bank of the river about 11 miles below the "Stone Fort," or "Lower Fort Garry," as it is sometimes called. We were welcomed by the Saulten Indians who live in the vicinity, and who had no idea of our arrival in the river until they saw our boats.

I took every precaution to prevent the news of our approach from spreading up the river.

On the morning of the 23rd we started at daybreak and reached the Stone Fort at 8 A.M. Here I left a considerable portion of our heavy stores, lightening the boats as much as possible, and taking on only 4 days' rations. After leaving the Stone Fort I threw out a company of the 60th as skirmishers on my right flank, the left bank of the river. This company was mounted on ponies, and kept ahead of the boats about 500 yards, the main body being on the road with an advanced party some little distance ahead, and connecting files to the river's bank, which is at times half a mile or more from the road; they had orders not to allow any person to pass them going up the river, but not to interfere with persons proceeding down the river.

Along the right bank, which was thickly wooded and but very sparsely peopled, I sent Lieutenant Butler, 69th Regiment, on horseback with orders to keep a little ahead and communicate with me at intervals.

I also had two signalmen with flags with the company on my right flank, one with the advanced guard of that company, and the other with the main body, whose services were of much use in keeping up communication between the skirmishers and the boats. At night-fall I encamped on the left bank about two miles below the English cathedral, and six below Fort Garry, and threw out outlying piquets under officers on each side of the river.

My intention had been to have marched by land with the first break of day on the fort, which was still held by Riel and an armed band of rebels whose number varied with each report that reached me, but during the night a heavy storm of wind and rain from the north-west came on, and by morning the road was ankle-deep in black gluey mud. I therefore continued my advance this morning in the boats with the same precautions as on the previous day, but sending Lieutenant Denison, one of my orderly officers, to the right bank in addition to Lieutenant Butler.

About 8 A.M. I reached "Point Douglas," about 2 miles from the fort. At this point the river makes a long bend, and the wood leads straight through the village of Winnipeg to the fort; I therefore disembarked and formed up on the left bank.

Receiving accurate information that Riel was still in the fort, and (report said) contemplating resistance, I advanced across the open prairie the column covered by a line of skirmishers; the guns being limbered up to the rear of the country carts, having a company of the 60th as a rear-guard 200 yards in rear. In this order I advanced crossing a bridge over a small creek, and passing round the village of Winnipeg (which I kept on my left flank, my right resting on the Assiniboine River), I moved straight on the fort; I was accompanied by about half a dozen of the loyal inhabitants mounted on horseback, who afforded me all the assistance in their power acting as scouts and guides.

On nearing the fort I could see that the gates were closed, and guns mounted on the bastions, but no flag was flying. Some of the mounted inhabitants who accompanied me then galloped towards the fort, followed by three of my staff, and making a complete circle round it, returned and reported that the gate opening on the Assiniboine River was open and nobody to be seen inside.

I then marched into the fort, which I found empty, having been deserted by Riel and his associates as soon as they saw me approaching; they had evidently made off in great haste, leaving their breakfast on the table half finished, and riding off as fast as they could. Riel crossed the Assiniboine River and escaped, but three of his Counsellors, attempting to pass up the left bank of that river, were stopped by my skirmishers and captured. These men were released during the day, there being no warrant out against them, or any sworn information by which I could detain them, although I knew that one of them had sat on the mock Court-Martial that tried and condemned Mr. Scott.

The Union Jack was then hoisted over the fort, a Royal Salute fired, and three cheers given for the Queen, which were caught up and heartily repeated by numbers of the inhabitants who had followed the troops from the village. I then got the men housed in the Hudson's Bay Company's buildings inside the fort; they were thoroughly drenched to the skin, the rain having poured down incessantly all day.

In conclusion I have only to add that the advent of the troops has been hailed with the greatest delight all along the river by the loyal people of all colours, who have afforded me every assistance in their power.

The conduct of the troops has been most exemplary throughout this arduous journey, and merits my warmest commendation.

I have, &c.

Sir,

Downing Street, 26th September, 1870.

I AM directed by the Earl of Kimberley to transmit to you, for the information of Mr. Secretary Cardwell, a copy of a despatch from the Governor-General of Canada, enclosing a telegram from Colonel Wolseley, announcing the arrival at Fort Garry on the 24th ultimo of the Expedition under his Command. See Enclosure 2 in No. 28.

I am, &c.

Enclosure in No. 25.

Governor-General Sir J. Young to Lord Kimberley.

My Lord,

Quebec, 2nd September, 1870.

IN the telegram which I forwarded to your Lordship yesterday, I had the satisfaction of announcing the safe arrival of Colonel Wolseley, with the Regular Forces under his command, at Fort Garry.

2. My telegram to your Lordship was based on a telegram from Colonel Wolseley to General Lindsay, which the General at once sent on to me, and of which I beg to enclose a copy. This is all the information which we have as yet received, but it is most satisfactory to be assured of the safe arrival of the Expedition, which under the able command of Colonel Wolseley has surmounted no ordinary difficulties in the new unformed track between Lakes Superior and Shebandowan, the long and toilsome boat navigation and the labours (cheerfully encountered both by officers and men) of the frequent portages.

3. The welcome with which the Expedition seems to have been generally received, raises good hopes for the future, which I trust the new Lieutenant-Governor, Mr. Archibald, will be able to realize. He cannot be very far behind the Expedition, and, unless delayed by some unforeseen accident would certainly have reached Fort Garry before the end of August; he counted upon arriving on or about the 26th of that month.

I have, &c.

(Signed) JOHN YOUNG.

Lieut.-General the Hon. James Lindsay to the Secretary of State for War.

Sir, S.S. "Scandinavian," 11th October, 1870.

REFERRING to my letter of the 9th September, forwarding a copy of Colonel Wolseley's report of the 24th August, detailing the circumstances attendant on his entering Fort Garry, I have now the honour to enclose you a copy of his final report upon the Red River Expedition, dated 26th September, and marked A.

I had instructed Colonel Wolseley, after he had assisted the Militia Officers in making arrangements for feeding and lodging the force left at Red River for the winter, to resign his command into the hands of the Senior Canadian Officer, and to return to Canada. As he overtook the companies of the 60th Rifles on their return route, he was to give over charge to Colonel Fielden, and to join at Montreal in order that he might embark with me and the Head-Quarter Staff for England in this vessel on the 1st October, 1870.

This plan was perfectly carried out. Colonel Wolseley is on board with me, and all the 60th will have reached Ontario, I hope, before this.

Colonel Wolseley, in his report, recalls with proper pride the difficulties of his enterprize, and the discipline and endurance of the troops, Imperial and Canadian, which enabled him to surmount them.

As to the physical difficulties of the route, they can only be thoroughly understood by reference to the very full and valuable diary kept by Colonel Wolseley, and which is now in the hands of the Quartermaster-General, Horse Guards. The opinion formed of them by the Hon. Mr. Archibald, Lieutenant-Governor of Manitobah, who followed in Colonel Wolseley's track, will be seen from the enclosure B. I can also bear testimony to the difficulties of the route, having personally witnessed them when I inspected the road from Lake Superior to Shebandowan, and met the boats passing up the Kaministiquia early in July.

But other difficulties surrounded the Expedition, and distinguished it from its predecessors. These arose—

From its size, as compared with Colonel Crofton's and Major Seton's forces, and its mixed character;

From the necessity of taking over, and adopting, arrangements made by the Public Works and Militia Departments of Canada before any Military authority had been consulted;

From the opening out of a permanent communication with the North-West being mixed up with the progress of the Expedition;

And, lastly, from the possibility of opposition either from Fenian or other American sympathizers, or from our own people, whether settlers or Indians. This latter consideration, joined to apprehensions as to supplies of food in consequence of the disturbed state of the settlement, necessitated an advance with every precaution, and with three months' supplies and good reserves of ammunition.

All these difficulties have been surmounted by Colonel Wolseley and his Force.

I join with him in laying much stress upon the advantages to health and discipline resulting from the non-issue of a spirit ration, and I trust that its days are numbered in the British Army; but I attribute the good temper and endurance of the troops to the example of their Officers.

The mainspring of the whole movement was the Commander, Colonel Wolseley, who has shown throughout great professional ability. He has the faculty of organization, and resource in difficulty. He has served in many campaigns with distinction, and in this Expedition he has shown great aptitude for command.

It was entirely owing to him that, when the impossibility of using the road to Lake Shebandowan for the transport of boats became apparent, they were sent up the Kaministiquia, a route that had been pronounced impracticable for them. Had not this step been taken, the Regulars certainly could not have returned this season.

During the actual advance along the canoe route, Colonel Wolseley was in constant movement, sometimes in front, marking out the roads across the portages; sometimes in rear, organizing and superintending the brigade of boats.

His advance upon Fort Garry itself was conducted with skill and prudence.

On arrival there, he found himself in a country in a state of violent political excitement and discord, and without any civil government; and where his Force was the only representative of law and order, owing to the delay in the Lieutenant-Governor's arrival. His proceedings on this occasion, in desiring the Chief of the Hudson's Bay Company to assume the Government, and in abstaining from all interference with civil affairs himself, seem to me to have been eminently judicious.

I hardly think it possible to overrate the advantage Her Majesty's Government and Canada have derived from the employment upon this delicate as well as arduous service of an officer of Colonel Wolseley's attainments, character, and discretion. I have esteemed myself very fortunate in having such an instrument in my hand to carry out your orders with respect to the Red River Expedition.

I therefore confidently recommend Colonel Wolseley to the gracious favour of Her Majesty.

Colonel Wolseley bears testimony to the admirable conduct in all respects of the whole force, and he also brings to notice several of the officers who served most prominently under him, and who assisted him with their cordial support.

Colonel Fielden, Commanding 1st Battalion 60th Rifles, is an excellent officer. He was actively employed from the first in assisting to get the Militia Battalions into order, for which duty the highly efficient state of his own battalion showed that he was markedly qualified. He commanded the leading brigades in their advance, and throughout showed all the qualities of a good soldier. He was second in command.

The Governor-General kindly placed the services of his Military Secretary, Lieutenant-Colonel McNeill, at my disposal, and I gladly accepted them, as I was in want of energetic Field Officers. Lieutenant-Colonel McNeill was extremely useful to Colonel Wolseley, and is an excellent Staff Officer.

Brevet Lieutenant-Colonel Bolton, R.A., was the Deputy-Assistant Adjutant-General of the Force, and he was much employed on detached duties. His position at the Sault St. Marie at the outset of the Expedition was most difficult and responsible. In his absence Captain Huyshe, Rifle Brigade, Orderly Officer, satisfactorily performed the staff duties near Colonel Wolseley.

Colonel Wolseley also expresses his obligations to the Militia Staff Officers attached to him, Major McLeod and Lieutenant Denison.

You will be gratified to observe the tribute Colonel Wolseley pays to the Control system, as it worked upon this Expedition, under the able direction of Assistant Controller Irvine.

The medical duties were satisfactorily regulated by Surgeon-Major Young, 60th Rifles, as Principal Medical Officer.

Amidst the stirring military and political events now taking place in Europe, the happy solution of the Red River difficulty, without bloodshed or political entanglements, may attract less attention than it deserves; but I know that the merits of the officers and soldiers who took part in the Expedition will meet with due recognition from you, to whom the importance of the service rendered is known, and before whom all the details of the operation have now been laid.

I have, &c.

(Signed) JAS. LINDSAY, Lieut.-General.

Enclosure 1 in No. 26.

A.

Colonel G. J. Wolseley to the Military Secretary, Montreal.

Sir,

S. S. "Chicora," September 26th, 1870.

IN continuation of my previous reports upon the progress of the Red River Expeditionary Force, I have the honour to state that the Regular Troops embarked at Fort Garry upon their return journey by detachments between the 29th August and the 3rd September, with the exception of one Company of the 60th Rifles, which I was enabled to send by land to the north-west corner of the Lake of the Woods, where it embarked on the 11th instant.

Immediately upon receiving your instructions directing me to return as quickly as possible to Canada, I made arrangements for doing so, and having left Fort Garry on the 10th, I reached Prince Arthur's Landing on the 22nd September.

All the troops except one Company of the 60th, and the Detachments of Royal Artillery and Royal Engineers, had reached Rainy River by the 15th instant, having safely ascended the dangerous rapids of the Winnipeg River. Judging from the time that the several companies took in going from Red River to Rât Portage, I have every reason for supposing that the last brigade of boats will have reached Lake Shebandowan by the end of this month.

I made all the necessary arrangements for the embarkation of the Regulars at Prince Arthur's landing before I left that place on the 24th instant.

The objects of the Expedition have been successfully accomplished without loss of life, and I take the liberty of again bringing to your notice the admirable conduct of the troops engaged in it. I have no hesitation in saying that the excessive labour so cheerfully endured and so equally shared in by all ranks, has never been surpassed in any previous military expedition.

The Regular Troops and Militia vied with one another in their enthusiastic anxiety to push forward, each being mutually determined that neither should out-do the other. This praiseworthy rivalry enabled them to make the entire distance of over 600 miles in about $7\frac{1}{2}$ weeks, carrying with them their provisions for 60 days, two 7-pounder guns with their equipment, a large amount of ammunition and hospital and other stores, all of which had to be carried on their backs over 47 portages, making a total distance of more than 7 miles. Where Officers see such an example in carrying heavy loads, their men as might be expected, imitated them unhesitatingly.

It must not be forgotten that Shebandowan Lake, where the force finally embarked, is over 800 feet above the level of Lake Superior, and that with the exception of a few boats transported on wagons, all had to be dragged up that height by manual labour over the portages of the Kaministiquia River; this will convey an idea of the work performed at the outset of the Expedition.

From the 25th May (when the first detachment disembarked at Prince Arthur's Landing) to the 16th July (when the 1st brigade of boats made their final start for Fort Garry) the men were constantly employed in landing stores, road-making, and getting their boats up to Shebandowan Lake. During that time they also constructed a strong square redoubt for the protection of the storehouses, &c., at their base of operations, Prince Arthur's Landing. During the 13 weeks which elapsed between the disembarkation at that post, and our marching into Fort Garry, it rained upon 45 days, and upon many occasions every one was wet for days together. Notwithstanding the magnitude of the labour, the exposure to inclement weather, and the great annoyance from mosquitoes thus endured, there was not throughout the whole of this arduous operation the least murmur of discontent heard from any one. From first to last there was a total absence of crime, and I may add of sickness also. Never has any body of men on active service been more cheerful or more healthy.

This has been one of the few military expeditions where spirits have formed no part of the daily ration, and where no intoxicating liquor was obtainable. I consider that the above-mentioned happy results are in a great measure to be attributed to this fact. A large ration of tea was issued instead, and I found that the men worked better upon it than I have ever seen soldiers do upon any previous occasions where rum formed part of their daily allowance.

The duties in connection with this Expedition have been of a most peculiar nature. During our advance the force was necessarily divided into numerous detachments. No roads of any description existed in the country by means of which communication could be maintained between them. The modern inventions of steam, and the electric telegraph, &c., &c., which in these days play such a prominent part in war, could not be brought to assist us. We were launched out into a desert of trees and water, carrying everything we required with us, unable even to avail ourselves of the assistance of horses, or other draught cattle.

Once cut adrift from our base at Prince Arthur's Landing, until we had forced our way through the 600 miles of forests that separated us from the inhabited country at the Red River, we were beyond the reach of all assistance from the outside world, and had to rely upon our own exertions solely to carry us through. Except that we were armed with superior weapons, the Expedition might have been one of classic times, so primitive was our mode of progression, and so little assisted were we by modern appliances.

I beg to record my appreciation of the assistance I have received throughout from Colonel Fielden, commanding the 1st Battalion 60th Rifles. Previous to starting from Canada he was detailed to superintend the organization of the two Battalions of Militia then being raised for this service, a duty he performed to my entire satisfaction. He subsequently commanded the three leading brigades during the advance to Fort Garry. Upon them fell the arduous task of cutting out the roads across the portages, and fitting them with rollers to enable the boats to be dragged safely over them. This was done most efficiently under his supervision. I consider him to be one of the very best Regimental Officers I have ever known, and the admirable order existing in his battalion bears witness to his ability.

The services of Lieutenant-Colonel McNeill, Military Secretary to the Governor-General, having been placed at my disposal, I gave him at first the general superintendence of the embarkation at Shebandowan Lake. It was a duty requiring great good temper, judgment, and nice arrangement. It was most successfully carried out, notwithstanding the many difficulties he had to contend with. He proved himself throughout to be an able and energetic Staff Officer, and I consider myself most fortunate in having had him with me.

Lieutenant-Colonel Bolton, Royal Artillery, who was my Deputy-Assistant Adjutant-General, superintended the transit of the force over the road at the Sault St. Marie, between Lakes Huron and Superior. I always found him most anxious and energetic in the performance of his duties. As the entire force was seldom concentrated, I was obliged to employ Lieutenant-Colonel Bolton upon detached duty throughout nearly the whole operation, it being essential to have Regular Officers of his rank at several points. During his absence the duties of Deputy-Assistant Adjutant-General were well carried out by Captain Huyshe, Rifle Brigade, one of my Orderly Officers.

My other Orderly Officer was Lieutenant Denison, of the Canadian Militia, who is a most promising and zealous soldier.

Upon leaving Fort Garry, I handed over command to the Senior Officer of the Militia, leaving Major MacLeod, of the Canadian Militia, as Brigade Major to the Force remaining there; from what I have seen of him I consider him to be admirably qualified for the position, and to be one of the best of the Militia Officers belonging to the Expeditionary Force.

As regards the civil administration, I have to remark that the amalgamation of the many Civil Departments into one, that of the Control, was put upon its first practical trial in the field during this Expedition, with the happiest results. I found that having all the Civil Officers available for any sort of duty connected with administration was a great economy of labour, and enabled the duties to be performed by a much smaller number than could have been done formerly, when, under similar circumstances, it would have been necessary to have had an Officer of each department present at every post, and perhaps with each detachment of troops. A vast amount of useless correspondence is saved by the new system, and the administrative labour that must always more or less devolve upon an Officer Commanding a mixed force in the field, is greatly reduced, and his work facilitated thereby, giving him more time to attend to his important military duties. I was most fortunate in having such an able and energetic officer as Assistant Controller Irvine at the head of the administrative affairs of the Force. His arrangements throughout were admirable, and I can confidently say that no body of fighting men on service were ever better fed, or their wants better provided for, than were those comprising the Red River Force. When it is remembered that 150 miles intervened between the advanced and rear guards upon first starting from Shebandowan Lake, and that we were without the invaluable aid of telegraphic communication, the difficulties of the administrative duties may be partially appreciated. The numerous difficulties of providing for the wants of a force proceeding through such an extensive wilderness, under such circumstances, where there were no supplies of any description to be obtained, were overcome by Mr. Irvine's admirable arrangements.

Surgeon-Major Young, 60th Rifles, my Principal Medical Officer, made the fullest arrangements for the care of the sick and wounded (had there been any), and his exertions in that department gave me entire satisfaction.

I have never before been employed upon any duty in the field, where, owing to the peculiar nature of the service, and the work to be accomplished, the ultimate success depended so entirely upon the zeal and ability of the Company Officers. To all of them I am deeply indebted for the manner in which they carried out my orders.

In conclusion, I take the liberty of thanking the Lieutenant-General Commanding for the manner in which he forestalled our wants, and acceded to every application I made to him. It was the consciousness of having him behind me that made me throughout so sanguine of success.

I have, &c.

Mr. Archibald to Colonel Wolseley.

Dear Colonel Wolseley, Indian Mission, Red River, September 2nd, 1870.

I TAKE the earliest opportunity in my power to congratulate you on the magnificent success of the Expedition under your command.

I can judge of the work you have had to do all the better from having seen for myself the physical obstacles that had to be met and overcome, obstacles which, I assure you, exceed anything I could have imagined.

It is impossible not to feel that the men who have so triumphed over such difficulties must not only have themselves worked well, but also must have been well led, and I should not be doing justice to my own feelings if I were not, on my arrival here, to repeat the expressions of admiration extorted from me, as I passed along in view of the difficulties you had to meet, and what you had so triumphantly surmounted.

I have, &c.

Major-General the Hon. James Lindsay to the Secretary of State for War.

Sir,

War Office, October 18th, 1870.

I HAVE the honour to acquaint you that I have received information by cable telegram, that the whole of the companies of the 1st Battalion 60th Rifles, and the detachments of Royal Artillery, Royal Engineers, Army Service Corps, and Army Hospital Corps, employed on the Expedition to Red River, had arrived in Montreal by Friday, the 14th instant.

One man was left at Fort Garry with inflammation of the lungs; with that exception, the Regular Force returned to Canada with no sick, and with no casualty by drowning, or of any other description.

The Colonial Office to the Under Secretary of State for War.

Sir,

Downing Street, 27th October, 1870.

I AM directed by the Earl of Kimberley to transmit to you, for the information of Mr. Secretary Cardwell, a copy of a despatch from the Governor-General of Canada, enclosing copies of reports from his Military Secretary, Lieutenant Colonel McNeill, respecting the progress of the Red River Expedition.

I am to state that another despatch has been received from the Governor-General, dated the 13th September, enclosing the documents of which a list is annexed, relating to the same subject. Lord Kimberley presumes that the reports from Colonel Wolseley, enclosed in Colonel Earle's letters to the Governor's Military Secretary, have been received at the War Office, and he therefore thinks it unnecessary to enclose copies, but they will be forwarded if Mr. Cardwell should desire it.

I am desired to take this opportunity of enclosing a copy of a despatch which Lord Kimberley has addressed to the Governor-General, congratulating Colonel Wolseley on the successful result of the Expedition.

I am, &c.

Sir John Young to the Earl of Kimberley.

My Lord,

Quebec, Canada, 13th September, 1870.

REFERRING to previous despatches, I have the honor to transmit herewith copies of further reports from my Military Secretary, Lieutenant-Colonel McNeill, V.C., announcing the arrival of the Red River Expedition at Fort Alexander on the 20th, and at Fort Garry on the 24th of August.

I have, &c.

Lieut.-Colonel McNeill to the Governor-General.

Sir,

Fort Garry, 24th August, 1870.

I HAVE the honor to report that Fort Garry was occupied by the regular troops under Colonel Wolseley at 10 o'clock this morning, without opposition.

Riel and his followers abandoned the place only a few minutes previous to our arrival. From the number of loaded muskets found in various parts of the buildings, and from the disposition of the guns, it was evident that almost up to the last they had determined to resist.

The troops at present occupy the buildings of the Hudson's Bay Company inside the Fort.

I have, &c.

J. C. McNEILL, Lieut.-Colonel,
Military Secretary.

Lieut.-Colonel McNeill to the Governor-General.

Sir, Fort Alexander, Mouth of Winnipeg River, 21st August, 1870.
 I HAVE the honor to report that I reached this place with Colonel Wolseley last night.

Detachments of Royal Artillery and Royal Engineers had arrived on the 18th, and the last company of regular troops came in shortly after Colonel Wolseley.

No accident of any sort had occurred, and the men are all in capital health.

Colonel Wolseley has ordered the Force to start for Fort Garry at 3 p.m. to-day, so that we shall probably reach that place on Tuesday morning, the 23rd.

The brigades of the Militia regiments are close behind, so that the Regulars will be able to start on their return journey after a short rest in the settlement; and as it is reported that the road from Fort Garry to the north-west angle of the lake of the woods has been made passable, it is probable that the troops will return by that route, their boats being conveyed up the Winnipeg river by voyageurs, the men thus being saved much severe labour.

The latest accounts from Fort Garry lead to the belief that Riel's adherents are deserting him, but also declare that they will not permit him to leave the settlement.

It is said that a meeting was held the other day, at which some 600 armed men were present to decide whether any opposition should be offered to the troops, but that nothing was decided on.

On arrival at Fort Garry I will report to your Excellency the position of affairs there.

I have, &c.

Military Secretary.

Enclosure 3 in No. 28.

The Earl of Kimberley to Sir John Young.

Sir, Downing Street, 14th October, 1870.

I HAVE the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your despatches No. 197 of the 1st of September and Nos. 206 and 207 of the 13th of that month, enclosing, with other documents relating to the progress of the Red River Expedition, advices from Colonel Wolseley announcing his arrival at Fort Garry on the 24th of August.

I have perused with much interest Colonel Wolseley's clear and satisfactory account of the arrival of the Expedition. His despatches do not state to what subordinate officers credit is due for its successful prosecution, but I observe with pleasure that the conduct of the soldiers has been exemplary; and I am fully aware, that an operation which, before its commencement was alleged by competent authority to be beset with almost insuperable difficulties, could not have been thus accomplished without drawback and disaster, except by the forethought, energy, and vigilance of the Commanding Officer. Her Majesty's Government have pleasure in ascribing the results of this Expedition, the flight of Riel and his associates which, under the circumstances may be regarded as opportune, the relief of the orderly inhabitants from the state of apprehension in which they lived, and the restoration of confidence and prosperity, which will no doubt ensue, to the prudence, vigour and steadiness with which the directions of the Government have been executed both by Colonel Wolseley and the officers and soldiers whether of the Imperial or Canadian forces who have acted under his orders.

I have, &c.

APPENDIX.

OFFICIAL Journal of the Red River Expedition.

*Wednesday,
May 4th, 1870.*

Departure from Montreal to Toronto.

IN accordance with General Order of the 3rd May, 1870, Colonel Wolseley, commanding the Red River Expeditionary Force, accompanied by Lieutenant-Colonel Bolton, Royal Artillery, Deputy-Assistant Adjutant-General to the Expedition; Assistant Controller M. B. Irvine, in subcharge of the Expedition; and Captain Huyshe, Rifle Brigade, Orderly Officer to Colonel Wolseley, left Montreal by the 8:30 A.M. train for Toronto. They were accompanied by Lieutenant-General the Honourable J. Lindsay, his Aide-de-Camp Captain FitzGeorge, of the 23rd Regiment, and Lieutenant-Colonel Martindale, R. E., Deputy Controller. The Manager of the R. R. C., Mr. Cumberland, kindly furnished his own car for the use of the party.

*Thursday,
May 5th, 1870.*
Journey to Collingwood and back.

Arrived at Toronto at 3 A.M., and proceeded to Collingwood by special train at 9 A.M., accompanied by Mr. Cumberland and Mr. S. I. Dawson. Reached Collingwood at 1:30 P.M. Inspected the side-wheel steamer "Francis Smith," which was found to be a very fine boat, capable of accommodating 250 men and 40 horses. Then inspected the "Chicora," a very fast boat,* fitted up for passenger traffic, but large enough for 210 men and 24 horses if the ladies' cabin were appropriated. Returned to Toronto at 8 P.M. with the Captains and agents of these vessels, and of the "Algoma" also. A tariff on reasonable rates was arranged with them by Mr. Cumberland and Colonel Martindale, and the result was telegraphed to Ottawa; but an answer was received next day from the Dominion Government to "hold on," and make no arrangements, as the Honourable Mr. Campbell, the Postmaster-General, would undertake that duty.

*Friday, May 6th, to Thursday, May 12th,
1870.*

Busily engaged at Toronto in organizing the Expedition, getting everything in order, selecting horses from K Battery Royal Artillery (of which 65 were taken), and completing the two battalions of Militia.

The 1st Regiment was soon completed, but the 2nd, or Quebec, Battalion could not fill its ranks, volunteering to it from the other Military Districts not being allowed. This Battalion was still 90 men short when Colonel Wolseley left Toronto, on the 21st instant.

*Friday,
May 13th, 1870.*
Departure of Lieut.-Colonel Bolton for the Sault.

Lieutenant-Colonel Bolton, Deputy-Assistant Adjutant-General, left Toronto by the 8:30 A.M. train for Collingwood, to superintend the putting up of fittings for horses on board the "Chicora" (these fittings are of the simplest description, and are fully described in the R. R. Book), and to proceed in her next day to the Sault St. Marie, there to remain in command. During his absence his duties devolved on Captain Huyshe.

*Saturday,
May 14th, 1870.*
Departure of two companies 1st Ontario Rifles for the Sault.

At noon, two companies (Nos. 1 and 4) of the 1st Ontario Rifles, under command of Captain Cook, left Toronto by train for Collingwood, where they embarked on board the "Chicora,"—together with 24 horses, a supply of stores, camp equipment, boats, &c.,—and sailed at 9 P.M. for the Sault, under command of Colonel Bolton.

Owing to telegraphic information from Ottawa respecting Fenian intentions, two more companies were ordered to proceed on Monday next, and a letter was written to Colonel Bolton (vide Confidential Letter Book, page 10).

*Monday,
May 16th, 1870.*
Departure of two companies Ontario Rifles for the Sault.

At 7 A.M., two companies (Nos. 2 and 3) of the 1st Ontario Rifles proceeded by train to Collingwood, under command of Major Wainwright, and embarked in the "Wanbuno," for the Sault. Surgeon Codd, 1st Rifles, proceeded in medical charge, to remain at the Sault. A proportion of camp equipment, stores, &c., was sent with this detachment.

*Saturday,
May 21st, 1870.*
One company 1st Battalion 60th Rifles from Toronto for Thunder Bay. Colonel Wolseley and Staff ditto.

At 7 A.M., one company (G) of the 1st Battalion 60th Rifles under Captain Ward, proceeded by train to Collingwood, and embarked in the "Chicora" for Thunder Bay; 64 horses left Toronto at the same time, 24 of which with teamsters, 15 boats, about 75 voyageurs, stores, and camp equipment, were embarked in the "Chicora." Colonel Wolseley, Assistant Controller Irvine, Captain Huyshe, Lieutenant Denison, Doctor Young, 1st Battalion 60th Rifles, Principal Medical Officer to the Force, and Assistant Surgeon Robertson, Royal Canadian Rifles, in medical charge, accompanied this detachment.

The detachments of Royal Artillery under Lieutenant Alleyne, and Royal Engineers under Lieutenant Heneage, expected to arrive in steam-ship "Corinthian" from Montreal, were ordered to remain at Toronto till Monday, 23rd.

Three companies 60th Rifles from Ottawa (per steam-ship "Corinthian") were ordered, with one company 60th Rifles from Toronto, to proceed to Collingwood at 1 P.M. and embark on board steam-ship "Francis Smith" for Thunder Bay, together with 40 horses. The "Chicora" sailed from Collingwood at 6 P.M., in a thick fog. The day had been cloudy and overcast, with occasional and slight showers of rain.

* She had been built for running the blockades during the American War.

Passed to the northward of Great Manitoulin Island, having lain to during the night for four or five hours. At 9:30 A.M. stopped at Killarney to deliver the mails; through a narrow channel amongst barren rocky islands, covered with a growth of stunted pines. At 9 P.M. reached the Bruce Mines; stopped there for the night, the channel ahead being too intricate to attempt without day-light.

Bright sunny day and warm, little or no wind.

Started from the Bruce Mines at day-light, but lay to for an hour during a heavy storm of thunder and lightning, accompanied by hail and rain. Stopped at Garden Island at 8 A.M. to deliver mails. Reached the Sault at 8:45 A.M.; found the schooners "Pandora" and "Orion" lying at the wharf, loaded with boats and stores for Mr. Dawson's party: presently the propeller "Chickland" came and towed them off to the American canal. Colonel Bolton and Mr Simpson, M.P. for Algoma, came on board and reported a very cordial feeling as existing at present with the United States Commandant at Fort Brady, Colonel Offley. "Chicora" came alongside the wharf and landed troops and military equipment of all kinds, also two horses for the use of Colonel Bolton and Captain Nagle. The remainder of the horses, boats, stores, &c. being allowed through the canal.

The troops then marched to Colonel Bolton's camp, $1\frac{1}{2}$ miles distant, where they were temporarily put up in one of the barns of the Hudson Bay Company's post (for description of Camp, vide Colonel Bolton's letter from Sault St. Marie, dated May 17th). At 4:30 P.M. No. 1 Company (Captain Cook) of the 1st Ontario Rifles marched from the camp to the wharf at the upper end of the Sault, to embark on board the "Chickland" to accompany and protect the two schooners she was towing from any Fenian attempt. At 5 P.M. the company of the 60th left the camp and marched to the wharf, three-quarters of a mile, and embarked in a scow in two detachments, and were towed to the "Chicora" by a tug. The road from the lower to the upper end of the Sault, $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles, was found to be in good order, a great deal of work having been done to it since the arrival of Colonel Bolton, two bridges built, a wharf and a new scow capable of carrying 400 barrels, and other improvements. Found that the "Chicora" had been waiting for us two hours, which time might have been profitably employed by the Captain in coaling, and the loss of which occasioned a serious subsequent delay. Sailed from the Sault at 6:20 P.M., and stopped 5 miles up the river St. Mary, at Point aux Pins, for coal. Darkness coming on, the Captain decided to remain there all night. Opposite the Sault the river is about three-quarters of a mile wide at its narrowest part, but opens out considerably above the rapids.

Weather cloudy and threatening rain, fog came on after sunset.

Left Point aux Pins at day-light. At noon the men of the 60th came up on deck and gave three hearty cheers for the Queen.

Out of sight of land all day. Fresh breezes from north-west, a little sea on. Weather cloudy and very cold.

Sighted land early this morning, passed Thunder Cape about 7:45 A.M., and anchored off the end of the road to Lake Shebandowan at 10 A.M. Landed troops and camp equipment immediately, and Colonel Wolseley named the place "Prince Arthur's Landing" in honour of His Royal Highness. Encamped on a dry cleared spot, but limited, with the road on our right flank fronting the lake. Landed the horses (22) safely, and got all stores, boats, &c., ashore by 10 P.M. A tremendous fire last week devastated the country for miles around and burnt some of the smaller bridges on the road. Colonel Wolseley wrote to Colonel Earle, and sent a telegram to General Lindsay, of our safe arrival, to be forwarded from Collingwood.

Weather lovely; no signs of the "Francis Smith." "Chicora" left at 10 P.M. for the Sault.

Very cold during the night, but lovely day again. Colonel Wolseley left the camp on horseback at 8 A.M. to ride over the road with Mr. Russell. No signs of the "Frances Smith."

Men employed all day in making themselves comfortable.

"Algoma" and "Brooklyn" arrived at 3 A.M. "Chickland," with the two schooners "Pandora" and "Orion" in tow, at 11:30 A.M. Head-quarters and four companies of the 1st Battalion 60th Rifles under Major Robertson landed by 9 A.M. and encamped alongside the company already here. One company 1st Ontario Rifles under Captain Cook landed from "Chickland" at 2 P.M., and encamped about half a mile north-east of the main road, on a little clearing with a pretty trout stream flowing past their front; the lake on their right flank. Colonel Wolseley returned at noon, having ridden 31 miles over the road, the first 26 miles of the road in good order, but some of the smaller bridges burnt by the late fire. Men employed all day in unloading steamer "Algoma" and stacking stores under marquees. 32 horses landed from "Algoma" and "Brooklyn," some of them sick with bad colds and two injured on board "Frances Smith," having been gored by the oxen on board. Colonel Bolton reported bad behaviour on the part of the Captain of the "Francis Smith," who was drunk the whole way, and finally refused to go beyond the Sault without a guarantee of 65,000 dollars. (Vide Colonel Bolton's letter of 24th instant, Enclosure No. 5, page 35).

Working party employed the whole afternoon making a road from Head-quarters Camp to Camp of 1st Ontario Rifles.

"Algoma" left about 7:45 P.M. for the Sault, taking letters from Colonel Wolseley to the Military Secretary, and a telegram for the General, and official letters for Colonel Bolton, &c. Fine weather still continuing.

Two companies 1st Battalion 60th Rifles left the camp at 4 A.M. to be posted on the

These parties to receive working pay from the Public Works Department at the following rates:—Serjeants, 2s.; Corporals, 1s. 6d.; Privates, 1s. per diem; and one timekeeper for each party at 2s. per diem. Colonel Wolseley selected a site and commenced clearing it for a temporary magazine. Working parties occupied making a road to the camp of 1st Ontario Rifles. "Brooklyn" unloaded after a hard day's work; men working till 11 p.m. Fine day; fresh breeze from S.S. East, heavy surf on the shore.

Divine Service parade at 9 a.m., Rev. Mr. Wilson, a missionary to the Indians, officiated. A fatigue party of 12 men to finish stacking barrels. Another glorious day; strong breeze from east, got up with the sun, and working round to the westward; moderated at sundown.

The detachment that marched yesterday to the lake 15 miles up the road reported the water bad; marched one mile further and camped.

Fine weather still continuing, with strong breeze. Surveyed the camp with prismatic compass and make a sketch, which is herewith enclosed. Working parties of 50 and 20 men employed all day, one party on the main road, about half a mile from camp, the other on the new road to Militia camp. Fatigue party of 25 men from 1st Ontario Rifles, magazine being proceeded with.

Steamer "Union" in sight at 8:45 a.m. Sent tug out to bring her in; anchored at 9:30. One company and a-half 60th Rifles, under Captain Northey, landed and camped by 11 a.m. "Clematis" and "Snow Bird" unloaded and returned to the Sault, starting at 4 p.m. Letters written to the Military Secretary and Colonel Bolton, and marching in states forwarded to Deputy Quartermaster-General. Deputy-Assistant Commissary-General Myer sent per steam-ship "Clematis" to relieve Deputy-Assistant Commissary-General Fuller, ordered to Montreal. Wagons landed from "Union"; Reserve S.A.A. and ammunition for the guns landed at magazine wharf and stored there. Lieutenant Heneage, R.E. designed and commenced a palisaded earth redoubt, 25 yards by 15 yards, round the magazine, as a fort during the absence of the Expedition. Very hot weather.

The Militia put on as a working party, the 60th furnishing the fatigue for the wharf, also the working party for the main road. One company 60th marched at 4 a.m. for the Kaministiquia River, there to be stationed as an additional working party. Five wagon loads of stores sent off to Kaministiquia River as a commencement of a depôt of supplies to be formed there. Mr. Dawson sent out his voyageurs to cut palisades for Lieutenant Heneage's stockaded fort, also began platforms as carriages for the boats—mounted 4 or 5 in this way. Weather very hot. Barometer falling, a threatening rain, but none fell. Woods apparently on fire, the air full of smoke, and haze. Unloading of "Union" still continued.

Working and fatigue parties same as yesterday. Steam-ship "Union" finished unloading at 8 a.m. Twenty-five men and one officer 60th left the camp at day-light, with one day's rations to haul woods for the stockade. "Union" paid off and discharged. She sailed at 10 a.m. Steam-ship "Chicora" arrived and anchored at 8:30 p.m. Forty horses landed by 11:30 p.m. Mail bag and letters delivered. Four boats left camp for River Matawan, on wagons. Cloudy, and threatening rain. Slight shower about 10 p.m. Six wagon loads of stores sent off to Kaministiquia River.

Disembarked head-quarters and four companies 1st Ontario Rifles at 4 a.m. Lieutenant-Colonel McNeill, V.C., arrived in "Chicora." A detachment of 60th Rifles embarked in six flat-bottomed boats, with 36 days' provisions, and were towed off at 6:30 a.m. by the tug to Fort William, where they took in two voyageur Indians in each boat, and started to go up the Kaministiquia and Matawin rivers to Lake Shebandowan. Employed all day in unloading the "Chicora." Working parties employed as usual; 15 wagons landed from "Chicora," also a collarmaker for the Land Transport Corps, and 18 teamsters. Information received from Colonel Bolton that Mr. Hamilton had hired by his order the steam-ship "Artic" for 25 days at 400 dollars per diem. Orders sent to Colonel Bolton to break off contract with "Artic" as soon as possible, as she will not be required.

*For the Quartermaster-General

TRANSPORT OF HORSES BY LAKE.

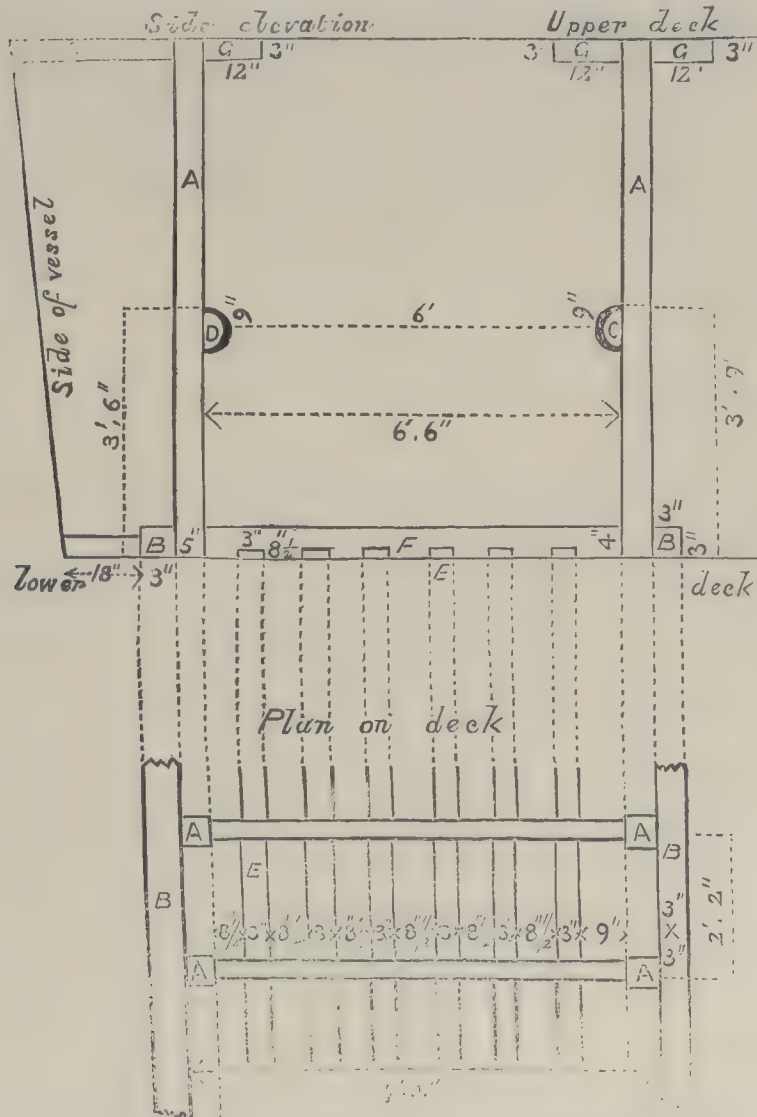

Toronto, 14th May, 1870.

SPECIFICATION of rough fittings required for horses in the steamers plying between Collingwood and the Sault St. Marie, and for those plying between that place and Thunder Bay.

As the voyages are so short, and as very rough weather is not anticipated, it is not intended to place parting bars between the horses, nor provide them with hammocks.

The fittings will be of the simplest description, as follows:—

Two cants of scantling, 3 in. by 3 in. (marked "B" in Sketch), to be laid down Cants.

on the deck running fore and aft, with a clear space between them of 7 ft. 4 in. The outside one being, if possible, at least 18 in. from the side of the vessel. They will be firmly spiked to the deck; a spike to be driven at every 12 in.

Upright stanchions, 5 in. by 5 in. (marked "A" in Sketch), to be placed inside the Stanchions cants, and extending between the two decks, to which they will be secured by spikes driven obliquely, and by cleats (marked "G" in Sketch) of 3-in. timber placed round them. These cleats to be spiked to both decks; the cleats to the rear stanchions to extend to the side of the vessel. The stanchions to be 2 ft. 2 in. apart from centre to centre.

A Breast-piece (marked "C" in Sketch) 9 in. deep, of 3 in. stuff, to be secured to the inside of the front stanchion by countersunk screws, so that its upper side may be 3 ft. 9 in. above the deck: it must be planed all over its inner side; its upper and lower corners on inside being rounded off so as not to scratch the horses.

A Haunch-piece (marked "D" in Sketch) 9 in. deep, of 3-in. plank, to be secured by countersunk screws to inside of rear stanchions, so that its upper side may be 3 ft. 6 in. above the deck. Its inner and upper sides to be planed over, the corners being rounded off smooth.

Cross battens.

Six cross battens (marked "E" in Sketch) to be secured to the lower deck, fore and aft, with countersunk nails. They will be 3 in. wide and 2 in. deep, and be placed at intervals of 11 in. from centre to centre, except the two middle ones, which will be 12 in. apart.

A longitudinal batten (marked "F" in Sketch) 4 in. deep and 3 in. thick will extend between each front and hind stanchion. It will be scored to fit over the cross battens, and spiked to the deck below.

The horses will be secured by their halters to the front stanchions, an extra piece of rope being used, so that the head of each horse may be secured on both sides.

They will be fed with corn from nose-bags, with which each horse is to be provided before embarkation. The teamsters in charge of them must make the best arrangements they can on board for feeding them with hay.

At each row of horses, the end which it is not necessary to use for walking the horses into their places through, is to be closed by 3 in. boards, securely nailed to the outside of the stanchions.

The upper side of the upper board being 3 ft. 9 in. above the deck.

When the horses have been placed in position, and their heads secured, as already described, the end of the row through which they have been led into their places, is to be closed by three 3 in. boards, and kept in position by means of two 3 in. planks (a), so as to leave a space of 3½ in. between them and the outside of the end stanchion. Three small pieces of plank (b b b) to be nailed between them and the stanchions, upon which the three boards can rest, when they are shoved through the space between these upright planks and the stanchions, as shown in the margin.

Fine morning, but hot. Thermometer fell from 70° Fahr. to 60° in one hour; clouded over, but passed off without rain. In the afternoon the officers went over to Fort William in the tug, and went up the Kaministiquia River to Point de Meuron, 10 miles; river broad and deep, 10' to 14'. Scenery very pretty. Four boats sent off up the road this morning, and 18 wagon-loads of stuff.

Monday, June 6th, 1870.

Colonel Wolseley and Mr. Irvine started on horseback at 4 A.M. to ride up the whole length of the road, intending to return to camp on the 8th instant, by the Kaministiquia River.

Heavy storm of rain set in about 5 A.M., with gale from the north-east, which raised a heavy surf on the shore. About a dozen of the Red River boats, which were moored in a line to the floating scow, broke adrift, and drove on shore; they were got safely ashore, and hauled up on the beach, only three being at all damaged, two slightly, and one severely. This boat, "clinker-built," had torn away the wooden triangle between her bows, and started three planks, breaking them off from the stern and splintering them badly.

Rained steadily till about 10 A.M., when it gradually cleared off. The afternoon was fine and warm. Gale moderated about noon. No working party out to-day, but the stockade was gone on with in the afternoon. Many of the horses returned to-day badly galled from ill-fitting collars and saddles.

Sent off 12 boats by road at 4 A.M., and 13 wagons of stuff at 6 A.M. Working party (50 of 60th) out to day, and fatigue parties of 1st Ontario Rifles on stockade, &c. Set Mr. Benson's party of voyageurs at work to clear the burnt logs and stumps from the open ground on the other side of the 1st Militia Camp, to make a camping ground for the 2nd Quebec Rifles. stores. Colonel Wolseley and Mr. Irvine returned about 7:30 P.M., having ridden to the extreme end of the road, 37 miles, and having been thoroughly drenched during nearly the whole time they were away. They returned by the River Kaministiquia, and met Captain Young's party with the six boats, which left on Saturday morning, about 5 miles below the bridge over the Kaministiquia River. They had got their boats safely up all the portages (including the steep portage round the Kakabeka Falls), and had cleared the portages and cut skids to drag the boats over on. They reported the feasibility of transporting boats by the river route. Steamship "Algoma" arrived at 10 P.M., delivered mails that night. Several of the boats that were sent off yesterday arrived at their destination badly damaged through careless driving. Two of them very seriously injured.

Disembarked 18 horses, 6 bullocks, and 80 labourers for the road at daylight. Two companies of the 2nd Quebec Rifles, under Lieut.-Colonel Cassault, with Major MacCleod and Head-Quarters of that battalion (strength as per margin) landed at 7:30 A.M., and were encamped on the opposite side of the stream to 1st Ontario camp. Colonel Wolseley had an interview with Mr. Dawson, and informed him of the success of Captain Young's party, and requested him to send on more boats by the river route; at the same time offering him the services of the troops for the boats. Mr. Dawson promised to send up five or six more boats that evening with voyageurs and Indians, but declined the services of the soldiers. Weather cloudy and cold, but no rain. Fatigue party on the stockade. Nine men in hospital. "Algoma" sailed during the night, bearing the usual letters and despatches, &c., from Colonel Wolseley to the General. No wagons or stores sent up the road.

Mr. Dawson sent off six boats at 8 A.M. with 7 voyageurs and two Indians in each boat, one clinker built, the rest carver. By road were sent up this morning 4 boats and 14 wagon loads of stores, and an order to Captain Ward at the Kaministiquia River to send on to-morrow a serjeant and nine men, to be camped at the Matawin Bridge, and to take charge of all supplies there till the arrival at that place of Captain Young's party. Letters written to the Military Secretary respecting an officer to command the post here, and about the purchase of the four mountain guns by Dominion Government; also to Mr. McIntyre, at Fort William, to know latest safe date for leaving Fort Francis on return; and to Colonel Bolton for latest date of closing the Sault Canal. Working parties as usual on stockade and redoubt. Weather cold, and damp, and showery.

Frequent showers during the night. Barometer rising a little towards morning. Sent off 14 wagon loads of stores and a Non-commissioned Officer of Army Service Corps to the Matawin Bridge to look after the stores now being accumulated there.

Working parties on stockade and redoubt. Letter from Captain Young received, reporting his arrival at Kaministiquia Bridge, as follows:—

"Left the camp, Thunder Bay, at 6:45 on the 4th, and were towed to Fort William, where we halted to take on board 18 Indian voyageurs, and also some poles and towing or tracking lines, those which we had with us being deemed too heavy by Mr. McIntyre who kindly gave us others that proved of the greatest use, indeed, without them it would have been difficult, if not impossible, to reach this; the spikes for the end of the poles were, however, of no use, socket spikes being the only ones of any use.

"The Indians were unprovided with any cooking utensils or vessels to eat and drink out of, so that we had to lend them those provided for the use of the detachment, and together with having only three frying-pans, increased the delay for meals at halting places. We left Fort William at about 9 A.M., and rowed up the Kaministiquia to Point Meuron, where we arrived at 12 noon, and halted to dine, and then we discovered that “ the Indians had not been rationed for that day as our men were, so we had to open the stores for them. We proceeded again about 1:45, and after rowing about two miles farther, came to rapids, where we had to lay the oars aside, and take to poling and tracking for six miles farther, when we camped. Being a fine night the tents were not pitched, but the men suffered a good deal from flies, as they have, indeed, done during the whole way, the mosquito nets provided for them being almost useless after a day or two, as they tear easily in tracking or walking in the bush. We started early on the 5th, and arrived at Portage Parisian at 9 A.M. Portage 350 yards, but the Indians managed to take the boats up the rapids, so that only the stores, rifles, &c., were carried by land. We went on again at 10:30 A.M., and poled and tracked until 12 noon, when we had to run ashore from a violent thunderstorm, which wet the stores considerably, notwithstanding that they were covered with (so called) waterproofs.

“ We stopped at 1 P.M. for dinner at the point where White Fish River meets the Kaministiquia, and went on again at 2:20, tracking and poling, also a little rowing, but very little of the latter, and arrived at the foot of the Kakabeka Falls about 6 P.M., and camped. For the last half-mile the Carvel boats had to be taken up by the Indians alone, and the men of the detachment belonging to them marched along the bank through the bush. On the morning of the 6th it rained heavily, so we did not get to work until 8 A.M., after breakfast, when the Indians began to cut a portage road, and our men to take stores, &c., across the portage, which I found to be about 1,750 paces. After dinner, a considerable part of the road being made, we carried the boats up to the top of a rocky hill, the angle at least 45°; it was very hard work, especially with the Carvel boats, the red boats (flat-bottomed) being got over with considerably less difficulty, indeed, they seem, so far, much better than the others, except in pulling through still water, where, as six oars can be used against four in the others, they have an advantage.

“ We got the stores, boats, &c., over the portage by 7 P.M., and as it threatened rain, I only moved one tent as a guard-tent for the stores, &c., and early on the 7th we embarked everything, and pulled for about a quarter of a mile to another portage, which I made to be 1,100 paces; this portage was very rocky, and it took us until 5 P.M. to get boats, stores, &c., over and re-embark.

“ We then went on for about one and a-half miles to another portage, where, however, the Indians got the boats up, and our men portaged the stores; this occupied us until 7 P.M., when we camped. The following morning, the 8th, when I met you and Mr. Irvine, was very wet, and continued so until late in the afternoon, when the Indians took the two Carvel boats up the remainder of the rapid; the river rose considerably (at least 2 feet) from the previous rain.

“ On the morning of the 9th we started again at 4 A.M., and went on to portage De L'Isle, which is over an island, and very short, only about 50 paces; then we went on to another portage a couple of hundred yards off, where the stores, &c., were disembarked and carried across, and the men breakfasted. After breakfast the Indians felled trees and made a portage road about 700 paces; when it was finished we got the boats over and re-embarked, but soon came to another portage of about 500 paces, and got stores, &c., over and dined; the Indians then made another road, and we took the boats over, and went on again through several rapids very close together, when the men of the detachment had, in nearly every case, to disembark, and the Indians took the boats up, assisted by tracking lines, hauled by our men, until about 6:30 P.M., when we camped; and this morning, the 9th, we started about 7:30, the men having previously breakfasted. It rained hard until 6:30, so I thought it advisable not to go on, but as it cleared about 6:30, I had tea made, and gave the men breakfast, and came on here without much difficulty, except at one place, where a portion of the stores we carried overland for 420 paces, the Indians poling the boats up the rapids with the remainder. The route which we came by would, I consider, be very destructive to the clinker-built boats; those we have are a good deal scratched, and in some instances there are dents in the sides and bottoms, though nothing of any consequence.

“ In accordance with your instructions I propose going on to the Matawin Bridge to-morrow morning, and must, I fear, leave all the boats there. The Indian voyageurs say it would be impossible to take the large boats to the Shebandowan Lake, and they also want to go back to Fort William, saying that they were only engaged to go to this place, and saying that this was the Matawin Bridge; but they have been prevailed on by C. Gaumond, Mr. McIntyre's agent, to go on to the Matawin Bridge; they say it is a very hard bit of river, and though only five miles, it will take us a day and a-half. I fear some portion of our biscuit and other stores will be found damaged by wet, but it was impossible, considering the weather we have had, to be otherwise. If any other boats are to be sent by the route I have come, I would advise that as few provisions as possible might be sent, as they are difficult to portage, and spoil from wet, which cannot be avoided, as in poling the boats in rapid water a good deal of splashing occurs, and the waterproof covering becomes displaced. The steering apparatus for the larger boats did not seem to answer well, or it might have been that the rudders and tillers were not the ones made for the boats they were on. I will send in another report when I return from the Matawin Bridge.”

In hospital—	Men.	Weather cleared up at 2 P.M. One of the teamsters refused to start on Sunday with a load; he was put into the guard-room, to be discharged and sent to Toronto by the next steamer. A boat was given to each of the two Militia Corps to practice rowing.

Rained hard during the night. Weather mild and damp. stores.

The following is the way in which stores are landed here from vessels in the Bay :—

The depth of water at the end of the pier, about yards from shore, is 4' 6", but it deepens gradually, till, at 150 yards from shore (where is moored a floating raft buoy), it is 13' 6" in depth, and it increases to 3 and 4 fathoms at 400 yards from shore, with good holding ground on a sandy bottom. Moored to the buoy is a large wooden scow, plans and specification of which are enclosed. This scow when unloaded draws about 6" of water, and is capable of carrying tons, or about 500 barrels of pork; it is always able to come alongside the pier. When calm vessels anchor close to the floating raft buoy, and are speedily unloaded by means of the scow, which is hauled alongside by a rope passing from the pier to the vessel, and in this way backwards and forwards between the pier and the vessel. When blowing fresh from the E. or S.E., an ugly surf gets up, and vessels lie out half-a-mile or more from the shore, and can only be unloaded by means of a tug. For this purpose a small tug has been hired at 200 dollars per week, which tows the scow to the vessels and back to the pier. This tug has also been used in towing boats from Prince Arthur's Landing to Point de Meuron, 10 miles up the Kaministiquia River, and has been very useful in other ways. Steamers like the "Chicora" and "Algoma" can be unloaded in one day, and larger vessels in one-and-a-half to two days.

Horses are landed in the scow in the same manner as stores, 20 at a trip, and no accident whatever has as yet occurred. Indeed, the scow has proved invaluable, were it not only for landing the horses. There are two piers side by side, one of which is 90 feet long by 14 broad, and the other 54 feet long by 26 feet broad. The former is made of open crib-work, sunk by heavy stones, and boarded over with logs. The latter of piles driven into the ground, with open crib-work filled with heavy stones, and boarded over with squared logs.

Steamship "Chicora" arrived at 2.40 P.M., bringing the remaining two companies of 1st Ontario Rifles, 18 oxen, 8 wagons, and 18 carts.

Arrival of steamship "Chicora" at 2.40 P.M., 2 companies 1st Ontario Rifles, 6 officers, 102 rank and file, 18 oxen, 8 wagons, 18 carts, labourers, &c., &c.

SPECIFICATION OF SCOW employed in landing stores at Prince Arthur's Landing.

Thunder Bay, June 13th, 1870.

On lower deck three “kelsons” (marked A in sketch), the centre one 6 in. by 6 in., one on each side of middle; one half way between it and side of scow, 6 in. by 5 in. The centre kelson is strengthened at the ends by an additional piece of 6 in. stuff (marked F).

On kelsons are upright stanchions (marked B in sketch) of 4 in. by 4 in., six in number.

On the centre kelson are two additional stanchions at each end (marked H) of 3 in. by 3 in. stuff.

Rectangular tamarack frame timbers, or “knees” (marked K in sketch), twelve in number, 5 in. by 5 in., running from side kelsons through upper deck, and carrying bulwarks, top of which is 1 ft. 6 in. from upper deck. From centre of knees 3 ft. 10 in. The bulwark is 3 in. by 5 in. (marked E).

A “shelf” (marked S in sketch), 6 in. by 3 1/2 in., runs longitudinally on each side; it is spiked to the inner side of knees, and forms a rest for the deck beams.

“Deck Beams,” six in number (marked D), running transversely, resting on the stanchions and on the shelves, into and down upon which they are notched; they are also notched on the sides of knees and spiked thereto; they are 8 in. by 4 in. at the centre, and 6 in. by 4 in. at the sides. This gives them a slight curve, which raises the deck in the centre.

“Carlings,” or longitudinal deck beams (marked C in sketch), 6 1/2 in. by 4 in., three in number, resting on transverse deck beams.

“Between the Kaministiquia and Matawin rivers there are two or three bad places, amounting in all in distance to about a mile and a-half.”

Captain Young, by Colonel Wolseley’s orders, started from his camp at the Matawin on Tuesday the 14th, to ascertain whether it is possible to convey the boats up the Matawin into the Shebandowan Lake, or up to the Oskondagee Creek. I desired him to report on reaching the latter place.

Lieutenant Alleyne, R.A., practised at 5 P.M. with his guns at two floating targets placed in the bay, one at 1,000 yards, the other at 550 yards. The practice was very good. Fifteen rounds were fired from three guns; at the long range seven rounds of common shell, at the short range six rounds of shrapnel; also two rounds of canister. One of the gun carriages was damaged—one of the bolts passing through the body of the carriage was broken, and the nuts came off; this caused the wood to split across the breast of the carriage. This gun carriage appears to have been fired at high elevations at Montreal, and it is supposed that the bolt got strained in this way. The injury is easily repairable.

Weather very fine; fresh “sea-breeze” as usual during the day. Night cold. Flies not troublesome. Steamship “Arctic” finished unloading at dusk.

Two working parties of 30 men each sent out about 6 miles on the road at 7 A.M., taking their rations with them. One hundred men employed on the Redoubt, and 25 on the Commissariat fatigues.

Letter received from Mr. Simpson, dated Fort Francis, June 10, reporting that latest news from Fort Garry was in April, when all was quiet; that the Indians would resist any Fenian raid; that there would not be much trouble in making a treaty for right of way; that only two men had as yet been obtained as guides; that the Indians were to hold a grand council on the 20th June; that the portages would be cut, and drift wood cleared from the French river by the crews of two canoes leaving Fort Francis that day for Fort William; that by this means there would be water enough in the French river for the boats; that the Hudson’s Bay Company’s agent, Mr. McKenzie, would put plenty of storage at the disposal of Colonel Wolseley at Fort Francis; that the road from N.W. angle of the Lake of the Woods to Fort Garry was reported impassable by Indians and Hudson’s Bay Company’s officials; that the route from Fort Francis to Fort Alexander would take about eleven days for boats laden with 80 pieces of 90 lb. each; that the portages on that route were all in good order; that the Hudson’s Bay Company’s brigade of boats left Fort Francis for York Factory; that he (Mr. Simpson) had had a long trip, arriving on the 8th June. Weather very wet, and head winds.

Captain Young reports that he started from his camp at the Matawin Bridge early on the morning of the 15th June, in one of the red Ottawa flat boats up the Matawin river, and for 4 miles did not meet with any difficulty worthy of mention; he then came to a bad rapid, where he made a portage road of 120 yards: for about 4 miles above there is a succession of rapids, up which they managed to pole and track, making a short portage of 20 yards; they then came to a rapid where the river runs through a gorge, with perpendicular sides, and water so rough and rocky, with falls, that it was impossible to track or pole; on looking from the highest accessible point, the river for at least three-quarters of a mile seemed in the same state; and the banks were so rough, and the ascent so abrupt, that a portage road could not be formed.

Captain Young considers it impossible to take the large boats by this route, unless a regular road is made, and even then, the assistance of many men would be required, as the highest point is more than 120 feet above the river.

Schooner “Pandora” anchored about 9-30 P.M.

Weather very hot and sultry, thermometer 94° in the shade; heavy thunder storm in the afternoon. Working parties on the road not required; 100 men on the stockaded redoubt.

Unloading the “Pandora” all day. Order sent out to Captain Young to commence taking boats two and a half miles higher up the River Matawin, to a point where the road touches the river, and to erect a shanty to provide covering from the sun for stores.

The first horse yet lost died to-day, about two miles from camp, from the excessive heat, on his way in.

Divine service parade at 9-30 A.M., the chaplain officiating. Order sent out for one of the two companies now at the Kaministiquia river to go on to the Matawin, in order to help Captain Young in taking up boats and stores. Weather very hot. The ground twice burst out, smouldering and flaming close to camp, and if not seen and put out would have got into the commissariat marquees.

Including 4 teams arrived per "Algoma," and hired by the day.

Colonel Wolseley inspected the 1st Ontario Rifles at 7 A.M., and expressed himself well pleased with the manner in which the Regiment turned out. The wagons were loaded at 4:30 A.M. on account of the heat of the weather, and despatched by 6 o'clock.

Parade state of 1st Ontario Rifles this day is entered.

The new arrangement about transport came into effect to-day. Wagons go 13 miles, and fresh relays of horses there take them on 14 miles farther, to the Matawin Bridge. The empty wagons are brought back next morning to the "Halfway Home," and taken into camp by the same horses that bring out the loaded wagons. Thus each team takes a loaded wagon 13 miles, and brings back an empty one each day. Two chestnut horses dangerously ill, reported that the teamsters had been "racing" home. Weather cool and delightful. Pleasant sea-breeze. Boats sent off up the river.

Colonel Wolseley inspected the 2nd Regiment Quebec Rifles (5 companies) at 7 A.M. Tuesday, June 21st, 1870.

The men turned out clean and well, but presented a contrast to the 1st Ontario Rifles in their height and size, a great many of them being small, slight men, apparently quite unable to withstand the hardships which are before them. One of the chestnut horses died during the night. The Veterinary, Mr. Tozer, and his assistant, when sent for to see this horse, were both found to be drunk and incapable; Colonel Wolseley spoke to them this morning and discharged them both.

At 10 A.M. Colonel Wolseley started on horseback up the road intending to be away for three days. At 10:30 A.M. the steamship "Arctic" hove in sight, and anchored at 12:30. The last two companies of Quebec Rifles, under Major Irvine, together with Lieutenant-Colonel Bolton, Deputy-Assistant Adjutant-General, Captain Nagle, and Mr. Myer also, came from the Sault, &c., &c. Wagons were got off with supplies at 4:30 A.M. Seven boats sent off by river. Stockaded redoubt progressing. Parties of Regulars and Militia commenced learning gun drill and signalling. Unloading "Arctic" all day. Weather fine, not too hot. The other chestnut horse better this evening.

Lieutenant-Colonel Bolton resumed his duties as Deputy-Assistant Adjutant-General from Captain Huyshe, who had been acting for him during his absence at the Sault. Wagons started off at 4:30 A.M., the new system appearing to work well. An additional party, 1 Captain, 1 Subaltern, 1 Serjeant, 1 Corporal, and 8 Privates from 1st Ontario Rifles, began a course of gun drill under Lieutenant Alleyne, Royal Artillery, in order to be able to take charge of the of which the road passes, it is evident that fires have raged over the country for years past. Some of these brûlès are extensive, others only a few acres. The road to the Kaministiquia river, 22 miles, passes at first over a succession of sandy hills, with here and there an intervening bit of swamp. The best portions of the road are through these swamps, for, as they have been well ditched and fascined, they are hard and dry. For about the last four miles before reaching the Kaministiquia river, the road passes over hills of red clay, which are very sticky and become quite impassable after heavy rain ; in dry weather they are hard and good. Between the Kaministiquia and Matawin rivers the road is very hilly and altogether through a red clay district, all thoroughly burnt over and clear of wood in every direction. Much of this distance, nearly five miles, the road is cut out along the side of these hills, the outer slope being faced with crib work as a retaining wall. The bridge over the Kaministiquia is 320 feet long and 18 feet broad, supported on eight piers of crib work filled with stones. The bridge over the Matawin is constructed in a similar manner, being 216 feet long and 18 feet broad, and supported on five piers. No truss is used with either ; there are four stringers 16 inches deep in each bridge, supported by two sets of corbels, or "balance stringers" as they are called in this country. These bridges are built to carry a load of 50 tons.

After crossing the Matawin river the road enters a densely wooded country of small trees, which extends to the Oskondagee Creek (Pitch-pine Creek). For the first three miles the road is corduroyed almost the whole way, and is good, but is only 10 feet wide, and the trees have only been cut for that width, so that the sun cannot get to it to dry it. Beyond these are many places where for one or two miles the road is good, but at many places spots are reached which are, even in fine weather, practically impassable for wagons ; that is, although a few wagons can get over them, no horse transport in the world could stand having to get over such places ; the horses would be knocked up in a few days. The distance from the Matawin to the Oskondagee is about 11 miles. Colonel Wolseley states that in his opinion it could not be fit for practical use before three weeks, certainly not with gangs now on it. Beyond the Oskondagee (which is 75 feet wide*) the road runs through a burnt district as far as the dam site, with here and there a strip of soft green wood, all small however. There is but little swamp in this district, and it promises to be a good portion of the road. It is not intended to cut or make the road any further on at present, as everything will be embarked there except the men, a foot path guns, &c., should they be left at Fort Garry on the return of the Regular Troops to Canada.

Stockaded party as usual. Hot wind set in suddenly about 4 P.M., and thermometer sprung up from 78°, to 86°. Thunder storms all round, but no rain fell in camp.

Colonel Wolseley returned at 10 A.M., having ridden from the Matawin Bridge (27 miles) this morning. He sent over immediately to Fort William to Mr. McIntyre to get Indians to take up some boats next day. Ten Indians were promised, and a company of 60th warned to embark at 6 A.M. to-morrow. Order sent to Captain Buller and party to remain at the Matawin Bridge until the arrival of their company. Colonel Wolseley wrote to Mr. Dawson yesterday, requesting him to commence at once cutting a branch road of one mile, from the main road to the river at a point about four miles from the Matawin Bridge ; also to put all his strength of workmen on this mile, and on the five miles from Oskondagee Creek to the Dam Site, as it was his (Colonel Wolseley's) intention to send all stores by ox teams

Captain Dundas and 60 men and officers of 1st Battalion 60th Rifles got away at 7.15 A.M. in boats for Fort William ; they were, as usual, towed by the tug to Point de Meuron, 10 miles up the Kaministiquia. 26 wagons sent off this morning at 6 o'clock by a new arrangement, enabling the men and horses to have their morning meal before starting. Colonel Wolseley, on his return yesterday from Captain Ward's Camp, three miles in advance of the Oskondagee Creek, wrote the following report of the condition in which he found the road. From Prince Arthur's Landing to the Matawin Bridge, 27 miles, the road runs through a partially open country, the woods having been burnt over many times along that district ; from the appearance of these brûlès (burnt clearances), through a succession will be cleared for them to the lake. The arrangement settled by Colonel Wolseley for the transport of stores is as follows :

From Prince Arthur's Landing to the bridge over the Matawin river, by horse teams; from thence to a point two miles further along the road to "Young's Landing," where the river leaves the road, by boats; thence for two miles up the road, and one mile along a branch road now being cut to the river, by ox teams; thence up the river to Oskondagee Creek, by boats; thence to the dam site, by ox teams; thence to the Shebandowan Lake up the river, in flat-bottomed boats.

By Colonel Wolseley's order Assistant-Controller Irvine went on board the steamship "Arctic," to endeavour to come to some arrangement with the captain, she being no longer required for the military service; but the captain said he had no power even to treat with the British Government, the bargain having been made with her owners. He declined altogether to make any compromise whatever.

"The boats were 9 in number and are mentioned as arranged in order according to merit for capacity, durability, and speed: 2 white-bottomed, clinker-built, marked R. Abbott; 2 large carvel-built; 2 small ditto; 2 grey inside, clinker-built, marked T. S.; 1 clinker built at Barrie.

Précis of Captain Buller's letter, dated Matawin, 23rd June, 1870.

"The carvel are undoubtedly the strongest, but their weight renders them liable to rough treatment in portaging. The voyageurs employed, mostly French from 'Three Rivers,' were skilful but lazy, and refuse to work on Sundays, and during week days would only work between 7 A.M. and 6 P.M., for which hours they declared themselves as hired by agreement.*

"The voyageurs and guides were also wasteful of the provisions,† not being restricted to any particular amount.

"The carvel built boats have no well-holes, and therefore carry a large quantity of water which it is impossible to bale out. A large quantity of the cargo consisted of flour in barrels, the hoops of which not being nailed on came off during the rough usage they received in portaging. The axes supplied as camp equipage are so blunt as to be useless.‡

"The boats quitted Fort William on the 14th, and reached Matawin at 11 A.M. the 23rd. Thus leaving out Sunday 19th, the boats were over eight days on the journey, and passed over eight portages of the length altogether of two miles, two furlongs, and sixty yards, in a distance of about 46 miles. The clinker-built (Barrie) boat was much strained and injured. The men were constantly wet from being in the water, and have not apparently suffered in health in consequence."

One company of the 60th Rifles under Captain Northey, strength as per margin (not stated), left camp at 3 A.M. by road, with orders to halt the first night at the 13 miles shanty, and reach the Matawin in four marches.

At 4 A.M. a fine chestnut horse died in great pain; this horse is supposed to have been over driven. Twenty-eight teams left the camp along the road. It came on to rain at 7 a.m., and has continued to rain nearly all day. The tug steamer "Okoura" was discharged to-day. In the afternoon orders were sent to Captain Northey to use his own discretion as to continuing his march in the present state of the weather, at the same time rations for his company were sent to him. Orders to the same effect were sent to the Officer in Command of the party at the Kaministiquia Bridge. Assistant Surgeon Shaw was directed to remain at Matawin.

In consequence of the rain which continued all day on Saturday, no teams were sent along the road to-day. Divine service was held in the Head-Quarter Camp at 9.30 for Protestant worship, and for the Roman Catholics in the Camp of the 2nd Quebec Rifles. A party of one Officer and 15 rank and file from each battalion of Militia, with 25 voyageurs, started at 2 P.M. in nine boats for the Kaministiquia river. The day turned out very fine. The road was reported as much softened by yesterday's rain. Fog on the lake more or less all day. The steamship "Chicora" arrived at 8 P.M.

The new slaughter-house was continued building. A path or narrow road was ordered to be constructed through the dense bush to the new slaughter-house, and was commenced by a fatigue party at 10 A.M., of 1 officer and 30 men.

Steamship "Arctic" sailed, being discharged from our service at 2:30 A.M.

Red River steam-boat, or launch, tried in the afternoon, and found to answer; goes about 9 miles per hour, with 75 lbs. to the square inch, but will not answer well for towing.

Twenty-seven wagons were sent up the road to the 13-mile shanty, three of these went through to Matawin.

Two wagons and 4 teamsters came down from Matawin.

Lieutenant-Colonel McNeill, V.C., proceeded by the road en route to take up his place at Lake Shebandowan.

CAPTAIN HUYSHE, who had been sent up to survey the road, in a letter dated 27th Tuesday, June 28th, 1870. June, writes,—“That the heat was very great indeed, too hot to march after early morning. “The men coming up the River in the boats spoke highly of the ‘clinker-built.’”

Captain Buller, in a letter bearing date 27th, writes—“That bags of pork answered “well, being far more easily carried than barrels. Stuff was going up the river quickly. “Captain Young intended to visit and inspect the branch road immediately. Captain “Calderon’s Company had passed through, and that Captain Northey’s Company was at “the Kaministiquia Bridge, also that the two damaged boats had been repaired.”

The road along the beach to the new slaughter-house was continued in the early Wednesday, June 29th, 1870. morning, but the weather changed, a thunder storm came on, and it rained heavily all day, the wind being in the east. The road was reported during the afternoon as terribly cut up. In the afternoon General Lindsay and Colonel Wolseley went to Fort William; the weather became so bad that they could not return to camp. The rain continued, with thunder and lightning, in a way seldom seen out of the tropics. A letter was received this afternoon from Captain Young, dated 28th June, in which he writes, that, “He had “visited the newly-cut branch road, and found it “to be about 1½ mile; it had been cleared up for “¼ mile. Mr. Dawson’s people expect it to be “clear by the 29th instant, but no doubt the very “bad weather has stopped the work. One part of “the main road, two miles this side of where the “branch road turns down to the left, was very bad indeed, and the ox-teams found great “difficulty in getting through; but two gangs of Mr. Dawson’s men were at work on it “there. He (Captain Young), as Colonel Wolseley had ordered, would visit the place “again on Friday, 1st July, and would report result. He had taken up 400 barrels of pork “to the place called Young’s Landing, and the shed there, he says, was nearly full. The “injuries done to the two boats had been repaired, and would have been at work again, “except that he was delayed by Captain Huyshe, who had written to him from the “Kaministiquia that six boats under Mr. Laboucheire had reached the bridge of the “Kaministiquia, and that the Indians had left them there and returned to Fort William, “and also that three boats with Mr. McNab had left the Kaministiquia for that place, “and desired him to try and get the Indians who accompanied Mr. McNab to go back to “the Kaministiquia and help to take up the six boats with some of his men. He “accordingly saw these Indians when they arrived there, which they did about 6 p.m., and “next day the Indians, accompanied by some of his men, were to return to the Kamini- “stiquia Bridge to bring up Mr. Laboucheire’s boats under Captain Buller; and he was “taking another party to clear a tracking path along the River between where he was and “the Kaministiquia Bridge, so as to assist all boats sent for the future by same route, it is “difficult, but would be far easier if a tracking path were made. Mr. Dawson’s agent was “assisting him with six good axe-men. The river was in good order. They took up “that day 130 barrels, and directly the other boats were up, they would continue sending “up stuff.”

The ground was too wet to-day for the men to work at the road through the bush Thursday, 30th June, 1870. along the shore to the new slaughter-house.

Lieutenant-General Lindsay inspected the 2nd Quebec Rifle Militia at 10 a.m., and No wagons sent up the road with supplies, on account of the frightfully bad weather. Friday, 1st July, 1870. the 1st Ontario at 2 p.m.

Two companies of the 1st Ontario Rifles left camp at 4 a.m. No. 1 Company to one mile short of the Matawin Bridge; No. 2 to the 6-mile creek. Road reported very bad. Lieutenant-General Lindsay, Colonel Wolseley, Captain Gascoigne, A.D.C., and Colonel McNeill, proceeded up the road, the latter to be eventually stationed at Lake Shebandowan. A party of 1 officer (Captain Amyott) and 34 rank and file of the Quebec Rifles started in 8 boats for the Kaministiquia River at 2 p.m. without arms and accoutrements, they were short handed with regard to voyagers.

A company of the 1st Ontario Rifles marched at 4:30 a.m. for a station 17 miles off to work on the road, which was reported to be drying fast. Weather fine, but cool and pleasant. Roads drying-up fast. Orders received from Colonel Wolseley from the Matawin Bridge, for the Headquarters of the 60th to march on July 3rd for the Matawin; for the 1st Ontario Rifles to march on July 4th for the Kaministiquia Bridge; and for the Head-quarters and Staff to move forward on the 5th. Colonel Wolseley received to-day the following letter from Mr. Simpson, of Sault St. Marie, Member of Parliament for the Algoma District:—

My Dear Sir, “Fort Francis, 21st June, 1870.
“A canoe arrived here yesterday from Fort William with provisions for the Indians, and the men who brought them up will leave to-morrow morning on their return trip. I am sorry to say they left the tea and tobacco at the Matawin station, and I am quite out of these two articles; however I have explained to the Indians the cause, and they are satisfied. There are here now about 1,500 Indians, men, women, and children, encamped at the Fort. I held a council yesterday, and to-day the Indians held one, and one to choose their chiefs. I expect to be able to settle with them, and to get them all away before you arrive. They are staying as there are no sturgeon in the river. They are a difficult people to deal with, there is so much palaver among them that one does not well know what they want. They seem to be anxious to sell their lands, but I have only authority to treat with them for the right of way. All this I can explain much better when we meet. They have no objection to the troops going through to Red River. No news from that quarter which can be relied on. We expect a canoe from Fort Alexander in a few days, and I intend to come and meet you as soon as I can get through with the treaty, when I hope to be able to give you good news from the Settlement. I have had no letters from Fort William since the 31st May, so I am quite in the dark as to your movements. I shall be very glad to see you all safely here. This is a most miserable ill-kept post; and I have been living on sturgeon, choke-dog, and boiled bear and porcupine. You will soon have an experience of it yourself.”

Extract from a letter received from Captain Hayshe, dated 9 P.M. 30th June, Kaministiquia Bridge. “Incessant heavy rain and thunder storms for the last two days. A small bridge two miles this side of the Matawin carried away, and the road so flooded as to be impassible. Two small bridges between the Kaministiquia River and Strawberry Creek carried away, and about 100 yards of the road flooded. The train of wagons was caught between these two bridges, and the wagons had to be left on the road, and the horses taken round the hills. The bridge over Sunshine Creek was carried away, and that over Strawberry Creek very nearly sharing the same fate, the water being within six inches of the centre arch. The big bridges over the rivers Matawin and Kaministiquia were in some danger, the latter especially, being only saved by the exertions of Captain Nagle and his teamsters, who worked at it all day clearing away the drift wood which had blocked up five out of the nine of its arches. One of the centre piers sunk about one foot, and the roadway of the bridge itself parted from the corbels with a loud report. No great damage done to the bridge itself. A gang of eighteen of Mr. Dawson’s men came down from the Matawin, and were to commence repairing the two small bridges next day. Communications re-opened with the Matawin. Weather clearing up.”

Annexed are copies of a Proclamation issued by Colonel Wolseley, and letters to Bishops Taché and Macrea, at Red River. These letters were intrusted to Mr. Donald Smith, in English and in French, to be forwarded to Fort Garry.

Sunday,
July 3rd, 1870.

Divine service at the usual hours. The Head-Quarters of the 60th under Colonel Fielden marched at 3 A.M. for the Matawin, there to be stationed till further orders. Day cloudy but fine, occasional showers. The Lieutenant-General and Colonel Wolseley returned to camp in the evening, having left the Matawin Bridge in a canoe at 6 A.M. The river was still very much swollen, although it is falling rapidly. At the Kaministiquia Bridge they found Captain Harchmer, 1st Militia, with his brigade of boats, and Captain Dundas, 60th Rifles, with his Company and a brigade of boats a few miles lower down, both had been greatly delayed by the excess of water in the river, which had become so deep that it was difficult to pole, and as the boats were flooded tracking was extremely difficult and laborious. At the Kakabeka Falls they passed Captain Macklein’s brigade, they were engaged then in getting their boats over the portage; four had already been taken up above the falls. The Indians had in the morning refused to work, as it was Sunday; Captain Macklein very properly told them they should have nothing to eat unless they worked, which soon brought them to their senses. Captain McCalmont, 9th Lancers, had gone up as a volunteer with this party, having been placed in charge of a boat’s crew by Colonel Wolseley; he was working hard pulling his boat over the steep incline (120 feet high) when General Lindsay passed. Below that, near the Parresseux Rapids, they passed another brigade of boats under Captain Amyott, 2nd Militia; they were encamped, having done nothing all the morning owing to the man in charge (a drunken fellow named McNabb) having told Captain Amyott that they always halted on Sundays. Colonel Wolseley ordered them to strike camp at once and go on.

The steamer, “Chicora,” arrived at 6:30 P.M., bringing some voyageurs and boats, also seven breast straps for horses, to be used on horses that were collar galled. Colonel Wolseley had asked for the straps, &c., &c., necessary for converting twenty sets of double collar harness into breast draught harness. Harness upon that system is very common in the States, and is much used in the province of Ontario. The Lieutenant-General being absent from Montreal when Colonel Wolseley's application reached that place accounts, perhaps, for its not being attended to, as up to this date it has been the only application for any stores or for any assistance that has not been attended to. Instead of having the means of changing twenty sets of double harness from collar to breast draught, we have only been supplied with the means of changing seven sets of single harness from collar to breast draught, as we never use carts except when we have no wagons to spare, this addition to our transport material is of very little service to us. Twenty sets of breast straps suitable for double harness would have enabled us to use 40 horses daily more than we are now doing, for we have that number of horses on the sick list who are incapacitated from work owing to galled shoulders, but who are in other respects in good working condition. This is a subject well worthy of being remembered in the future whenever it may be necessary to equip a horse transport service; I should say at least 20 per cent. of the harness provided should be fitted for breast draught. By such means no horses need ever be on the sick list from galled shoulders, for if due care is taken immediately that a shoulder shows signs of injury, the collar should be replaced by the breast straps, and vice versa. The seven breast straps sent us from Montreal are those used in Field Batteries for the non-commissioned officers' horses, they are only intended to assist gun teams over difficult ground, but are quite unfit for heavy draught. For a short spurt they would do well to help a team along, but when used with horses drawing continuously, they can be of little service even when used singly in shafts.

Colonel Wolseley found the roads in a very bad state, General Lindsay was surprised to find it, even in the finished portions so very deep and unsuited for military purposes. Every stream had become swollen, carrying away the superstructure of small bridges and culverts. The bridge over Strawberry Creek had a narrow escape, and was saved by the exertions of some teamsters who chanced to be near it. The large bridge over the Kaministiquia River was saved as described in Captain Huyshe's letter given in yesterday's journal. The Matawin Bridge was for some time in much danger, also on Thursday, 30th June. That over Sunshine Creek was entirely washed away. That over Oskondagee Creek was nearly destroyed, it is built on three trestles, the centre one of which had drifted about 2 feet down stream and was only saved by having ropes fastened to it securing it to trees on the banks. The detachment of ten men stationed there as a guard over the stores worked all night in clearing away drift wood from the trestles and in piling up quantities of large stones upon the superstructure. The water there rose 6 feet 6 inches within a few hours. General Lindsay went to the Dam Site on horseback yesterday, the horse had to be swam over Sunshine Creek. The road between the Matawin and the Oskondagee is not worthy of the name of road. It is with difficulty and much danger that even single horsemen can get over parts of it. It is useless as a means of supplying an Army in the field, or even supplying the small numbers composing this force.

The new cut from the main road to the river, which Colonel Wolseley requested Mr. Dawson to make on the 22nd June, is now in progress, and will be open for wagons on the 6th or 7th provided the weather is at all favourable.

Colonel Wolseley ordered Captain Buller's company of 60th from the Matawin to assist in its construction. Captain Calderon's company of that regiment have been working at it for some days past. Both were ordered to work all through Sunday at it.

At the Oskondagee there is now a considerable amount of pork and biscuit brought up over the bad road by our bullock wagons.

Captains Northey and Ward, with their companies, were encamped on rising ground about 3 miles beyond the Oskondagee. The former had been ordered to the Dam Site, but was deterred from proceeding further by the difficulties of the road. There is a small creek about 3,000 yards beyond their camps, over which a bridge was completed yesterday (2nd), 900 yards beyond it again is another creek, and about 600 yards beyond it again is the point where the troops are to embark. The last mile is still in a most unfinished condition, but the ground is good, and there is no danger of the operations being stopped by it.

The really bad and impracticable portion of the road is between where the new cut leaves the road to the bridge over the Oskondagee.

The Lieutenant-General went in a canoe from the point of embarkation to Shebandowan Lake. There were violent thunder storms all day, but not much rain.

General Lindsay saw Mr. Dawson at the end of the road and asked him, as a favour, to take off all his men from that useless portion of the road and put on all his strength to the road between Young's Landing and the river by the new cut, and upon the portion of it beyond the Oskondagee. Mr. Dawson said he would do so. He made a similar promise to Colonel Wolseley on the 23rd June and only partially fulfilled it; it is to be hoped that he will this time be more exact in carrying out this arrangement.

The Lieutenant-General and Aide-de-Camp embarked at 8 A.M. on board of "Chicora." A guard of honour was furnished by 2nd Militia, the men turned out remarkably well, very clean, belts polished and tidy.

The Head-Quarters 1st Militia, under Lieutenant-Colonel Jarvis, left at 4.30 A.M. for the Kaministiquia Bridge to go there in two marches. The turn out was very bad. They were ordered to march at 3 A.M. All the fault of the officers, who, instead of looking after their men, were busy strapping up their portmanteaus and attending to their own luggage.

During the day, Major Macleod and some Militia and voyageurs left Prince Arthur's Landing with two brigades of boats, fifteen in number, to ascend the River Kaministiquia.

Morning fine, very showery in the evening.

Colonel Wolseley went over to Fort William to pay a farewell visit to Mr. McIntyre, who had been very useful, civil, and obliging. At 6 P.M. Colonel Wolseley inspected the camp of the 2nd Militia, about to be left in garrison at Prince Arthur's Landing under command of Captain De Bellefeuille.

No supplies went up since Wednesday last until to-day.

Colonel Wolseley and his head-quarters moved from Prince Arthur's Landing to the camp on the Matawin River, 27 miles. Colonel Wolseley started at 5 A.M. on horseback, and on his arrival there, got a fresh horse and went up the road, accompanied by Colonel Fielden, as far as the end of "Brown's Lane," where the branch road meets the river. On his return he ordered a working party of 50 men of the 60th to go about 3 miles up the road the next morning; also 90 barrels of pork to be sent up to the end of "Brown's Lane," where Captain Young, with 6 Indians and 21 men, was to try to get them up the river to the Oskondagee Creek, using only three boats. On his way up from the Bay Colonel Wolseley ordered a company of the 1st Ontario Militia to work at the 6 mile creek to move on 4 miles further; and two companies of the same battalion to move next day from the Kaministiquia Bridge to the Oskondagee Creek.

Very wet weather. Rained hard in almost incessant showers the greater part of the day. The road is now in a worse state than it has ever been in before, dreadfully cut up, and nothing but dry weather can make it any better.

Colonel Wolseley sent an order for two companies of the 2nd Militia to move forward on the 7th instant, at 4 A.M. to the Matawin Bridge in two marches, and for the head-quarters and remainder of that battalion to march two hours afterwards (the same day) for Strawberry Creek, there to work on the road. He then rode out and showed the working party of the 60th where they were to work. At noon he rode off again, accompanied by Colonel Fielden, to Browne's Lane to see Captain Young off with the three boats and 90 barrels of pork en route to the Oskondagee.

Two companies 1st Ontario passed through about 7 A.M. on their way from the Kaministiquia to the Oskondagee. In consequence of the move to-morrow of the 2nd battalion of Militia, Assistant Controller Irvine sent down an order for the wagons leaving the Bay to-day to be unloaded at the 13-mile shanty, and to return empty to the Bay; stores to be piled up on the roadside till they can be fetched.

On Colonel Wolseley's return from Calderon's Landing he reported that Captain Young had embarked 70 barrels of pork in his three boats, besides three days' rations. Captain Buller was ordered to go up the river the next day with his company, and Captain Calderon also—the former in the morning, the latter in the afternoon.

The day was fine and cool, not too hot; the first day without any rain that we have had for a long time.

An order was sent, per Assistant-Surgeon Shaw, to Captain Dundas, 60th Rifles, to move on up the river to-morrow morning with his company, taking as many boats as he could man, and as much pork, and to leave the stuff at the Oskondagee Creek, returning to Calderon's Landing with as few boats as possible.

Colonel Wolseley rode down the road to the Kaministiquia Bridge and Strawberry Creek, giving an order to Captain Cook, 1st Ontario Rifles, to move on his company this evening to the Matawin, and an order to Lieutenant-Colonel Jarvis to move with his Head-Quarters to the same place to-morrow morning.

The 1st Ontario Rifles sent in a complaint about the insufficiency of the ration of meat issued to them, and requesting an increase; but Colonel Wolseley declined to do so, having found it ample enough for all the other working parties.

Weather very fine, the road drying up in consequence. The sun yesterday and to-day has baked the road into the consistency of a brick. All working parties on the road are now employed in corduroying, regardless of the symmetry of the work, so that they may get over a great deal in a day. Colonel Wolseley having ordered them to give up all heavy work in the way of ditching, cuttings, embankments, &c., and confine themselves solely to the work required to make the road passable for wagons for the next three weeks. After we have all passed over it, Mr. Dawson can do whatever he likes with it, and he will have all the autumn for his work.

Between the Matawin and Kaministiquia Bridges it is difficult at some spots to obtain good timber for corduroy work as it has been so denuded of trees by successive fires, that the few left still standing are mostly half burned through. The timber generally in this section of the country is very poor; no hard wood of any sort; pitch pine, spruce,

Prince Arthur's Landing, Thunder Bay, 30th June, 1870.

ENCLOSED I have the honour to forward you the copy of a Proclamation in English and in French, to which I have the honour to request your Lordship will be good enough to give the utmost publicity in the several parishes under your Episcopal care.

Similar copies have been forwarded to the Officer representing the Hudson Bay Company at Fort Garry and to Bishop Taché.

Sir,

Prince Arthur's Landing, Thunder Bay, 30th May, 1870.

WITH reference to the Proclamation which I have forwarded to you in a letter of this date, I have the honour to inform you that I am most anxious that steps should be immediately taken for opening out a cart road from the end of Mr. Snow's road to the north-west corner of the Lake of the Woods.

It is not necessary that the road should be of a permanent character, as it will only be required this year for military purposes, hereafter it could be enlarged and made fit for commercial traffic, but now a corduroy track over the swamps wide enough and strong enough for the passage of lightly-laden Red River carts would answer our purposes.

Mr. Dawson, who represents the Public Works Department here, will forward more fully detailed instructions regarding the construction of the road required; and will authorize you to appoint a surveyor to superintend and direct the work and to make the necessary disbursements.

I have to request that you will kindly render the gentleman you employ upon this service every possible assistance while so employed.

I have, &c.

Prince Arthur's Landing, Thunder Bay, 30th June, 1870.

I HAVE the honour to request that you will have the goodness to make the enclosed Proclamation as public as possible in the Province of Manitoba. I send it to you in English and in French.

I am forwarding by the messenger who will carry this, similar copies to the Protestant and Roman Catholic Bishops, requesting them also to make it known in parishes under their care.

I have, &c.

To the Officer in Charge
Hudson Bay Company, Fort Garry.

My Lord,

Prince Arthur's Landing, Thunder Bay, 30th June, 1870.

I HAVE written to-day to the officer representing the Hudson Bay Company at Fort Garry, referring to a letter to him of this day's date from Mr. Dawson of the Public Works Department, in which he has been requested to take immediate steps for opening out a road between the north-west corner of the Lake of the Woods and the termination of Mr. Snow's road, and whereby he has been authorized to expend money for that purpose.

I have begged him to render every assistance in his power in obtaining the labour and funds required for this service, I have the honour to request your Lordship's earnest co-operation in doing so, and being aware of the anxiety of your people to welcome us amongst them, I am led to hope that they will avail themselves of the opportunity for proving the sincerity of their wishes.

I have, &c.

(Signed) G. J. WOLSELEY, Colonel,
Commanding Red River Expeditionary Force.

The Bishops Taché and McCrea,
Fort Garry.

Dear Mr. Smith,

Prince Arthur's Landing, Thunder Bay, 30th June, 1870.

I SEND you herewith letters for the officer representing the Hudson Bay Company at Fort Garry, and for the Protestant and Roman Catholic Bishops in the province of Manitoba, which you kindly promised to have sent to their destination from some point near the Red River settlement whilst en route for Norway House.

I send for your private information copies of all the letters enclosed in their several covers addressed to those gentlemen, and also a copy of the proclamation which I have asked for them to make public in settlement.

You will see that I am writing to your officer (as I told you I intended doing) upon the subject of the road to the north-west corner of the Lake of the Woods, I am most anxious that a practicable cart road should be opened out to that point, and as I know that you take a sincere interest in everything affecting the success of this expedition, I do not hesitate to ask you to take whatever steps you may consider advisable towards furthering the object I have in view as regards the construction of this road; it might, perhaps, be possible to get the Indians from Fort Francis to assist in the work by beginning from the Lake of the Woods' end of the proposed road, 50 men with axes could do much towards cutting and clearing out trees for a few miles back westward from the lake. Any expense in doing so will be paid by the Government.

Wishing you a pleasant journey, and thanking you for all the valuable assistance I have received from Mr. McIntyre, who has been of such service to us in getting our boats forward towards Shebandowan Lake, believe me,

Very truly, &c.

(Signed) G. J. WOLSELEY, Colonel.

If a Major arrives, having been sent by the Lieutenant-General to command at that post, he will be brought on here and posted at Fort Francis, for which command Major Robertson had been nominated.

Colonel Wolseley rode to the Oskondagee to see after affairs there, and to find out how the river transport was getting on; up to 4 p.m. but one boat had reached that place; its cargo had been left on the bank of the river a few miles down, as she had swung round in a rapid and been injured; she leaked a good deal, but can be easily repaired, —she is clinker built; a carver-built boat had had a hole knocked in her bottom, and was abandoned, she can easily be repaired however, she will be taken back to Calderon's Landing for that purpose. The loads put in the boats were too heavy, for although there was plenty of water, the rapids are so strong at places, that heavily laden boats require skilled men to manage them, 10 barrels only will be placed in them for the future whilst making this trip.

Colonel Wolseley found that much progress had been made with the stables at the Oskondagee, and the road between that bridge and the Dam Site was in fair working order: at the Dam Site he found that a footpath had just been cut from our camp there to the place on the lake where our stores are to be collected.

Mr. Dawson has again placed strong gangs on the road between the new cut and the Oskondagee, the new cut being now in fair working order. The road, in consequence of the last few days of fine weather, is much better than when Colonel Wolseley last went over it.

There have been two men of the 2nd Militia tried for striking Non-Commissioned Officers, one which was the most serious case has been sent to the gaol at the Sault for four months, the other man having been drunk when he committed the crime, and having been provoked by the Corporal whom he struck, has been let off by Colonel Wolseley; the Court-Martial had sentenced him to 90 days imprisonment, and had strongly recommended him to mercy.

Heavy showers in the evening.

The Head-Quarters of the 60th removed to Calderon's Landing, the 1st Militia taking their place at the Matawin, and the 2nd replacing the 1st at the Kaministiquia Bridge.

Fine day but warm, very cold last night, barometer showing signs of falling, but no rain, thermometer stood at 95° (Fah.) in the tents at 2 p.m. Colonel Wolseley rode up the road in the afternoon and saw Mr. Fraser, 60th Rifles, the first arrival of the party that started with provisions from Calderon's Landing to the Oskondagee Creek. Letter received this evening from Captain Young, who reports that the river (from the junction of the Matawin and Shebandowan rivers up to Oskondagee Creek) is a succession of falls and rapids; that one boat was damaged by a trunk of a tree floating down with the strong current and striking her on the port quarter, stoving her in so badly that he was obliged to take out her load and leave it (and the boat) on the bank; that his (Captain Young's) boat was so heavily laden (27 barrels of pork) that she was obliged to be occasionally dragged over coarse gravel to the great injury of her bottom; that the river is so hard to get up that he suggests putting only six or eight barrels in each boat; that he started on Wednesday evening 6th instant, and arrived at the Oskondagee on Friday 8th; and that he marched back to Calderon's Landing by the road, fearing to risk the boats down stream, owing to the strength of the current. In the evening, an order was sent to the Head-Quarters 2nd Militia, to march tomorrow at 4 p.m. on the Matawin River.

Major McLeod and party arrived with their boats in good order from the trip up the Kaministiquia River.

Divine service was held in the camp at 7 a.m., the Rev. Stewart Patterson officiating. Lieutenant-Colonel Bolton and Detachment Royal Artillery and Royal Engineers marched in at 10 a.m., having come from Prince Arthur's Landing in two marches, and were encamped at "Sunshine Creek" about three-quarters of a mile further up the road.

Lieutenant-Colonel Casault and Head-Quarters 2nd Militia, marched in from the Kaministiquia River, arriving about 5:30 p.m. Letter received from Captain Dundas, 60th Rifles, from Calderon's Landing, in which he reports that he "had taken 5 boats up the Oskondagee Creek in two days, working from 5 a.m. to 9 p.m.," that his boats were too heavily laden (18 barrels of pork), that one load was completely destroyed, having caught by the stern on a rock, swung round, hurled over, and taken the whole force of the current over her gunwale, which broke her to pieces in an instant, "that three voyageurs who were in her at the time were saved, but one of them "with great difficulty," that the cargo of this boat was lost, and everything in it except the men's waterproof sheets and blankets, which were picked up by the boats in rear; that he was obliged to leave the cargo of one boat behind, owing to the very shallow water near the Oskondagee Creek, but went back and fetched it, and that he marched back to Calderon's Landing fearing to risk the boats down the rapids.

Mr. Dawson arrived in the evening and had an interview with Colonel Wolseley, who requested him to hand him over 100 voyageurs for the purpose of taking stuff up the river from Calderon's Landing to the Oskondagee Creek; Mr. Dawson promised to do so the next day.

Weather cloudy and cool threatening rain, but none fell. A pleasant day.

Rained heavily during the night, and until 2 P.M. very heavy thunderstorm, with lightning and thunder, such as is seldom seen out of the tropics. Captain Calderon, 60th Rifles, reported that he had taken up five boats with 92 half barrels of pork, without injury, to the Oskondagee Creek. His report as to the state of the river and the proper cargoes for boats agreed with the reports of Captains Dundas and Young.

The detachments Royal Artillery and Royal Engineers, marched this morning for Ward's Camp at the Dam Site; they arrived at the Oskondagee at 1 P.M.

Major McLeod, with 60 men and 3 officers, 1st Militia, marched off at 7 A.M. to Calderon's Landing to take boats and stuff up the river to the creek.

The rain during the night made the roads bad again. A working party of the 1st Militia went up the road about three miles in the afternoon to work at some bad places.

Colonel Wolseley received a letter from Major Robertson, enclosing a medical certificate from the doctor at Thunder Bay, saying that he must return to Canada.

He will be ordered to Montreal to report himself to the Deputy Adjutant-General for the purpose of appearing before a medical board there.

Frequent showers during the night and morning, but roads very bad again, especially that between Brown's Corner and the Oskondagee Creek, which is reported by the teamsters and others to be almost impassable, nothing but the body of a wagon being visible above the ground, the wheels completely buried in the mud.

Orders sent to Colonel Fielden to move on with the 60th Rifles from Calderon's Landing to the Dam Site, going by boats as far as the Oskandagee Creek. The move of the head-quarters camp put off for another day, partly on account of the state of the roads.

Transport going on satisfactorily by water between Calderon's Landing and the Oskondagee, stores being taken up by the 60th Rifles; Captain Peebles, at Calderon's Landing in charge of the stores and doing duty as Commissary.

No rain to-day, fine clear weather, roads drying up rapidly. Two working parties from the 1st and 2nd Militia Regiments sent out to work on the road about a mile beyond Young's Landing. No wagons sent up beyond "Brown's Corner," owing to the state of the road.

Mr. Dawson passed through this afternoon on the way to Thunder Bay to collect guides, some of the Indians from the mission who were engaged in that capacity having returned to their homes, tired of the work they are now doing.

Mails from "Chicora" arrived, as also Captain Wallace, 60th Rifles.

Colonel Wolseley and Head-Quarter Staff moved on to-day to the camp at the Dam Site, about 17½ miles further up the road, starting at 4 A.M.; found roads drying up, but the so-called road between "Brown's Corner" and the Oskondagee Creek still very bad, in many places almost impassable, and for a few miles nothing but a track through the woods, unditched, un-corduoyed, with stumps of trees and boulders of rock still in the middle of the "road."

Lieutenant-Colonel Jarvis, 1st Ontario Rifles, marched at 5 A.M. from the Matawin to Calderon's Landing (6¼ miles) to replace the 60th Rifles, who moved up by companies in boats with stores to the Oskondagee.

Colonel Fielden, 60th Rifles, and Captain Dundas's Company, arrived at the Dam Site in the evening.

Colonel Wolseley went up to the camp at "McNeill Bay" on Lake Shebandowan by water; found the camp pitched on the edge of the lake on a very pretty spot, with a little sandy beach in front.

The Royal Artillery and Royal Engineers, with the guns and ammunition, &c., encamped at a little distance by themselves, and the boats (22 in number) drawn up with their noses on the beach of a little land-locked bay about half a mile above the camp.

A beautiful day, clear and bright, not too hot.

“ Amongst the many men hired as “voyageurs” it is to be presumed that a few will “ prove unfit for their work and useless in managing boats.
“ In order to deter such “soi-disant voyageurs” from attempting duties and “ responsibilities of which they are ignorant, it must be clearly explained to all that orders “ have been given to the Officers Commanding Brigades of boats to leave behind on the “ first portage they come to any men employed as voyageurs whom they find to be “ incapable of managing boats skilfully. It is not enough that a man can pull an oar, we “ have a sufficient number of soldiers for that purpose. It is said on all sides that many “ men unused to boats have enlisted as voyageurs, hoping to work their passage to Red “ River by their manual labour at the oar. It is better that such men should at once “ understand that they positively will not be allowed to embark with the troops. Only “ two classes of men can be allowed in the boats, viz., the soldiers constituting the Red “ River Force and the skilled voyageurs capable of managing boats and of instructing the “ soldiers how to do so.”

July 15th, 1870.

The remaining companies of the 60th Rifles, except one, arrived in camp from Calderon’s Landing, Captain Young’s Company going on in the afternoon to Lake Shebandowan to be in readiness to embark next day. Weather fine and bright till towards evening, when it clouded over with wind from the east, and about 10.30 P.M. commenced one of the most awful storms of thunder and lightning, accompanied with torrents of rain, that is possible to conceive, fortunately there was no wind, so the tents were not prostrated.

Mr. Dawson arrived from Thunder Bay, and reported that a fresh detachment of Iroquois Indians, 29 in number, had come from the neighbourhood of Montreal, having been collected and brought up by one of their own tribe without any directions from Mr. Dawson to that effect, a most unheard-of piece of energy on the part of an Indian. Preparations going forward actively for the despatch to-morrow of the first detachment of troops. Everything will be ready for them on our part, but Mr. Dawson’s arrangements regarding oars, row-locks, sails, &c., are not quite so much to be depended upon.

Saturday,
July 16th, 1870.

The storm continued for some time last night, and then subsided into a drizzling rain ; towards morning the wind changed, and by 7 A.M. we had fine bright sunshine, with a strong wind from the west blowing right down the lake and in the teeth of the boats, which will have hard work to row against it.

Captain Calderon’s Company, 60th Rifles, arrived at 3 P.M., so that there are now no regulars below this place ; 4 carts were hauled up from the camp to the lake this morning by men of the 60th Rifles, the distance is 3½ miles, and the track (for it is nothing more) had to be widened, and the carts dragged over by main strength.

In the afternoon Colonel Wolsley walked up to the camp on Lake Shebandowan, and personally superintended the despatch of the first detachment of troops in the boats ; Colonel Feilden, 60th Rifles, went in command of the whole party, with an Indian from the Mission near Fort William as a guide. The troops, strength as per margin, went in 17 boats, constituting 3 Brigades, — A, B, and C ; “A” Brigade, Captain Young’s Company, 60th Rifles, in 6 boats, with two voyageurs in each boat ; “B” Brigade, Captain Ward’s Company, in 6 boats, with ditto ; “C” Brigade Royal Artillery and Royal Engineers, under Lieutenants Alleyne and Heneage, in 5 boats, with ditto. It was 9 P.M., nearly dark, before they got off, owing to the strong wind which had been blowing all day making a heavy surf on the shore, preventing the loading of the boats ; and also to delays in the equipment of the boats, the men having to make their own masts and spars and rig them themselves ; as nearly as possible 60 days’ provision were taken in each boat for all its crew, including the voyageurs, counting officers and voyageurs, each boat had 10 or 11 persons in it.

As about to embark.

LIEUTENANT DENISON left the camp at 3 A.M. with letters and despatches, to catch the steamer at Thunder Bay. Colonel Wolsley had great difficulty in getting the Iroquois Indians to work to-day, they saying that they were not engaged to work on Sundays, which was their only day for washing. Their scruples were overcome by the promise of an extra day’s pay for the extra day’s work ; situated as the force now is, it is completely at the mercy of these Indians, nothing can be taken up the rapids between this camp and the lake without their assistance, and when they have made three trips they consider that they have done a day's work, no matter what the time of day may be. They are however capital men, and very civil. Their "boss," old Iquace, was one of Sir George Simpson's men, and also accompanied Dr. Rae on his Arctic Exploration. He has grey eyes, a great rarity amongst the Indians.

By dint of working hard, enough provisions were got up to enable two more Brigades to start, viz.: D and E Brigades, Captains Buller and Dundas, 60th Rifles. It was late before the last Brigade got off, and even then they had to go without voyageurs or a guide. The former were ready and the latter was not forthcoming at all,—a piece of bad management on the part of Mr. Dawson. These two Brigades were ordered to go as far as the first portage at the end of Lake Shebandowan, get over it and wait on the other side for their guide and voyageurs. The day was magnificent, fine and bright and not too hot, no sign of rain, barometer very high. The troops here and at the lake are now getting fresh bread and meat. The meat is killed at the Oskondagee Creek and sent up daily. The bread is baked in camp at one of the field ovens. This oven was in use for nearly seven weeks at Prince Arthur's Landing, and has been just established here. To-day this one oven, worked by only two men, turned out 470 rations of bread in 1½ lb. loaves in 12 hours. An order was sent to Colonel Casault, 2nd Militia, to send up two companies for duty here and at the lake.

Another fine day, but too hot, the roads are now in better condition than ever they have been in this season. A third detachment of boats, F Brigade, Captain Northey's Company, was despatched to-day, accompanied by Lieutenant-Colonel Bolton, Deputy-Assistant Adjutant-General. They started at 6 p.m., 60 days' rations embarked with them.

Major Irving and 2 Companies, 2nd Militia, marched in from the Matawin. One Company was sent on up to the lake, the other kept here. A Company of the 1st Militia also marched in from the Oskondagee, and was encamped here.

The remaining two Companies of the 60th Rifles were ordered to strike their tents and move up to the lake, but their baggage and camp equipage could not be taken up the river in consequence of the refusal of the Iroquois to work any more that day, and so their departure had to be postponed until to-morrow. Colonel Wolseley received a note from Colonel Feilden, dated this morning, from the Shebandowan Portage, saying they had "left" their camping ground at 4.30 A.M., and reached the portage at 9 A.M., breakfasted and "then carried the stuff over the portage. It was tremendous work, hauling the boats on "skids was nothing, but it is carrying the barrels of pork and flour that tells on the "men, owing to the number of times they have to go backwards and forwards." He said that "the Royal Artillery and Royal Engineers are much behind," owing doubtless to the quantity of ammunition they have.

The amount of work performed by the respective corps upon the road is as per margin, the Paymaster of the 60th Rifles having left, the return of that Regiment is only made up from the date of his departure, he having taken his accounts with him.

Another fine day, but very hot. Two Companies of the 60th Rifles marched on to the lake to be in readiness for embarkation, but only one (Captain Wallace's) was despatched owing to the difficulty in procuring the boat equipments, rowlocks, sails, &c.; during the day the wind changed to the east, and the barometer fell rapidly, and at 11 P.M. commenced another fearful thunderstorm, with torrents of rain, which lasted for some hours, and then subsided into drizzling rain. These thunderstorms recur with unpleasant regularity, and form a decided "feature" of the climate.

Major Wainwright and 2 Companies of 1st Ontario Rifles arrived in camp from Calderon's Landing.

A cloudy day with drizzling rain, which cleared up during the morning and passed into heavy showers and thunderstorms; a regular gale of wind from the west all day swept down the whole length of the lake (Shebandowan), raising a heavy swell, which fell into McNeill's Bay with such fury that it was quite impossible to load the boats, consequently no Brigade was sent off to-day, but had they been despatched they could have made no headway against the wind. A number of Iroquois arrived to-day and were immediately set to work to bring boats and stores up the rapids. The Indians find the difference between the Regulars and Militia in the boats, the latter do not work as well as the former, and are inept to "chaff" the Indians, a proceeding which has been strictly forbidden by Colonel Wolseley.

Two Companies of the 1st Militia marched in from below. Orders sent to Colonel Jarvis to halt at the River Oskondagee till further orders.

Towards evening the wind moderated, and a detachment might have been sent off had there been any rowlocks for the boats, but the absence of these most necessary articles prevented it.

Major Wainwright and 2 Companies 1st Militia marched to the Lake this morning to be in readiness for embarkation.

Captain Calderon, with H Brigade (6 boats), started this morning at 8 A.M. All the Regulars have now left.

Camp, Ward's Landing.

Another Brigade of boats might easily have been despatched this evening if we had had rowlocks enough. 1,000 were expected by the Algoma, but did not arrive; Mr. Dawson says they will certainly come by "Chicora," which is expected at Prince Arthur's Landing on Sunday morning. In the meantime Colonel Wolseley has had all the carpenters he could collect set to work at making wooden thowl pins, which are much better than iron ones, as they can be replaced in the woods when broken, whereas the iron ones are very liable to be lost or broken, and cannot be replaced after boats leave this. 100 per cent. spare ones are supplied to each Brigade of boats; and Colonel Wolseley has arranged for sending on a reserve supply to Fort Francis by Lieutenant-Colonel McNeill, who will start on the 31st instant. He has orders also to supply all Brigades he passes on the way, should they require any. Captain Huyshe and Lieutenant Denison, Orderly Officers to the Colonel Commanding, started at 5 p.m. in his gig. They will overtake Colonel Feilden before he reaches Fort Francis. Colonel Wolseley will do so also, and will proceed on in the gig when he does so, to that place.

Lovely morning, but with a strong wind from the east, which caused the barometer to fall considerably although there was no rain.

An exact embarkation return of everything that has been sent forward up to this evening is forwarded by this mail, for the Quartermaster-General's information, through the Lieutenant-General Commanding in British North America.

Colonel Wolseley will start to-morrow in a light canoe, so as to overtake the leading detachment before it reaches Fort Francis. He will see two more Brigades off, M and N, before he leaves. That is $\frac{1}{4}$ of the whole force will have left before he starts; Lieutenant-Colonel McNeill, V.C., will see off the remaining $\frac{3}{4}$ next week.

Each Brigade has taken a certain amount of extra supplies, so that it is expected that when all have embarked, provisions to last the force up to 30th September will have left with it.

Arrangements have been made for the despatch of a mail to Fort Francis every 15 days.

The foregoing copy of a journal of events is forwarded to the Deputy Quartermaster-General in Canada, for the information of the Lieutenant-General Commanding, and for transmission to the Quartermaster-General of the Army, Horse Guards, London.

Camp, Ward's Landing,
23rd July, 1870.

Sir,
I HAVE the honour to forward for the Lieutenant-General's information the enclosed Embarkation Return of the troops that have left McNeill's Bay, Shebandowan Lake, up to last night, the 22nd instant. The detachments noted in the margin will leave this afternoon.

It blows so heavily from the west nearly every day, that there is sometimes much difficulty in loading the boats. I heard from Colonel Feilden on Monday, he was then successfully over the first portage.

- N Brigade—
1 Comp. 1st Militia.

I start myself to-day in a canoe, taking Assistant Controller Irvine with me, and hope to reach Portage Nu in time to accompany the first detachments into Fort Francis.

I forward to you with this letter a copy of my journal completed up to last night.

I have, &c.
(Signed) G. J. WOLSELEY, Colonel,
Commanding Red River Expeditionary Force.

The Deputy Quartermaster-General,
Canada.

COLONEL WOLSELEY, accompanied by Assistant-Controller Irvine, started in a bark canoe from McNeill Bay, Shebandowan Lake, about 4:30 P.M. M and N Brigades, having two companies of 1st Militia on board, started to-day. Weather lovely. Colonel Wolseley encamped about nine miles down the lake, on the north shore, at a point where several of the brigades had encamped before. The place was covered with raspberries. All the north shore of Shebandowan Lake is devoid of trees, fires having evidently swept over it several times, at various intervals, for many years past. The blackened trunks of trees here and there, and sometimes in great quantities, standing up without branches, present the dreariest of aspects. There is but little soil anywhere, the bare rocks cropping up into view at all points; the woods on the south shore have been very little injured by fire, but their growth is small, bespeaking poverty of soil. All these Canadian lakes are like one another, so much so, that when there are many bays and islands, it is most difficult to find one's way about them; all points resemble one another so closely. This is unfortunate, as most of the brigades of boats are without guides, and the maps give one no idea whatever either of the shape of the lakes, or the islands in them. The only safe way of getting along is by compass; the maps are sufficiently good to enable one to do so with tolerable accuracy.

Colonel Wolseley started at 4:30, and at 7:45 A.M. reached the Kashabonne Portage, about 20 miles distant from McNeill's Bay. There was a great jam of men, &c., on the Portage, which is about 1,200 yards long. Two brigades can work at one time by dividing the distance into two parts. Thus a brigade arrives, and transports its material, provisions, and boats, to a point half way across: it then begins to move them on the other half of the distance, to the far end. The brigade immediately in rear working on the other half of the portage in moving its boats and stuff to the half way place. Two brigades were thus employed when Colonel Wolseley arrived, and two others were waiting their turn to begin. The jam was so great that Colonel Wolseley at once sent back ordering only one brigade of boats to be despatched per diem for a few days to come. The great stoppage originally arose in front, where Colonel Fielden's three brigades were greatly delayed by the Royal Artillery, who, in addition to their provisions, had two guns and a good quantity of ammunition and military equipment, which occupied much time in portaging. The portages were far from being finished, as we had been led to believe they should have been upon the arrival of the troops, so that Colonel Fielden's party were delayed by having to work upon them, cutting out wide roads and laying down skids as rollers for the boats to be dragged over upon. Carrying provisions over a portage is very severe labour. The common method with Indians and experienced voyageurs of doing so, is by means of a long ox-hide strap composed of three pieces; the centre one is 26 inches long, and 3½ inches wide, tapering off at each end to one inch in breadth, where it is joined by the two other portions, which are each 7 feet 4 inches long, and one inch wide at broadest, and ¾ inch wide at narrowest end. The narrow straps are sewn to the centre broad one, the whole forming thus a strap of 9 ft. 6 in. long. It is used thus: the long ends are fastened round the barrel or box to be carried in such a manner as to leave a loop where the centre broad part of the strap is, of just sufficient size to allow the head to pass through it, and the broad band placed against the forehead. In this way almost the whole strain is brought upon the backbone or vertebræ of the neck. Our half barrels of pork are the heaviest packages we have to carry; they weigh nearly 200 lbs. An experienced voyageur thinks nothing of it, but it takes a long time before the soldiers can carry one in this manner. After a few days our men soon begin to carry light loads, such as barrels of flour, or biscuit, in that manner. The common way, however, in which our men carry the heavy articles, such as pork and arm chests, is on a hand barrow, made with two small poles (which are easily cut anywhere in the woods) united by two pieces of rope, having loops at each end. The extreme length from a to b being 28 inches when the loops were pressed flat. The loops when pressed flat were 6 inches long. This was found to answer admirably, and to be better than any other of the methods recommended by others who had previously made journeys of this nature. To ease the weight of the barrels on the hands, the men usually fasten their portage straps to the poles, letting the broad part of the straps rest across their shoulders, much in the same way as the wooden yoke rests on the shoulders of a milkman in England, when carrying pails of milk, or as sedan chairs used to be carried in former times. This was found to be the easiest way of carrying the heavy pork barrels. Colonel Wolseley had these rope slings constructed before leaving Prince Arthur's Landing, for issue to each boat.

The boats are hauled over the portages on their keels, which are kept off the rocky ground by means of pieces of trees from 8 to 10 ft. long. The best trees for the purpose are the poplar, which happily abound in this arid soil, as their bark is so slippery that it is like hauling boats over greased rollers. Whatever trees are used, they should be green, and have smooth bark. At steep places it is necessary to keep these skids in their places by pegs driven into the ground alongside of them. Previous to the troops starting from Shebandowan Lake, Colonel Wolseley had requested Mr. Dawson to put some carts upon these first portages, and had handed over to his representative at Shebandowan Lake—Mr. Graham—10 of the military transport carts for that purpose. Four had arrived at the first portage when Colonel Wolseley arrived there, and were found to be of the greatest service, as the men can drag any weight with comparative ease, but carrying even light weights is much more fatiguing.

In opening out a portage, it is essential that the road made for the boats should be entirely distinct from that to be used by the men in carrying, for as there must be skids laid down for the boats, the labour of carrying is immensely increased by the exertion of having when heavily laden, to step over these skids. This is a most important point, and one not likely to strike those who have never had to portage a load themselves.

The manner in which the men are working is most satisfactory. The officers vie with their men as to who shall carry the heaviest load; the consequence is that all work with a will. The heat was very great upon this portage, which rendered the labour all the more fatiguing.

A canoe from Red River reached the portage at the same time that Colonel Wolseley did; in it were four men, two were Indians, one a half-breed, and the other a Canadian. They had letters for Colonel Wolseley, from Mr. Simpson and from Mr. Donald Smith, at Fort Francis, dated 11th July. All said to be quiet in Red River. These men were doubtless spies of Mr. Riel's, come to see what we were about and how we were getting on. They could not give any good account of themselves. However, there is no objection to their seeing everything they can. Colonel Wolseley has adopted measures for keeping them well in the rear of the Expedition until he reaches Fort Garry with the Regular troops.

Colonel Wolseley and party left the Kashabonne portage at 11:30, and reached the end of the lake of that name (which is 8 miles long) at 2 P.M.

Between Kashabonne Lake and Lac-des-Mille-Lacs lies the high land forming the watershed between the Hudson's Bay and the Gulf of St. Lawrence. Lac-des-Mille-Lacs discharging its waters into the former, and the Kashabonne Lake into the latter. The intervening space between these two lakes is about $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles in width. There are, however, two small ponds in it. Mr. Dawson's schemes, as detailed in his printed books, was to make a short portage into the eastern pond, launch our boats there, row across the pond with all our staff for $\frac{3}{4}$ mile, and thus make a portage of 1,100 yards into Lac-des-Mille-Lacs. Fortunately as the water was high we were able to make one portage of all the distance, by going up a small shallow creek into the western pond and landing at the far end of it, by which measure we had only one portage of about 1,900 yards long. This shallow creek was, however, so choked up with reeds that all the men had to get out of the boats into the water and pull the boats through. The portage was a very heavy one. Four companies were on it, two only could work at a time. We found that all the Iroquois with these companies refused to work because it was Sunday. Colonel Wolseley promised that they should be paid for Sundays when they worked, and Mr. Dawson coming up at the time was able to arrange matters with them, but not until most of the day had slipped by. They all said the same thing, that Mr. Dawson had employed them last year, and having promised them extra wages if they would work on Sundays, had not kept his word, and that they never received a farthing for doing so. They all stated that they were not hired to work on Sundays. Unfortunately we have had to depend throughout upon officials of the Canadian Government for many things in connection with this Expedition, and the only difficulties or hitches in the arrangements have been regarding these points and matters not exclusively military, or entirely under our control. The provision of guides and voyageurs come under this head; all the latter have been engaged by Mr. Dawson; so that we are even ignorant of the terms upon which they have been hired, and consequently Colonel Wolseley is not in a position to contradict any statement they make to him regarding their agreement.

Colonel Wolseley and party encamped for the night on the south shore of Lac-des-Mille-Lacs a few miles away from the portage. The weather was very fine, but too warm at midday to be pleasant for the excessive labour which portaging entails.

*Monday,
July 25th, 1870.*

Colonel Wolseley's canoe under weigh at 5:30 A.M., and reached Baril Portage at 1:15 P.M. Lac-des-Mille-Lacs should rather be called Lac-des-Mille-Iles, for the islands seem to be without number. They are unfortunately very much alike in appearance, so that it is difficult to find ones way about through them. The only safe way of doing so is to steer a course by the compass, for even the guides frequently lose themselves for a time. The scenery on this Lake is very pretty, everything is so green, as the fires which have devastated the shores of the Lakes behind have not touched those of this many-isled expanse of water. The shores, however, are quite unfit for settlement, as there is only a little surface soil and moss spreading over the underlying rocks which crop up and show themselves at every 100 yards. The timber is consequently very poor, nothing worth cutting for lumber purposes anywhere to be seen along our track. From the portage at the Height of Land to the Baril Portage the distance is estimated to be about 20 miles. Baril Portage is 350 yards long, and has a high hill in the centre which increases the labour of carrying very much. The road cut for the boats, however, skirts the hill at an easy gradient. F Brigade (Captain Northey's Company, 60th Regiment) were on the portage when Colonel Wolseley arrived. Started again at 3.45 p.m. and halted for the night at the western extremity of Baril Lake (about 9 miles long), as the sun had set before the exact spot where the portage was could be found. A violent thunderstorm with heavy rain during the night. The day had been very fine. Thunderstorms come on in these regions most suddenly, and they are very heavy and violent whilst they last, but they quickly pass over.

Started at 6 a.m. to try and find the portage, we had only gone a short distance when F Brigade led by Mr. Dawson, who had a guide with him, came in sight. His guide at first wished to take the boats down a bay that Colonel Wolseley had explored the previous evening. Upon being assured that the portage was not there, it was determined to try a bay on the other side of the point, where the portage was found to be, at which all arrived at 7.30 a.m. *Tuesday,
July 26th, 1870.*

Brulé Portage is 500 yards long, but the boats were put into a little creek that runs between Baril and Windegoostiqu Lake at half that distance, although the provisions, &c., had to be carried the whole distance over the portage.

Embarked again at 9.45 a.m. and proceeded along a winding rushy stream into Windegoostiqu Lake, which is rather several small lakes connected by creeks. At 2.15 p.m. reached French Portage, which is 2 miles long, very hilly, and swampy.

A small winding stream connects Windegoostiqu with French Lake. At first as you leave the former lake the stream is shallow, rocky, and very rapid at places. About $\frac{3}{4}$ mile down it there are falls, around which we cut out a new portage, so as to avoid the long and very bad old one. The new portage is 440 yards long and very steep and rocky, indeed a bad one, but it is a good one compared with the old one, which would certainly have taken a brigade of boats three days to have got over. Below the portage the stream is deep, very narrow at places, and with such sharp turns that it was difficult to get the long boats round them. From the portage to French Lake the distance must be over 12 miles by this stream, although it is only two miles in a straight line. French Lake is very picturesque, being circular, and about $1\frac{1}{2}$ miles in diameter. It has a pretty island near its western side.

D and E Brigades (Captains Buller and Dundas, 60th Rifles) were on the portage all day getting their boats and stuff over. The day was lovely. The temperature on the western side of the watershed is much milder than to the eastward of it, and the farther west the Expedition goes, the more it descends, the level of French Lake being 150' lower than that of Lac-des-Mille-Lacs. On French Lake to-day a humming bird was seen for the first time. Great quantities of Labrador tea (Tedoma Polustre) grow about this part of the route. There are great quantities of leeches in all the shallow, rushy portions of the lake passed through.

Encamped at foot of old portage on eastern side of French Lake, where the ground is well adapted for the purpose. In former times when this portage was used as a great highway by the North-West Company, they kept carts on it, and there is still the remains of some old corduroy work to be seen in its worst swamps.

Everything ready for starting at 4 a.m., but at the last moment it was discovered that some things had been forgotten on the other side of the portage, which had to be sent back for. The consequence was that it was nearly 8 a.m. before the canoe got off. *Wednesday,
July 27th, 1870.*

A winding river of about two miles long, thick with reeds and water lilies in flower, leads into Koagassikak (Pickerel) Lake. A strong westerly wind prevented all further progress, as the water was so rough that the waves washed over the gunwale of the canoe. Colonel Wolseley's party had consequently to halt at 10 a.m. in a sheltered spot on the southern shore, and remain there until 3 p.m., when a fresh start was made, the wind having somewhat abated, and "Pine Portage" was reached at 7 p.m. It is a difficult spot to find. Some very fine pines stood upon the portage. Indeed some good timber was seen for the first time to-day in any considerable quantity. There are some fine pine trees on Koagassikak Lake.

It rained in the evening, but the day was fine.

Colonel Wolseley went back a considerable distance into Koagassikak Lake to blaze the trees at every point to show the way to the brigades in rear.

The lake is about 15 miles, and very pretty, although the character of its scenery is like that already passed over. Colonel Wolseley met D and E Brigades under sail. There was a mirage on the lake, making all objects appear more distant than they really were. These two brigades (12 boats) coming down under sail through the islands, which cover more than half the western end of the lake, presented a truly lovely picture that was charming to any one fond of scenic effect. "Pine Portage" is only 550 yards long, and is a good and easy one. Colonel Wolseley's canoe left it at 11.15 a.m. Paddling across a small lake of little more than a mile in extent, "Deux-Rivières Portage" is reached, working on which were A, B, and C Brigades under Colonel Feilden, 60th Rifles, consisting of two companies of the 60th and detachments of Royal Artillery and Royal Engineers. *Thursday,
July 28th, 1870.*

This portage is 750 yards long, very steep and bad, requiring a great deal of work to fit it for the transportation of boats. A party of Iroquois Indians (10 men) had been sent on ahead, and had opened the road and laid down some of the skids before Colonel Feilden arrived. Started again at 2.45 p.m. and went on until 3.15, when we halted and encamped.

Colonel Wolseley went back and blazed the way, which is very tortuous and not easy to find. There is a very shallow, rocky place in getting out of the little lake on the west side of Deux-Rivières Portage, of which the route is through a marshy creek, overgrown with reeds and lilies. The latter are of two sorts, one the common yellow one, the other the beautiful white one having a large flower. The day was very fine, but warm. Colonel Wolseley's gig, with its crew of soldiers and his orderly officers, Captain Huyshe and Lieutenant Denison, joined his camp this evening.

Friday,
July 29th, 1870.

A dense fog in the early morning, which did not clear off until 6 A.M., which delayed the party from starting. The route is very winding, and owing to the numerous long bays extending in every direction, it is very easy for any one not well acquainted with these lakes to go astray. Colonel Wolseley's party, in their canoe and gig, kept well ahead of Colonel Feilden's detachment all day, blazing trees at every point and turn of the route in such a manner that the marks can be seen at a considerable distance. Having this well done along the route saves a great amount of time to all those coming up afterwards, for when there is a doubt as to the true course, much valuable time is always lost, and no one likes to push on quickly when doing so may perhaps be leading them a long distance astray.

Sturgeon Lake is very pretty; it is about 16 miles long, and from $\frac{1}{4}$ to $1\frac{1}{2}$ miles broad. When about half-way down it at 11 A.M., a large north-west canoe came in sight, manned by Iroquois; in it were Mr. Pether and Mr. Simpson, M.P. The former has been living at Fort Francis since March last, having been sent there by the Ottawa Government to arrange with the Indians for the right of way for our troops through their country. He spent all the spring going about amongst the people informing them of our intention to move troops through this district in the summer, but confining himself strictly to this point, informing them that he had no instructions to treat with them for their land. Mr. Simpson was sent up subsequently to make a treaty with them, Mr. Pether having prepared the way.

Mr. Simpson reached Fort Francis about the 8th June, and found a large assembly of Indians there awaiting the arrival of the troops. He had numerous interviews with Chiefs and head men, who at one time debated the propriety of resisting by force of arms the passage of troops through their country. They gave that up after some time, it having been impressed upon them that to attempt to do so would be simply folly. The demand they made finally was, that every Indian belonging to this part of the world, man, woman, and child, should receive 10 dollars a-year from Government, besides a large present of pork, flour, tea, and tobacco to be given to them here collectively for a feast. Mr. Simpson told them that their demand was extravagant, if not preposterous, and that he would recommend them reducing it to 3 dollars a head, a proposition they would not listen to. They would not accept any of the presents of clothing Mr. Simpson had brought for their chief, and I believe that unless liberal terms are made with them next year, it will be impossible for individual settlers to pass through the route we have followed, or for Mr. Dawson's parties to work at any of the portages. These Indians say they are prepared to await the decision of Government until next year, but they will then expect to have a regular treaty made with them, such treaty to promise a perpetual stipend.

Our Government has always been injudicious in promising them perpetual annuities. The Yankees are much wiser, as they always make their treaties for a certain number of years, generally about thirty years. A large proportion of these Ojibeways live on American territory, in the neighbourhood of Vermillion Lake, who are now enjoying the benefits of a terminable treaty made with the Government at Washington. However, as affairs stand now, an understanding with these Indians has been come to, securing to our troops an unmolested passage through their country. This is a great matter, for although I do not believe it possible for them to combine as one nation in any great enterprise, yet this country is such a network of lakes, that even a hundred of these men knowing every island and every portage could inflict great loss upon regular troops whilst forcing their way through to Red River by this route. The natives all use small canoes, capable of holding three people, which one man or woman portages easily for long distances. To pursue them would, therefore, be out of the question. We halted for dinner on an island in Sturgeon Lake, being now joined by Messrs. Simpson and Pether. They brought letters from Mr. Donald Smith, the head of the Hudson's Bay Company in Canada, who had started from Shebandowan Lake on the 6th July, en route for Norway House with two large canoes, reaching Fort Francis on the night of the 10th, Rat Portage on the 14th, and Fort Alexander on the 16th of that month. He reports that we shall be able to get three or four head of cattle at the first-named place, one or two at the second, and about ten at the last-named place, which will be a great boon to the men after living so long upon salt pork. He says that some of Riel's scouts have been seen on one of the portages not far from Rat Portage, but that on being seen by the Hudson's Bay Company's men they made off quickly. The last news from Red River announces everything quiet, Riel still in possession of Fort Garry; the only serious information is to the effect that all the French half-breeds who had been employed by the Hudson's Bay Company to take up supplies from the settlement to the outlying posts of the Saskatchewan and Mackenzie Rivers had gone part of the way, and then refused to go any farther, returning to their homes near Fort Garry. It is possible that Riel may be at the bottom of all this, in order to keep up the number of his adherents.

Started again at 1 P.M., and soon reached the heavy rapids of Sturgeon River, about which we had heard such a gloomy account at Ottawa from those who professed to know them well. They are four in number and all close together. At the first we disembarked the men, when the boats were taken down by the Iroquois, one only being injured, which was the only one taken down by the ordinary Canadian voyageurs. At the second rapid, cargoes as well as men had to be taken out and portaged over a distance of 100 yards, the boats being then run safely down by the Iroquois. The third and fourth rapids were run with men and cargoes in the boats, the Iroquois steering the boats. A party of Iroquois under the celebrated guide Iquace, was left there to do the same for all the succeeding detachments. Colonel Wolseley having nailed up a notice at the first rapid, that all Officers Commanding Brigades were to halt until Iquace arrived, should he be absent with other Brigades, and were to act precisely as he would tell them. It is possible that the water may fall a good deal; if so, it may become necessary to portage the boats as well as their cargoes. The day was bright and lovely; climate becoming more genial every day as we descend towards the Winnipeg basin. Encamped below rapids.

Party started at 5.5 A.M., and though there was a slight fog, soon run across Tanner's Lake, at the outlet of which there is a very bad rapid (Tanner's), where boats have to be unloaded and stuff portaged a distance of 175 yards, the empty boats in the existing state of the water are run, which is fortunate, as the approach to the portage is extremely shallow. Starting again at 7.30 A.M., and reached Island Portage at 8 A.M. It is only 90 yards long. All hands set to work to make a road for the boats and lay down the skids. Started again at noon. Encamped at 6.30 P.M. Lovely day.

*Saturday,
July 30th, 1870.*

Started at 5 A.M. We now leave the usual route which passes in a northerly direction from about the centre of Lac-de-Croix (or Nequaquon) for a distance of about 6 or 7 miles, and then bends at a right angle westerly, falling into the eastern extremity of Namekau Lake (spelt incorrectly in Mr. Dawson's maps, Nameakaw), along this old route there are two portages and two very dangerous rapids, where Mr. Smith's canoe was twice broken during his recent voyage, although manned by the best Iroquois.

*Sunday,
July 31st, 1870.*

The route we followed runs from the south-west extremity of Lac-de-Croix in a southern by easterly direction into Loon Lake for about 6 miles, then bends westerly at a right angle, and then by a northern by westerly course into Namekau Lake, having three short portages on it, and avoiding all rapids.

Reached the first portage at 8 A.M., it is 223 yards long. Breakfasted and set to work to cut open a wide road for the boats and prepare skids, &c., &c. It is surprising with what skill and rapidity the Indians and Canadian backwoodsmen cut down trees; those under 18 inches diameter seem to be swept down before their axes as if by magic. In addition to their skill in wielding the axe itself, they follow a regular system in cutting one down, instead of hacking at it all round as our inexperienced men do, they make a clean wedge-shaped cut into it, the end of the wedge being as near a right angle as possible. When they have thus cut about half-way through the thickness of the tree, a small nick cut on exactly the opposite side of the tree causes it to fall precisely in a line at right angles with the bottom of the first cut (i.e. the edge of the wedge), it is in this way they are able to cause any tree that is vertical, to fall in any required direction.

Before all the skids were laid, Colonel Fielden's detachment arrived, our party started and soon reached the 2nd portage, which is 340 yards in length. Set to work to open a road. There were several Indians on the portage when we arrived. They are all most importunate beggars; the women are much dirtier than the men, and except in extreme youth are most repulsive in appearance. They are covered with vermin, for which they are perpetually scratching and hunting. One of the old women met to-day seemed to be a very great age. We were told that some years ago, during a hard winter, she was one of a party that being in a starving condition had eaten human flesh.

Started again at 5.30 P.M. for the third rapid, which was only a mile distant. It is 71 yards long and very easy. Encamped there for the night. Here and at many other places where we have halted, there is a good deal of the plant called poisoned ivy. The leaf is shaped like a hazel leaf, but is not quite so deep in colour, and is smoother on the surface and along the edge. The leaves grow in triplets from the same part of the stem. It is perenial. In height it is from 6 to 12 inches.

Both Mr. Pether and Mr. Simpson stated that they had suffered from its effects, which are most serious. If the leaf is plucked, or rubbed against the face or hands, or if a man with bare feet runs over it, it causes the part to swell dreadfully, a severe rash coming out, every little spot of which forms a sort of blister, the discharge from which communicates the poison to other parts of the body. Those who get it in the face have their heads so swollen that they cannot see. The pain from irritation is excessive. Both those gentlemen said that when they suffered from it they could only obtain relief by sitting in water. The attack lasts about nine days, although it sometimes leaves symptoms about the body for many months afterwards. They also state that some people can handle it with impunity; this is the only way in which their account of it can be reconciled with the fact that Indians camp frequently with it all round them, when their children must necessarily touch it constantly.

En route at 5 A.M. At 5.15 P.M. reached Bare Portage, which consists really of two short portages divided by a small pond. Encamped for the night at northern extremity of the portage, where the mosquitoes were very thick and most annoying. Met numerous parties of Indians during the day, all "very hungry." It rained a little during the night, but the day had been very fine.

*Monday,
August 1st, 1870.*

All hands at work at 4 A.M. in making a good road over the portage. Colonel Fielden's detachment arrived at 8.15 A.M. We started at 9.30. It soon began to blow hard from the N.W., so much so that we were forced to halt and take shelter on an island where the blueberries were in greater luxuriance than any of the party had ever seen before; they were as large as small grapes. The islands and rocky promontories have abounded with them since we crossed the watershed. At this season they constitute the staple article of food with the Indians. It blew hard all day; got on a little distance towards night. It rained in showers, but the day was mostly fine.

Wednesday,
August 3rd, 1870.

As we started at 6 A.M. we saw the 17 boats of Colonel Feilden's detachment coming up the lake. Had to halt from about 8 A.M. until 3 P.M., owing to strong westerly winds, against which the boats could do nothing. Encamped for the night on an island near westerly extremity of Rainy Lake.

Thursday,
August 4th, 1870.

Under weigh at 4.15 A.M., and reached Fort Francis at 6 A.M. Upon turning into the river from the lake there are two swift, but easily run and safe rapids. Lieutenant Butler, 69th Regiment, met us at these rapids; he had reached Fort Francis in the morning at 3 A.M., and had gone on to the mouth of the river to await Colonel Wolseley's arrival. The Lieutenant-General Commanding had sent this officer round viâ St. Paul and Pembina for the purpose of obtaining information regarding the rebels' doings, with orders that he should proceed on to meet the Expeditionary Force as best he could, so that Colonel Wolseley should be in receipt of reliable information coming from an uninterested party before he entered the province of Manitoba. Lieutenant Butler had left Fort Garry on Sunday, the 24th July, every one in the settlement seems panic-stricken. The French afraid of the English-speaking people, and vice versa, both being in the direst dread of the Indians. All the Indians and the loyal people are most anxious for our arrival. He had been called upon by Mr. Riel who is evidently very nervous about an amnesty, for which Bishop Taché is supposed to have gone to Ottawa. We shall have no difficulty about supplies in the settlement, as there is plenty of beef and plenty of flour.

Fort Francis is a collection of wooden one-storied houses, standing on the right bank of Rainy River, immediately below the falls, which are 22 feet high. It is a lovely spot combining everything that is required for picturesque effect, except high mountains. The grass is most luxuriant, nothing to be seen superior to it in any part of Canada. There has at one time been a considerable clearance in the neighbourhood of the fort, but a second growth of scrubby trees has been allowed to encroach upon it. There is a good field of wheat, barley, and potatoes. The wheat is ripe and fit for cutting, which is to be begun to-morrow, it was sown between the 20th and 22nd April; the potatoes were sown between the 6th and 8th May, and are now being used. There were about 10 or 12 Indian lodges on the portage, but the ground around showed marks of where a large encampment had lately been. A great number had assembled hoping to see us arrive bringing them presents of all sorts of things to eat. They remained waiting on and on until hope deferred had made their stomachs sick from want of food. It was in this one respect very fortunate that we did not reach this place a month earlier, for we might have had some serious trouble with such a hungry crowd of people for whom we could not spare any provisions.

There are several Indian graves on the portage, in some the bodies enclosed in wooden boxes are raised in a horizontal position about seven or eight feet from the ground, resting on a framework. These are the bodies of Chiefs and their families. The principal Chief is now encamped here. He is a very old man, excessively dirty, with his head a little to one side, whence his name of Crooked Neck. At the great council held here upon Mr. Simpson's arrival, this mighty Chief was one of the greatest orators. Upon that occasion all he wore upon his person was a breech cloth and a brass ring round his neck, his face and body was, however, painted bright yellow.

Colonel Fielden's detachment arrived at 10 A.M., and got over the portage, which is 170 yards long, and was off again at 3.30 P.M. The day was very fine.

Mr. Monkman arrived at the same time as the boats. When leaving Thunder Bay for Red River about the 17th June last, he had promised that he would come back so as to meet Colonel Wolseley about the end of July at Fort Francis, bringing with him the latest intelligence and information regarding supplies and the feasibility of having the road made from the north-west corner of the Lake of the Woods to Fort Garry. He had left the lower settlement on the 20th July, bringing letters to Colonel Wolseley from the Bishop of Rupert's Land and from a Mr. Boyd, who had been recommended as a good man to apply to regarding supplies. Colonel Wolseley also received letters from Henry Prince, the Chief of the Swampy Indians, full of loyalty, and breathing dislike to Riel and his party. The refrain of all these letters is, "Come on as quickly as you can, for the aspect of affairs is serious and threatening." Monkman had come up the Winnipeg to Fort Francis; but when going into the settlement, had landed at the north-west corner of the Lake of the Woods, and followed his old blazed line along a good sandy ridge to White Mouth River, where he got on Mr. Snow's road, which has been made from Fort Garry to that point. He says that but little labour would be required to make the track passable for carts, as there are only two or three bad marshy places, but that there are a vast number of fallen trees which would have to be removed.

Friday,
August 5th, 1870.

A fine day. D and E Brigades arrived at 4 P.M., and left again in the evening. All the brigades leave their incompetent voyageurs here, who will be sent back by the first opportunity. Guides are also obtained here, from the Hudson's Bay establishment, and selected from men that accompanied Lieutenant Butler in his journey from Red River. It is expected that we shall be able to obtain more guides at Rat Portage, particularly as there are several boats coming up the Winnipeg from Fort Alexander with stores, the men of which will be available as guides and boatmen in descending.

Saturday
August 6th, 1870.

Strong westerly winds all day, against which no boats could make any way. No boats arrived. A few showers.

Strong westerly winds. No boats arrived. Fine day.

Fine day. F Brigade arrived at 7:15 A.M., G arrived at 8 A.M., H at 12:15 P.M., I Brigade at 2:45 P.M. The last brigade consisted of a company of the 1st Militia, and is to form the garrison for Fort Francis. It encamped on the high grassy bank near the fort. The other Brigades, having been furnished with guides, started off, each Brigade independently, as soon as it was over the portage. They discharged all the surplus stores they had brought here for the establishment to be kept here. They left one boat here, the stern post having come bodily out of it. Up to the present every one says the best boats are those that were built at Quebec; they are carvel built, and are certainly twice as strong as the clinker built ones; they are also much more easily repaired when injured.

To-day K Brigade, Captain McDonald, 1st Ontario Rifles, arrived at 11:15 A.M., and left at 5 P.M., leaving some of their voyageurs behind, who were reported to be incompetent. This detachment had tampered with their barrels of pork, opening them and pouring out the brine, to lessen the weight. No less than 24 out of 31 barrels were found on examination to have been tapped in this way, so fatal to the meat, which, deprived of the brine, soon spoils. It was supposed that this company of Militia had been put up to this dodge by an old Serjeant of the Royal Canadian Rifles serving with them. Colonel Wolseley was very angry when he heard of this.

The boat carpenter arrived this afternoon to work at repairing boats, as the brigades pass through. Rained hard at intervals during the day: heavy showers, with bright, warm sunshine between them. Preparations made for the head-quarters to leave to-morrow morning for Fort Alexander; Colonel Wolseley, and Assistant-Controller Irvine, in a birch-bark canoe manned by eight Indians; and Captain Huyshe and Lieutenant Denison, Orderly Officers, in the gig with four soldiers and two Indians: they embarked 14 days' rations for all hands.

Forwarded for the information of the Lieutenant-General Commanding in British North America, and for transmission to the Quartermaster-General of the Army, Horse Guards.

COLONEL WOLSELEY and Staff left Fort Francis at 5 A.M., en route for Fort Alexander.

Wednesday,
August 10th, 1870.

Descended Rainy River easily and quickly, making about $5\frac{1}{2}$ miles per hour, on an average, the current helping. The banks of this most beautiful river present a pleasing contrast to the country we have hitherto passed through. The soil is rich; elm, oak, maple, and other hard wood abound, and there is a rich profusion of undergrowth—rose bushes, convolvulus, and vetches, in great luxuriance. A little below Fort Francis is the old deserted post of the North West Company. On both sides of the river, here and there, open park-like expanses of many acres in extent are met with; the grass very green and luxuriant, and free from undergrowth; the timber, however, is small, and apparently not over 20 or 30 years old. These open spots are much more frequent on the north bank than on the south bank.

At 8 A.M. stopped for breakfast one hour; at noon passed the first rapids, 32 miles from Fort Francis; these rapids are not difficult to run, they are short, but rough, with a good tumbling sea that splashes over, and forms numerous eddies and whirlpools.

The second rapids are $6\frac{1}{2}$ miles below the first, they are a little longer, but not so rough. At 12:30 came up to K Brigade, which had left Fort Francis at 5 P.M. yesterday, and were halted for dinner—Colonel Wolseley and party halted for the same purpose near them—till 2 P.M. On again till 6 P.M.; halted for 2 hours for tea and to make everything ready for drifting down the river during the night. It being a fine evening, and the moon nearly full, Colonel Wolseley resolved to try the plan (said to be adopted by the Hudson Bay Company) of lashing the canoe and gig together, and letting all hands turn in except one man in each boat, who keeps watch and steers. Just at sunset a most extraordinary flight of insects appeared on the river; they were nearly white, grey wings, bodies a pale yellow, about $\frac{1}{4}$ an inch long, with two long feelers running out from the tail an inch or more in length. They were moving up the river at a great rate, in a solid column 10 feet high, and perhaps 30 broad, just like a column of march. The river, as far as the eye could see, both ways, was covered with them, till at a distance they gave the appearance of a thick mist, nearer they looked like driving snow or sleet.

When the gig pushed out into the river amongst them, they parted in the midst like a column of fours, to let it go through. It was noticeable that as soon as they touched the water they remained in it, unable to rise again.

At 8 P.M. commenced drifting down the river, but soon the sky became overcast, and at 11 P.M. a sharp shower fell; soon after, the wind arose, and being dead ahead, it was impossible to drift against it, so were obliged to put into shore for the night.

Rain continued all night, off and on, with a strong westerly gale. Under weigh again at 5:20 A.M. Morning cloudy and lowering, but no rain. Stopped at 9:15 A.M. for breakfast, at a small trading post of the Hudson's Bay Company called "Hungry Hall," about 2 miles above the mouth of the river, which here becomes wider, its shores marshy, and full of wild fowl, the banks lower. On the way, Colonel Wolseley met a small canoe with 3 men in it; they proved to be bearers of letters from "Rat Portage" and from Fort Alexander, announcing the despatch from Red River, and arrival at Rat Portage, of 6 boats sent by the loyal English-speaking inhabitants of the settlement, by public subscription, to help the expedition down the Winnipeg River. The letters were from Mr. Boyd and from the Rev. Mr. Gardiner, all in the same strain as previous ones brought by Joseph Monkman. At Oak Point, on the opposite side of the river to Hungry Hall, is an old deserted log-house, an abandoned American training post. The bearers of the letters were handed over to K Brigade, which came up at 10:30, as guides.

Thursday,

The party started again at 10:45 A.M. from Hungry Hall (so called from the fact of a former resident there being several times nearly starved to death!), and hoisted sails to a fair breeze, which soon took them out of the river into the Lake of the Woods. The gig slipped along fully 7 knots an hour, the water being comparatively smooth, as the route lay for 10 or 12 miles amongst low islands. To the left the surf was beating angrily on a low bar stretching across from island to island, and outside this bar "white horses" were rearing their heads, betokening a heavy sea, too much for the canoe or the heavily laden gig. After a while a "green sea" sweeping over the stern sheets of the gig and half filling her, admonished all that discretion was the better part of valour, so put into an island that lay luckily in the way, in which was a secure little harbour. This was at 12:30 noon. The Militia company, K Brigade, followed, and as the wind continued all day, tents were pitched on the island, which was named "Detention Island."

August 12th, 1870.*

The strong wind continued all night and the greater part of this day, which was fine and bright. Saw a flag hoisted on an island opposite, and by the aid of the glass made it out to be a "Union Jack"; saw two men on the island. Sent a canoe over to see what it was, but they could not find anybody. Struck tents in the afternoon, and the wind dying away, K Brigade went off at moon-rise, 8 P.M. A canoe arrived bringing mails, to the great delight of every one; Toronto papers to the 29th and English ones to the 15th July. About 9:30 P.M. two Red River boats came up to the island, and proved to be bearers of letters from Colonel Fielden, from Rat Portage, and from Bishop Macrae; the latter urging the necessity of at once despatching 100 men and a couple of guns to Red River. Mr. Sinclair, who was in charge of the two boats, said that Colonel Fielden had taken on with him 3 of his Red River boats and 23 men. Colonel Wolseley's crew of Indians refusing to leave the island this night in consequence of the still high sea on the lake, which they averred would break the canoe in two pieces; he embarked in the gig, leaving Lieutenant Denison to take his place in the canoe, and started at 9:45 P.M. Having no guide, the gig was steered by the stars, it being a bright moonlight night without clouds; course taken being a little to the westward of the pointers of the Great Bear. The party were soon out of the sight of land, though land was visible by day to the eastward. To the westward was a vast expanse of water without even an island to break the sky line; the sea was still rough, a heavy rolling swell tumbling in from the north-west, though the wind had almost gone down. After 3 hours hard pulling, the gig made an island on which Colonel Wolseley bivouacked for the night, at 1 A.M.

*Saturday,
August 13th, 1870.*

Under weigh again at 5:30 A.M., steering N.N.W.; to the eastward a group of islands through which an opening was looked for in vain to escape the rough sea, which was gradually but slowly subsiding. Westward an unbroken expanse of water, no land in sight. At 8:30 A.M. stopped on a island for breakfast. Here were met an Indian and two small boys in a canoe, but as none of the party could speak the language of "Hiawattea," no hints or directions as to the route could be gleaned from them. On again at 10 A.M. Sun very hot, but a light favourable breeze soon springing up, sails were set. The course lay during all the remainder of this day through an interminable labyrinth of islands, of all shapes and sizes, to find the right way through which would require the education of a life time. Colonel Wolseley took up his position in the bow of the gig, steering by compass with the aid of Mr. Dawson's map—a very inefficient and inaccurate chart—drawn on a scale of $7\frac{1}{2}$ miles to the inch. Stopped at 3:30 for dinner; started again at 5, and rowed till it was too dark to see any more. Then bivouacked on an island.

*Sunday,
August 14th, 1870.*

Started at 4 A.M. to try and reach Rat Portage early in the day, under the belief that the gig was within 10 miles of that place. Steered north till stopped by a "cul-de-sac," then east, then west, trying every opening to be found amongst the innumerable islands, in the vain hope of making the mouth of the Winnipeg River. At last, after hopelessly wandering about, at 3:30 P.M. saw an Indian encampment, from which a present of a few biscuits and a little tea produced a native, who willingly conducted the party to the Winnipeg River and Rat Portage, at which they arrived at 8 P.M., having only stopped once all day (at 8 A.M.) for breakfast. To attempt to cross the Lake of the Woods without a guide is a feat which Colonel Wolseley will not attempt a second time.

The canoe and the two Red River boats under Mr. Sinclair, starting from Detention Island at daylight on the 13th, arrived at Rat Portage at 7 A.M. and 3:30 A.M. respectively on the 14th, having with them good guides. The Lake of the Woods is about 75 miles long, with an average width of about 70 miles. Its chief peculiarities are, the temperature of the water, which is nearly luke warm, between 70° and 78° F., and an extraordinary profuse confervoid growth. These conferræ are a minute vegetable, orgeniam, needle-shaped, about $\frac{1}{2}$ an inch in length; they abound all over the lake, in some places so thick that the water looks like green pea-soup. Some of the deep bays receding from the lake are free from them, such a Clear Water Bay, &c., but they extend even a few miles down the Winnipeg River, below Rat Portage.

When nearing Rat Portage, Colonel Wolseley met Lieutenant Butler, 69th Regiment, who was in a canoe on his way to the lake to light a fire on an island called the Devil's Rock, about fourteen miles out in the lake, and a conspicuous object, near which the several routes across the lake diverge. The latest news he could give us was that Colonel Fielden's detachment had arrived at Portage de L'Ile at 8 A.M. on Friday the 12th instant. The day was magnificent, light favourable breeze from the south. Encamped at the far side of one of the portages, of which there are three here. No. 1 near the Hudson Bay Company's post, not much used. No. 2 about 500 yards further to the south, 300 yards long, and very rough, chiefly used for birch bark canoes. The third and regular portage is 3 miles from the post, to the south, it is 130 yards long, and is usually used for the big Hudson Bay Company's boats. No. 3 was the one passed over by Colonel Fielden and the other brigades. The Hudson Bay Company post is under the charge of a Mr. MacPherson, a Scotch half-breed, who has been very civil and obliging and useful; the post is a very small affair, 3 small log houses, roofed with bark, and enclosed by a high wooden palisading, it has been only 11 years built; the old post, on an island a little farther down the river, having been abandoned on account of its inconvenience. There are a few acres of land under cultivation,—wheat, barley, and potatoes looking very well. Mr. MacPherson has a few head of cattle (two of which were offered to the troops), and some pigs, besides lots of mangy looking pariah dogs, used for drawing sleighs in the winter. There are 13 men maintained, besides Mr. MacPherson, by the company at this post, but nine of them are employed on three small outlying posts. A magnificent day, bright and cloudless.

Colonel Wolseley remained at Rat Portage this day, making arrangements for guides to be sent back to Fort Francis to conduct the brigades across the Lake of the Woods, and also for guides for the Winnipeg River. Monday,
August 15th, 1870.

Thunderstorm came on about 6 A.M. and lasted till 11 A.M. with heavy rain; the afternoon was fine.

Lieutenant-Colonel McNeill, V.C., and Deputy-Assistant Superintendent of Stores Jolly arrived at sunset in a canoe, having been 12 days on the road from Shebandowan Lake. They reported all well with the brigades in rear, they having left 2 days after the last brigade (Lieutenant-Colonel Casault's, X) was despatched, and having passed each brigade successively. The following was the position of the different brigades when passed by Lieutenant-Colonel McNeill:—

4th August.
X Brigade	East end of Height of Land Portage.
V and T Brigades	West end of do.
5th August.
S Brigade	Just over Brulé Portage.
R „	West end of Portage Français.
6th August.
Q Brigade	West end of Pine Portage.
7th August.
P Brigade	West end of 1st Portage on River Maligne.
8th August.
O Brigade	On Mequaquon Lake.
9th August.
M and N Brigades	At 1st Bare Portage.

Forwarded to the Deputy Quartermaster-General for the Lieutenant-General's information, and for transmission to the Quartermaster-General of the Army, Horse Guards, London.

(Signed) G. J. WOLSELEY, Colonel,
Commanding Red River Expeditionary Force.

COLONEL WOLSELEY and Staff left Rat Portage at 2 P.M., having all the arrangements completed as well as possible for guides for the different brigades. Mails were made up for Canada and despatched. Started with a fair breeze down the Winnipeg River, ran "Les Dalles" Rapids, about 10 miles below Rat Portage, without any difficulty. Camped for the night at 7.15 P.M., having run about 25 miles. It began to rain about 6 P.M., and continued all the evening. River full of high rocky granite islands, which present a very sterile aspect.

Started again at 4.45 A.M. in drizzling rain, with a blustering head wind, which made a tumbling sea against the current. Ran the "Grand De Charge" Rapids, 25 miles below "Les Dalles." The stuff was portaged, and the canoes and gig then ran the rapids; in doing so boats should keep well to the right. In the next two miles were two small currents; these followed "Yellow Mud Portage" 110 yards. The approach to it is dangerously near the falls. About 200 yards further is a very pretty little fall of 6 feet which was run. "Pine Portage" follows next, 1,200 yards further on. This was very steep and slippery, 240 yards long, and full of black flies and mosquitoes. 100 yards further is "Cave" Rapids, which is a pretty little fall of 4 feet. It is usually run, but requires care. This was the last portage this day. Islington Mission was passed about 3 miles below Cave Rapids. Fields of yellow corn and green pasturage were a pleasant change to the eye, in the midst of the sterile rocky country around. The weather cleared up at 9 A.M., and continued fine till 6 P.M., when rain again began to fall with steady persistency all night, making the camp very unpleasant.

Winnipeg River.*

Colonel Wolseley's party started again at 4:45 A.M. The morning was wretchedly gloomily and miserably cold. A drizzling rain and heavy mist over the river, made everything unpleasant, until 10 A.M., when the weather cleared up, and gave the men an opportunity to get a little dry and warm. At noon, reached the "Chute à Jacquot," a very pretty fall in a series of terraces. The portage is 150 yards; everything has to be portaged. It is about 20 miles below Islington Mission. A little further on reached "Trois Pointes-des-Bois," which consists of 3 portages close together, round very pretty falls. The portages are 306, 110 and 60 yards long respectively. Eight miles further is "Slave Falls," the most beautiful rapids or falls yet seen. It derives its name from the romantic story of two Sioux prisoners having been launched over the falls by the Ojibway Indians in a birch bark canoe, with their hands tied. The portage for boats is 750 yards long, a good level portage, it is some 400 yards to the right of the falls. The canoe portage is round a jutting ledge of rock, quite close to the falls, and very dangerous except for skilled boatmen well acquainted with the place. At this portage the two leading brigades of the 1st Ontario Rifles were encamped for the night, having just arrived. Colonel Wolseley's party encamped just above the falls; the evening was fine and warm.

Winnipeg River.*

Made the portage early in the morning, and went on 8 miles further to the "Barrière Portage," which is about 20 yards over a bare rocky island; a few further on ran the "Otter" Rapids, not difficult, but long. The "Sept Portages" come next, and were got over by the gig in 2 hours 32 minutes; the second one being run. These seven portages are about 3 miles long, and are simply an almost uninterrupted succession of falls, rapids, whirlpools, and eddies. Some of the approaches to, and departures from, these portages are dangerous. The whole way from the Barrière Portage the river is full of rapid water and currents, and hidden rocks, and requires careful steering. Camped for the night about a mile below the "Sept Portages." The weather was cold and showery in the morning, but the afternoon was fine.

*Saturday,
August 20th, 1870.
Winnipeg River to Fort Alexander.*

Made an early start as usual to try to reach Fort Alexander this day. Crossed Lac de Bonnet, and made the two "Galais de Bonnet" Portages before breakfast. They are 145 and 100 yards long respectively. At the second the canoe portage is on the left bank of the fall, and the regular portage, for the large Hudson Bay Company's boats, on the right bank.

The next two portages are "Grande" and "Petit Bonnet." Then comes "White Mud Portage," 280 yards long. The two "Silver Falls" Portages are the next. They are only divided by about 150 yards of slack water, and are sometimes made into one. The best plan is to take the stuff over in one portage, and haul the boats over in two. They are steep and slippery in ascending from, and descending to, the river's bank, and are about 200 and 30 yards long. These Silver Falls are the most magnificent cascades and rapids on this river, or indeed on any river. The volume of water is very great, and the scenery around most magnificent and picturesque.

To the next and last portage, "Pine Portage," there are about 5 miles of river, more or less current the whole way, and with two or three difficult rapids. This portage is about 350 yards, and after it about 8 miles of river with two easily-run rapids to Fort Alexander. This post of the Hudson Bay Company is prettily situated on the left bank of the river, about 2 miles from the commencement of Lake Winnipeg. It is a much larger post than Fort Francis, and has a more imposing appearance. It is surrounded by a wooden palisade, and stands on high ground, the bank of the river being here about 40 feet high. From a wooden tower about 30 feet high, in front of the post, a charming view can be had, the river winding along to its junction with the lake, and the lake itself spreading out like an ocean as far as the eye can see. The soil around the fort seems very good, and the crops luxuriant.

Colonel Wolseley arrived here about an hour before sunset, and found the whole of the 60th and Royal Artillery and Royal Engineers. The head-quarters of the 60th had reached this place on the 18th. The gig did not get in till 8:30 P.M., being delayed by the heavy portaging over these numerous portages. Weather showery in the morning, but fine in the afternoon.

*Sunday,
August 21st, 1870.
Fort Alexander and Lake Winnipeg.*

The troops attended Divine Service at 10 A.M., in the open air, near the fort; the service being performed by a Missionary living near the post, assisted by the Rev. Mr. Gardiner, from the Red River. A mail was sent off up the river with orders for the company of the 1st Ontario Rifles stationed there to embark for the north-west corner of the Lake of the Woods, on the 1st September, and for all mails to be sent that way also. This was in consequence of reliable information that the road would be finished through to the Lake of the Woods by the 20th instant.

At 3 P.M. the Force embarked and set sail to a favouring breeze, about 50 boats in all, containing the Regulars of the Expeditionary Force. Colonel Wolseley accompanied Mr. Donald Smith in one of the large Hudson Bay Company's boats. The wind was fair, and the little fleet stood out to sea, making a good offing, and bore up for "Elk Island." They arrived there at sunset, and drew up the boats on a magnificent sandy beach in a beautiful little bay, well protected from the wind, having run about 20 miles from Fort Alexander. The day had been very fine, without rain.

The rouse sounded at 3:30 A.M. and the men had breakfast before embarking at 5 A.M. The wind was still favourable, though not as free as yesterday, and the fleet made a prosperous and quick run across the southern portion of Lake Winnipeg to the mouth of the Red River. The lake was found to be full of the same green confervoid growth as was noticed in the Lake of the Woods, and was remarkable for its extreme shallowness. At the distance of upwards of a mile from shore the depth of water did not exceed two or three feet, and when approaching the Red River the boats had to follow a narrow channel marked out with a buoy and stakes. Several of the boats got aground together from not following the guide sufficiently closely. The Red River flows into Lake Winnipeg by three mouths, the centre one of which was entered by the fleet. The leading boats arrived there about 12:30 noon, but some of the slower sailing boats were an hour and a-half later. Dinner was cooked on the shore, and the little fleet started again about 2:30 P.M. up the river. Colonel Wolseley sent his canoe with Assistant-Controller Irvine and Lieutenant Butler on ahead with orders to keep a sharp look-out and report anything unusual or suspicious. The passage up the river was slower than that across the lake, the boats having to keep in two lines behind Colonel Feilden, who was himself immediately behind Colonel Wolseley. At sunset the fleet encamped on the right bank of the river, about 11 miles below the Stone Fort, and just opposite the lodges of the Swampy Indians. Colonel Wolseley immediately sent off a messenger to the Stone Fort for Mr. Flett, the Hudson Bay Company's Officer, who arrived during the night. No one appeared to have the slightest idea of the approach of the Force until the boats actually came in sight, and (to prevent the news from spreading) Colonel Wolseley took every precaution possible. A visit of ceremony and congratulation was paid to Colonel Wolseley by "Henry Prince" (Chief of the Tribe) and a few of the Solteux Indians, dressed up in feathers and paint. The interview was conducted much as usual with Indians, expressions of loyalty and welcome from the Indians, and of thanks and goodwill from the Commander of the Forces, accompanied with a substantial present of pork and flour, which appeared to afford the most intense gratification.

Weather fine during the day, but clouded over at nightfall, and began to rain about 11 P.M.

Drizzling rain when the rouse sounded at 3:30 A.M. The men had some tea before starting. Continued on up the river in the same order as before, the boats being welcomed by "feux-de-joie" and other manifestations of delight from the Indians and half-breeds on the bank.

Reached the "Stone Fort," or Lower Fort Garry as it is sometimes called, about 8 A.M. The Officers were invited to a general breakfast by the Hudson Bay officials in the fort, to which they did ample justice. The boats were lightened of all surplus stores, only four days' rations being taken on, so as to reach Fort Garry, if possible, before dark.

Captain Wallace's company was detached as an advance guard and flanking party on the left bank, with orders to keep his main body on the road about a quarter of a mile in front of the boats, and with connecting files to the river's bank, with an advance party of one section of his company about 500 yards further ahead. Two signal-men with flags were also furnished to him, one to remain with the advance guard, and the other with the main body, to facilitate communication with the boats. This company was mounted on ponies and in country carts, and had orders to stop all persons on their way up the river, but not to interfere with those going down the river. By this means, as the force advanced, it was found that the actual appearance of the boats was the first intimation that the people had of the arrival of the Expedition. On the right bank, which is mostly covered with willows, Lieutenant Butler was sent on, on horseback, with orders to patrol along the road a little ahead of the boats, and show himself at intervals. Colonel Wolseley, himself in the gig, proceeded in front of the boats, having a signal-man in one of the Hudson Bay boats just behind.

The two brass 7-pr. mountain guns were mounted in the bows of the boats, and everything was in readiness in case Riel should oppose the passage of the river. In this order the boats continued all day. The "Grand Rapids" were got up by poling and tracking without much difficulty.

At 2:30 P.M. the Force halted for one hour for dinner on the right bank. Communication by signal was kept up with the flanking party and advanced guard, and found to be of much service. At 3:30 P.M. the boats were under weigh again till time to halt for the night. Camp was pitched on the left bank about 2 miles below the English cathedral, and 6 miles below the fort by the road, the distance by water being about 8 or 9 miles. Outlying picquets, under the command of an officer, were thrown out on both sides of the river on the roads, and a chain of sentries posted, to cut off all communication between Fort Garry and the settlements in rear of the Force. Three prisoners were captured during the day by Captain Wallace, and were detained. Information that was held to be reliable was also brought in by some of the loyal people, that up to noon this day nothing beyond vague rumours of the Force being in the river was known in the town of Winnipeg, and that these rumours were discredited by Riel, who, with a few of his adherents, was still in the Fort. Weather fine, except in the early morning. About 9 p.m. it began to blow hard from the north-west, and heavy rain came on and lasted the whole night.

The heavy rain having rendered the road ankle deep in black gluey mud, and almost impassable, Colonel Wolseley was obliged to abandon his intention of marching on the Fort, and continue in the boats. The men had breakfast before embarking at 6 a.m. Rain still falling in torrents. Everything is so wet that there was difficulty in getting the fires lit. About 8 o'clock the boats arrived at Point Douglas, about 2 miles from the Fort by land, and about 3 or 4 by water, as the river makes a long bend after its junction with the "Assiniboine." The troops were disembarked on the left bank, and formed up in open column of companies.

A few ponies that were brought by the inhabitants were useful in mounting the Colonel and his Staff, and two country carts were used for drawing the guns, which were limbered up behind them. A line of skirmishers was thrown out about 400 yards in advance of the column, which immediately commenced its move in the direction of the village of Winnipeg in column of fours, the 60th Rifles leading, Artillery and Engineers next, and a Company of 60th Rifles as a rear guard.

In this formation the column passed over a small creek, and keeping outside the village, wheeled slightly to its left, and advanced on the Fort, having the "Assiniboine River" on its right flank, and the village on its left. Some half-dozen loyal inhabitants, mounted on horseback, accompanied the column, and were useful as scouts and guides. The latest information obtained in the village was to the effect that Riel and his party were still inside the Fort, that the gates were shut, and that they intended resisting the troops. No flag was flying from the flagstaff in the Fort, and there was no sign of life visible; everything looked grim and frowning, and the gun mounted over the gateway that commanded the village and the prairie over which the troops were advancing, was expected momentarily to open fire. But the hopes of the troops were doomed to disappointment. On nearing the Fort some of the mounted men were sent forward to ascertain the state of affairs; they were followed by three of the Staff, and soon returned, having ridden all round the Fort and found the gate opening on the bridge over the Assiniboine River wide open. The troops were marched in by this gateway, having stopped and detained three men who were making off up the Assiniboine River. The Fort was found to be emptied of its late defenders, Riel, Lepine, and O'Donoghue having ridden off up the Red River about a quarter of an hour previously. The troops then formed line outside the Fort, the Union Jack was hoisted, a royal salute fired, and three cheers given for the Queen, which were caught up and heartily re-echoed by many of the civilians and settlers who had followed the troops from the village.

It was still raining in torrents, and the whole place was one sea of black slimy mud. The men were drenched to the skin, and indeed had been so during the greater part of the previous night. Under these circumstances, Colonel Wolseley did not think it advisable to pitch the tents on the soaking wet ground, and accommodation was found for the officers and men in the buildings inside the fort. The house occupied by Riel and his councillors was found full of ex-Governor McDougall's furniture. It had been the government house of the rebel Provisional Government, and so hurried and evidently unexpected had been the flight of the ringleaders that their breakfast table was found laid out and breakfast only half-eaten. Documents and papers of all description were lying about in their rooms. Bishop Taché wrote to Colonel Wolseley requesting an interview, but in consequence of the state of the weather (which continued all day raining in torrents), the latter requested him to defer it until the next day. No arrests were made by the military, and no attempt to pursue and capture Riel and his friends; the three or four prisoners who were detained when the troops marched into the fort were released during the day, there being no warrant out against them and no sworn information. Colonel Wolseley did not desire to trench on the civil authority in any way, not having been invested with power to do so, or to act as Lieutenant-Governor pending Mr. Archibald's arrival. The conduct of civil affairs devolved on Mr. Smith, as Governor of the Hudson Bay Company. Colonel Wolseley informed him that he looked to him as representing the only civil authority he could recognize, and that any prisoners handed over by him for safe keeping, should be taken care of. Many came forward volunteering to take Riel and his gang, if Colonel Wolseley would only authorize them to do so; all received the same answer, "go to a Magistrate for a warrant, and when obtained, Mr. Smith will provide the means for executing it." A warrant was subsequently obtained from a Justice of the Peace, directing some one specified man to arrest Riel, O'Donoghue and Lepine, on a charge of murder, false imprisonment and robbery. It proved to be informal, and was not executed. In fact no proper constables could be obtained for the purpose, and Colonel Wolseley positively refused to allow his soldiers being converted into policemen. Of course there is a considerable number of violent men who have old scores to pay off for themselves, and would be glad of the opportunity thus afforded to them by the arrival of the troops. Rain continued all day. Despatches and telegrams sent off by a special messenger to St. Cloud.

*Thursday,
August 25th, 1870.
Fort Garry.*

Rained again during the night, but cleared up in the morning, and the ground began to get a little dry. Bishop Taché paid a visit of ceremony to Colonel Wolseley, and had a private interview with him in the Fort. The Upper Fort, or "Fort Garry" proper, is a rectangular building, about 200 yards by 85 yards. The original fort was built about the year 1840, and was then 100 yards by 85 yards, it has a stone wall about 10 feet high all round, with circular bastions pierced for guns. About the year 1850, a second portion was added to it—100 yards by 85 yards—but surrounded only by a wooden palisading on a stone foundation. The fort, as it now is, is crowded with buildings, stores, and officers of the Hudson Bay Company; it stands at the angle formed by the junction of the Assiniboine and Red Rivers, which here are about 160 and 500 feet wide respectively, and fronts on to the left bank of the former river, from which it is distant about 100 yards; the site is pretty, and commands a beautiful view of the prairie on all sides. To the north and west not a house is to be seen, the lines of houses follow the course of the river, and not a house or farm seems yet to have been commenced away from the river. They say that, though water is found at a depth of from 30 to 40 feet yet it is brackish. The village of Winnipeg is about half a mile north-north-east of the fort; it is simply a collection of houses built at all angles to each other, and forming one wide street about a quarter of a mile long. I should say there are about 50 houses in all. No attempt at drainage as yet, and in rainy weather the centre of the street is converted into a large pond, and the remainder into thick black mud, strong enough to pull the mocassins off the feet of the unwary traveller. There are a few stores, but grog shops are the principal feature of the place, and the last two nights these "saloons" have reaped a rich harvest. Voyageurs, Indians and half-breeds in all stages of drunkenness, and quarrelling, made the place a very pandemonium. But few soldiers were drinking to any extent after the first night, and Colonel Wolseley ordered a strong piquet to patrol the village every night till everything was quiet. Mr. Donald Smith, the Governor of the Hudson Bay Company, issued an order prohibiting the sale of liquor from 7 P.M. each evening to 6 A.M. the following morning, and posted constables in the village, as well as enrolled special constables to assist in keeping the peace.

A lovely day, bright sunshine, and a strong southerly wind which dried up the country in a wonderful manner. Bishop Taché paid another visit to Colonel Wolseley, and said that one of his priests had been shot at the night before, though the would-be assassin had failed in his cowardly attempt. He described the state of terror in which all his people were, and seemed himself to be dreadfully alarmed, which was not diminished when informed by Colonel Wolseley that several men had been to him (Colonel Wolseley) to be enrolled as special constables with a view of capturing Riel dead or alive; but that their services had been declined. At his request Colonel Wolseley issued an order prohibiting the officers of the force from going out shooting, as the very sight of a gun appeared to cause so much alarm.

Fort Garry.

Lieutenant Butler was sent down to the stone fort on business, and with an order for the 2nd Quebec Rifles to remain there and go into camp until barrack accommodation could be provided for them. No signs as yet of the first two Brigades of Militia. The 60th Rifles moved under canvas this afternoon in a field near the fort.

Another fine, bright, cloudless day, thermometer 80° in the shade, and a hot wind blowing from the south. Colonel Wolseley, accompanied by his personal staff, and by Colonel Feilden and Lieutenant-Colonel McNeill, V.C., paid a visit of ceremony to Bishop McCrea and Archdeacon McLean, and afterwards to Bishop Taché. The bishop's palace of the latter prelate is on the right bank of the Red River, in the parish of St. Boniface, just opposite Fort Garry, and the finest-looking house in the settlement. On one side of it is a nunnery, and on the other side a school.

Saturday,
August 27th, 1870.
Fort Garry.

In the afternoon the band of the 60th Rifles played in front of their camp, and attracted a good number of visitors from the village and surrounding settlements.

About 6 P.M., Major Wainwright with two companies of the 1st Ontario Rifles arrived, and pitched their camp on the other side of the 60th. They had been wind-bound, and detained on Lake Winnipeg for 36 hours, by the same storm of wind and rain that welcomed the Head-Quarters when they took possession of Fort Garry on the 24th instant. The mails left this night for the United States and Canada, but Colonel Wolseley did not think it advisable to send letters in this way, being resolved to wait for a surer hand.

The troops attended Divine Service in the open air, the services being performed by the Chaplain, assisted by Archdeacon McLean. Colonel Wolseley, accompanied by Mr. Irvine, Lieutenant Heneage, and Mr. Donald Smith, drove down to the Lower Fort, returning at 7 P.M. He carefully inspected the Fort, and found that there would be tolerably good barrack accommodation for 300 men of the 2nd Quebec Rifles, and that by a few additions and alterations there would be a sufficiency of quarters for the officers, leaving only a few extras to be built, such as ablution-rooms, privies, cookhouses and a guard-room. Weather fine in the morning, but rained hard in the afternoon.

Sunday,

Fort Garry.

Deputy-Assistant Commissary-General Beamish arrived at 8 A.M., with mails from Canada to 3rd instant. He reported that Major McLeod and 2 companies 1st Ontario Rifles were at the Lower Fort last night, and would be here to-day. Letters and despatches were sent off to Canada to-day per Captain McCalmont, 9th Lancers, who left the Fort to return to England via the United States.

Monday,
August 29th, 1870.

Two Companies of the 60th started down the river on their way back to Fort Alexander and the Winnipeg River. One more company will follow them to-morrow, and one Company will march by the road to the N.W. corner of the Lake of the Woods, taking with them sufficient transport to bring back the baggage, &c., of the company 1st Ontario Rifles left in garrison at Fort Francis.

A beautiful day, with a fresh N.W. breeze. Instructions having been received from the Lieutenant-General Commanding in British North America, desiring that, if possible, the company of the 2nd Militia, left at Prince Arthur's Landing, should be brought on to Fort Garry this season, a special messenger has been sent to Shebandowan Lake, directing the Officer Commanding at the first-named place to carry out the Lieutenant-General's instructions, should he be able to obtain the necessary boats and voyageurs. If this can be arranged the Company is to come here viâ the N.W. corner of the Lake of the Woods.

Tuesday,
August 30th, 1870.
Fort Garry.

Mails and telegrams for Canada were sent off this morning by Captain McCalmont, who started about 9 A.M. Instructions were sent by a special messenger to Captain Scott, 1st Ontario Rifles, expected to arrive at the N.W. corner of the Lake of the Woods on 3rd or 4th September, directing him to march to this place. Captain Buller's Company 60th Rifles was to have marched to-day for the N.W. corner of the Lake of the Woods, there to embark in Captain Scott's boats, and make the best of their way with all speed to Prince Arthur's Landing to take the place of the company 2nd Militia ordered up from that place to Fort Garry, but the carts intended for their transport did not arrive. Enough carts were to have been sent with Captain Buller's company for transport of baggage, the men's packs, &c., as far as White Birch River, about 78 miles distance (to which place the road is practicable for carts), and from whence 20 pack horses would take all necessary things to the N.W. corner, about 33 miles further. Board of Survey ordered to assemble to-morrow to inspect barrels of pork brought up by the 1st Ontario Rifles, which were found to be without brine.

Letter received from Lieutenant-Colonel Bolton, Deputy-Assistant Adjutant-General, from White Birch River, reporting on the state of the road as follows:—

"Prairie country extends as far as Oak Point, but little timber. About eight miles "beyond Oak Point is an empty reservoir. After leaving the reservoir the soil becomes "sandy, small poplars on both sides. Road practicable for wheeled transport as far as "White Birch River,' about 78 miles. From that point to the Lake of the Woods, "distance reported to be about 33 miles, near Red River, is a small stream crossed by a "wooden bridge; further on and nearer to Oak Point the road skirts another small "stream. After leaving Oak Point road is clear of stumps and boulders, fenced with "fallen timber, wet places ditched and now and then fascined. About 10 miles beyond the "reservoir, crossed 'Broken Head Creek,' and some half hour's march further two ponds, "water good. After this point, Colonel Bolton reports, that (travelling at the rate of "5½ miles per hour) he passed an empty shanty in a fir wood with a well of water near it "in 40 minutes. In 30 minutes more a well, in 40 minutes more another well; in "35 minutes more crossed a swamp corduroyed for 150 yards, in 10 minutes more another "swamp, water drinkable; in 15 more crossed the west branch of 'White Mouth River,' "depth 6 inches, fordable, water good; in 45 minutes more a well, in 20 minutes more "another well, in 10 minutes more another well, in 35 minutes more a swamp curduroyed. "In 1 hour 20 minutes more met Mr. Lonsdale, who reported that he did about half a mile "to a mile of road in a day. Prairie hens abundant, also a few partridges and pigeons."

Fine day. Captain Dundas's Company of the 60th Rifles left in boats at 9 A.M. for Thunder Bay viâ the Winnipeg River.

Mr. Dawson arrived about 11 A.M., also Lieutenant-Colonel Jarvis, and the Headquarters, and two companies of 1st Ontario Militia. All of the 1st Militia have now arrived, with the exception of the company in garrison at Fort Francis, which is to leave that place to-morrow for the N.W. corner of the Lake of the Woods. Captain Buller's company did not march yesterday, as the carts promised did not arrive; he marched to-day about 11 A.M., the men's packs being carried for them. Colonel Wolseley's gig under charge of Lance-Serjeant Barnes also left at 1 P.M. to-day for Fort Francis viâ the Winnipeg River. Two companies of the 60th Rifles left at 2 P.M. in boats viâ the Winnipeg River. An order was sent to the Officer Commanding at Prince Arthur's Landing to despatch each Company of 60th Rifles to Canada by first steamer as soon as it arrived.

The following is a return of the dates of arrival and departure from Fort Francis of the last 4 Brigades of the Expedition:—

Continuation of précis
letter.

About 3 P.M., Lieutenant-Colonel Bolton returned from his mission in search of the N.W. corner of the Lake of the Woods; he appeared to have been unable to reach the lake, not having with him any guide who thoroughly knew the road. Colonel Wolseley therefore despatched a special messenger at once to fetch Mr. Joseph Monkman, who appeared to be the only man able to point out the proper path to be taken to avoid the morasses and thick woods between the end of the road and the lake. Heavy showers during the day.

Colonel Bolton's report continues as follows:—

Thursday,
September 1st, 1870.
Fort Garry.

"Mr. Lonsdale having furnished me with saddle horses and provisions, I left his "camp at 7 A.M. on Saturday, 27th August, I followed a bridle path blazed through the "trees, crossing White Birch River (water very good), by a small bridge of fir poles. The "path was scarcely wide enough for a pack horse to pass between the trees, and the fallen "timber had only been removed sufficiently to render the path barely passable. The "country is very flat, having evidently at some bygone period been a vast lake or series of "lakes. A remarkable feature worthy of notice is the occurrence of large flat masses of granite or gneiss rock, which look like islands. I passed over 12 of these 'islands' during the 20 miles I got over to-day, always at a walking pace. In the marshes water can be obtained by digging. On Sunday, 28th, I started again. After some miles of wood and marsh I entered a vast swamp of many miles in extent, this opened on to what must have been a great forest, now a brulé, and suddenly came to an end near a depression like the bed of a lake, through which a small stream of water was running in an easterly direction. The guides said the lake was about two miles off, but beyond this point neither of them had ever been.

"At 12:30 noon, I started on foot with the two men to try and reach the lake, but after some useless efforts to penetrate a brulé, I had to give it up, being quite unable to get through it without a free use of the axe. I then tried to get along by the banks of the stream, and found, as I expected, that the country was a little more practicable. At 5 P.M. I reached a point on the left bank of the stream where a white flag was flying. Here I found an official letter to Colonel Wolseley from Mr. McTavish, dated 14th August, announcing the commencement of the road, which letter I left in its place; also a note from Mr. McKay, which I brought away with me. I re-directed the official letter to the Officer Commanding the company 1st Ontario Militia, expected to arrive here from Fort Francis, telling him to cut a path (following the blazed trees) through to the depression where I had left my horses, about 3 miles higher up the stream. I then commenced my return; but at 7 P.M., being utterly exhausted, I was obliged to lie down, and passed the night as best I could, without food or a blanket. One of the men kept the fire alight during the night, but it was very cold, and rained for some hours. Next day, Monday, the 29th, I was three hours getting back to the spot where I had left the horses, and being utterly done, and physically unable to continue my efforts to reach the Lake, I returned to Red River, reaching the settlement on Wednesday, the 31st, at 3 P.M.

"From the furthest point I reached I was not able to see the lake, though the appearance of the country, and the opening out of the marsh to some width on each side of the stream, gave indications that the lake could not be far off.

"To sum up, my opinion of the road is this; practicable for carts for 78 miles, as far as White Birch River; practicable for pack horses for 30 miles further, leaving about 3 miles or so still to be cut through to open the path to the Lake of the Woods."

End of précis of
letter.

The last remaining company of the 60th Rifles left to-day in boats. They reached the Lower Fort, and encamped there for the night.

Fine morning, but heavy showers in the afternoon. Colonel Wolseley's messenger, who had been sent with instructions to Captain Scott at the N.W. angle, returned to-day. He had met the horses (sent by Bishop Taché to meet the Lieutenant-Governor) returning to Red River, and had been told by the men in charge of them that the Lieutenant-Governor had passed on, finding no road, and had also ordered Captain Scott's Company to go round by the Winnipeg River for the same reason. Colonel Wolseley immediately sent out a fresh messenger to Captain Scott.

The propeller "International" arrived from Frog Point at 7:30 P.M.

Mr. Monkman arrived this morning at 8 A.M., and, after an interview with Colonel Wolseley, was sent off, accompanied by Lieutenant Denison, to catch up Captain Buller's company of the 60th, and show them the right track to the N.W. angle of the Lake of the Woods, also to bring back Captain Scott's Company of the 1st Ontario Militia. Captain Nagle arrived about 4 P.M. bringing a mail, letters from Montreal to the 8th ultimo; also news that Mr. Archibald had arrived in the river, and was on his way up from the Lower Fort in a canoe. A guard of honour was paraded, and preparations made for a salute to be fired in his honour by the Militia Gunners, but he did not arrive till 8:30 P.M. He was accompanied by Mr. Hill, Private Secretary; after he had dinner, he joined the party in Mr. Smith's dining-room, and his health and welcome was proposed by Mr. Smith and drank by the party. In returning thanks, he paid a high tribute to Colonel Wolseley and the Officers and men of the Expedition, to whom, he said, he owed the fact of his being able to enter the Province, after he had been nominated Governor. He had written and forwarded from the Lower Fort a highly complimentary letter to Colonel Wolseley, which runs thus:—

Friday,
September 2nd, 1870.
Fort Garry.

"Indian Mission, Red River,

"September 2nd, 1870.

"Dear Colonel Wolseley,

"I take the earliest opportunity in my power to congratulate you on the magnificent success of the Expedition under your command. I can judge of the work you have had to do all the better from having seen for myself the physical obstacles that had to be met and overcome, obstacles which I assure you exceed anything I could have imagined.

"It is impossible not to feel that the men who have triumphed over such difficulties must not only have themselves worked well, but also must have been well led, and I should not be doing justice to my own feelings, if I were not on my arrival here to repeat the expression of admiration extorted from me, as I passed along, in view of the difficulties you had to meet, and which you have so triumphantly surmounted.

"I have, &c.

"(Signed) A. G. ARCHIBALD."

The weather was gloomy to-day, cold and showery, very unlike what the weather at this season usually is here, at least according to the experience of the "oldest inhabitant." About 11 p.m. the floating bridge over the Assiniboine River was carried away by a freshet; the river rose about 6 inches, but fell again during the night. No damage was done, the bridge only parted in the middle, and the scows (of which it was composed), floated away to the bank where they remained.

Saturday,
September 3rd, 1870.
Fort Garry.

The salute in honour of the arrival of the Lieutenant-Governor was fired this morning. Colonel Wolseley's canoe started at 9 a.m., with 25 days' rations, to make the best of its way up the Winnipeg River to the N.W. corner of the Lake of the Woods, there to await Colonel Wolseley's arrival.

Departure from Fort Garry of the remainder of the Regular Troops.

The detachments of Royal Artillery and Royal Engineers, under Lieutenants Alleyne and Heneage, also started by boat on their way up the Winnipeg River, and thus there now remain no regular troops in Fort Garry. The arrangements for the Control Department during the winter for the two regiments of Militia, were put in orders (subject to approval), on the 1st instant.

Mr. Beamish, of the Commissariat Department, was sent off to-day to St. Paul's to make contracts for a supply of pork, enough for 60 days, as a reserve supply in case of accident during the winter.

Letters and telegrams for Montreal were sent off by Lieutenant-Colonel McNeill, V.C., who left Fort Garry in the steamer "International" for Frog Point, about 200 miles below St. Cloud. This steamer belongs to the Hudson Bay Company, but sails under an American licence, being in American waters. She is very long, too long for the numerous bends of the Red River, flat-bottomed, and draws about 2 feet of water. She is a propeller, and could accommodate a large number of troops if necessary. When the water is high she can ascend the Red River as far as Fort Abercromby, 70 miles above Frog Point.

Forwarded for the Lieutenant-General's information, and for transmission to the Quartermaster-General of the Army, Horse Guards.

G. J. WOLSELEY, Colonel,
Commanding Red River Expedition.

Council, approved by his Excellency the Governor General in Council, 31st July 1852.

ON the Despatch from the Right Honourable Sir John Pakington, Her Majesty's Principal Secretary of State for the Colonies, to his Excellency the Governor General, instructing his Excellency to report his opinion whether, since Her Majesty's Government have decided that it is impossible, under existing circumstances, to apply to the Imperial Parliament for the desired assistance to aid the construction of a marine trunk line of railway in Canada, it would be proper that the Railroad Acts passed in the Session of

1851, the operation of which is made contingent upon the question of affording to the trunk line of railway the pecuniary assistance of this country, should be left to their operation in the usual manner by an Order of the Queen in Council, or whether Her Majesty should abstain from making any Order thereon.

The Committee of Council have delayed advising your Excellency on the subject of these Acts, until the Board of Railway Commissioners should have reported their opinion as to the mode by which the trunk line of railway between Quebec and Hamilton could be constructed most advantageously to the public. The Board of Railway Commissioners having made their report recommending that the said railway should be constructed through the instrumentality of the Companies incorporated by the Acts of the last Session of Parliament, the Committee of Council are now prepared to advise your Excellency to report to Sir John Pakington, according to his request, that the Acts referred to in his Despatch of the 26th May ultimo, should be left to their operation in the usual manner by an Order of the Queen in Council.

EXTRACT from a REPORT of a Committee of the Honourable the Executive Council, approved by his Excellency the Governor General in Council, on the 31st July 1852.

ON the report of the Chairman of the Board of Railway Commissioners, dated 30th July 1852, stating that, under existing circumstances mentioned in said report, they are of opinion that the best mode of constructing the main trunk line of railway from the city of Quebec, or a point opposite thereto, to the city of Hamilton, or to some convenient point on the line of the Great Western Railroad, will be through the instrumentality of the Companies already incorporated for that purpose by the Legislature, and which are entitled to the Provincial guarantee for one-half of the cost under the provisions of the Act 14 & 15 Vict. c. 73, and recommending, therefore, that a Proclamation be issued declaring that the main trunk line of railway may be undertaken by private companies thereunto authorised by the Legislature.

The Committee advise that the recommendation of the Board of Railway Commissioners be acted on, and that a Proclamation issue accordingly.

MY LORD,

I HAVE the honour to forward, herewith, a copy of a Minute of the Privy Council, recommending that the Honourable Alex. Campbell, the Postmaster-General, should be authorized to proceed to England, in order to endeavour to "induce Her Majesty's Government to take prompt action in the several matters" which are set forth in the Minute.

Enclosure in No. 1.

COPY of a REPORT of a COMMITTEE of the Honourable the PRIVY COUNCIL, approved by His Excellency the GOVERNOR-GENERAL in COUNCIL on the 9th June, 1870.

Enclosure in
No. 1.

" The Committee of the Privy Council having recently had under their consideration a number of questions of great importance to the Dominion, among which are the proposed withdrawal of Imperial troops from Canada, the question of fortifications, the recent invasion of Canadian territory by citizens of the United States, and the previous threats and hostile preparations which compelled the Government to call out the Militia, and to obtain the consent of Parliament to the suspension of the Habeas Corpus Act, the systematic trespasses on Canadian fishing grounds by United States' fishermen, and the unsettled question as to the limits within which foreigners can fish under the Treaty of 1818, are of opinion that it is desirable that their views on all these questions should be personally represented to Her Majesty's Government by a member of the Privy Council, and they recommend that the Honourable the Postmaster-General be requested to proceed to England, and to endeavour to induce Her Majesty's Government to take prompt action in the several matters above referred to, in accordance with the views expressed in the Minutes of Council relating thereto, and in any other Minutes which may hereafter be referred to him.

The Committee of Council are of opinion that the Postmaster-General should call the attention of Her Majesty's Government to the Reports of the 15th and 20th of December last from the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, and should urge the importance of securing, with as little delay as possible, the restoration to Canada of the rights which she enjoyed prior to the Reciprocity Treaty, under the interpretation given to the Treaty of 1818 by the Crown Law Officers of England.

The Committee of Council cannot conceal their apprehension that if the citizens of the United States are any longer permitted, as they have been doing the last four years, to fish in waters where, according to our interpretation of the Treaty of 1818, they are trespassers, it may be more difficult to obtain an amicable solution of the point in dispute.

The Committee of Council are fully alive to the importance of taking action at an early period with regard to the construction of a Pacific railroad through Canadian territory; but they think it better to postpone the consideration of the subject until after the departure of the delegates from British Columbia, when instructions will be sent to the Postmaster-General on this important subject.

COPY of a REPORT of a COMMITTEE of the Honourable the PRIVY COUNCIL, approved by His Excellency the GOVERNOR-GENERAL in COUNCIL, on 1st July, 1870.

On a Report, dated 20th June, 1870, from the Honourable the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, submitting for the information of your Excellency in Council a memorandum and documents on the fishery question prepared for the Honourable Mr. Campbell, in connection with his mission to England, under the Minute of Council of 9th ult., and stating that these papers inform him of the position of the question at the present time, and of the views expressed on various occasions for several years past by the British and Canadian Governments; and that the instructions which may be addressed to Mr. Campbell with reference to bringing to an early settlement all matters that have been admitted into dispute between the British and American Governments affecting the fisheries should embrace the following principal points:

1. That fishing rights in British American waters shall be in future enforced as they existed and were maintained under the Treaty of 1818, anterior to the Reciprocity Treaty of 1854, in accordance with the laws of nations.

2. That failing such positive enforcement of these undoubted rights, the question arising out of the said Treaty as to the definition of certain limits of exclusion, by headland lines, be referred to a mixed Commission, to be named by the British and American Governments, and to be composed of one Imperial, one United States, and one Canadian Commissioner, providing some independent reference in case of need; the principle on which such Commission shall be chosen and act to be as provided in the Earl of Clarendon's Despatch of 11th May, 1866.

3. That such mixed Commission shall be formed during the current year, and shall, in order to facilitate speedy reference, hold its sittings either at Halifax, Washington, or Ottawa, the negotiations and preliminary arrangements for the same to be carried out between the Governor-General of Canada and the United States' Government, through the British Minister at the American capital.

No. 3.

The EARL OF KIMBERLEY to SIR JOHN YOUNG.

(No. 198.)

SIR,

Downing Street, July 27, 1870.

ON receiving from Her Majesty the seals of this office, I took an early opportunity of communicating with Mr. Campbell, the Postmaster-General of Canada, who has come to England to place before Her Majesty's Government the views of your Government on various questions connected with the Dominion. Mr. Campbell brought under my consideration the following subjects:—The first was the protection of the Canadian fisheries from encroachments by foreign fishing vessels. On this point I concur with your Ministers that it would be desirable that the questions which have been so long in dispute with the United States as to the geographical limits of the exclusive fishing rights of Canada under the Treaty of 1818, should be settled by a joint British and American Commission, on which the Dominion should be represented. Her Majesty's Government will propose to the United States' Government the appointment of such a Commission.

Now that the instructions given to Her Majesty's cruisers and the Government vessels of Canada have been brought into harmony, I do not think it necessary, in this Despatch, to make any observations on the details of those instructions. I will only remark that I am most anxious to avoid any misunderstanding on this subject between the Imperial and Canadian Governments, and with this view the regulations to be issued for the fishing season of 1871 should be considered by the two Governments in good time before the season commences. Their nature must, of course, much depend on the establishment and progress of the proposed Commission, but I shall gladly receive from your Government, at the proper time, any statement on this subject, and shall give it my best attention.

2. The Bill authorizing the guarantee of the Fortification Loan, on which Mr. Campbell expressed some anxiety, is already before Parliament.

3. Mr. Campbell pressed strongly upon me that a representation should be made to the United States' Government, with reference to the late Fenian incursion into Canada, which has awakened such just feelings of indignation in the Dominion, and he urged the claims of Canada for reparation for the losses which she has sustained by that incursion. Her Majesty's Government have carefully considered what steps it would be advisable to take in this matter, and I have to acquaint you that they are of opinion that, in the first instance, your Ministers should draw up a full and authentic statement of the facts, and of the claims which they found upon them. This statement should be transmitted by you to Her Majesty's Government, in order that it may be laid by them before the Government of the United States, and I need scarcely say that whilst it should contain everything which is material to the case, it should be a document of such a character as may properly be communicated to the Government of a State with which Her Majesty is on terms of amity.

4. Mr. Campbell, whilst stating the entire willingness of the Canadian Government to take measures for the defence of the Dominion, expressed a hope that an Imperial garrison would be maintained at Quebec. You are so well acquainted with the general policy of Her Majesty's Government as to the distribution of Imperial troops, that I need not enter into any further explanation of that policy; and as regards the particular question of the garrison of Quebec, you are already aware that it has been decided that a battalion of infantry and a battery of artillery shall remain there during the coming winter. I cannot conclude without acknowledging the able and temperate manner in which Mr. Campbell brought under my consideration the various questions which have been discussed between us. The opportunity which I have had of explaining to him the views of Her Majesty's Government has made it unnecessary for me to do more than briefly indicate in this Despatch the course which it is proposed to take.

MY LORD,

Downing Street, February 16, 1871.

YOU have already been informed by telegram of the views of Her Majesty's Government upon the Fishery Questions, but I think it will be convenient, with reference to the pending negotiations, that a somewhat fuller statement of those views should now be placed on record.

It would not be possible for Her Majesty's Government to pledge themselves to any foregone conclusion upon any particular point connected with these negotiations, but they have anxiously considered the questions which concern Canada, and they feel confident that the Canadian Government will agree with them that a satisfactory termination of the difficulties which have arisen with the United States can only be attained by taking as broad and liberal a view as is consistent with the just rights and real interests of the Dominion.

As at present advised, Her Majesty's Government are of opinion that the right of Canada to exclude Americans from fishing in the waters within the limits of three marine miles of the coast is beyond dispute, and can only be ceded for an adequate consideration.

Should this consideration take the form of a money payment, it appears to Her Majesty's Government that such an arrangement would be more likely to work well than if any conditions were annexed to the exercise of the privilege of fishing within the Canadian waters.

The presence of a considerable number of cruisers would always be necessary to secure the performance of such conditions, and the enforcement of penalties for the non-observance of them would be certain to lead to disputes with the United States.

4 CORRESPONDENCE WITH THE GOVERNMENT OF CANADA.

CANADA. — With respect to the question, What is a bay or creek, within the meaning of the first Article of the Treaty of 1818, Her Majesty's Government adhere to the interpretation which they have hitherto maintained of that Article; but they consider that the difference which has arisen with the United States on this point might be a fit subject for compromise.

The exclusion of American fisherman from resorting to Canadian ports, "except for " the purpose of shelter and of repairing damages therein, of purchasing wood, and of " obtaining water," might be warranted by the letter of the Treaty of 1818, and by the terms of the Imperial Act 59 George III., cap. 38, but Her Majesty's Government feel bound to state that it seems to them an extreme measure, inconsistent with the general policy of the Empire, and they are disposed to concede this point to the United States' Government, under such restrictions as may be necessary to prevent smuggling, and to guard against any substantial invasion of the exclusive rights of fishing which may be reserved to British subjects.

In conclusion I have to state that Her Majesty fully appreciates the loyal and prompt manner in which the Canadian Government have assented to the appointment of the Commission which is about to sit at Washington. The high character and recognized ability of the British Commissioners afford ample security that the interests of Canada will be carefully protected during the forthcoming negotiations.

The EARL OF KIMBERLEY to The LORD LISGAR.

(No. 374.) MY LORD, Downing Street, March 17, 1871.

IN answer to your telegram received on the 10th instant, stating that in the opinion of your Government the Canadian fisheries cannot be sold without the consent of the Dominion, I have already informed your Lordship by telegraph that Her Majesty's Government never had any intention of advising Her Majesty to part with those fisheries without such consent.

When the Reciprocity Treaty was concluded, the Acts of the Nova Scotian and New Brunswick Legislatures relating to the fisheries were suspended by Acts of those Legislatures, and the fishery rights of Canada are now under the protection of a Canadian Act of Parliament, the repeal of which would be necessary in case of the cession of those rights to any Foreign Power.

I think it right, however, to add that the responsibility of determining what is the true construction of a Treaty made by Her Majesty with any Foreign Power, must remain with Her Majesty's Government, and that the degree to which this country would make itself a party to the strict enforcement of Treaty rights may depend not only on the literal construction of the Treaty, but on the moderation and reasonableness with which those rights are asserted.

The EARL OF KIMBERLEY to The LORD LISGAR.

(No. 444.) MY LORD, Downing Street, June 17, 1871.

I HAVE the honour to enclose herewith copies of the Treaty signed at Washington on May 8th by the Joint High Commissioners, which has been ratified by Her Majesty and by the President of the United States, and of the instructions to Her Majesty's High Commissioners, and Protocols of the conferences held by the Commission.

The Dominion is, from its geographical position as the immediate neighbour of the United States, so peculiarly interested in the maintenance of cordial relations between that Republic and the British Empire, that it must be a source of satisfaction to the Canadian Government that Her Majesty has been able to conclude a Treaty for the amicable settlement of differences which might have seriously endangered the good understanding between the two countries.

Moreover the rules laid down in Article 6 as to the international duties of neutral Governments are of special importance to the Dominion, which carries on such an extensive and increasing maritime commerce, and possesses such a considerable merchant navy.

But independently of the advantages which Canada must derive from the removal of the causes of difference with the United States, arising out of occurrences during the civil war, Her Majesty's Government believe that the settlement which has been arrived at of the questions directly affecting British North America cannot fail to be beneficial to the Dominion. I need not refer to the well-known history of the Fishery Question further than to observe that ever since the termination by the British Government, in consequence of the war of 1812, of the liberty enjoyed under the Treaty of 1783 by American citizens of fishing in the territorial waters of the British Colonies, and the renunciation by the United States in the Treaty of 1818 of all claim to that liberty, this question has, in different forms, been the subject of controversy with the United States. Her Majesty's Government have always contended for the rights of the Colonies, and they have employed the British naval forces in the protection of the colonial fisheries; but they could not overlook the angry feelings to which this controversy has given rise, and the constant risk that in the enforcement of the exclusion of American fishermen from the colonial waters a collision might take place which might lead to the most serious consequences, and they would have been wanting in their duty if they had not availed themselves of the opportunity presented by the late negotiation to remove a cause of perpetual irritation and danger to the relations of this country and the Dominion with the United States.

The Canadian Government itself took the initiative in suggesting that a joint British and American Commission should be appointed with a view to settle the disputes which had arisen as to the interpretation of the Treaty of 1818; but it was certain that however desirable it might be, in default of any complete settlement, to appoint such a Commission, the causes of the difficulty lay deeper than any question of interpretation, and the mere discussion of such points as the correct definition of bays could not lead to a really friendly agreement with the United States. It was necessary, therefore, to endeavour to find an equivalent which the United States might be willing to give in return for the fishery privileges, and which Great Britain, having regard both to Imperial and Colonial interests, could properly accept. Her Majesty's Government are well aware that the arrangement which would have been most agreeable to Canada was the conclusion of a Treaty similar to the Reciprocity Treaty of 1854, and a proposal to this effect was pressed upon the United States' Commissioners, as you will find in the 36th Protocol of the Conferences. This proposal was, however, declined, the United States' Commissioners stating "that they could hold out no hope that the Congress of the United States would give its consent to such a tariff arrangement as was proposed, or to any extended plan of reciprocal free admission of the products of the two countries." The United States' Commissioners did, indeed, propose that coal, salt, and fish should be reciprocally admitted free, and lumber after the 1st of July, 1874; but it is evident that, looked at as a tariff arrangement, this was a most inadequate offer, as will be seen at once when it is compared with the long list of articles admitted free under the Reciprocity Treaty. Moreover, it is obvious from the frank avowal of the United States' Commissioners that they only made this offer because one branch of Congress had recently, more than once, expressed itself in favour of the abolition of duties on coal and salt, and because Congress had partially removed the duty from lumber, and the tendency of legislation in the United States was towards the reduction of taxation and of duties, so that to have ceded the fishery rights in return for these concessions would have been to exchange them for commercial arrangements which there is reason to believe may, before long, be made without any such cession, to the mutual advantage of both the Dominion and the United States; and Her Majesty's Government are bound to add that whilst, in deference to the strong wishes of the Dominion Government, they used their best efforts to obtain a renewal in principle of the Reciprocity Treaty, they are convinced that the establishment of free-trade between the Dominion and the United States is not likely to be promoted by making admission to the fisheries dependent upon the conclusion of such a Treaty, and that the repeal by Congress of duties upon Canadian produce on the ground that a protective tariff is injurious to the country which imposes it, would place the commercial relations of the two countries on a far more secure and lasting basis than the stipulations of a Convention framed upon a system of reciprocity. Looking, therefore, to all the circumstances, Her Majesty's Government found it their duty to deal separately with the fisheries, and to endeavour to find some other equivalent; and the reciprocal concession of free fishery with free import of fish and fish oil, together with the payment of such a sum of money as may fairly represent the excess of value of the colonial over the American concession, seems to them to be an equitable solution of the difficulty. It is perfectly true that the right of fishery on the United States' coasts, conceded under Article 19, is far less valuable than the right of fishery in colonial waters, conceded under Article 18 to the United States; but, on the other hand, it cannot be denied that it is most important to the colonial fishermen to obtain free access to the American market for their fish and for fish oil, and the balance of advantage on the side of the United States will be duly redressed by the arbitrators under Article 22. In some respects a direct money payment is, perhaps, a more distinct recognition of the rights of the Colonies than a tariff concession, and there does not seem to be any difference in principle between the admission of American fishermen for a term of years in consideration of the payment of a sum of money in gross, and their admission under the system of licences calculated at so many dollars per ton, which was adopted by the Colonial Government for several years after the termination of the Reciprocity Treaty. In the latter case it must be observed the use of the fisheries was granted without any tariff concession whatever on the part of the United States, even as to the importation of fish.

Canada could not reasonably expect that this country should, for an indefinite period, incur the constant risk of serious misunderstanding with the United States, imperilling, perhaps, the peace of the whole Empire, in order to endeavour to force the American Government to change its commercial policy; and Her Majesty's Government are confident that when the Treaty is considered as a whole, the Canadian people will see that their interests have been carefully borne in mind, and that the advantages which they will derive from its provisions are commensurate with the concessions which they are called upon to make. There cannot be a question as to the great importance to Canada of the right to convey goods in bond through the United States, which has been secured to her by Article 29; and the free navigation of Lake Michigan under Article 28, and the power of transshipping goods under Article 30, are valuable privileges which must not be overlooked in forming an estimate of the advantages which Canada will obtain. Her Majesty's Government have no doubt that the Canadian Government will readily secure to the citizens of the United States, in accordance with Article 27, the use of the Canadian canals, as by the liberal policy of the Dominion those canals are already opened to them on equal terms with British subjects, and they would urge upon the Dominion Parliament and the Legislature of New Brunswick that it will be most advisable to make the arrangement as to duties on lumber floated down the St. John River, upon which the execution of Article 30 as to the transshipment of goods is made contingent.

The freedom to navigate the St. Lawrence, which is assured to the United States by Article 26, has long existed in fact, and its recognition by Treaty cannot be prejudicial to the Dominion, which moreover obtains in return the free use of certain rivers on the Pacific side of the continent.

I must not omit to notice that by Article 34 the dispute as to the Island of St. Juan is to be submitted to arbitration, and provision has thus happily been made for the amicable termination of a long-standing and difficult controversy, at a time when, in consequence of the union of British Columbia with the Dominion, this boundary question has become matter of interest to the whole Confederation of British Provinces.

I have thus gone through those parts of the Treaty which immediately touch the Dominion, but a question of much moment remains as to the course which should be taken during the present fishing season, pending the enactment by the respective Legislatures of the laws necessary to bring the fishery articles into operation.

I find that on the conclusion of the Reciprocity Treaty in June, 1854, and previous to its ratification, the then American Secretary of State, Mr. Marcy, expressed the hope of his Government that American fishermen would not be molested if they should at once attempt to use the privileges granted by that Treaty. A Despatch was therefore addressed to the Governors of the North American colonies, recommending that the wish of the United States' Government should be acceded to, and that the American fishermen should be immediately admitted to the Colonial fisheries. The result was that the various Colonial Governments at once admitted the American fishermen to the fisheries, although the legislative acts necessary to give effect to the Treaty were not passed till late in the autumn. It is evidently most desirable that a similar course should be pursued on the present occasion; and you will perceive from the Notes which have passed between Sir E. Thornton and Mr. Fish, copies of which I enclose, that the United States' Government have made an application similar to that which they made in 1854, and that Her Majesty's Government have engaged to recommend to the Colonial Governments that it should be acceded to. Her Majesty's Government are, of course, aware that the Colonial Governments have no power to set aside the fishery statutes by their own authority; but it is entirely within their power to take no active steps to enforce those statutes, and to suspend the instructions to the colonial cruisers to exclude American citizens from the fisheries, just as it is in the power of Her Majesty's Government to suspend the action of Her Majesty's cruisers, although the Imperial Fishery Statute is still in force.

Her Majesty's Government have no desire whatever to attempt to interfere with the entire right of the Colonial Legislatures to refuse to pass the Acts necessary to give effect to the Treaty, though they would deeply deplore that a course which they believe would be most impolitic should be taken; but, on the other hand, they have too much confidence in the wisdom of those free Assemblies to anticipate any such result, and they are confident that the Canadian Government would be as desirous as Her Majesty's Government that no untoward collision should occur during the present season which might prejudice the fair consideration of the Treaty, both by the American Congress and the Colonial Parliaments, and that on a full consideration of the circumstances, they will see that the responsibility of incurring the risk of such a collision would be far heavier than that of removing, so far as they have the power, the obstacles to the provisional enjoyment by American citizens of the privileges which it is intended by the Treaty to secure to them for a longer time.

I cannot conclude this Despatch without expressing the gratification which it has given Her Majesty's Government to have had the valuable assistance of Sir J. Macdonald in the negotiation of this Treaty. Whatever view may be taken in Canada of the merits of the Treaty, it must be an unqualified cause of satisfaction to the Canadians to know that they were represented by a statesman holding so distinguished a position in the Canadian Government, and so well able, from his knowledge and experience, to put forward, with the greatest force and authority, the arguments best suited to promote the claims and interests of the Dominion.

No. 6

With reference to my Despatches, Nos. 146 and 147 of the 8th instant, I have the honour to enclose copy of a note addressed to me by Mr. Fish, expressing the hope entertained by the Government of the United States that Her Majesty's Government will urge the Governments of the Dominion of Canada, of Prince Edward Island, and of Newfoundland to consent that American fishermen should be allowed to fish in the waters of the above Colonies during the coming season.

Your Lordship will observe that at the beginning of the second paragraph of the draft of the note which I forwarded in my Despatch, No. 146, the following words have been added:—"The Government of the United States would be prepared at the same time to admit British subjects to the right of fishing in the waters of the United States specified in the Treaty; but"

I also enclose copy of my answer to Mr. Fish, and hope your Lordship will find that his note, with the addition above mentioned, and my answer, are in accordance with the terms of your Lordship's telegram of 9th instant, transmitted through Earl de Grey.

His Lordship has seen both the enclosed notes, and approves of their contents.

SIR,

Department of State, Washington, May 8, 1871.

As several Articles of the Treaty which has been signed this day, relating to the admission of citizens of the United States to fish within the territorial waters of Her Britannic Majesty on the coasts of Canada, Prince Edward Island, and Newfoundland, cannot come into full operation until the legislation contemplated in that instrument shall have taken place, and as it seems to be in accordance with the interests of both Governments, in furtherance of the objects and spirit of the Treaty, that the citizens of the United States should have the enjoyment of that liberty during the present season, I am directed by the President to express to you his hope that Her Majesty's Government will be prepared, in the event of the ratification of the Treaty, to make on their own behalf, and to urge the Governments of the Dominion of Canada, of Prince Edward Island, and of Newfoundland, to make for the season referred to within their respective jurisdictions such relaxations and regulations as it may respectively be in their power to adopt, with a view to the admission of American fishermen to the liberty which it is proposed to secure to them by the Treaty. The Government of the United States would be prepared at the same time to admit British subjects to the right of fishing in the waters of the United States, specified in the Treaty; but as the admission into the United States free of duty of any articles which are by law subject to duty cannot be allowed without the sanction of Congress, the President will, in case the above suggestion meets with the views of the British Government, recommend and urge upon Congress at their next session, that any duties which may have been collected on and after the 1st day of July next, on fish-oil and fish (except fish of the inland lakes and of the rivers falling into the same, and except fish preserved in oil), the produce of the fisheries of the Dominion of Canada and of Prince Edward Island, shall be returned and refunded to the parties paying the same, if a similar arrangement is made with respect to the admission into the British possessions of fish-oil and fish (with the like exception), being the produce of the fisheries of the United States.

SIR,

Washington, May 9, 1871.

I have the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your note of yesterday's date, and to inform you in reply that I have been authorized by Earl Granville to state that in the event of the ratification of the Treaty signed yesterday, Her Majesty's Government will be prepared to recommend to the Governments of the Dominion of Canada, of Prince Edward Island, and of Newfoundland, that the provisional arrangement proposed in your note above mentioned, with regard to the right of fishing by United States' citizens on the coasts of those British possessions and by British subjects in the waters of the United States described in Article XIX. of the Treaty, shall take effect during the coming season, on the understanding that the ultimate decision of this question must rest with the above-mentioned Colonial Governments, who would be asked to grant the immediate and certain right of fishing within the territorial waters of those Colonies, whilst the return of the import duties on fish from the 1st July next promised by the United States is prospective and contingent on the action of Congress.

MY LORD,

Downing Street, June 20, 1871.

IN accordance with the strong wish expressed by the Dominion Government, that a representation should be made to the United States with reference to the losses inflicted on Canada by the Fenian raids, Her Majesty's Government instructed the British High Commissioners to bring the claims arising out of those raids before the Joint High Commission.

Your Lordship will observe from the Protocols of Conferences, copies of which were transmitted to you in my Despatch, No. 444,* of the 17th inst., that the American Commissioners declined to entertain the proposal made by the British Commissioners to include these claims in the Treaty.

Her Majesty's Government were well aware of the serious difficulties in the way of settling this question, and they could not, therefore, feel surprised at this result. At the same time, it was with much regret that they acquiesced in the omission of these claims from the general settlement of outstanding questions between Great Britain and the United States.

But it seemed to them evident that the British Commissioners were right in thinking that there was no reasonable probability that by further pressing the point an agreement would be come to upon it with the American Commissioners, and when the choice lay between the settlement of all the other differences between the two countries on terms which Her Majesty's Government believed to be honourable to both, and beneficial alike to Canada and the rest of the Empire, and the frustration of all hope of bringing the negotiations to a satisfactory issue, they could not hesitate as to the course which it was their duty to take.

To His Excellency the Right Hon. John, Baron LISGAR, G.C.B., G.C.M.G., P.C.,
Governor-General of Canada, &c. &c. &c.

MAY IT PLEASE YOUR EXCELLENCY,

The Committee of the Privy Council have had under their consideration the Earl of Kimberley's Despatch to your Excellency, dated the 17th June ult., transmitting copies of the Treaty signed at Washington on the 8th May last by the Joint High Commissioners, and which has since been ratified by Her Majesty and by the United States of America; of the instructions to Her Majesty's High Commissioners, and of the Protocols of the Conferences held by the Commission; and likewise the Earl of Kimberley's Despatch of the 20th of June ult., explaining the failure of Her Majesty's Government to obtain the consideration, by the United States' Commissioners, of the claims of Canada for the losses sustained owing to the Fenian raids of 1866 and 1870.

No. 444.

The Committee of the Privy Council have not failed to give their anxious consideration to the important subjects discussed in the Earl of Kimberley's Despatches, and they feel assured that they will consult the best interests of the Empire by stating frankly, for the information of Her Majesty's Government, the result of their deliberations, which they believe to be in accordance with public opinion in all parts of the Dominion.

No. 445.

The Committee of the Privy Council readily admit that Canada is deeply interested in the maintenance of cordial relations between the Republic of the United States and the British Empire, and they would therefore have been prepared without hesitation to recommend the Canadian Parliament to co-operate in procuring an amicable settlement of all differences likely to endanger the good understanding between the two countries. For such an object they would not have hesitated to recommend the concession of some valuable rights, which they have always claimed to enjoy under the Treaty of 1818, and for which, as the Earl of Kimberley observes, Her Majesty's Government have always contended, both Governments having acted on the interpretation given to the Treaty in question by high legal authorities. The general dissatisfaction which the publication of the Treaty of Washington has produced in Canada, and which has been expressed with as much force in the agricultural districts of the west, as in the maritime provinces, arises chiefly from two causes.

1st. That the principal cause of difference between Canada and the United States has not been removed by the Treaty, but remains a subject for anxiety.

2ndly. That a cession of territorial rights of great value has been made to the United States, not only without the previous assent of Canada, but contrary to the expressed wishes of the Canadian Government.

The Committee of the Privy Council will submit their views on both those points for the information of Her Majesty's Government, in the hope that by means of discussion a more satisfactory understanding between the two Governments may be arrived at. The Earl of Kimberley has referred to the rules laid down in Article 6 of the Treaty of Washington, as to the international duties of neutral Governments as being of special importance to the Dominion; but the Committee of the Privy Council, judging from past experience, are much more apprehensive of misunderstanding owing to the apparent difference of opinion between Canada and the United States as to the relative duties of friendly States in a time of peace. It is unnecessary to enter into any lengthened discussion of the conduct of the United States during the last six or seven years with reference to the organization of considerable numbers of the citizens of those States under the designation of Fenians. The views of the Canadian Government on this subject are in possession of Her Majesty's Government; and it appears from the Protocol of Conference between the High Commissioners that the British Commissioners presented the claims of the people of Canada, and were instructed to state that they were regarded by her Majesty's Government as coming within the class of subjects indicated by Sir Edward Thornton in his letter of 26th January last, as subjects for the consideration of the Joint High Commissioners. The Earl of Kimberley states that it was with much regret that Her Majesty's Government acquiesced in the omission of these claims from the general settlement of outstanding questions between Great Britain and the United States; and the Committee of the Privy Council, while fully participating in that regret, must add that the fact that this Fenian organization is still in full vigour, and that there seems no reason to hope that the United States' Government will perform its duty as a friendly neighbour any better in the future than in the past, leads them to entertain a just apprehension that the outstanding subject of difference with the United States is the one of all others which is of special importance to the Dominion. They must add, that they are not aware that during the existence of this Fenian organization, which for nearly seven years has been a cause of irritation and expense to the people of Canada, Her Majesty's Government have made any vigorous effort to induce the Government of the United States to perform its duty to a neighbouring people, who earnestly desire to live with them on terms of amity, and who during the civil war loyally performed all the duties of neutrals to the expressed satisfaction of the Government of the United States. On the contrary, while in the opinion of the Government and the entire people of Canada, the Government of the United States neglected, until much too late, to take the necessary measures to prevent the Fenian invasion of 1870, Her Majesty's Government hastened to acknowledge, by cable telegram, the prompt action of the President, and to thank him for it. The Committee of the Privy Council will only add, on this painful subject, that it is one on which the greatest unanimity exists among all classes of the people throughout the Dominion, and the failure of the High Commissioners to deal with it has been one cause of the prevailing dissatisfaction with the Treaty of Washington.

The Committee of the Privy Council will proceed to the consideration of the other subject of dissatisfaction in Canada, viz. the cession to the citizens of the United States of the right to the use of the inshore fisheries in common with the people of Canada. The Earl of Kimberley, after observing that the Canadian Government took the initiative in suggesting that a joint British and American Commission should be appointed, with a view to settle the disputes which had arisen as to the interpretation of the Treaty of 1818, proceeds to state that "the causes of the difficulty lay deeper than any question of interpretation," that "the discussion of such points as the correct definition of bays could not lead to a friendly agreement with the United States," and that "it was necessary therefore to endeavour to find an equivalent which the United States might be willing to give in return for the fishery privileges."

In the foregoing opinion of the Earl of Kimberley the Committee of the Privy Council are unable to concur, and they cannot but regret that no opportunity was afforded them of communicating to Her Majesty's Government their views on a subject of so much importance to Canada, prior to the meeting of the Joint High Commission.

When the Canadian Government took the initiative of suggesting the appointment of a Joint British and American Commission they never contemplated the surrender of their territorial rights, and they had no reason to suppose that Her Majesty's Government entertained the sentiments expressed by the Earl of Kimberley in his recent Despatch. Had such sentiments been expressed to the delegate appointed by the Canadian Government to confer with his Lordship a few months before the appointment of the Commission, it would at least have been in their power to have remonstrated against the cession of the inshore fisheries; and it would moreover have prevented any member of the Canadian Government from acting as a member of the Joint High Commission unless on the clear understanding that no such cession should be embodied in the Treaty without their consent. The expediency of the cession of a common right to the inshore fisheries has been defended on the ground that such a sacrifice on the part of Canada should be made in the interests of peace. The Committee of the Privy Council, as they have already observed, would have been prepared to recommend any necessary concession for so desirable an object, but they must remind the Earl of Kimberley that the original proposition of Sir Edward Thornton, as appears by his letter of 26th January, was that "a friendly and complete understanding should be come to between the two Governments as to the extent of the rights which belong to the citizens of the United States and Her Majesty's subjects respectively, with reference to the fisheries on the coasts of Her Majesty's possessions in North America."

In his reply, dated 30th January last, Mr. Secretary Fish informs Sir Edward Thornton that the President instructs him to say that "he shares with Her Majesty's Government the appreciation of the importance of a friendly and complete understanding between the two Governments with reference to the subjects specially suggested for the consideration of the proposed Joint High Commission."

In accordance with the explicit understanding thus arrived at between the two Governments, Earl Granville issued instructions to Her Majesty's High Commission, which, in the opinion of the Committee of the Privy Council, covered the whole ground of controversy.

The United States had never pretended to claim a right on the part of their citizens to fish within three marine miles of the coasts and bays, according to their limited definition of the latter term; and although the right to enjoy the use of the inshore fisheries might fairly have been made the subject of negotiation, with the view of ascertaining whether any proper equivalents could be found for such a concession, the United States was precluded by the original correspondence from insisting on it as a condition of the treaty. The abandonment of the exclusive right to the inshore fisheries, without adequate compensation, was not therefore necessary in order to come to a satisfactory understanding on the points really at issue.

The Committee of the Privy Council forbear from entering into a controversial discussion as to the expediency of trying to influence the United States to adopt a more liberal commercial policy. They must, however, disclaim most emphatically the imputation of desiring to imperil the peace of the whole Empire in order to force the American Government to change its commercial policy. They have for a considerable time back ceased to urge the United States to alter their commercial policy, but they are of opinion that when Canada is asked to surrender her inshore fisheries to foreigners, she is fairly entitled to name the proper equivalent. The Committee of the Privy Council may observe, that the opposition of the Government of the United States to reciprocal free trade in the products of the two countries was just as strong for some years prior to 1854 as it has been since the termination of the Reciprocity Treaty, and that the Treaty of 1854 was obtained chiefly by the vigorous protection of the fisheries which preceded it; and that but for the conciliatory policy on the subject of the fisheries, which Her Majesty's Government induced Canada to adopt after the abrogation of the Treaty of 1854 by the United States, it is not improbable that there would have been no difficulty in obtaining its renewal. The Committee of the Privy Council have adverted to the policy of Her Majesty's Government, because the Earl of Kimberley has stated that there is no difference in principle between a money payment and "the system of licences calculated at so many dollars a ton, which was adopted by the Colonial Government for several years after the termination of the Reciprocity Treaty." Reference to the correspondence will prove that the licence system was reluctantly adopted by the Canadian Government as a substitute for the still more objectionable policy pressed upon it by Her Majesty's Government, it having been clearly understood that the arrangement was of a temporary character. In his Despatch of the 3rd March, 1866, Mr. Secretary Cardwell observed: "Her Majesty's Government do not feel disinclined to allow the United States for the season of 1866 the freedom of fishing granted to them in 1854, on the distinct understanding that unless some satisfactory arrangements between the two countries be made during the course of the year this privilege will cease, and all concessions made in the Treaty of 1854 will be liable to be withdrawn." The principle of a money payment for the concession of territorial rights has ever been most repugnant to the feelings of the Canadian people, and has only been entertained in deference to the wishes of the Imperial Government. What the Canadians were willing under the circumstances to accept as an equivalent was the concession of certain commercial advantages, and it has therefore been most unsatisfactory to them that Her Majesty's Government should have consented to cede the use of the inshore fisheries to foreigners for considerations which are deemed wholly inadequate. The Committee of the Privy Council need not enlarge further on the objectionable features of the Treaty as it bears on Canadian interests. These are admitted by many, who think that Canada should make sacrifices for the general interests of the Empire. The people of Canada, on the other hand, seem to be unable to comprehend that there is any existing necessity for the cession of the right to use their inshore fisheries without adequate compensation. They have failed to discover that in the settlement of the so-called 'Alabama' claims, which was the most important question in dispute between the two nations, England gained such advantages as to be required to make further concessions at the expense of Canada, nor is there anything in the Earl of Kimberley's Despatch to support such a view of the question. The other parts of the Treaty are equally, if not more, advantageous to the United States than to Canada, and the fishery question must, consequently, be considered on its own merits; and if so considered, no reason has yet been advanced to induce Canada to cede her inshore fisheries for what Her Majesty's Government have admitted to be an inadequate consideration. Having thus stated their views on the two chief objections to the late Treaty of Washington, the Committee of the Privy Council will proceed to the consideration of the correspondence between Sir Edward Thornton and Mr. Fish, transmitted in the Earl of Kimberley's Despatch of the 17th of June, and of his Lordship's remarks thereon. This subject has already been under the consideration of the Committee of the Privy Council, and a Report, dated the 7th June, embodying their views on the subject, was transmitted to the Earl of Kimberley by your Excellency. In his Despatch of 26th June, acknowledging the receipt of that Report, the Earl of Kimberley refers to his Despatch of the 17th of that month, and "trusts that the Canadian Government will, on mature consideration, accede to the proposal of the United States' Government on this subject." The Committee of the Privy Council in expressing their adherence to their Report of the 7th of June, must add, that the inapplicability of the precedent of 1854, under which the action of the Canadian Parliament was anticipated by the Government, to the circumstances now existing appears to them manifest. The Treaty of 1854 was negotiated with the concurrence of the Provincial Governments represented at Washington, and met with the general approbation of the people; whereas the fishery clauses of the late Treaty were adopted against the advice of the Canadian Government, and have been generally disapproved of in all parts of the Dominion.

There can hardly be a doubt that any action on the part of the Canadian Government in anticipation of the decision of Parliament would increase the discontent which now exists. The Committee of the Privy Council request that your Excellency will communicate to the Earl of Kimberley the views which they entertain on the subject of the Treaty of Washington in so far as it affects the interests of the Dominion.

MY LORD,

Downing Street, November 23, 1871.

HER Majesty's Government have not failed to consider with attention the Report of the Committee of the Privy Council of the Dominion on the Treaty of Washington, which was enclosed in your Lordship's Despatch, No. 149,* of August 15.

* Page 9.

I need scarcely say that Her Majesty's Government regret that your Ministers should have found so much to object to in the provisions of the Treaty, but they remain themselves of opinion, for the reasons which were fully stated in my Despatch of June 17 last,† that, looked at as a whole, the Treaty is beneficial to the interests of the Dominion. I shall endeavour as far as possible to avoid entering into further discussion of the clauses of the Treaty which apply especially to Canada, as I cannot think that any advantage would result from a prolonged controversy between the two Governments as to the details of the Treaty and the manner in which the negotiation was conducted. There are, however, two or three statements in the Report which it is necessary that I should not leave unnoticed.

CANADA.

The Committee seem to be under the impression that the right to participate in the colonial inshore fisheries has been conceded to the United States without the previous consent of Canada. On this I have to observe that provision has been made for obtaining the assent of Canada in the manner which is strictly in accordance with constitutional usage, namely, by stipulating that the Fishery Articles shall not come into force without the previous assent of the Dominion Parliament. If the Crown were to conclude a similar Treaty as regards the fisheries of the United Kingdom, the assent of the Imperial Parliament would be reserved in no other manner.

I must also point out that the Committee are under an entire misapprehension in supposing that the cession of the fishery rights is to be made for "what Her Majesty's Government have admitted to be an inadequate consideration." If you will refer to my Despatch of June 17 you will find that it was there stated that "the reciprocal concession of free fishing, with free import of fish and fish oil, together with the payment of such a sum of money as may fairly represent the excess of value of the Colonial over the American concession, seems to Her Majesty's Government to be an equitable solution of the difficulty."

Lastly, I must advert to the statement that "when the Canadian Government took the initiative in suggesting the appointment of a joint British and American Commission they never contemplated the surrender of their territorial rights, and they had no reason to suppose that Her Majesty's Government entertained the sentiments expressed by the Earl of Kimberley in his recent Despatch. Had such sentiments been expressed to the Delegate appointed by the Canadian Government to confer with his Lordship a few months before the appointment of the Commission, it would at least have been in their power to have remonstrated against the cession of the inshore fisheries, and it would moreover have prevented any member of the Canadian Government from acting as a member of the Joint High Commission, unless on the clear understanding that no such cession should be embodied in the Treaty without their consent."

It is true, no doubt, that in the conversation which I had with Mr. Campbell on the subject of the appointment of a joint British and American Commission, I did not allude to the possibility of such a Commission leading to an arrangement by which United States' fishermen should be admitted to participation in the colonial inshore fisheries, but I could not then anticipate that an extended negotiation, embracing all the questions at issue between Great Britain and the United States, would arise out of the proposal to appoint a Commission upon the fisheries; and when the Joint High Commission was appointed, it was distinctly intimated through your Lordship to Sir John Macdonald, with reference to the fisheries, before he accepted the office of Commissioner, that it was impossible for Her Majesty's Government to pledge themselves to a foregone conclusion on any particular point before entering into the negotiation.

I HAVE the honour to enclose, for your Lordship's consideration, a Minute of the Privy Council of the Dominion, which conveys the reply of that body to your Lordship's Despatch, No. 561,* of the 23rd November last, and urges the request for an Imperial guarantee to a Canadian loan not to exceed four millions, i.e. half the amount to be expended on the railway to the Pacific, and the enlargement of the St. Lawrence canals.

COPY of a REPORT of a COMMITTEE of the HONOURABLE the PRIVY COUNCIL, approved by His Excellency the GOVERNOR-GENERAL on the 20th January, 1872.

Enclosure in
No. 10.

The Committee of the Privy Council have had under their consideration the Earl of Kimberley's Despatch to your Excellency, dated the 23rd of November, 1871, on the subject of the Report of the Privy Council, dated the 28th July, and transmitted in your Excellency's Despatch of 15th of August. The object of that Report was to explain to Her Majesty's Government that much dissatisfaction prevailed in Canada owing to the absence of all provision in the Treaty of Washington for the settlement of the losses incurred by Canada in consequence of the raids of citizens of the United States on British territory, and also owing to the cession of the Canadian fisheries for an inadequate consideration.

The Committee of Council were aware from the Earl of Kimberley's Despatch of the 17th June, 1871, that Her Majesty's Government were very desirous that the Acts necessary to give effect to the fishery clauses of the Treaty of Washington should be passed by the Canadian Parliament, and they had hoped that some proposition might be made by Her Majesty's Government in reply to their Report that would enable them to propose such measures with a fair prospect of success. In the Earl of Kimberley's Despatch to your Excellency, dated 23rd of November, no reference whatever is made to the subject of the Fenian raids; and with regard to the fishery clauses of the Treaty, the only inference to be drawn from the Despatch is that the objections raised by the Committee of Council are of very little weight.

The Committee of Council readily admit that further controversial discussion on the points on which differences of opinion unfortunately exist between the two Governments would be unprofitable.

It is, however, due to both Her Majesty's Government and to themselves that they should frankly explain to the former the conclusion at which they have arrived on the two questions discussed in their Report of the 28th of July last.

They maintain that Canada has a just claim to compensation for the expenses incurred in consequence of the Fenian raids.

It seems unnecessary to support this opinion by further argument.

Although the Committee of Council deem it unnecessary to dwell on the objections which they entertain to the fishery clauses in the Treaty, they desire to offer an explanation with reference to the statement in their former Report to which the Earl of Kimberley has taken exception, and which was to the effect that Her Majesty's Government had ceded the rights of fishery for what they admitted to be an inadequate consideration.

In the course of the negotiations the United States' Commissioners had offered as an equivalent for the rights of fishery to admit Canadian coal and salt free of duty, and lumber after the 1st July, 1874.

This was deemed both by the Imperial and Canadian Governments an inadequate offer, and a counter proposition was made by the British Commissioners that lumber should be admitted free immediately, and that in consideration of the continued exclusion of cereals, live stock, and other articles admitted under the Treaty of 1854, a sum of money should be paid to Canada.

The United States' Commissioners not only refused the counter-proposition, but withdrew their former offer, substituting one which the Committee of Council infer, from the Earl of Kimberley's Despatch, was in the opinion of Her Majesty's Government, more favourable to Canada than that which had been rejected as inadequate.

Wide, however, as are the differences of opinion on this Continent regarding the Treaty, there is but one opinion on the point under consideration. It is clear that the United States preferred paying a sum of money to the concession of commercial advantages to Canada, and the Committee of Council feel assured that there is not a single member of the Canadian Parliament who would not have much preferred the rejected proposition to that which was finally adopted.

The Committee of Council cannot, with the Earl of Kimberley's Despatch before them, continue to affirm that Her Majesty's Government are of opinion that the cession of the fishery rights was made for an inadequate consideration; but they regret they are themselves of a different opinion.

While still adhering to their expressed opinions as to the Fishery Articles of the Treaty of Washington, they are yet most anxious to meet the views of Her Majesty's Government, and to be placed in a position to propose the necessary legislative measures, and they will therefore proceed to make a suggestion which they earnestly hope may receive a favourable response. The adoption of the principle of a money payment in satisfaction of the expenses incurred by the Fenian raids would not only be of no assistance with reference to the Treaty, but might lead to some complications. It is not improbable that differences of opinion would arise in the discussion of the details of those claims between the two Governments which might lead to mutual dissatisfaction. Again, such a solution of the question would necessitate a discussion in the Imperial Parliament, in the course of which opinions might be expressed by members which might irritate the people of Canada, and might, moreover, encourage the Fenian leaders in the United States, who have not ceased their agitation. There is, in the opinion of the Committee of Council, a mode by which their hands might be so materially strengthened that they would be enabled not only to abandon all claims on account of the Fenian raids, but likewise to propose, with a fair prospect of success, the measures necessary to give effect to those clauses in the Treaty of Washington which require the concurrence of the Dominion Parliament.

That mode is by an Imperial guarantee to a portion of the loan which it will be necessary for Canada to raise in order to procure the construction of certain important public works, which will be highly beneficial to the United Kingdom as well as to Canada.

It is not pretended that the construction of these works is contingent on an Imperial guarantee. The credit of Canada has never stood so high in the money market as at the present time, its 5 per cent. securities being at a premium. But there is no doubt that with the Imperial guarantee a considerable saving of interest could be effected.

The Committee of Council feel assured that Her Majesty's Government will recognize the scrupulous good faith which has invariably been observed by Canada under Governments of various shades of politics Her Majesty's Government are aware that one of the conditions on which British Columbia joined the Confederation was that Canada should procure the construction of an inter-oceanic railroad. In order to procure the construction of this gigantic work a cash subsidy will have to be granted to the company undertaking it, to the extent, in all probability, of five millions sterling. This railroad will open up for settlement the vast prairies of the North West, which will sustain an enormous population. According to the most reliable statistics the immigration from the United Kingdom to Canada is in about the proportion of one to six to that from the United Kingdom to the United States, the population of the United States being more than ten times as great as that of Canada. On the other hand the imports into Canada of staple articles of British manufacture, such as cottons, woollens, and iron and hardware, are about three times as large in proportion to the population as those into the United States. It is therefore clearly the interest of the United Kingdom that the British North West territories should be opened for settlement as speedily as possible; and to effect this object the Canadian Pacific Railroad is indispensably necessary. That railroad, it may be added, would in all probability be found the most eligible mode of conveying a portion of Her Majesty's mails to the East. The time has arrived when the enlargement and extension of the Canadian canals, so earnestly desired by the United States, as appears by the Protocols attached to the Treaty of Washington, can no longer be postponed. The required works must be constructed by the Government, and will cost about three millions sterling, the aggregate for the railroad and canals being eight millions. The revenues of Canada are in a most satisfactory condition, and fully able to bear the increased charge which will be gradually thrown upon them. The taxes are much less than in the adjoining Republic, and are cheerfully borne by the people.

The Committee of Council are of opinion that Her Majesty's Government might fairly be urged to propose to Parliament a guarantee for a Canadian loan not to exceed four millions sterling, on the condition that such guaranteed loan should be raised at the same time and in equal proportion with a Canadian unguaranteed loan for the same objects.

The Committee of Council do not believe that any better mode can be suggested by which they would be enabled to surmount the difficulties in the way of their obtaining the consent of the Canadian Parliament to the measures necessary to give effect to the Treaty of Washington than that which they have felt it their duty to recommend.

The Committee of Council trust that, should other difficulties be removed, Her Majesty's Government will enable them to assure the Canadian Parliament that any recommendation made by Canada to terminate the Articles of the Treaty of Washington, numbered 18 to 25 inclusive, and likewise Article 30, in conformity with Article 33, would be acted on.

The EARL OF KIMBERLEY to The LORD LISGAR.

(No. 58.)

MY LORD,

Downing Street, March 18, 1872.

HER Majesty's Government have given their most careful attention to the Report of the Committee of the Canadian Privy Council enclosed in your Lordship's Despatch, No. 13,* of January 22. The Committee state, that while adhering to their opinions as to the Fishery Articles of the Treaty of Washington, they are yet most anxious to meet the views of Her Majesty's Government, and to be placed in a position to propose the necessary legislative measures. They maintain that Canada has a just claim for compensation for expenses incurred in consequence of the Fenian raids, but they are of opinion that the adoption of the principle of a money payment in satisfaction of those expenses would be of no assistance with reference to the Treaty, and would be open to objection on other grounds. They therefore suggest another mode of settlement by which, in their opinion, their hands might be so materially strengthened that they would be enabled, not only to abandon all claims on account of the Fenian raids, but likewise to propose to the Dominion Parliament, with a fair prospect of success, the measures necessary to give effect to the Treaty.

Their suggestion is, that Her Majesty's Government should propose to Parliament a guarantee for a Canadian loan, not exceeding four millions sterling, being half the amount (8,000,000*l.*) which it is intended to raise for the purpose of constructing the railroad through British territory to the Pacific, and of enlarging and extending the Canadian canals.

Her Majesty's Government have considered this suggestion with an earnest desire to remove the difficulties which are felt by the Canadian Government, and I have now to convey to you the conclusions at which they have arrived. They are of opinion that the most convenient course will be that it should be provided in the Acts to be passed by the Dominion Parliament to give effect to the Treaty, that such Acts should only come into force upon the issue of a Proclamation by the Governor-General in Council bringing them into operation. On their part, Her Majesty's Government will engage that when the Treaty shall have taken effect by the issue of such Proclamation, they will propose to Parliament to guarantee a Canadian loan of 2,500,000*l.*, such loan to be applied to the purposes indicated by the Council, namely, the construction of the railroad through British territory from Canada to the Pacific, and the improvement and enlargement of the Canadian canals, and to be raised at the same time and in equal proportion with the Canadian unguaranteed loan for the same objects, on the understanding that Canada abandons all claims on this country on account of the Fenian raids. As regards the request of the Privy Council that Her Majesty's Government will enable them to assure the Dominion Parliament that any recommendation made by Canada to terminate the Articles of the Treaty numbered 18 to 25 inclusive, and likewise Article 30 in conformity with Article 33, would be acted on, I may observe, that no such assurance was asked or given in the case of the Reciprocity Treaty, but Her Majesty's Government recognize that it is not unreasonable that Canada should desire some assurance on this point, and they have, therefore, no hesitation in declaring that the greatest deference would be paid to the expression of the wishes of the Dominion, signified by Addresses from both Houses of the Dominion Parliament, and that those wishes would certainly be attended to, subject, of course, to the necessary reservation of Her Majesty's discretion to take into consideration, in the interests of the whole Empire, the state of her relations with Foreign Powers at the particular juncture.

I have already conveyed to your Lordship, by telegraph, the substance of this Despatch.

Enclosure.

COPY of a REPORT of a COMMITTEE of the HONOURABLE the PRIVY COUNCIL, approved by His Excellency the GOVERNOR-GENERAL, on the 15th day of April, 1872.

Enclosure.

The Committee of the Privy Council have had under their consideration the Earl of Kimberley's Despatch to your Excellency, dated the 18th ultimo, communicating the views of Her Majesty's Imperial Government on the proposition submitted in the Report of the Privy Council, transmitted in your Excellency's Despatch of 22nd January last.

From the Despatch it appears that Her Majesty's Government are of opinion that the most convenient course will be that it should be provided in the Acts to be passed by the Dominion Parliament to give effect to the Treaty, that such Acts should only come into force upon the issue of a Proclamation by the Governor-General in Council bringing them into operation; that on their part Her Majesty's Government will engage that when the Treaty shall have taken effect by the issue of such Proclamation, they will propose to Parliament to guarantee a Canadian Loan of £2,500,000. Such Loan to be applied to the purposes indicated by the Council, namely, the construction of the railroad through British territory from Canada to the Pacific, and the improvement and enlargement of the Canadian canals; and to be raised at the same time and in equal proportions with the Canadian unguaranteed Loan for the same objects, on the understanding that Canada abandon all claims on England on account of the Fenian Raids.

The Earl of Kimberley further observes that Her Majesty's Government will enable the Canadian Government to assure the Dominion Parliament that any recommendation made by Canada to terminate the Articles of the Treaty numbered 18 to 25 inclusive, and likewise Article 30, in conformity with Article 33, will be acted on; that they have no hesitation in declaring that the greatest deference would be paid to the expression of the wishes of the Dominion, signified by Addresses from both Houses of the Dominion Parliament, and that those wishes would certainly be attended to, subject of course to the necessary reservation of Her Majesty's discretion to take into consideration, in the interests of the whole Empire, the state of Her relations with Foreign Powers at the particular juncture.

The Committee of the Privy Council feel that although Her Majesty's Government have been unable to accede to their proposition in full, it is nevertheless their duty, in the interests both of Canada and the Empire at large, to accept the modified proposition of the Earl of Kimberley, and they will accordingly be prepared to propose to the Canadian Parliament the measures necessary to give effect to those clauses of the Treaty relative to Canada.

No. 1.

COPY of a REPORT of a COMMITTEE of the HONOURABLE PRIVY COUNCIL, dated 13th June, 1871.

The Committee of Council have had under consideration a communication from the Lieut.-Governor of New Brunswick, enclosing a joint Address from the Legislative Council and Assembly of that Province on the subject of the proposed concession of fishing rights to the citizens of the United States under the Treaty of Washington, and they respectfully advise that a copy of the same be transmitted by your Excellency to the Right Honourable the Secretary of State for the Colonies, for the information of Her Majesty's Government, as containing the views of the New Brunswick Legislature on that important question.

(Certified) WM. H. LEE,
Clerk, Privy Council, Canada.

To His Excellency the Right Honourable BARON LISGAR, P.C., K.C.B., G.C.M.G., Governor-General of the Dominion of Canada, &c., &c., &c.

The humble Address of the Legislative Council and House of Assembly of the Province of New Brunswick.

May it please your Excellency,—

Having had under consideration certain provisions of the Treaty signed at Washington on the 8th day of May instant by the respective Commissioners of Great Britain and the United States, we most respectfully submit that so far as the same relate to the fisheries, they are not satisfactory to the people of this Province, inasmuch as while they contain no definition of the existing rights and duties of the subjects and citizens of Great Britain and the United States, and postponing all questions growing out of the exercise and enforcements of such rights and duties, they prematurely and without sufficient considerations of Canadian interests moving thereto, substitute for the protection to which the British fisherman is fully entitled by public law, and which the recent enactments of the Parliament of Canada have largely secured, a policy of unlimited and dangerous concession.

The privileges accorded to the subjects of Great Britain by the 19th and 21st Articles of the Treaty are by no means an equivalent for the privileges conferred on the citizens of the United States by the 18th Article: the reciprocal privilege of fishing in certain American waters is barren and delusive, and the

2 CORRESPONDENCE RESPECTING THE TREATY OF

CANADA. mode of determining and accounting for the excess in value of the privileges accorded by the Government of the United States is erroneous in principle and impracticable in execution, and the considerations of advantage are too remote and uncertain.

We would respectfully submit that any Treaty relating to the free use of the fisheries, and to the navigation of the rivers and canals of Canada, should at the same time make such further provisions for the regulation of commerce and navigation as would render the same reciprocally beneficial and satisfactory; and we therefore hope that the Parliament of Canada will, under existing circumstances, adhere to and carry out the policy of protection of the fishery rights of the Dominion recently adopted, and will refuse its assent to the Articles of the said Treaty relating to the fisheries.

We respectfully urge upon your Excellency in Council the consideration of the matters herein set forth, and request that your Excellency will be pleased to cause this Address to be laid before the Dominion Parliament at its next session.

(Signed) JOHN S. SAUNDERS,
President of the Legislative Council.

DESPATCH FROM THE GOVERNOR.

No. 1.

No. 1.

Governor HILL, C.B., to The EARL OF KIMBERLEY.

(No. 55.)

Government House, Newfoundland, July 14, 1871.

(Received August 8, 1871.)

MY LORD,

I HAVE the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your Lordship's Despatch, No. 28,* of the 17th June, enclosing copies of the Treaty signed at Washington on the 8th May by the Joint High Commissioners, which has been ratified by Her Majesty and by the President of the United States; of the instructions to Her Majesty's High Commissioners, and Protocols of the Conferences held by the Commission; of two notes which have passed between Sir E. Thornton and Mr. Fish; and of a Despatch—of 17th June—which your Lordship has addressed to the Governor-General of Canada stating the views of Her Majesty's Government on these important documents.

* Page 4.

2. I observe in the copy now before me of the Despatch of Mr. Secretary Fish (8th May, 1871) to Sir E. Thornton, an omission which bears very materially upon the peculiar interests of this Colony, respecting the immediate acquiescence of the Government of Newfoundland in the opinions of Her Majesty's Government as regards the prompt admission of American fishermen to the provisional use—as far as this Island is concerned—of the privileges granted to them by the Treaty.

3. Respecting the immediate admission of American fishermen into British waters, Mr. Fish writes:—"As several Articles of the Treaty which has been signed this day "relating to the admission of citizens of the United States to fish within the territorial "waters of Her Britannic Majesty on the coast of Canada, Prince Edward Island, and "Newfoundland, cannot come into full operation until the legislation contemplated in "that instrument shall have taken place," &c. &c. And again, in writing of the restoration to British subjects of certain duties by Congress, Mr. Fish observes:—"That any "duties which may have been collected on and after the first day of July next on fish- "oil and fish (except fish of the inland lakes and of the rivers falling into the same, and "except fish preserved in oil), the produce of the fisheries of the Dominion of Canada "and of Prince Edward Island, shall be returned and refunded to the parties paying "the same, if a similar arrangement is made with respect to the admission into the "British Possessions of fish oil and fish (with the like exception) being the produce of "the fisheries of the United States." The word "Newfoundland," included in the first extract from Mr. Fish's Despatch, is excluded from the latter, and if intentional the omission in question may act detrimentally towards the future acceptance of the terms of Treaty by the Colonial Legislature.

4. My Ministers, however, to whom I have communicated the whole of the important documents respecting the Washington Treaty, are willing to consider this omission as unintentional; and although anxious to obtain information on this point, have resolved to comply at once with the wishes of Her Majesty's Government as regards the admission, during the present season, of citizens of the United States to the provisional use of the privileges granted to them by the Treaty, so far as lies within the jurisdiction of the Government of Newfoundland to bestow.

5. There is another point in reference to the correspondence relative to the Treaty to which my Advisers invite your Lordship's attention. The copy of Sir E. Thornton's reply (9th May, 1871) to Mr. Fish contains, in connection with the repayment of import duties by Congress, the following words:—"The above-mentioned Colonial Governments, "who would be asked to grant the immediate and certain right of fishing within the "territorial waters of those Colonies, whilst the return of the import duties on fish from the 1st July next promised by the United States is prospective and contingent on the action of Congress." The words "on fish oil"—following the words "that any duties which may have been collected on and after the first day of July next"—in Mr. Fish's note to Sir E. Thornton are in the reply thereto (from which the above extract is taken) omitted. The Executive Council beg to be advised on this head.

July 7, 1871.

6. I beg to transmit to your Lordship copy of a Minute of Council, signifying assent on the part of the Government of Newfoundland to the request contained in your Lordship's Despatch, No 28, of 17th June, respecting the Treaty of Washington.

SIR,

Downing Street, June 17, 1871.

I HAVE the honour to enclose, herewith, copies of the Treaty signed at Washington on May 8, by the Joint High Commissioners, which has been ratified by Her Majesty and by the President of the United States;—of the instructions to Her Majesty's High Commissioners, and Protocols of the Conferences held by the Commission;—of two notes which have passed between Sir E. Thornton and Mr. Fish;*—and of a Despatch of even date herewith,† which I have addressed to the Governor-General of Canada, stating the views of Her Majesty's Government on these important documents.

With reference to that part of my Despatch to Lord Lisgar which bears upon the proposed arrangement for the immediate provisional admission of the United States' fishermen to the colonial fisheries, I have to observe, that Her Majesty's Government are aware that under this Treaty, as under the Convention of 1854, Newfoundland is placed in a somewhat different position to that of the other Colonies interested; but they would strongly urge upon the Government of Newfoundland that it is most desirable for the general interests of the Empire that the same course should be pursued as in 1854, and that the application made by the United States' Government should be acceded to by Newfoundland, so that American fishermen may be at once allowed, during the present season, the provisional use of the privileges granted to them by the Treaty.

MY LORD,

Washington, May 12, 1871.

With reference to my Despatches, Nos. 146 and 147 of the 8th instant, I have the honour to enclose copy of a note addressed to me by Mr. Fish, expressing the hope entertained by the Government of the United States that Her Majesty's Government will urge the Governments of the Dominion of Canada, of Prince Edward Island, and of Newfoundland, to consent that American fishermen should be allowed to fish in the waters of the above Colonies during the coming season.

Your Lordship will observe that at the beginning of the second paragraph of the draft of the note which NEWFOUND- I forwarded in my Despatch, No. 146, the following words have been added :—"The Government of the LAND. "United States would be prepared at the same time to admit British subjects to the right of fishing in —"the waters of the United States specified in the Treaty; but"

I also enclose copy of my answer to Mr. Fish, and hope your Lordship will find that his note, with the addition above mentioned, and my answer, are in accordance with the terms of your Lordship's telegram of 9th inst., transmitted through Earl de Grey.

His Lordship has seen both the enclosed notes, and approves of their contents.

SIR,

Department of State, Washington, May 8, 1871.

As several Articles of the Treaty which has been signed this day, relating to the admission of citizens of the United States to fish within the territorial waters of Her Britannic Majesty on the coasts of Canada, Prince Edward Island, and Newfoundland, cannot come into full operation until the legislation contemplated in that instrument shall have taken place, and as it seems to be in accordance with the interests of both Governments, in furtherance of the objects and spirit of the Treaty, that the citizens of the United States should have the enjoyment of that liberty during the present season, I am directed by the President to express to you his hope that Her Majesty's Government will be prepared, in the event of the ratification of the Treaty, to make on their own behalf, and to urge the Governments of the Dominion of Canada, of Prince Edward Island, and of Newfoundland, to make, for the season referred to, within their respective jurisdictions, such relaxations and regulations as it may respectively be in their power to adopt, with a view to the admission of American fishermen to the liberty which it is proposed to secure to them by the Treaty. The Government of the United States would be prepared at the same time to admit British subjects to the right of fishing in the waters of the United States, specified in the Treaty; but as the admission into the United States free of duty of any articles which are by law subject to duty cannot be allowed without the sanction of Congress, the President will, in case the above suggestion meets with the views of the British Government, recommend and urge upon Congress at their next session, that any duties which may have been collected on and after the 1st day of July next, on fish-oil and fish (except fish of the inland lakes and of the rivers falling into the same, and except fish preserved in oil), the produce of the fisheries of the Dominion of Canada and of Prince Edward Island, shall be returned and refunded to the parties paying the same, if a similar arrangement is made with respect to the admission into the British possessions of fish-oil and fish (with the like exception), being the produce of the fisheries of the United States.

SIR,

I have the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your note of yesterday's date, and to inform you in reply that I have been authorized by Earl Granville to state that in the event of the ratification of the Treaty signed yesterday, Her Majesty's Government will be prepared to recommend to the Governments of the Dominion of Canada, of Prince Edward Island, and of Newfoundland, that the provisional arrangement proposed in your note above mentioned, with regard to the right of fishing by United States' citizens on the coasts of those British possessions and by British subjects in the waters of the United States described in Article XIX. of the Treaty, shall take effect during the coming season, on the understanding that the ultimate decision of this question must rest with the above-mentioned Colonial Governments, who would be asked to grant the immediate and certain right of fishing within the territorial waters of those Colonies, whilst the return of the import duties on fish from the 1st of July next, promised by the United States, is prospective and contingent on the action of Congress.

SIR,

WITH reference to the correspondence noted in the margin respecting the Treaty of Washington and the North American fisheries, I am directed by the Earl of Kimberley to transmit to you, to be laid before Earl Granville, copies of the enclosed Despatches received from the Governor of Newfoundland, and the Lieut.-Governor of Prince Edward Island, from which it will be seen that the Governments of these Islands agree to the admission to their respective inshore fisheries of the United States' fishermen during the present season.

I am also to enclose copies of the Despatches from the Secretary of State, to which these communications are replies.

The Despatch from the Governor of Newfoundland raises two questions on the correspondence which passed between Mr. Fish and Sir E. Thornton on the 8th and 9th of May last, copies of which were forwarded to this office in your letter of the 26th of that month.* Lord Kimberley requests that Lord Granville will enable him to give an explanation to the Governor on these points, and he would also be glad if his Lordship would inform him whether there is any objection to the proposal which it appears is to be made by the Government of Prince Edward Island, in the event of the Acts to give effect to the Treaty being passed by the Colonial Legislatures, for the appointment of a Representative from that Island to give information to the Commission which is to meet at Halifax under the 21st and 22nd Articles of the Treaty.

I HAVE laid before Earl Granville your letter of the 21st inst.,* enclosing copies of correspondence with the Governor of Newfoundland and the Lieutenant-Governor of Prince Edward Island respecting the provisional admission of American fishermen to the inshore fisheries of those Islands; and I am in reply to request that you will state to the Earl of Kimberley that Lord Granville has no doubt that the Government of Newfoundland is right in assuming that the omission of the mention of Newfoundland in the passage in Mr. Fish's note to Sir E. Thornton, referred to, was unintentional.

Her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires at Washington will, however, be instructed to call Mr. Fish's attention to the omission as being understood to be by inadvertence. His Lordship wishes the Government of Newfoundland to be informed that the intention of the two notes was that, pending reciprocal legislation, in return for the immediate provisional admission of American fishermen to the inshore fisheries, drawbacks should be granted on the import duties taken in the United States on the fish-oil and fish which are to be hereafter admitted free for a term of years under the 21st Article of the Treaty.

I am to add that, as regards the desire expressed by the Government of Prince Edward Island that some person should be appointed to attend the Commission at Halifax, it appears to Lord Granville that it would not only be permissible, but highly desirable, that Prince Edward Island and the other Provinces should furnish the fullest information before the Commission as to the value of the inshore fisheries on their coasts.

The 24th Article of the Treaty provides that the Commissioners shall be bound to receive such oral or written testimony as either Government may present, and it will, consequently, be competent for the Government of Prince Edward Island to send to Halifax any person who may be selected as best capable of giving evidence on its behalf.

MY LORD,

(Answered, No. 27, August 8, 1871, page 12.)

I HAVE the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your Lordship's Despatch, No. 22,* * Page 11. of the 17th of June, enclosing a copy of the Treaty of Washington and other documents relative thereto.

2. I have had several conversations with the leader of my Government upon the important question of admitting American fishermen to the privileges of our inshore fisheries provisionally and pending the consideration of the Treaty by the Legislature, and it affords me the greatest satisfaction to inform your Lordship that my Advisers seem disposed to meet the views of Her Majesty's Government in the matter, and to order the Colonial officers not to enforce the fishing laws against American fishermen during the present season. The question has not yet been formally considered in Council, but Mr. Pope informed me this morning that he thought his colleagues, with whom he had discussed it, would be prepared to concede the point which I urged upon him in the name of Her Majesty's Government.

3. I anticipate that the necessary instructions will be issued at the next meeting of the Executive Council, and that I shall be in a position to address your Lordship in detail, and with certainty, upon the subject by the mail of this day fortnight. Meanwhile I am sure that your Lordship will be gratified at the probability of the Government of Prince Edward Island responding promptly and loyally to the wish of Her Majesty's Government, as conveyed to me in your Lordship's Despatch under acknowledgment.

MY LORD,

(Answered, No. 32, September 3, 1871, page 12.)

IN continuation of my Despatch, No. 55,* of the 12th inst., I have now the honour * Supra. to forward a Minute prepared by my Advisers, in which they record the result of their July 17, 1871. deliberations on the subject of the Treaty of Washington and the other important documents which were forwarded to me with your Lordship's Despatch, No. 22,† of the † Page 11. 17th June last.

2. It is stated in the Minute that "the different Governments and Legislatures of this

PRINCE
ISLAND.

" Colony have always hoped that these fisheries " (the fisheries of Prince Edward Island) " would have done much to secure the advantages of another Reciprocity Treaty, or of " some tariff concessions authorizing the free admission " (into the United States) " of the " products of our agriculturists, who form the majority of our population, and which " would have resulted in promoting the prosperity of the Colony ; " and that in the opinion of the Council the inhabitants of Prince Edward Island are now asked " to " surrender to the citizens of the United States these invaluable fisheries without " receiving, in return, any just or fair equivalent such as was hoped to be obtained." In deference, however, to the strongly expressed wish of Her Majesty's Government in the matter, the Committee of the Executive Council (without giving any pledge as to the ultimate action of the Legislature) recommend " that the application made by the " United States' Government be acceded to, so that American fishermen may be at once " allowed, during the present season, the provisional use of the privileges granted to them " by the Treaty ; " and I have the honour to report that the Custom House officers were yesterday instructed to discontinue the enforcement of the fishery laws for the present season and until further orders.

3. I caused the United States' Consul at this port to be notified accordingly, and I simultaneously dispatched a similar notice to Sir Edward Thornton by telegraph.

4. I may add that in the event of the Acts necessary to give effect to the Treaty being passed by the Legislature of Prince Edward Island, my Government will apply to your Lordship for permission to send a representative to Halifax for the purpose of conferring with the agent of the Imperial Government, whose appointment is provided for in the concluding paragraph of Article 23 of the Treaty, and of urging upon him the claims of this Island to a just share, proportionate to the value of our fisheries, of whatever compensation may be awarded as an equivalent for the privileges which the colonists are asked to surrender. My Government are, of course, aware that Great Britain and the United States are to be represented before the Halifax Commission each by one agent only, but they believe that it would be competent to Her Majesty's Government to authorize the Imperial agent as aforesaid to receive information on the subject of our fisheries from a representative to be appointed by the Government of Prince Edward Island ; and this, should the Legislature assent to the Treaty, is what my Government hope that your Lordship will be pleased to accord.

5. I am confident that your Lordship will receive with much satisfaction the intimation contained in this Despatch, and that the prompt and loyal action of the Government of Prince Edward Island will predispose Her Majesty's Government to comply, as far as possible, with any reasonable request which my Advisers may consider it to be their duty to prefer.

The Earl of Kimberley,
&c. &c. &c.

I have, &c.,

Lieut.-Governor.

Enclosure in No. 2.

Council Chamber, July 17, 1871.

At a meeting of a Committee of the Executive Council of Prince Edward Island—present, The Hon. Mr. Pope, the Hon. Mr. Colonial Secretary, the Hon. Mr. Attorney-General, the Hon. Mr. Owen, the Hon. Mr. Richards :

The Committee of Council having under consideration Despatch, No. 22, dated at Downing Street, the 17th of June, 1871, from the Right Hon. Earl of Kimberley, Her Majesty's Principal Secretary of State for the Colonies, to his Honour Lieutenant-Governor Robinson, together with copies of the Treaty signed at Washington on the eighth day of May, and of protocols of the conferences held by the Commission, of two notes which have passed between Sir Edward Thornton and Mr. Secretary Fish, and of a Despatch addressed to the Governor-General of Canada, stating the views of Her Majesty's Government on these important documents, Her Majesty's Government in the Despatch first referred to strongly urge upon the Government of this Island that, for reasons stated in the Despatch from the Earl of Kimberley to Lord Lisgar, the same course should be pursued as in 1854, and the application made by the United States' Government acceded to by Prince Edward Island, so that American fishermen may be at once allowed, during the present season, the provisional use of the privileges granted to them by the Treaty.

Have respectfully to submit that Prince Edward Island is the most fertile and productive Province in British North America, in proportion to its extent ; that the natural market for its principal productions is to be found in the United States, as was very satisfactorily proved during the continuation of the Reciprocity Treaty of 1854 ; that the fisheries of this Island are the best and most valuable in America, and are much appreciated by the fishermen of the United States ; that the different Governments and Legislatures of this Colony have always hoped that these fisheries would have done much to secure the advantages of another Reciprocity Treaty, or of some tariff concessions authorizing the free admission of the products of our agriculturists, who form the majority of our population, and which would have resulted in promoting the prosperity of the Colony. That by the Treaty now under consideration, the inhabitants of this Island are asked to surrender to the citizens of the United States these invaluable fisheries, without receiving in return any just or fair equivalent such as was hoped to be obtained. The Earl of Kimberley, in his Despatch to Lord Lisgar, alludes to "the great importance to Canada of the right to convey goods in bond through the United States, which has been secured to her by Article 29, and the free navigation of Lake Michigan under Article 28, and the power of transshipping goods under Article 30, as valuable privileges which must not be overlooked in framing an estimate of the advantages which Canada will obtain."

Valuable to Canada as may be these privileges, the Committee submit that they do not at all affect Prince Edward Island. That the chief benefit to this Island would be the admission of fish and fish-oil into the markets of the United States, and this would not be generally felt by the people, inasmuch as this trade is now principally in the hands of a few American citizens. That the surrender by the United States of the right of fishing down to the 39th degree of latitude is comparatively worthless to the people of this Island, and as the United States' Government assert that the privileges accorded to the citizens of the United States under Article 18 of this Treaty are of no greater value than those accorded by Articles 19 and 21 to the subjects of Her Britannic Majesty, the amount of any money compensation that would be given to this Island would be insignificant.

The Earl of Kimberley, in his Despatch to Lord Lisgar, says, "In some respects a direct money payment is perhaps a more distinct recognition of the rights of the Colonies than a tariff concession, and there does not seem to be any difference in principle between the admission of American fishermen for a term of years in consideration of the payment of a sum of money in gross, and their admission under the system of licences calculated at so many dollars per ton, which was adopted by the Colonial Government for several years after the termination of the Reciprocity Treaty. In the latter case it must be observed the use of the fisheries was granted without any tariff concession whatever on the part of the United States, even as to the importation of fish."

The Committee submit that a commercial arrangement with the United States in consideration of the use of the fisheries would have been most acceptable, but as the Royal High Commissioners were unable to induce the American Government to change its commercial policy, the people of this Island being extremely loyal, and devotedly attached to British institutions, would be most unwilling to throw any obstacle in the way of an amicable settlement of all causes of difference between Great Britain and the United States, and would, therefore, willingly accept any reasonable money compensation, in addition to the privileges granted, as an equivalent; but under the Treaty nothing of the kind is guaranteed them.

The Committee deem it to be their duty further to state that the system referred to of granting licences to American fishermen for a money consideration was never approved of by the Government of this Island, but merely sanctioned in deference to the strongly expressed wish of the British Government in the matter,—and for the same reason the Committee now recommend that the application made by the United States' Government be acceded to, so that American fishermen may be at once allowed, during the present season, the provisional use of the privileges granted to them by the Treaty, without any pledge, however, on the part of the Government that the Legislature will pass the Acts to give effect to the Treaty, in which they feel that the interests of Prince Edward Island have not been fairly considered.

Adopted in Council, July 24, 1871.

Assistant Clerk, Executive Council.

No. 1.

The EARL OF KIMBERLEY to Lieut.-Governor ROBINSON.

(No. 22.)

SIR,

Downing Street, June 17, 1871.

I HAVE the honour to enclose herewith copies of the Treaty signed at Washington on May 8th by the Joint High Commissioners, which has been ratified by Her Majesty and by the President of the United States;—of the instructions to Her Majesty's High Commissioners, and Protocols of the Conferences held by the Commission;* of two notes which have passed between Sir E. Thornton and Mr. Fish,† and of a Despatch of even date herewith,‡ which I have addressed to the Governor-General of Canada, stating the views of Her Majesty's Government on these important documents.

With reference to that part of my Despatch to Lord Lisgar which bears upon the proposed arrangement for the immediate provisional admission of the United States' fishermen to the Colonial fisheries, I have to observe that Her Majesty's Government strongly urge upon the Government of Prince Edward Island that, for the reasons stated in the Despatch, the same course should be pursued as in 1854, and the application made by the United States' Government should be acceded to by Prince Edward Island, so that American fishermen may be at once allowed, during the present season, the provisional use of the privileges granted to them by the Treaty.

I HAVE received your Despatch, No. 55,* of 12th ult., acknowledging mine of the 17th June,† in which I forwarded to you a copy of the Treaty of Washington.

I have learnt, with much satisfaction, that your Government are likely to accede so promptly and readily to the wishes of Her Majesty's Government, that the United States' fishermen should be admitted provisionally to the inshore fisheries of Prince Edward Island during the present season.

SIR,

Downing Street, September 3, 1871.

I HAVE the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your Despatch, No. 59,‡ of the 25th of July, communicating to me the consent of your Government to the provisional admission of United States' fishermen during the present season to the privileges granted by the Treaty of Washington so far as concerns the Colony under your government. Her Majesty's Government have learnt with much satisfaction that the Prince Edward Island Government have so willingly acceded to their wishes in this respect. With regard to the observations contained in the Minute of Council which you have forwarded, to the effect that the Prince Edward Island Government would readily accept any reasonable money compensation in addition to the privileges granted as an equivalent, but that under the Treaty nothing of the kind is guaranteed, I do not understand why the Prince Edward Island Government should object to the reference of the question of the money compensation to arbitration, which seems to be the fairest way of determining such a point, more especially as the fact stated in the Minute, that the rights of fishing conceded by the United States are comparatively worthless, is, it must be presumed, capable of distinct proof. I will communicate with Lord Granville as to the wish of your Government, in the event of the Act necessary to give effect to the Treaty being passed, to appoint a representative to give information to the Commission which is to meet at Halifax.

My Lord,

Ottawa, May 15, 1873.

I HAVE the honour to inclose a copy of a Report of Council, submitting, for the consideration of Her Majesty's Government, a Report from the Minister of Marine and Fisheries on a petition from the Board of Trade of St. John, New Brunswick, respecting a Bill relating to shipping now before the Imperial Parliament.

I have, &c.

Inclosure 1 in No. 1.

Report of a Committee of the Honourable the Privy Council, approved by his Excellency the Governor-General on the 15th day of May, 1873.

THE Committee have had under consideration the Report dated 14th May, 1873, from the Honourable the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (annexed), on a petition from the Board of Trade of St. John, New Brunswick, in relation to a Bill now under the consideration of the Imperial Parliament, entitled "A Bill to provide for the Survey of certain Shipping, and to prevent Overloading," and they respectfully submit their concurrence in the said Report, and advise that a copy thereof be transmitted by your Excellency for the consideration of Her Majesty's Government.

Certified,

Clerk Privy Council, Canada.

Inclosure 2 in No. 1.

Ottawa, May 14, 1873.

THE Undersigned has had referred to him for report, by the Honourable the Privy Council of Canada, the annexed petition of the St. John, N. B., Board of Trade, in relation to a Bill now under the consideration of the Imperial Parliament, entitled "A Bill to provide for the survey of certain shipping and to prevent overloading;" upon which he begs to make the following Report:

In the said Petition the said St. John Board of Trade allege as follows:—

"1st. Whereas, by the proposed legislation in the British House of Commons by Mr. Plimsoll's Bill, it is feared by this Board that undue discrimination may be made in favour of iron ships and of Lloyds' Registry; therefore resolved that the Dominion Government be asked to use its influence to prevent any discrimination being made to the injury of our shipping interests, as is feared may be done by this Bill or by other measures that may be proposed, with a due regard being had at the same time to the security of life.

"2nd. Whereas Mr. Plimsoll's Bill for the survey of shipping will, if enacted, deprive the Provinces of the benefit hitherto enjoyed from classification in Bureau Veritas, and, if passed, will be most disastrous to the shipping property under that classification; and

"Whereas the said Bill discriminates against wooden ships and in favour of iron."

The Undersigned has also had referred to him the annexed extract from the minutes of a special meeting of the Halifax, N.S., Chamber of Commerce, with resolution embodied therein upon the same subject.

The Undersigned has carefully examined the Bill referred to, and is convinced that if it passes into law as it is introduced, it will seriously interfere with the shipping of Canada. To illustrate this, he will refer to such portions of the Bill as in his opinion will have that result.

The 4th Section of the said Bill prescribes that every British ship shall be surveyed by an officer of the British Board of Trade, and no ship shall proceed on any voyage from a British port unless the owner or master of such ship has such certificate from the Board of Trade as is by this Act prescribed, and which certificate is in force, and any officer of Customs may detain any British ship until such certificate is produced; and it further declares that "if any British ship proceeds on a voyage without such certificate, the owner and master of such ship shall each incur a penalty not exceeding 50%, and a further penalty not exceeding 10% for every day during which such voyage shall continue."

The 5th Section provides how the survey shall be made, and declares that "in case any such surveyor is not satisfied with the result of such survey he shall deliver to the owner or master of such ship a requisition in writing containing the particulars of the works or other matters in his judgment necessary to render such ship seaworthy, and such owner or master shall, before he receives a declaration of survey, comply with the terms of such requisition to the satisfaction of such surveyor, unless the Board of Trade shall, after appeal, otherwise order and direct." The said Section further provides that the certificate of a surveyor or the secretary of the Committee of Management of Lloyds' Register of British and Foreign shipping, or of the Liverpool Underwriters' Registry for iron vessels shall be received "in lieu of, and the same shall, for the purposes of obtaining a certificate under this Act, be of the same force and effect as a declaration of survey by one of the surveyors of the Board of Trade."

The Bill, in Sections 15 to 18 inclusive, deals with the question of deck loads; and, in Section 17, prohibits vessels, under a severe penalty, except as therein stated, from entering a British port with a deck load between the 1st day of January and the 31st day of March, or between the 15th September and the 31st December in any year.

The Bill, in Sections 19 and 20, deals with the question of the "load line" or "free board" of British vessels, and, by the 4th Schedule, defines how this shall be ascertained, and regulates the same, both as applicable to iron and wooden ships.

In remarking, therefore, upon the way in which the Canadian ships will be affected by this Bill it will be perceived that, in the first place, it is only applicable to British and not to foreign ships; and that as Canadian registered vessels are British ships, and are recognized as such by the British Merchant Shipping Act of 1854, Canadian vessels will be subject, when in British ports outside the limits of Canada, to restrictions from which foreign ships, with which they have to compete, are exempted, and Canadian vessels are thereby placed at a disadvantage in British ports as compared with foreign ships.

It may be said that they are, however, placed upon the same footing as British vessels owned in the United Kingdom, but, in effect, this is not the case; for while the 4th section of the Act makes a survey compulsory, and the requirements of the surveyor absolute (subject to the appeal stated) it gives to the certificates of the officers of the two institutions therein named, viz., Lloyds' Registry and the Liverpool Underwriters' Registry for iron vessels, the same force and value as is given to the certificates of the officers of the Board of Trade; and as the greater proportion of the shipping registered in the ports of the United Kingdom has been built under the supervision of, and surveyed and classed by, the officers of one or other of these Institutions, these certificates can be given without the necessity, in a large majority of cases, of opening up the ships or incurring much expense. This is, however, not the case with Canadian shipping. It is alleged, and I believe with truth, that a very large proportion of the sea-going tonnage of Canada, and more especially of the Provinces of New Brunswick and Nova Scotia, is built and classed under the supervision of and by the officers of Bureau Veritas, and as it is a rival institution to Lloyd's, and has in the past four years largely superseded it in the classification of Canadian ships, it could scarcely be expected that the Committee of Lloyd's, or their officers, would accept the inspection and classification of Bureau Veritas as sufficient, and especially as their rules of construction differ so widely, and it would therefore necessarily follow that in every case of the thousands of sea-going vessels which Canada owns, and which as before stated, are largely classed in Bureau Veritas, the greater portion of them before they could sail out of a British port (other than a Canadian port) would probably have to go into dock, be opened up, and incur the expense and delay of a re-inspection and classification either by the officers of the Board of Trade or Lloyd's surveyors; and this means in each case a large amount of money, while the ships of the United Kingdom, built under Lloyd's, would avoid this difficulty, expense, and delay.

There is, however, another danger which Canadian shipowners have to fear from the state of facts referred to, viz., that inasmuch as Lloyd's and Bureau Veritas vary considerably in respect to scantling, materials, fastenings, outfits, &c., and as by the Bill referred to, it may be reasonably assumed that Lloyd's requirements of construction will be made the standard of efficiency, upon which certificates will be issued by the Board of Trade, a large proportion of our vessels will be in danger of being refused certificates altogether, or at least they will only be obtained after much expense and delay have arisen.

It must, therefore, be apparent that under the Bill as proposed, Canadian ships would be placed at a great disadvantage, as well with foreign ships as with vessels of the United Kingdom.

In relation to the next feature of the Bill, viz., the regulation of deck loads, the Undersigned would observe that the 17th section is objectionable, and will seriously affect not only the shipping, but the lumber trade of Canada, inasmuch as it imposes very severe penalties for entering a British port with a deck load within the limitation of time hereinbefore named. The Parliament of Canada at its present session passed a law regulating the carriage of deck loads (a copy of which is hereto annexed). By this law it will be perceived that vessels are prohibited from carrying deck loads, from the 1st of October to the 16th March, higher than three feet above the deck, and that only of sawn lumber with spare spars for ship's use on voyages from Canada to Europe, but to that extent they are so permitted, and at other periods there is no restriction—and further, that vessels sailing between Canadian ports and the West Indies are restricted, between the 15th November and 16th March, to a maximum height over the main deck of four feet six inches of sawn lumber. This measure received very full consideration before it was adopted by the Parliament of Canada, and though opposed in its various stages by many members of Parliament as being too restrictive, it will be seen by the annexed statement of the evidence and discussion thereon, had before the Parliamentary Committee on Banking and Commerce—which Committee is composed of the leading business and commercial men of the Commons House of Parliament—that the Bill was generally sustained, and was adopted as a fair and just law in regard to the limitation to be placed on deck loads. Should, however, Mr. Plimsoll's Bill become law it will be perceived that a vessel may comply with our law and take three feet in height of deck load, and when she arrives in the United Kingdom will be liable to severe penalties, inasmuch as no vessel is permitted to enter British ports with any deck load between the periods named in said section 17. This would very seriously affect the trade between Canada and the United Kingdom, as appears by the discussions which were elicited before the said Committee of Banking and Commerce.

In regard to the "free board" or "load line," it will be seen by reference to the said annexed Petition of the St. John Board of Trade, and the statements of the Committee of the Halifax Chamber of Commerce, that they claim that the proposed arrangement will work detrimentally to Canadian shipping, and that a preference will be given to iron vessels over the vessels of Canada, which are almost entirely wooden, but which it is claimed are as buoyant and as susceptible of carrying cargoes as iron vessels. On this point the Undersigned can offer no opinion, but if the facts are as the St. John Board of Trade have stated (and he has no reason to doubt it) the matter should be brought under the notice of the Imperial Government, with a view of preventing an unintentional wrong being done to our shipping.

The Undersigned having thus pointed out the injurious manner in which certain of the provisions of the Plimsoll Bill will affect the shipping of Canada would beg to observe that, at the request of the British Board of Trade, the Government of Canada deferred legislation in matters relating to shipping, even after the Bills were before Parliament, because, as was stated by the British Board of Trade, it was desirable to see what action the Imperial Parliament would take in relation to the Shipping Code, which, for successive sessions for several years past, the Imperial Parliament has had under consideration. Before Canada legislated last year, the Department of the Undersigned received intimation that the code relating to merchant shipping, then under the consideration of the Imperial Parliament, was not likely to be passed, and that it would not be well further to defer Canadian legislation. The Government of Canada has accordingly submitted to the Canadian Parliament several measures relating to and regulating pilotage, merchant shipping, and seamen, several of which have become law, and which are largely assimilated to past Imperial legislation. Amongst these is one, a copy of which is annexed, entitled "An Act relating to Shipping, and for the Registration, Inspection, and Classification thereof," in which provision is made for the inspection and classification of ships within the dominion of Canada. Under this law it is proposed to establish a system of inspection and classification, which it is hoped will take the place, so far as Canadian tonnage is concerned, of both Lloyd's and Bureau Veritas, and it is of the utmost importance to the shipping interests of Canada that the certificates which may be granted under the law referred to, should be recognized by the Board of Trade in the same manner as it is proposed by the fifth section of the Plimsoll Bill, that the certificates of Lloyd's officers or the officers of the Liverpool Underwriters' Registry of iron vessels, should be recognized.

The Undersigned would respectfully observe that the shipping interests of Canada have assumed such vast proportions that her people view with alarm any legislation which may effect detrimentally that great interest.

There is now owned in Canada tonnage amounting to about 850,000 tons, valued at about 25,000,000 dollars, and giving employment to about 25,500 men. The people and Government of Canada are fully alive to the importance of fostering and encouraging such a great source of national and individual wealth; and though the Parliament of Canada, by its legislation, has fostered and promoted the prosperity of our merchant marine, it has never hesitated, when the interests of humanity demanded it, to impose such restriction as was necessary to give additional security to life; but it cannot be denied that the effect of the present measure, if it becomes law, will be to hold out inducements to transfer a large portion of the tonnage of Canada to foreign flags, as by that transfer Canadian shipowners would escape the restriction which would be imposed upon them by the proposed Bill.

The Undersigned would view with great regret the necessity for such a course, yet he feels assured that if the Imperial Parliament should legislate in such a manner as to discriminate, in practice, unfavourably to Canadian ships, such will be the result.

The St. John Board of Trade ask, in order to remedy the classification difficulty that Bureau Veritas should be given the same classification as is given to Lloyd's.

There is no doubt that the feeling largely pervades our shipping communities that the rules of construction of Bureau Veritas are more sensible, and more suited to securing a substantial sea-worthy ship, at a minimum of cost in Canada, than Lloyd's, and the former is represented as practically driving the latter out of most of our building ports, and therefore the recognition of Bureau Veritas, as asked for in the said Petition of the St. John Board of Trade, would give satisfaction to our ship-owners. The Undersigned, however, cannot recommend that a foreign association, over which the British Parliament have no control, and which is practically beyond the reach of British influence, should be officially recognized, and he believes, from a national point of view, it would not have in the future a beneficial effect, and he cannot, therefore, recommend such recognition.

The Undersigned would further observe that his attention has been called to the injurious effects the said Plimsoll Bill, if it became law, would have upon Canadian shipping, from several other sources besides those referred to, and on the 10th instant he, by appointment, met the Representatives in Parliament for Nova Scotia and New Brunswick, who urged the necessity of remonstrating with the Imperial Government against permitting the said Bill becoming law so far as to affect Canadian tonnage, and also urging the immediate establishment of a system of Canadian classification and inspection. It will also be remembered that the Government has been questioned in the Canadian Parliament as to whether they have taken steps to obtain the exemption of Canadian tonnage from the operations of said Bill.

The Undersigned would observe that a strong feeling exists in Canada that in questions so vitally affecting our interests as those relating to shipping, and to which our Canadian Parliament give so much attention, and in relation to which our Canadian people are well qualified to judge of what suits their interests, Her Majesty's Government may safely adopt the policy, that wherever the Canadian Parliament have dealt with questions relating to shipping, the Imperial Parliament should exempt Canadian ships from the operation of Imperial Legislation upon that subject.

This principle the Imperial Parliament, to a great extent, have already recognized in the Merchant Shipping Act of 1854, in exempting Colonial ships while within the bounds of a Colony having a Parliament or Legislature which has legislated upon the subject, from the operations of said Act. It is desirable that the principle of exemption, in so far as Canadian shipping is concerned, should be extended to all British ports, and that the Imperial Government should throw the responsibility of the legislation necessary to control and regulate Canadian shipping upon the Canadian Parliament, subject, always, to the control which Her Majesty possesses, in the approval or rejection of such measures as the Canadian Parliament may enact.

This course would give great satisfaction in Canada, and would do much to perpetuate those ties which bind us to the Mother Country.

The Undersigned believes that such a policy is in accordance with the general views entertained by Her Majesty's Government, and the experience of past years shows that the Parliament of the Dominion of Canada have not unworthily exercised the great powers which they possess, and he would, therefore, respectfully submit that Her Majesty's Government should be asked to recognize the principle which he has above stated.

He would, therefore, recommend that, pending the decision upon the above recommendation, and in order to relieve Canadian shipping from the evils anticipated from the Plimsoll Bill—

1st. That the Imperial Government be asked that any legislation that may be had affecting shipping, they should give to the Canadian inspection and classification of vessels hereinbefore referred to, when it may be organized, the same standing and recognition as they may give to Lloyd's Registry or the Liverpool Underwriters' Registry for iron vessels.

2nd. That if the Plimsoll Bill or one of a similar character becomes law, that for the first twelve months thereafter it shall not apply to Canadian vessels, in order to afford to Canadian shipping an opportunity to obtain the necessary inspection and classification under the Canadian system of inspection and classification, as contemplated by the annexed Bill.

3rd. That inasmuch as the Canadian Parliament has legislated upon the Deck Load question, Canadian vessels should be exempted from the operation of Sections 15, 16, and 17 of the Plimsoll Bill.

4th. That Canadian vessels be exempt from the operations of Sections 19 and 20 of the said Bill; or if Her Majesty's Government consider that course objectionable, then that due consideration be given to the representations contained in the annexed petition from the St. John Board of Trade in relation to the Load Line of Canadian ships as compared with iron ships.

Respectfully submitted,
(Signed) P. MITCHELL,
Minister of Marine and Fisheries.

To his Excellency the Governor-General in Council.

The petition of the Undersigned humbly sheweth—

That the St. John Board of Trade, at a meeting held in the City of St. John and Province of New Brunswick, called specially to take into consideration "a Bill to provide for the survey of certain shipping and to prevent overloading," prepared and brought into the British House of Commons by Mr. Plimsoll (a copy of which is hereto annexed), after a lengthy discussion of some of the provisions of the said Bill, unanimously adopted the following resolutions:

1st. Whereas by the proposed legislation in the British House of Commons by Mr. Plimsoll's Bill, it is feared by this Board that undue discrimination may be made in favour of iron ships, and of Lloyd's Registry; therefore resolved, that the Dominion Government be asked to use its influence to prevent any discrimination being made to the injury of our shipping interests, as is feared may be done by this Bill, or by other measures that may be proposed, with a due regard being had at the same time to the security of life.

2nd. Whereas Mr. Plimsoll's Bill for the survey of shipping will, if enacted, deprive the Provinces of the benefit hitherto enjoyed from classification in "Bureau Veritas," and if passed, will be most disastrous to the shipping property under that classification; and

Whereas the said Bill discriminates against wooden ships, and in favour of iron:

Therefore resolved that our Representatives at Ottawa be requested to take such action in the matter as will afford owners of vessels classed in Bureau Veritas sufficient protection against such unfair discrimination.

This Board is of opinion that some of the clauses of Mr. Plimsoll's Bill are prejudicial to ship owners in the Dominion of Canada, and in support of that opinion would beg respectfully to submit the following facts:—

The tonnage registered in the Province of New Brunswick comprises 1,209 vessels, measuring upwards of 278,000 tons—a considerable proportion of this tonnage is composed of vessels of a large class, employed in long voyages.

The tonnage of the Province of Nova Scotia, consists of about 4,000 vessels, measuring upwards of 450,000 tons. The combined tonnage of these two Provinces sums up 728,000 tons which, on the basis of 30 dollars per ton, represents a value of nearly 22,000,000 of dollars.

This amount of tonnage is rapidly increasing every year. The vessels now in course of construction, and to be built in New Brunswick this present year, will reach 40,000 tons, and in Nova Scotia 60,000 tons, placing the mercantile marine of the Dominion of Canada the third in extent in the world.

This Board would further submit that, for some years past, the largest proportion of vessels built in New Brunswick and Nova Scotia, have been constructed under the inspection of the surveyors of the Society of Bureau Veritas, and that not less than four-fifths of the vessels classed in the two Provinces named are in the books of that society, and it is the opinion of this Board, that a vessel built in accordance with the Rules of the Society of "Bureau Veritas" is not inferior to a vessel built in accordance with the Rules of "Lloyd's Register of British and Foreign Shipping;" and if necessary to substantiate this opinion, this Board can produce satisfactory evidence of the work performed by vessels classed in "Bureau Veritas" as compared with that of vessels classed in "Lloyd's Register," if afforded an opportunity of doing so. In proof of this assertion, this Board would refer to the well-known fact, that vessels classed in "Bureau Veritas" are accepted by Underwriters on as favourable terms as if the same were classed in "Lloyd's Register."

In view of all these facts, this Board was much surprised to learn that by the 5th section of Mr. Plimsoll's Bill, vessels classed in "Bureau Veritas" will not be recognized by the Board of Trade of Great Britain, and if not classed in "Lloyd's Register of British and Foreign Shipping," they will require to be subject to survey before the certificate can be obtained from the Board of Trade.

As such a restriction is so manifestly unjust, making such an undue discrimination in favour of vessels classed in "Lloyd's Register," this Board are unwilling to believe that the promoters of this Bill would seek to injure so unnecessarily the ship-owning interest of this Dominion, as well as curtail its extension, when the facts are clearly laid before them.

This Board would further submit that the discrimination in the "load line," in favour of iron ships, as against first-class wooden vessels, is not warranted or justified by the experience of the work performed by wooden ships compared with iron on the same voyages, and if such restriction in the load line in this Bill is not withdrawn, it is calculated to effect, in a very marked degree, the extension of the Mercantile Marine of the Dominion of Canada—in fact, this effect is already experienced, as from recent advices received from Great Britain, this Board is informed that one result of the proposed legislation has been to lessen the demand for our wooden vessels, and has placed iron ships in a more favourable position than they have lately obtained.

It will not be disputed that our wooden ships, with the same free-board, are as buoyant as iron vessels, and while the evils, which Mr. Plimsoll's Bill was originally intended to cure, existed chiefly in iron vessels, yet by the 19th Section, and fourth Schedule of his Bill, a discrimination on the free-board is made in favour of iron ships, when it is a well established fact, that our first-class wooden ships have competed successfully with first-class iron ships in every part of the globe.

This Board, therefore, is of opinion that first-class wooden vessels, classed in "Bureau Veritas," or in "Lloyd's Registry," should not be required by the fourth schedule in Mr. Plimsoll's Bill, to have any greater free-board than iron vessels.

And, lastly, this Board would submit that, as it appears from the statements herein, the greater portion of the tonnage of the Dominion of Canada is classed in the society known as "Bureau Veritas," it follows that the exclusion of vessels so classed from being recognized by the 5th section of Mr. Plimsoll's Bill will be an act so very unfair and wholly unjustifiable that our dominion shipowners will either have to submit to the arbitrary terms of the Act, or be forced to put their vessels under a foreign flag, in order that they may, in common with foreign vessels, be exempt from the provisions of this Bill.

This Board, therefore, would humbly pray that your Excellency and Honourable Privy Council will take such measures as will prevent any hasty legislation in the British Parliament on a question of such serious importance to the largest interest in the Dominion of Canada, and secure such alterations in Mr. Plimsoll's Bill, as will place vessels classed in "Bureau Veritas" in as favourable position as those classed in "Lloyd's Register of British and Foreign Shipping," as well as remove any restrictions in the load line against first-class wooden vessels, as named in the 4th schedule of this Act.

And your Petitioners, as in duty bound, will ever pray.

Extract from the Minutes of a Special Meeting of the Chamber of Commerce, Halifax, Nova Scotia, held 7th May, 1873.

The Committee appointed by the Chamber to consider and report on Mr. Plimsoll's Bill, respecting the survey of shipping, now before the British Parliament, to which attention had been directed by a telegram from the St. John, New Brunswick, Board of Trade, having fully discussed the matter, report as follows:—

In view of the great alarm created by the proposed change in the classification of vessels, as contemplated in the Bill recently presented to the British Parliament by Mr. Plimsoll, which requires that vessels classed in Bureau Veritas will have to undergo a survey before a certificate will be granted from the Board of Trade of Great Britain, your Committee report that, owing to the general satisfaction the classification of Bureau Veritas has given, it being so stringent and thorough in every particular, and having been so generally adopted by our shipowners, and accepted by under-writers on as favourable terms as those classed in Lloyd's—if such a Bill is passed the result will be very disastrous to the owners of ships and shipping property in general.

It is also intended by Mr. Plimsoll's Bill to favour, under a proposed Schedule, iron ships, by allowing them a lesser free-board, when loaded, than wooden ships.

The Committee are of opinion that, so far as their experience goes, such a regulation might act unfairly against Colonial shipping, as many wooden ships are calculated to load quite as much cargo, in proportion to tonnage, as iron ships.

Your Committee would therefore recommend that the Chamber impress on our representatives at Ottawa the necessity of co-operating with representatives from the city of St. John, New Brunswick, and to urge upon the Dominion Government the great necessity for immediate attention to this matter, that they may obtain from the British Government such a modification of the measures contemplated in the Bill as may best subserve the interests of so important and growing a business as the shipping of this Dominion.

The adoption of the Report was moved by John M. Watson, Esq., seconded by J. S. Belcher, Esq., and passed unanimously.

It was resolved that a copy of the Report be transmitted to the representatives of Halifax at Ottawa, and that the Chamber would also earnestly request that in event of Mr. Plimsoll's Bill passing, due protection should be afforded to ships now sailing under the classification of "Bureau Veritas" that ship-owners may have the benefit of the same until expiration of classification, without being compelled to re-survey in English Lloyd's.

Inclosure 3 in No. 1.

An Act relating to Shipping, and for the Registration, Inspection, and Classification thereof.

WHEREAS the rule of measurement of ships contained in the "Act respecting the registration of inland vessels," forming chapter forty-one of the Consolidated Statutes of the late Province of Canada, being the same as that contained in the Acts of the Imperial Parliament in force on the seventeenth day of March, one thousand eight hundred and forty-five, differs from that contained in the Act of the Imperial Parliament known as "The Merchant Shipping Act, 1854," and Acts amending the same; and whereas it is desirable that but one rule of measurement of ships should prevail in Canada, and that ships navigating the inland waters of Canada should not be subject to provisions of law in some other respects different from those to which other ships in Canada are subject; and whereas it is desirable to make better provision for giving security to persons advancing money on ships in course of construction, and to provide for the inspection and classification of ships built or registered in Canada; Therefore Her Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate and House of Commons of Canada, enacts as follows:—

Preliminary.

1. This Act shall take effect upon, from and after the day not being earlier than the first day of January, one thousand eight hundred and seventy-four, named for that purpose in any Proclamation, published by the Governor to the effect that the same has been confirmed and approved by Her Majesty in Council.

2. And whereas, by the five hundred and forty-seventh section of "The Merchant Shipping Act, 1854," it is enacted and provided that the Legislative Authority of any British possession shall have power, by any Act or Ordinance confirmed by Her Majesty in Council, to repeal, wholly or in part, any provisions of the said Act relating to ships registered in such possession, so much of the said Act and of any other Act amending the said Act and forming part of the same, as is inconsistent with this Act is hereby repealed so far as relates to ships registered in Canada.

3. The "Act respecting the registration of inland vessels," forming chapter forty-one, and the "Act for the encouragement of ship-building," forming chapter forty-two of the Consolidated Statutes of the late Province of Canada, and chapters first, second, and third of Title second of Book fourth of the Civil Code of Lower Canada, except so much of Articles 2356, 2359, 2361, 2362, 2373, and 2374 as are not inconsistent with the provisions of this Act, are also hereby repealed. Part the second of chapter seventy-five of the Revised Statutes of Nova Scotia, third series, "of the registration of ships," is also hereby repealed.

4. In this Act,—

The term "the Minister" means the Minister of Marine and Fisheries.

The term "ship" includes every description of vessel used in navigation not propelled by oars.

The term "ships belonging to Her Majesty" includes ships the cost of which has been defrayed out of the Consolidated Revenue Fund of Canada, and ships described as the property of Canada by the one hundred and eighth section of "The British North America Act, 1867."

The term "master" includes every person having command or charge of any ship.

5. Nothing in this Act shall apply to ships belonging to Her Majesty.

6. This Act is divided into four parts:

The first part relating to the measurement and registration of ships; and unseaworthy ships.

The second part relating to the licensing of small ships and other vessels.

The third part relating to the security for advances on ships in course of construction.

The fourth part relating to the inspection and classification of ships.

PART I.—Measurement and Registration of Ships.

7. The following ships are exempt from the provisions of this part of this Act, viz. :—

(1.) Ships having a whole or fixed deck, not propelled wholly or in part by steam, and not exceeding ten tons burthen.

(2.) Ships not propelled wholly or in part by steam, and not having a whole or fixed deck, whatever their burthen.

8. Except as hereinafter mentioned, no ship propelled either wholly or in part by steam, whatever her tonnage, and no ship not propelled wholly or in part by steam, of more than ten tons burthen, and having a whole or fixed deck, although otherwise entitled by law to be deemed a British ship, shall be recognized in Canada as a British ship, nor be admitted to the privileges of a British ship in Canada, until, nor unless, she be duly registered in the United Kingdom, or in Canada, or some other British possession, under the said Act as amended as aforesaid.

9. In cases where it appears to the Lieutenant-Governor of any Province of Canada, that by reason of special circumstances it would be desirable that permission should be granted to any British ship to pass, without being previously registered, from any port or place within the Province of which he is Lieutenant Governor, to any other port or place in Her Majesty's dominions, such Lieutenant Governor may grant a pass accordingly, and such pass shall, for the time and within the limits therein mentioned, have the same effect as a pass granted by the Governor, or as a certificate of registry; and each Lieutenant-Governor shall forward, without delay, to the Governor-in-Council a copy of each pass granted by him.

10. The Governor-in-Council may appoint, at and for every report at which he deems it expedient to authorize the registry of ships, the collector or other principal officer of Customs, who shall be the Registrar for all the purposes of "The Merchant Shipping Act, 1854," and the Acts amending the same, and of this Act.

11. The Governor in Council may appoint at every such port, and at any other port in Canada, an officer to superintend the survey and admeasurement of ships in conformity with the said Acts and this Act; and the same person may be appointed both the Registrar and Surveyor at any such Registry Port.

12. Such surveyor shall be entitled to such fees for the measurement of ships about to be registered for the first time under this Act, or requiring measurement for the purposes of registry, and to such travelling expenses, when required to travel for the purpose of making any such measurement, as the Governor in Council, may from time to time by Order in Council, see fit to establish; and such fees, and travelling expenses (if any) shall be paid to such surveyor by the persons requiring his services; and any surveyor may, in any case, withhold his certificate of measurement, or any other document that may be required of him, until his fees and travelling expenses (if any) be paid, and such fees shall be in lieu of all salary and other remuneration whatever for such services, but no fees shall be charged in Canada for registering vessels or recording transactions relating to the registry of vessels under this Act or under "The Merchant Shipping Act, 1854," or its amendments.

13. In any case where two or more persons claim to be builders or owners of any ship, or present the builder's certificate to the Registrar of Shipping at any port in Canada for the purpose of obtaining registry for such ship under the provisions of section 40 of "The Merchant Shipping Act, 1854," and are not agreed as to who is the builder or owner of the same, such Registrar may refuse to grant registry for such ship, and is hereby empowered to summon witnesses, administer oaths, demand any books or papers, and receive any evidence relating to such ship; and a copy of such evidence taken, and a report thereon, shall be submitted by him to the Governor in Council, who shall issue such directions in the case as to the giving of security to the other claimant or claimants, or any other matter or thing, as he may deem necessary; and registry shall be granted in pursuance of such directions and not otherwise.

14. No ship duly registered under the provisions of the said "Act respecting the registration of inland vessels," forming chapter 41 of the Consolidated Statutes of the late Province of Canada, before the day on which this Act takes effect, need be registered after that day in pursuance of the provisions of this Act, except for the purpose of enabling her to proceed to sea as a British ship.

But no ship required by the said Act to be registered shall, unless duly registered under the provisions of the said Act before the said day, and no other ship required to be registered in Canada, under the provisions of "The Merchant Shipping Act, 1854," as amended as aforesaid, or under the provisions of this Act, shall, unless so registered before or after the said day, be recognized in Canada as a British ship; and no officer of Customs shall grant clearance to any ship required to be registered under the provisions of either of the said Acts, or of this Act, for the purpose of enabling her to proceed on a voyage unless the master of such ship, upon being required so to do, produces to him the proper certificate of registry; and if any such ship attempts to proceed on a voyage as a British ship without a clearance, any officer of Customs may detain such ship until such certificate is produced to him.

15. No new certificate of registry of a ship registered in Canada shall be granted in Canada, under section 48 of "The Merchant Shipping Act, 1854," without proof on oath of the certificate of registry of such ship having been lost, mislaid, or destroyed.

16. If any British or foreign registered ship is either actually or constructively wrecked and the register thereof is closed, and the certificate of registry is delivered up to the proper officer and cancelled; or, if any ship, sailing under a pass from the Governor, or under a pass from a Lieutenant-Governor under the ninth section of this Act, is either actually or constructively wrecked on the voyage, and during the time and within the limits mentioned in such pass, the Governor in Council may direct that such ship may be registered as a British ship in any port in Canada at and for which there is a Registrar of Shipping, on proof being adduced, to the satisfaction of the Governor in Council, that such ship has been thoroughly repaired and made seaworthy, and also that all the transactions connected with the wreck, condemnation, and sale of such ship, were in good faith, and that all the requirements of the law have been complied with; but no Registrar of Shipping shall register any such ship without the authority of the Governor in Council.

17. Every person may, upon payment of a fee of twenty cents, have access to the register of any ship registered in Canada, at the port of registry of such ship, at any reasonable time during the hours of official attendance of the Registrar, and such fees shall, from time to time as may be directed by the Governor in Council, be paid by the Registrars receiving the same to the Receiver-General, to form part of the Consolidated Revenue Fund of Canada.

18. Subject to the provisions of this Act, collectors or other principal officers of Customs in Canada, not being Registrars of Shipping, shall have the same power and be under the same obligation to endorse from time to time on the certificate of registry of any ship at any port in Canada where the said ship may be, any change of master which takes place at that port, as are given to and laid upon Registrars of Shipping under "The Merchant Shipping Act, 1854."

19. For and notwithstanding anything to the contrary contained in the forty-sixth section of "The Merchant Shipping Act, 1854," in case any Registrar of Shipping, or collector or other principal officer of the Customs at any port or place in Canada, receives conflicting directions from owners of any ship registered in Canada as to a change of the master of such ship, such Registrar, or collector or other principal officer, may refuse to endorse a memorandum of the change of master on the certificate of registry of such ship, unless or until he receives a declaration, according to the form in the first schedule to this Act, or as near thereto as circumstances permit, from the registered owners representing a majority of shares in such ship, or from their duly appointed agent or agents, setting forth the name of the person appointed in lieu of the former master, who shall be named in such declaration; the said declaration shall be made and subscribed in the presence of the Registrar or collector of Customs if the declarant or declarants reside within five miles of the Custom-house of the port of registry, but if beyond that distance, in the presence of any Registrar or collector of Customs in Her Majesty's dominions, or of any Justice of the Peace; and in addition to such declaration, the Registrar of Shipping or collector of Customs at the port where the change is requested to be endorsed, may require to be produced a certified copy of the register, or such other evidence as he may deem necessary, as proof of the ownership of the ship; and in case the ship is at or near such port, he shall, on the demand of a majority of the owners thereof, require the master, or any other person in the possession of the certificate of registry to produce and deliver the same to him; and in default of the same being forthwith produced and delivered up to him he may detain the ship, and not allow her to proceed to sea until the same has been produced and delivered up to him; and every person having possession of the certificate of registry of a ship registered in Canada, and refusing or neglecting to produce and deliver up the same to any registrar of shipping or collector of Customs requiring the same to be produced and delivered up to him under the provisions of this section, shall incur a penalty of five hundred dollars.

20. Every Registrar of Shipping and every collector of Customs shall keep a record of every endorsement of a change of master made by him on the certificate of registry of a ship, and shall specify in such record the date of such endorsement, the name of the ship, the official number of the ship, the port of registry of the ship, the name of the old master, the name of the new master, and whether or not he has a certificate of competency or a certificate of service, and, if he has either of such certificates, the number thereof; and every such record shall be kept in the office of the Registrar of Shipping or collector of Customs making the same, or his successor as such, and shall at all times during the usual office hours be open to all persons for inspection, without fee or reward.

21. Upon the managing owner, or any of the managing owners (if more than one), of a ship registered in Canada being changed, or, if there be no managing owner, upon the ship's husband being changed, the newly appointed managing owner or owners or ship's husband shall forthwith give notice of such change to the registrar of the ship's port of registry, who shall register the same accordingly; any managing owner or ship's husband who fails to comply with the requirements of this section shall incur a penalty not exceeding one hundred dollars.

22. With respect to the names of ships registered in Canada the following rules shall be observed:—

1. A ship shall not be described by any name other than that by which she is for the time being registered;
2. No change shall be made in the name of a ship without the previous permission of the Governor in Council. Upon such permission being granted, the ship's name shall forthwith be altered in the register book, in the ship's certificate of registry, and on her bows and stern.
3. If in any case it is shown to the satisfaction of the Governor in Council that the name of any ship has been changed without his previous permission, he may direct that her name be altered into that which she bore before such change, and the name shall be altered in the register book, in the ship's certificate of registry, and on her bows and stern accordingly;
4. Where a ship having once being registered has ceased to be so registered, no person, unless ignorant of such previous registry (proof of which shall lie on him), shall apply to register, and no registrar shall knowingly register such ship, except by the name by which she was previously registered, unless with the permission of the Governor in Council.

Every person who acts, or suffers any person under his control to act in contravention of this section, or who omits to do, or suffers any person under his control to omit to do any thing required by this section, shall for each offence incur a penalty not exceeding four hundred dollars; and any registrar or principal officer of Customs may detain the ship until the provisions of this section are complied with.

Application for a change of name shall be made in writing to the Governor in Council. If of opinion that the application is made on reasonable grounds, the Governor in Council may entertain the same, and may thereupon require notice thereof to be published in such form and manner as he may think fit.

23. Whenever a shipping casualty happens anywhere in the case of a ship registered in Canada, or within the limits of Canada in the case of any other British ship, the master, or if the master is dead the chief surviving officer, and also every such other person belonging to the ship as the Minister may from time to time direct, shall, within twenty-four hours of his first landing in Canada after the happening of such casualty, attend and submit himself for examination at the office of the principal officer of Customs residing at or near the place where such casualty occurred, if the same occurred on or near the coasts of Canada, or any island or place adjacent thereto, but if the casualty occurred elsewhere, at or near the place of such landing, unless he has been previously examined or excused from attending for examination by any other principal officer of Customs residing at or near either of such places or by any receiver of wreck in the United Kingdom; and if any master, officer, or other person makes default in obeying the provisions of this section he shall incur a penalty not exceeding 200 dollars.

24. Whenever the managing owner of any ship registered in Canada has information that such ship is lost, or in consequence of her non-arrival or otherwise, has reason to apprehend that she is lost, he shall forthwith send notice of such loss or apprehended loss to the Minister, and shall, upon requisition by the Minister, furnish to him such information as he may be required and able to furnish respecting such ship and the loss thereof, and the property and persons on board, and if he makes default in obeying the provisions of this section, he shall incur a penalty of not exceeding 200 dollars.

25. Every Registrar of Shipping shall, on or before the 20th day of January in each year, make and forward to the Minister a return, in such form and containing such particulars as the Minister may from time to time direct, of all existing ships of which the registry remained in his registry-books on the 31st day of December then last.

Unseaworthy Ships.

26. If complaint is made to the Minister that any ship registered in Canada is, by reason of the defective condition of her hull or equipments, or by reason of her being over-loaded or improperly loaded, unfit to proceed to sea, or on any voyage on any waters within the limits of Canada, the Minister may cause such ship to be surveyed by a person appointed by him, first exacting from the complainant, if he thinks fit so to do, a deposit of money to defray the expenses of the survey, and to pay any loss which may be sustained by the owner on account of any detention, or such security for the payment of such expenses and loss as he may deem sufficient; and if such person report that the hull or equipments of such ship is or are in such a state, or that such ship is so loaded that she could not proceed to sea or on any such voyage, as the case may be, without serious danger to human life, the Minister may declare such ship to be unseaworthy, and thereupon any principal officer of Customs may detain such ship.

Every such complaint shall be in writing, and shall state the name and address of the complainant; and a copy of the complaint, including the name and address of the complainant, shall before or during such survey be given by the Minister to the master or to an owner of the ship.

If, upon such survey, such ship is found to be seaworthy, the expenses of the survey shall be paid to the Minister by the person making the complaint, without prejudice to any right of suit or action against him by any person aggrieved by the complaint.

If, upon such survey, such ship is found to be unseaworthy, the expenses of the survey shall be paid to the Minister by the owner of the ship.

27. Any shipowner who is dissatisfied with the decision of any person appointed by the Minister under this section may appeal to the Court of Vice-Admiralty having jurisdiction in the place where such ship was surveyed, if any there be, and if not then to the Court of Vice-Admiralty holding its sittings nearest to the place where such ship was surveyed, and such Court may, if such Court think fit, appoint a competent person or competent persons to survey such ship anew. Upon any such appeal such Court may make such order as to the detention or discharge of the ship, as to the payment of any costs and damages which may have been occasioned by her detention and as to the payment of the expenses of the original survey and of the survey anew, as to such Court seems just.

28. Any person appointed either by the Minister or by any Court of Vice-Admiralty to survey a ship under the provisions of the next preceding sections of this Act, may in the execution of his duty go on board such ship at all reasonable times and inspect the same or any part thereof, or any of the equipments, cargo, or articles on board thereof, or the certificate of registry thereof, not unnecessarily detaining or delaying the ship in proceeding on her voyage; and if such person considers it necessary to do so, he may require the ship to be so dealt with as that he may be able to inspect every part of the hull thereof; and whosoever hinders any person so appointed from going on board any ship or otherwise impedes him in the execution of his duty, under this Act, shall, for every such offence incur a penalty not exceeding twenty dollars.

29. Every person who, having authority as owner or otherwise, to send a ship registered in Canada to sea, or on any voyage on any waters within the limits of Canada, from any port or place in Canada, sends her to sea or on any such voyage from any such port or place in an unseaworthy state, so as to endanger the life of any person belonging to her on board the same, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, unless he proves that he used all reasonable means to make and keep the ship seaworthy, and was ignorant of such unseaworthiness, or that her going to sea, or on such voyage, in an unseaworthy state was, under the circumstances, reasonable and unavoidable, and for this purpose he may give evidence in the same manner as any other witness. A misdemeanor under this section shall not be punishable on summary conviction.

PART II.—Licensing of Small Ships and other Vessels.

30. The master or owner, or managing owner, or one of the managing owners, if there be more than one, of every ship exempted by section 7 of this Act from the provisions of the first part of this Act, and of every vessel not being a ship within the meaning of this Act, employed in or owned for the purpose of fishing or trading or carrying loads of any kind in any of the waters of Canada at the commencement of this Act, shall within three months from and after that date, and the master or owner of every such ship or vessel so employed or owned for such purpose, shall, within one month from the date of her being so employed by him, or of her being built or acquired for the purpose of so employing her, take from the Collector or other principal officer of the Customs at some port or place in Canada, a license, which it shall be the duty of the Collector or other principal officer of the Customs at every port or place in Canada to furnish, without fee or reward, to every person applying for the same at his Custom-house or office, in office hours, and complying with the provisions of this section in respect of such application; and such license shall be in the form of and shall contain the particulars provided for in Form B in the second Schedule to this Act.

31. Upon any such application being made to a Collector or other principal officer of the Customs, the following provisions shall take effect:—

(a.) The Collector or principal officer of Customs shall furnish the applicant, gratis, with a printed blank for a declaration in the form of Form A in the second Schedule to this Act;

(b.) The applicant shall fill up the said form with true statements, in their proper places, of the length, breadth, depth, and approximate tonnage of the ship or vessel, the names of the owner or owners thereof, and, if the property in the ship or vessel be divided into shares, the number of shares held by each owner, and shall subscribe the same, and return the same to the officer;

(c.) The officer shall then fill up a license with the particulars stated in the declaration, adding thereto the name of the port and the number of the license, which shall be consecutive for each port, and sign such license, and hand the same to the applicant;

(d.) The officer shall record the particulars contained in the license in a book, to be kept by him for that purpose.

32. Every ship or vessel required to be licensed under the provisions of section thirty of this Act shall at all times have the name of the port or place at which she was last licensed, which shall be considered for the time being her port of license, with the number of her last license painted on her bow or stern in letters not less than three inches long, of light colour, on a dark ground.

33. Whenever the property in a ship or vessel required to be licensed as aforesaid passes wholly into new hands, the master, or the new owner or managing owner, or one of the new managing owners, if there be more than one, shall, within one month from and after such change of ownership as aforesaid, take out a new license at some port or place in Canada, and upon receiving the same shall deliver up the former license, if in his possession, to the Collector or other principal officer of the Customs at such port or place.

34. Every master or owner or managing owner of any ship or vessel required to be licensed under the provisions of this part of this Act who neglects, without reasonable cause (the proof which shall lie upon him) to apply for and take out a license for such ship or vessel within any delay allowed by this Act for that purpose, or who neglects to keep the name of her last port of license, and the number of her last license painted on her bow or stern as aforesaid, shall incur a penalty of 20 dollars.

35. Every officer of Customs authorized by this part of this Act to license ships and vessels shall on or before the twentieth of January in each year, make and forward to the Minister a return, in such form and containing such particulars as the Minister may from time to time direct, of all ships and vessels licensed by him during the year ending on the thirty-first day of December then last.

PART III.—Security for Advances on Ships in course of Construction.

36. A ship about to be built, or being built, may be recorded under a temporary name by the Registrar of Shipping at or nearest to the port at which she is about to be built, or is being built; and any builder desirous of raising money by a mortgage on any ship about to be built, or being built, shall furnish to the Registrar of Shipping, at the port at or nearest to which she is about to be built, or is being built, a full description of such ship, and a statement of the port at which she is intended to be registered, according to the form (A) in the third Schedule to this Act, and shall indicate the ship to be built, or being built, by painting on a board, near the place of such building in his ship yard, on a dark ground, in white or yellow figures and letters of a length not less than four inches, the number given him by the proper Registrar of Shipping for that purpose, the temporary name of the ship, and the name of the port at which she is intended to be registered.

37. A ship about to be built, or being built, and so recorded as aforesaid, may be made security for a loan or other valuable consideration; and the instrument creating such security, hereinafter termed a "mortgage," shall be in the form marked (B) in the third Schedule hereto, or as near thereto as circumstances permit; and on the production of such instrument the Registrar of Shipping at the port at which the ship is recorded shall enter the same in a record book, to be kept by him for that purpose.

38. Every such mortgage shall be recorded by the proper Registrar of Shipping in the order of time in which the same is produced to him for that purpose; and such Registrar of Shipping shall, by memorandum under his hand, notify on the instrument of mortgage that the same has been recorded by him, stating the date and hour of such record.

39. Whenever any recorded mortgage has been discharged, the proper Registrar of Shipping shall, upon the production of the mortgage deed, with a receipt for the mortgage money indorsed thereon, duly signed and attested, make an entry in the record book to the effect that such mortgage has been discharged; and upon such entry being made, the estate (if any) which passed to the mortgagee shall vest in the said person or persons in whom the same would, having regard to intervening acts and circumstances (if any), have vested if no such mortgage had ever been made.

40. If there is more than one mortgage recorded of the same ship, the mortgagees shall, notwithstanding any express, implied, or constructive notice, be entitled in priority one over the other according to the date at which each instrument is recorded in the record book, and not according to the date of each instrument itself.

41. A mortgagee shall not, by reason of his mortgage, be deemed to be the owner of a ship, nor shall the mortgagor be deemed to have ceased to be owner of such mortgaged ship, except in so far as may be necessary for making such ship available as security for the mortgage debt.

42. Every recorded mortgagee shall have power absolutely to dispose of the ship in respect of which he is recorded as such, and to give effectual receipts for the purchase money; but if there are more persons than one recorded as mortgagees of the same ship, no second or subsequent mortgagee shall, except under the order of some court capable of taking cognizance of such matters, sell such ship without the concurrence of every prior mortgagee; and every bill of sale, when duly executed, shall be produced to the proper Registrar of Shipping, who shall enter the particulars thereof in the record book, and shall indorse on the bill of sale the fact of such entry having been made, with the date and hour thereof; and all bills of sale shall be entered in the record book in the order of their production to the Registrar of Shipping.

43. No recorded mortgage of any ship under this Act shall be affected by the mortgagor becoming insolvent after the date of the record of such mortgage, notwithstanding such mortgagor, at the time of his becoming insolvent, may have such ship in his possession and disposition, and be reputed owner of such ship; and such mortgage shall be preferred to any right, claim, or interest in such ship which may belong to the assignee of such insolvent.

44. A recorded mortgage of any ship may be transferred to any person; and the instrument creating such transfer shall be in the form marked (C) in the third Schedule hereto; and on the production of such instrument the Registrar of Shipping shall enter in the record book the name of the transferee as mortgagee of the ship therein mentioned, and shall, by memorandum under his hand, record on the instrument of transfer that the same has been recorded by him, stating the date and hour of such record.

45. If the interest of any mortgagee in any ship recorded under this Act becomes transmitted, in consequence of death or insolvency, or in consequence of the marriage of any female mortgagee, or by any lawful means other than by a transfer according to the provisions of this Act, such transmission shall be authenticated by a declaration of the person to whom such interest has been transmitted, made in the form marked (D) in the third Schedule hereto, and containing a statement describing the manner in which and the party to whom such property has been transmitted; and such declaration shall be made and subscribed in the presence of the Registrar of Shipping at the port at which such ship has been recorded under this Act, if the declarant resides at or within five miles of the Custom-house of the port; but if beyond that distance, in the presence of any Registrar of Shipping, Collector of Customs, or Justice of the Peace, and shall be accompanied by such evidence as is hereinbefore required to authenticate a corresponding transmission from one recorded mortgagee to another.

46. The Registrar of Shipping, upon the receipt of such declaration, and the production of such evidence as aforesaid, shall enter the name of the person or persons entitled under such transmission in the record book as mortgagee or mortgagees of the ship in respect of which such transmission has taken place.

47. Whenever the building of a ship which has been recorded under this Act shall be duly completed, the first mortgagee whose claim is unsatisfied may furnish the builder's certificate for such ship, and thereupon the proper officer may grant a certificate of registry under the laws in force in Canada for that purpose; and all undischarged mortgages recorded under this Act shall be by the proper Registrar of Shipping transferred to and registered under such laws in the register book, in the order and according to the priority in which the same were entered of record under this Act; and the temporary name used for the purposes of this Act, as above provided for, may be changed at the time of granting a certificate of registry: and the registry of all such mortgages shall thus appear, according to their priority in the record book, as if the same had been made or granted under the laws providing for the giving of such certificate of registry; and a fresh instrument of mortgage may be granted for that purpose, according to any form prescribed by law, as a substitute for any mortgage granted under this Act.

48. In case any person who is a party to any unsatisfied mortgage on any ship under this Act, takes out, or attempt to take out, a register for such ship, at any port other than the port named on the board in the ship yard in which such ship was built, or in the statement and description, in the form A in the third Schedule of this Act, furnished to the Registrar of Shipping by whom such ship was recorded under this Act, or in any mortgage on such ship under this Act, such person shall incur a penalty of two thousand dollars, to be recovered, with costs, by any person who may first sue for the same before any Court of competent jurisdiction, in any Province in Canada in which the offender is served with process.

49. No Surveyor of Shipping who is not also a Registrar of Shipping, shall deliver up any certificate of survey of any ship which he has surveyed for measurement to any person except the Registrar of Shipping at the port at or for which he is Surveyor, and at which such ship is recorded under this Act, until the Registrar of Shipping at such port has endorsed on the back of such certificate either a statement to the effect that there is no undischarged mortgage on such ship recorded in his office under this Act, or a statement of the amount and other particulars, and if more than one, the number of the undischarged mortgage or mortgages, if any, on such ship recorded in his office under this Act; and every Registrar of Shipping is hereby required to endorse one of such statements, according to the facts of each case, on every certificate of measurement presented to him for that purpose by any Surveyor of Shipping.

50. In case the Registrar of Shipping at any port at which any ship is recorded under this Act is also Surveyor of Shipping at or for such port, he is hereby required to endorse on every certificate of survey of any ship which he has surveyed for measurement, before he delivers the same to any person, either a statement to the effect that there is no undischarged mortgage on such ship recorded in his office under this Act, or a statement of the amount and other particulars, and, if more than one, the number of the undischarged mortgage or mortgages, if any, on such ship, recorded in his office under this Act.

51. The Governor in Council may establish a scale of fees for recording ships and mortgages and other transactions, and for other services to be performed under this Act prior to the registry of any ship under "The Merchant Shipping Act, 1854," or any Act or Acts amending or applying to the same.

52. Nothing in this part of this Act shall take away the right of the owner to his action of account, or such other remedy as he may have by law against the advancer.

PART IV.—Inspection and Classification of Ships.

53. The Governor in Council may make such rules and regulations as he may consider necessary for the inspection and classification of vessels built or registered within the Dominion of Canada, and may from time to time alter and amend the same, and may from time to time appoint such officers as may be necessary to carry out this part of this Act, and prescribe the duties of the said officers; and the said officers shall be under the control of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries.

54. The Governor in Council shall by such rules and regulations have power to establish a Table of Fees to be paid for such inspection and classification, and from time to time to alter and amend the same, and shall have power thereby to authorize the granting of certificates of classification in such manner as may be therein prescribed.

55. All rules and regulations made under this part of this Act shall be published in the "Canada Gazette."

No. 2.

The Earl of Dufferin to the Earl of Kimberley.—(Received June 18.)

My Lord, _____ Government House, Ottawa, June 5, 1873.
REFERRING to my despatch of May 15th, and to previous correspondence on the same subject, I have the honour to transmit herewith a certified copy of an Act of the Dominion Legislature, entitled “An Act respecting Deck Loads.”

I have, &c.
(Signed) DUFFERIN.

Inclosure in No. 2.

An Act respecting Deck Loads.

HER Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate and House of Commons of Canada, enacts as follows :—

1. In this Act the word “ship” includes every description of vessel used in navigation not propelled by oars; and the word “master” includes any person having command or charge of a ship.

2. Every ship shall be subject to the provisions of this Act,—

(1.) When sailing after the first day of October or before the sixteenth day of March in any year, on a voyage from any port in Canada to any port in Europe, and during the voyage while within Canadian jurisdiction; and (2.) No master of any such ship shall place, or cause or permit to be placed or remain, upon or above any part of the upper deck of such ship, not included within the limits of any break or poop, or any other permanently closed-in space thereon and available for cargo, the tonnage of which forms part of the register tonnage of such ship,—

(a.) Any square, round, waney or other timber :

(b.) Any more than five spare spars, or store spars made, dressed and finally prepared for use, or not so dressed and prepared.

(c.) Any cargo of any description, to any height exceeding three feet above the deck:

3. Every ship shall be subject to the provisions of this Act,—

(2.) No master of any such ship, if she be a single decked vessel, shall place or cause or permit any cargo whatever to be placed or remain upon or above the deck to a height exceeding by more than six inches that of the main rail, nor in any case greater than four feet six inches above the deck,—nor if she has a spar deck shall he place or cause or permit to be placed or remain, any cargo on or above any part of such spar deck; except that this provision shall not be understood to prevent such master from carrying two spare spars or store spars, made, dressed and finally prepared for use, on the deck or on the spar deck of such vessel.

4. Provided always, that if the master of any ship subject to the provisions of this Act, under the second section thereof, considers that it is necessary, in consequence of the springing of a leak, or of other damage received or apprehended during the voyage, to remove any portion of the cargo thereof, and to place upon any part of the upper deck thereof, not included as mentioned in the said second section, any other or greater portion of such cargo than is by the said second section permitted to be placed upon such part of the upper deck of such ship,—or if the master of any ship subject to the provisions of this Act, under the third section thereof, considers that it is necessary from any such cause as aforesaid, to remove any part of the cargo, and to place it on the deck or on the spar deck of such vessel (as the case may be) he may remove or cause to be removed to, and placed upon such part of the upper deck or on the deck or spar deck of such ship, so much of the cargo thereof, and may permit the same to remain there for such time as he considers expedient.

5. Before any officer of the Customs permits any ship, subject to the provisions of the second section of this Act, to clear out from any port in Canada, he shall ascertain that no square, round, waney or other timber, nor more than five spare spars, or store spars, nor any cargo of any description, to any height exceeding three feet above the deck, is, or are piled, or stored, or placed upon any part of the upper deck of such ship, not included within the limits of any break or poop, or any other permanently closed-in space thereon, available for cargo and the tonnage of which forms part of the register tonnage of such ship, and shall give the master of such ship a certificate to that effect.

6. Before any officer of the Customs permits any ship subject to the provisions of this Act, under the third section thereof, to clear out from any port in Canada, he shall ascertain that no provision of the said third section is contravened in respect of such ship and the cargo thereof, and shall give the master of such ship a certificate to that effect.

7. No master of any ship shall sail in such ship, when subject to the provisions of this Act, from any port in Canada, until he has obtained the certificate required in the case of such ships from the proper officer of the Customs.

8. Every master of a ship subject to the provisions of this Act, who contravenes any provision of this Act, shall for each such contravention incur a penalty not exceeding, except as hereinafter provided, eight hundred dollars.

9. Every master of a ship, subject to the provisions of this Act, who after having complied with the provisions of this Act, requiring him to obtain a certificate as aforesaid from the proper officer of the Customs, contravenes any other provision of this Act, shall incur a penalty not exceeding 800 dollars.

10. Whosoever, being the master of any ship, with intent to evade any provision of this Act, sails in such ship after the 1st day of October, or before the 16th day of March in any year from any port in Canada to any port in Europe without such certificate as last aforesaid, and with any cargo on any part of the upper deck of such ship, not included within the limits of any break or poop, or any other closed-in space thereon available for cargo, and the tonnage of which forms part of the register tonnage of such ship, or sails in such ship after the 15th day of November, or before the 16th day of March in any year, from any port in Canada to any port in the West Indies, with any cargo upon the deck, or on the spar deck of such ship (as the case may be) which would prevent his rightfully obtaining such certificate, is guilty of a misdemeanor, and shall be liable to be punished by imprisonment for any term not exceeding two years and not less than three months, or by fine not exceeding 800 dollars, or by both fine and imprisonment in the discretion of the Court before which he is convicted.

11. Any ship in respect of which any penalty is incurred under, this Act, may be seized and detained by order of the Court by or before which such penalty is imposed or recovered until such penalty be paid, or security given for the payment thereof, and unless payment be made or satisfactory security be given within thirty days, such ship may, at the expiration thereof, be sold by order of the Court, and the said penalty and all the costs paid out of the proceeds, the surplus (if any) being paid over to the owner of the ship.

12. The whole of every pecuniary penalty recovered under this Act shall belong to Her Majesty, and shall be paid over to the Receiver-General by the officer or person receiving the same, and shall be thereafter appropriated in such manner as the Governor in Council may direct in each case.

13. This Act shall not apply to any vessel sailing from British Columbia.

[No. 86, 1872.]

An Act relating to the Treaty of Washington, 1871.

WHEREAS by Article thirty-three of the Treaty between Her Majesty and the United States of America, signed at the city of Washington on the 8th day of May, 1871, it is provided that Articles eighteen to twenty-five inclusive, relating to the fisheries, shall take effect as soon as the laws required to carry them into operation shall have been passed by the Imperial Parliament of Great Britain, by the Parliament of Canada, and by the Legislature of Prince Edward Island, on the one hand, and by the Congress of the United States on the other, and that such assent having been given, the said Articles shall remain in force for the term of years mentioned in the said Article thirty-three; and whereas it is expedient that the laws required to carry the said Treaty into effect as respects Canada should be passed by the Parliament of the Dominion: Therefore Her Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate and House of Commons of Canada, enacts as follows:—

No. 2.

Lord Lisgar to the Earl of Kimberley.—(Received June 6.)

My Lord,

Government House, Ottawa, May 20, 1872.

I HAVE the honour to inform your Lordship that the second reading of the Bill "To carry into effect the Provisions of the Treaty between the United States and Great Britain, signed in the City of Washington on the 8th May, 1871," was carried in the Dominion House of Commons, on the 16th instant, after a division, by a majority of 66, the numbers being 121 yeas to 55 nays.

2. The debate was long and earnest, extending over several consecutive nights. The line generally taken by the supporters of the Bill was, that though the Treaty did not realise their expectations, and entailed a considerable sacrifice of Canadian interests, still it was wise to accept it as a means of establishing friendly relations with the United States, and especially because Imperial interests of great magnitude were involved, and because it would be ungracious and undutiful in a matter of such importance to oppose the wishes of the mother country.

The Opposition, on the other hand, contended that better terms might and ought to have been obtained; that though willing to make any reasonable sacrifice in the interests of the Empire, they anticipated no evil result from a firm maintenance of the undoubted rights of Canada, and they took special objection to the course which the Dominion Government had taken with regard to the Imperial guarantee of the loan in compensation for the abandonment of the claims in respect of the Fenian Raids.

3. Mr. Blake, one of the leaders of the Opposition, and Premier of the Local Government in the Province of Ontario, moved the following amendment:—"To leave out all the words after 'that,' and insert the following:—Before proceeding further upon the said Bill, this House feels bound to declare, that while Her Majesty's loyal subjects the people of Canada will at all times cheerfully make any reasonable sacrifice in the interests of the Empire, we have just ground for the great dissatisfaction prevailing throughout the country at the mode in which our rights have been dealt with in the negotiations resulting in the Treaty of Washington, and at the subsequent proposal of our Government that England should endorse a Canadian Loan as a price for our adoption of the Treaty and for our abandonment of the claims in respect of the Fenian Raids, which affect not merely our purse, but also our honour and our peace."

Subsequently at a time when the latest telegrams in the public press from London and Washington gave little hopes of a successful issue of the difficulties which have arisen as to the claims for consequential damages, Mr. Bodwell, a member of the opposition which Messrs. Blake and MacKenzie lead, moved in amendment on Mr. Blake's amendment that "having regard to the existing difficulties between the United States and Great Britain concerning the proceedings necessary to give effect to the Treaty of Washington, it is inexpedient to proceed further at this time upon the said Bill."

The Government opposed both amendments, defeating Mr. Bodwell by a majority of 75, and Mr. Blake by a majority of 72.

Immediately afterwards the division on the second reading of the Bill took place, which, as I have already said, was carried by a majority of 121 to 55.

4. I append an analysis of these divisions showing the numbers on either side in each of the six Provinces of the Dominion :—

Your Lordship will observe that the Government had a majority in every Province, and that on the division for the second reading of the Bill the three Provinces which are most directly interested in the fisheries, Quebec, New Brunswick, and Nova Scotia, taken together, gave 68 votes for the Bill to 21 against it. The Provinces of British Columbia and Manitoba voted en bloc for the Bill. On the other hand in the important Province of Ontario which is far removed from the ocean, the Government majority was only 10, the numbers being 44 to 34.

5. In conclusion I may add that the Ministers have informed me that they do not anticipate any further opposition to the Bill, but that it will soon pass through the remaining stages.

My Lord,

Government House, Ottawa, May 30, 1872.

I HAVE the honour to inform your Lordship that the Bill "to carry into effect the provisions of the Treaty between the United States and Great Britain, signed in the City of Washington on the 8th May, 1871," has passed through all its stages in the Senate of the Dominion, and now awaits the Royal Assent.

3. I am sure that your Lordship will receive with satisfaction the announcement of the final close, by parliamentary action, of the anxieties which have prevailed during the last twelve months, and of the happy settlement of a question on which so many important interests, both Imperial and Canadian, were dependent.

The Earl of Kimberley to Lord Lisgar.

My Lord,

Downing Street, June 20, 1872.

I HAVE to acknowledge the receipt of your despatch of the 30th of May, reporting the passing by the Dominion Legislature of the Bill "to carry into effect the provisions of the Treaty between Great Britain and the United States signed in the city of Washington on the 8th of May, 1871."

Her Majesty's Government desire to express their high sense of the prompt and able manner in which this measure has been brought forward by the Canadian Government, and they have observed with great satisfaction the marked cordiality towards this country, and attachment to the Crown which have been manifested in the discussions which have taken place in the Legislature on this subject.

I have at the same time to convey to your Lordship Her Majesty's entire approval of the ability and judgment with which you have thus brought to a close your successful administration of the important Government which has been intrusted to you.

* No. 2.

The Earl of Dufferin to the Earl of Kimberley.—(Received October 2.)

My Lord,

Citadel, Quebec, September 20, 1872.

WITH reference to previous correspondence which has taken place before my arrival in this country on the subject of an Imperial guarantee for a Canadian loan for the construction of a railway to the Pacific Ocean, and the enlargement of the Canals of the Dominion, I have the honour to inclose a minute of the Privy Council which states that the time has arrived when it is expedient to invite the consideration of Her Majesty's Government to this question, and as Sir George E. Cartier is thoroughly conversant with the whole subject and is about to proceed to England for his health, that it is desirable he should be specially charged with submitting to your Lordship the views of the Canadian Government in the matter.

I have, &c.

(Signed) DUFFERIN.

Inclosure in No. 6.

Report of a Committee of the Honourable the Privy Council, approved by his Excellency the Governor-General on the 17th September, 1872.

THE Committee have had under consideration a memorandum dated 14th September, 1872, from the Honourable the Minister of Finance, reporting that, in his opinion, the time has arrived when it is expedient to invite the consideration of Her Majesty's Government to the correspondence which took place in connection with the Treaty of Washington on the subject of an Imperial Guarantee for a Canadian Loan for the construction of a railroad to the Pacific Ocean, and the enlargement of the Canadian canals.

The Minister submits that it is important that the Canadian Government should know as early as possible what they have to expect, and as the Minister of Militia and Defence—who is thoroughly acquainted with the past negotiations on the subject of fortifications—has been advised to proceed to England on account of his health, it seems desirable that he should be specially charged with bringing the whole subject under the consideration of Her Majesty's Government. The Minister of Finance recapitulates the facts of the case as follows:—

On reference to the Minute of the Privy Council of Canada of 20th January, 1872, it will, he states, be found that a proposal was made that a guarantee to the extent of 4,000,000*l.* should be extended to Canada.

That in the Earl of Kimberley's despatch dated 18th March, 1872, in reply, his Lordship offered a guarantee of 2,500,000*l.*, which was accepted by the Government of Canada, as will appear by reference to the Minute of Council of 15th April, 1872, transmitted in Lord Lisgar's despatch of same date.

That no reference was made in the foregoing Minutes to the subsisting guarantee of 1,100,000*l.* sterling, for fortifications in Canada, and the pledge on the part of Her Majesty's Government to be at the cost of the armaments.

That, in asking for a guarantee of 4,000,000*l.* originally, it was anticipated that the Imperial Government would object to give so large an amount, and it was contemplated that the result of the negotiations would be the transference from military objects to public works of the amount already guaranteed, with a fair equivalent for the armaments.

That, unfortunately, at the very time when the correspondence was in the course of taking place, the misunderstanding between Her Majesty's Government and that of the United States on the subject of the indirect claims occurred, and it became undesirable to raise any question regarding the abandonment of the fortifications.

That, as all these difficulties have now been happily settled, it seems most desirable to consider the expediency of abandoning, for the present, the erection of fortifications.

That, if such defensive works should hereafter be required, Canada would not shrink from the responsibility of undertaking them.

That the Imperial Parliament would hardly object to the mere transference of a loan already agreed to from military works to great public improvements, and the difference between that loan, 1,100,000*l.*, and the 1,500,000*l.* now asked to supplement the 2,500,000*l.* already agreed to, being only a guarantee and not a grant, is certainly not more than an equivalent for the promised grant for armament.

That it would probably be considered both by the Imperial and by the Dominion Parliaments highly inexpedient at the present time, when cordial relations have been established with the United States, to commence military works in Canada.

He, therefore, recommends that the Minister of Militia and Defence be instructed to bring this important subject under the consideration of Her Majesty's Government, and to endeavour to obtain their consent to an increase of the Guarantee to 4,000,000*l.* on condition that the present loan of 1,100,000*l.* be abandoned, and also the undertaking to supply armaments.

The Committee concur in the foregoing Report, and advise that a copy of the present Minute be transmitted by your Excellency to the Earl of Kimberley for the consideration of Her Majesty's Government.

Certified,

Clerk, Privy Council, Canada.

No. 7.

The Earl of Kimberley to the Earl of Dufferin.

My Lord,

Downing Street, December 5, 1872.

I HAVE the honour to acknowledge your Lordship's despatch of the 20th of September,* inclosing a minute of the Canadian Privy Council, proposing that the guarantee of 2,500,000*l.* which Her Majesty's Government have agreed to recommend to Parliament on the conditions stated in my despatch of the 18th of March last,† should be increased to 4,000,000*l.* on condition that the present guaranteed loan of 1,100,000*l.* for fortifications be abandoned, and also the promise on the part of Her Majesty's Government to supply armaments.

I have had the advantage of conferring with Sir George Cartier, the Minister of Militia and Defence, on this subject, and I have now to state the course which Her Majesty's Government are prepared to adopt.

Her Majesty's Government observe with satisfaction that the Privy Council declare that if such defensive works should hereafter be required, Canada would not shrink from the responsibility of undertaking them. The questions therefore which have now to be considered are, first whether Canada being desirous of postponing her share of the works which it was agreed in 1865 should be constructed, partly by the Imperial Government at Imperial expense but principally by the Dominion Government by means of a loan under Imperial guarantee, Her Majesty's Government are called upon to object to such postponement; and secondly whether they can properly recommend to Parliament the transfer of the guarantee of 1,100,000*l.* for fortifications to a loan for the construction of the Pacific Railroad and the improvement of the Canadian Canals. A further question remains whether this guarantee should be increased by 400,000*l.* as an equivalent for the promised supply of armaments.

Her Majesty's Government have performed their part of the works planned in 1865 by the improvement of the fortifications of Quebec, and they are not disposed to question the propriety of the Canadian Government choosing the time when they may think fit to commence the important military works which Canada undertook as her share of the projected system of defence. They fully recognize the necessity of providing safe and rapid means of communication through British territory between the older Provinces of the Dominion, and the vast region which has been brought under the control of the Canadian Government by the incorporation with the Dominion of British Columbia and the country formerly governed by the Hudson's Bay Company, and also the urgency in the interests of commerce of improving the Canadian Canals; and although they hold it a salutary rule, not to be lightly departed from, that this country should not incur contingent liabilities for expenditure which naturally falls upon that part of the Empire which is to reap the direct benefit of the outlay, they are willing, looking to the peculiar position of the Dominion, and the heavy responsibilities recently thrown upon it, greater probably than were ever before undertaken by a Colonial Government, to make an exception in this case. They will therefore be prepared, when the time arrives for the proposal of the guarantee of the loan of 2,500,000*l.*, to insert in the Bill a clause transferring the guarantee of 1,100,000*l.* for fortifications to a loan for the same purposes as those for which the loan of 2,500,000*l.* is to be applied.

With respect to the pledge to provide armaments there appear to Her Majesty's Government to be serious objections to the substitution for this pledge of a new guarantee for a loan of 400,000*l.*

It is difficult to perceive any common measure between a Parliamentary guarantee for a certain sum and the obligation to provide the cost of armaments, an obligation not to arise until the works shall have been actually completed; and whilst Parliament might be willing to consent to a simple transfer of a guarantee in no way increasing the liabilities of this country, it might reasonably demur to undertaking a new guarantee in return for the abandonment of an engagement of an entirely different kind. They have, therefore, after careful consideration, thought it better not to go beyond the total sum of 3,600,000*l.*, to which the guarantee already given and that which they have agreed to propose together amount.

I have only to add that it must be distinctly understood that Her Majesty's Government take upon themselves no responsibility for the success of the Pacific Railroad, nor of any other works which the Canadian Government may construct with the proceeds of the loans in question.

No. 8.

The Earl of Dufferin to the Earl of Kimberley.—(Received March 4.)

My Lord,

Government House, Ottawa, February 17, 1873.

I HAVE the honour to inclose, for submission to your Lordship, copy of an approved Minute of the Privy Council in reference to your Lordship's despatch of the 5th December last, in which my Government express their satisfaction with the arrangements which have been sanctioned by Her Majesty's Government in respect of the increase of the guarantee of 2,500,000*l.* sterling, to 3,600,000*l.*, on condition that the present guaranteed loan of 1,100,000*l.* for fortifications be abandoned.

I have, &c.
(Signed) DUFFERIN.

Inclosure in No. 8.

Report of the Committee of the Honourable the Privy Council, approved by his Excellency the Governor-General on the 17th February, 1873.

THE Committee of Council have had under consideration the despatch from the Right Honourable Her Majesty's Secretary of State for the Colonies of the 5th of December last, in answer to your Excellency's despatch transmitting the Minute in Council which proposed that the guarantee of 2,500,000*l.* sterling, which Her Majesty's Government had agreed to recommend to Parliament on the conditions stated in Lord Kimberley's despatch to the Governor-General of the 18th March last, should be increased to 4,000,000*l.* sterling, provided that the present guaranteed loan of 1,100,000*l.* for fortifications be abandoned, as well as the promise on the part of Her Majesty's Government to supply armaments therefor.

The Committee of Council desire to express their satisfaction with the decision of Her Majesty's Government in assenting to the transfer of the guarantee of the loan for fortifications to the objects to which the loan of 2,500,000*l.* is to be appropriated.

It would have afforded additional financial relief to the Government of the Dominion, though possibly of a temporary character, had Her Majesty's Government felt themselves justified in assenting to the transfer of the armament engagement to the same objects, and thus increasing the Imperial guarantee as proposed in the Minute in Council of the 17th of September, 1872, to 4,000,000*l.* sterling.

The Committee of Council, however, recognize the objections that might possibly be taken in Parliament to the substitution of a guarantee of 4,000,000*l.* sterling for the pledge to supply armaments for fortifications, and not wishing to embarrass Her Majesty's Government with any difficulty of that nature, they respectfully advise that the change of the engagement referred to be not further urged, but that the proposal of Her Majesty's Government to insert in the proposed Bill a clause transferring the guarantee of 1,100,000*l.* sterling, for fortifications to a loan for the same purposes as those to which the loan of 2,500,000*l.* is to be applied, be accepted, with the understanding expressed in Lord Kimberley's despatch that Her Majesty's Government take upon themselves no responsibility for the success of the Pacific Railway nor of any other works which the Government of the Dominion may construct with the proceeds of the loan in question.

I have the honour to enclose six printed copies of the Charter passed under the Great Seal of the Dominion of Canada on the 5th instant, incorporating "The Canadian Pacific Railway Company."

I have, &c.,

Inclosure in No. 1.

VICTORIA, by the GRACE of GOD, of the UNITED KINGDOM of GREAT BRITAIN and IRELAND, QUEEN, DEFENDER of the FAITH, &c., &c., &c.

To all to whom these presents shall come

GREETING :

WHEREAS, by an Act of the Parliament of Canada, passed in the thirty-fifth year of Our Reign, entitled "An Act respecting the Canadian Pacific Railway," it is provided, upon the considerations therein declared, that a railway, to be called "The Canadian Pacific Railway," should be made, in conformity with the agreement referred to in the preamble to the said Act, and should extend from some point on or near Lake Nipissing and on the south shore thereof, to some point on the shore of the Pacific Ocean; both the said points to be determined by the Governor in Council, and the course and line of the said railway between the said points to be subject to the approval of the Governor in Council :

2 FURTHER CORRESPONDENCE WITH THE GOVERNMENTS OF

AND WHEREAS, it is, by the said Act, further provided, that the Government of Canada might further agree with the Company with whom they shall have agreed for the construction and working of the said railway, for the construction and working of a branch line of railway, from some point on the railway first thereinbefore mentioned, to some point on Lake Superior in British Territory, and for the construction and working of another branch line of railway from some point on the railway first mentioned, in the Province of Manitoba, to some point on the line between that Province and the United States of America, the said points to be determined by the Governor in Council; and that such branch lines of railway should, when so agreed for, be held to form part of the railway first thereinbefore mentioned, and portions of The Canadian Pacific Railway :

AND WHEREAS, amongst other things, it is by the said Act in effect provided, that if there should be no company either incorporated originally for the construction of the whole line of railway, or formed out of two or more companies for that purpose, or if the Government could not agree, or did not deem it advisable to agree, with any such company for the construction and working of the whole line of railway under the said Act, or if the Government should be of opinion that it would be more advantageous for the Dominion, and would better ensure the attainment of the purposes of the said Act, that a company should be incorporated by Charter as therein provided, then if there should be persons able and willing to form such Company, and having a subscribed capital of at least ten million dollars, secured to the satisfaction of the Governor in Council, and ready to enter into such agreement with the Government for the construction and running of the said railway, the Governor should have power, upon the conditions in the said Act mentioned, to grant to such persons, and those who should be associated with them in the undertaking, a Charter embodying the agreement made with such persons which should be binding on the Company and so much of the said Act, and of the railway Act (as such railway Act was modified by any Act of the now last Session, with reference to any railway to be constructed under such Act on any of the lines or between any of the points mentioned in the said Act now in recital) as should be agreed upon between the Government and such Company: and that such charter being published in the Canada Gazette, with any order or orders in Council relating to it, should, in so far as it is not inconsistent with the said recited Act, have force and effect as if it were an Act of the Parliament of Canada :

AND WHEREAS, the Government has failed to induce the two Companies incorporated by Parliament during its last Session for the purpose of constructing the railway, to form one Company, and does not deem it advisable to agree with either of the said two Companies for the construction of the railway, and is of opinion that it will be more advantageous for the Dominion, and will better ensure the attainment of the purposes of the Act first above mentioned, that a company shall be incorporated by charter as in such Act provided :

AND WHEREAS, Sir Hugh Allan, of the city of Montreal, Knight; The Honourable Adams George Archibald, of the city of Halifax, C.M.G., a member of the Queen's Privy Council for Canada; The Honourable Joseph Octave Beaubien, of Montmagny, Commissioner of Crown Lands in the Province of Quebec; Jean Baptiste Beaudry, of the city of Montreal, Esquire; Egerton Ryerson Burpee, of the city of Saint John, Esquire; Frederic William Cumberland, of the city of Toronto, Esquire; Sandford Fleming, of the city of Ottawa, Esquire; Robert Newton Hall, of the town of Sherbrooke, Esquire; The Honourable John Sebastian Helmcken, of the city of Victoria; Andrew McDermot, of the town of Winnipeg, Esquire; Donald McInnes, of the city of Hamilton, Esquire; Walter Shanly, at present of the town of North Adams, in the United States of America, Esquire; and John Walker, of the city of London, in the Province of Ontario, Esquire, have shown themselves to be able and willing to form such Company for the construction and working of the railway and branches; and have subscribed a capital sum of ten million dollars, secured to the satisfaction of the Governor in Council, and have so subscribed the same in the proportions following, that is to say : $3,846,000, or nearly five-thirteenths, in the Province of Ontario; $3,076,800, or nearly four-thirteenths, in the Province of Quebec; and $769,300, or upwards of one-thirteenth, in each of the Provinces of Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, Manitoba and British Columbia, respectively; and are ready to enter into an agreement with the Government for the construction and working of the railway and branches; and the Government has agreed with the said persons for the construction and working of the railway and branches :

AND WHEREAS, the agreement so made and entered into between the said persons and the Government, is embodied in this Our Royal Charter :

NOW THEREFORE KNOW YE, that We of Our special grace, certain knowledge and mere motion, and in pursuance of the power vested in Us by the Act hereinbefore in part recited, do ORDAIN, GRANT AND DECLARE that the said Sir Hugh Allan; Honourable Adams George Archibald; Honourable Joseph Octave Beaubien; Jean Baptiste Beaudry, Esquire; Egerton Ryerson Burpee, Esquire; Frederick William Cumberland, Esquire; Sandford Fleming, Esquire; Robert Newton Hall, Esquire; Honourable John Sebastian Helmcken; Andrew McDermot, Esquire; Donald McInnes, Esquire; Walter Shanly, Esquire; and John Walker, Esquire; together with all such persons as shall become associated with them in the undertaking, for the purposes herein mentioned, shall be and are hereby constituted a body corporate and politic by the name, style and title of "The Canadian Pacific Railway Company," and by that name, they and their successors shall and may have continued succession; and be capable of contracting and being contracted with, of suing and being sued, pleading and being impleaded, answering and being answered unto in all courts and places whatsoever, in all manner of actions, suits, complaints, matters and causes whatsoever. And that they and their successors may and shall have a common seal, and may change and alter the same at their will and pleasure; and also that they and their successors, by the name of "The Canadian Pacific Railway Company," shall be in law capable of taking, purchasing, and holding to them and their successors, any estate, real, personal, or mixed, to and for the use of the Company, and of selling, conveying, leasing or otherwise departing therewith, for the benefit and on the account of the Company, from time to time, as they shall deem expedient or necessary, subject to the provisions, restrictions and limitations hereinafter contained.

STOCK.

2. AND WE DO FURTHER ORDAIN AND DECLARE that the capital stock of the Company shall be ten million dollars, which shall not be increased but by Act of Parliament (such capital stock having been already subscribed as aforesaid), to be held in shares of one hundred dollars each, which shall in all respects be deemed personal property, and ten per centum thereon shall be paid into the hands of the Receiver-General of Canada, in money or Canadian Government securities, within one month after the date of these presents, to remain in his hands until otherwise ordered by Parliament. And the interest received by the Receiver-General from the investment of such money and from such securities shall be paid to the Company as received, until he shall be authorized by the Government to withhold and retain the same by reason of some default incurred by the Company in the performance of the conditions of this Charter, or of any subsequent agreement between the Government and the Company.

3. That the shares of the said capital stock shall, after the first deposit thereon has been paid, be transferable; but no transfer made within six years from the date hereof shall be valid or effectual, unless it be made with the consent of the Government, and of the Directors, and registered in the books to be kept by the Company for that purpose; nor after six years, unless it be made with the consent of the Directors, and registered as aforesaid. And in the event of the right of property in any of the shares in the capital stock of the Company becoming transmitted otherwise than by direct transfer, the person claiming the same shall be bound to establish such claim in the manner provided for the transmission of Bank Stock by the Act 34 Vic., cap. 71, intituled, "An Act respecting Banks and Banking." And in the event of the bankruptcy or insolvency of any holder of any shares not fully paid up, or of the sale thereof under execution, such shares shall be ipso facto forfeited, but the Company shall pay the purchaser of such shares, or the Assignee or other representative of such Shareholder for such shares at the current value thereof.

4. That no call shall be made upon the stock of the Company beyond or above the first deposit of ten per centum thereon, save as in this clause mentioned, and the balance of ninety per centum thereof shall not be called up until after the expenditure of the money to be raised upon the bonds of the Company or otherwise, as hereinafter authorized and provided; but such balance shall remain as a security to the Government for the final completion and equipment of the railway. After such expenditure the Directors may, from time to time, if necessary, with the approval of the Government, call upon the shareholders for such instalments upon each share, and in such proportion as the Directors may see fit; except that no such instalment shall exceed ten per centum on the subscribed capital, and that ninety days' notice of the time fixed for the payment thereof shall be given in such manner as the Directors shall think fit. And such calls shall not be made more frequently than once in ninety days.

RAILWAY.

5. That the Company may and shall lay out, construct, equip, maintain, and work a continuous railway, of the width or gauge of four feet eight and one-half inches, which railway shall be made in conformity with the Act hereinbefore recited, and with this Our Royal Charter; and such railway shall extend from some point on or near Lake Nipissing, and on the south shore thereof, to some point on the shore of the Pacific Ocean, both the said points to be determined by the Government, and the course and line of the said railway between the said points to be subject to the approval of the Government.

6. That the Company may and shall lay out, construct, equip, maintain, and work a branch line of railway from some point on the railway in the last preceding clause mentioned, to some point on Lake Superior in British Territory, and also another branch line of railway from some point on the railway in the last preceding clause mentioned, in the Province of Manitoba, to some point on the line between that Province and the United States of America, the said points and the courses and lines of the said branches between the said points to be determined by the Government; the said branches to be of the gauge aforesaid; and such branch lines of railway shall form part of the railway in the last preceding clause mentioned, and portions of The Canadian Pacific Railway.

7. The railway shall be divided into sections, as follows:—

- (1.) THE EASTERN SECTION.—Extending from the Eastern Terminus to Red River.
- (2.) THE LAKE SUPERIOR SECTION.—Extending from some point on the Eastern Section to Lake Superior.
- (3.) THE CENTRAL SECTION.—Extending from Red River to a point in the longitude of Fort Edmonton.
- (4.) THE MANITOBA SECTION.—Extending from the main line in the Province of Manitoba to the Boundary of the United States.
- (5.) THE WESTERN SECTION.—Extending from a point in the longitude of Fort Edmonton to the Pacific coast.

8. That the Company shall, within two years from the twentieth day of July, in the year 1871, commence simultaneously the construction of the railway from the Pacific Ocean towards the Rocky Mountains, and from a point in the Province of Ontario hereafter to be determined by the Government, towards the Pacific Ocean, to connect the seaboard of British Columbia with the railway system of Canada; and further shall construct the Manitoba Section by the thirty first day of December 1874; the Lake Superior Section and such portion of the Eastern Section as shall be required to complete communication between Lake Superior and Red River, by the thirty first day of December, 1876; shall proceed with and construct the eastern and western sections simultaneously; shall prosecute the work of constructing the railway with all due diligence; and shall complete the whole railway within ten years from the said twentieth day of July, 1871, unless the last-mentioned period shall be enlarged by Act of Parliament, in which case the Company shall complete the whole railway within such extended period.

9. That the railway shall be constructed and equipped according to specifications to be hereafter agreed upon between the Government and the Company, and the materials of and manner in which the several works forming part thereof shall be constructed, and the mode of working the railway, or any part thereof, including the description and capacity of the locomotive engines and other rolling stock for working it, shall be such as may be hereafter agreed upon between the Government and the Company: Provided always that if the Government and the Company should be unable to agree as to the details of any of the matters in this clause mentioned, the same shall be, from time to time, referred to the determination of three competent Engineers, one of whom shall be chosen by the Government, one by the Company, and a third by such two Engineers, and the expenses of said references shall be defrayed by the Company. And in order to establish an approximate standard whereby such matters may be regulated, the Union Pacific Railway of the United States is hereby selected and fixed as such standard, but in a general way only, and not with respect to any minor details in its construction or working which may be found to be objectionable, nor with respect to alignment and grades, which shall be as favourable as the nature of the country will admit of without undue expenditure.

10. That whenever any portion of the railway exceeding twenty miles is completed, the Company shall, upon being thereunto required by the Government, work the same for the conveyance of passengers and goods, at such times and in such manner as shall be from time to time agreed upon between the Government and the Company, or in case of failure to agree, as shall be determined by three Engineers selected as hereinbefore provided.

11. That the Government may, from time to time, appoint such persons as it may think proper to examine, inspect and report upon the construction and equipment of the railway, for the purpose of ensuring the faithful performance of the agreement between the Government and the Company, and the observance of all the provisions of this Charter.

12. That the Company may and shall construct, maintain and work a continuous telegraph line throughout and along the whole line of the railway, such telegraph line being required for the proper working of the railway, and forming a necessary appendage thereto.

13. That the Company shall from time to time furnish such reports of the progress of the work, with such details and plans of the work as the Government may require.

LAND GRANT.

14. That to secure the construction of the main line of railway, and in consideration thereof there is hereby appropriated a grant to the Company of fifty million acres of land, which land, with the exceptions hereinafter mentioned, the Company shall be entitled to demand and receive in the Provinces of Manitoba and British Columbia, and in the North-West Territories, in blocks not exceeding twenty miles in depth on each side of such main line and not less than six nor more than twelve miles in width, alternating with blocks of like depth and width on each side thereof, reserved by the Government.

That to secure the construction of the branch lines, and in consideration thereof, the Company shall be entitled to demand and receive from the Government in the North-West Territories, a land grant in aid of the branch line to Lake Superior, of twenty-five thousand acres per mile; and a land grant in aid of the branch line in Manitoba, of twenty thousand acres per mile.

That the land to be granted in aid of the main line, which shall not be comprised within the alternate blocks hereinbefore mentioned, or be within the Province of Ontario, shall be allotted to the Company in alternate blocks on each side of a common front line or lines, in like manner as the blocks granted and reserved along the line of the railway. And the land grant which the Government may be enabled to make to the Company for the purposes aforesaid, under any arrangement with the Government of the Province of Ontario, shall be received by the Company as part of the said land grant in aid of the main line.

But no land grant shall include any land then before granted to any other party, or on which any other party has any lawful claim of pre-emption or otherwise, or any land reserved for school or other public purposes, or any land reserved, or to be reserved under agreement with the Hudson's Bay Company, and the deficiency arising from the exception of any such lands shall be made good to the Company by the grant of an equal extent from other wild and ungranted Dominion lands.

That if it shall be found that any of the alternate blocks laid out along the line of the railway are unfit for settlement, the Company shall not be bound to receive from the Government any greater depth of land in such blocks than one mile, computed from the railway.

That the lands to be granted in aid of the main line of railway from out of the lands of the Dominion, and the lands to be granted in aid of the said branches shall consist of such land as shall be found east of the Rocky Mountains between parallels forty-nine and fifty-seven of north latitude and the Company shall not be bound to receive any lands which are not of the fair average quality of the land in the sections of country best adapted for settlement lying within those limits; and the same shall be laid out, as nearly as may be, contiguous to the lands granted along the main line of the railway, and to the Lake Superior branch.

The Company shall also have a right of way for the railway through Dominion lands.

The lands hereby appropriated to the Company shall be granted from time to time, at intervals of six months, as any portion of the railway is proceeded with, in quantities proportionate to the length, difficulty of construction and expenditure upon such portion, to be determined in such manner as hereafter is provided.

15. That the price at which the alternate blocks of land retained by the Government shall be sold by the Government, shall be from time to time adjusted by agreement between the Government and the Company, according to the price that is found to be obtainable for such lands without obstructing the settlement of the country. But unless the Company shall sell lands granted to them at a lower average price, or shall otherwise agree, the Government shall, for and during the term of twenty years from the date hereof, retain the upset price of such alternate blocks at an average price of not less than two dollars and fifty cents per acre. The provisions of this clause are, however, subject to the sanction of Parliament.

16. That the subdivision of blocks of land granted to the Company shall be made in conformity with the system of survey prescribed by the Dominion Lands Act and any amendment thereof; and shall be made by the Company, and be subject to the inspection and approval of the Surveyor-General of Dominion lands.

17. That the Government shall extinguish the Indian title affecting the lands herein appropriated, and to be hereafter granted in aid of the railway.

SUBSIDY.

18. That a subsidy or aid in money, amounting to thirty million dollars, is hereby granted to the Company, payable from time to time by instalments at intervals of one month as any portion of the railway is proceeded with, in proportion to the length, difficulty of construction, and cost of such portion, such proportion to be ascertained and settled in the same manner as is herein provided with respect to the grants of land.

19. That the Company shall allow as part of the subsidy, the cost of the survey made in the years one thousand eight hundred and seventy-one and one thousand eight hundred and seventy-two, and to be made in the year one thousand eight hundred and seventy-three, by the Government of Canada, for the purpose of ascertaining the best line for the railway.

20. That it shall be lawful for the Company to accept and receive from the Government of any Province, or from any Municipality in Canada, or from any Corporation, a subsidy or aid in money, or bonds, or securities, payable in such manner, at such times, on such conditions, and at such places in Canada or elsewhere as may be agreed upon with the Company.

BOARD OF TRUSTEES.

21. That the Company may by by-law create a Board of Trustees, to consist of three persons, to be chosen and to be removable at pleasure, as follows, that is to say: one member thereof by the Government, one other member thereof by the Board of Directors, and one other member thereof by or on behalf of the bondholders, in such manner as may be provided by such by-law; and upon the completion of such Board by the choice of such members the same shall be published by the Secretary of the Company in the Canada Gazette.

22. That the removal, resignation, mental incapacity, or insolvency of any member of the Board shall vacate his appointment as such; and thereupon, or upon the death of any member, the vacancy occasioned thereby shall be filled by the choice of a person to be a member of the said Board by the Government, the Board of Directors, or the bondholders, as the case may be by whom the member whose vacant seat is to be filled was originally chosen. And such change shall be published in the manner aforesaid.

23. That the duties and powers of the Board of Trustees shall be as follows:—

I. To receive from time to time from the Government of Canada such portion or portions of the subsidy of thirty million dollars as may be earned by, and payable to the Company as hereinbefore mentioned.

II. To receive from time to time the net proceeds of the sales or rents of such portions of the land hereby appropriated as may from time to time be sold or leased by the Company; and also all such subsidies and aids as may be granted to the Company by the Government of any Province, or by any Municipality or other Corporation.

III. To pay the Board of Trustees, for their services, such sums of money as shall be from time to time fixed by by-law of the Company.

IV. After payment of the expenses of the trust, to invest all moneys received by them as Trustees in the securities of the Government of Canada, or of any of its Provinces, or of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, or of any of the Colonies of the United Kingdom, or of the British Possessions in India, or of the United States of America; and the Board may from time to time sell any such securities, and shall in any such case forthwith reinvest the proceeds of any such sale in other securities of the nature and kind hereinbefore mentioned, or in lieu thereof, when so directed by resolution of the bondholders passed in accordance with a by-law of the Company, purchase outstanding bonds of the Company.

v. The investments to be so made as hereinbefore directed, and the securities whereof the same shall from time to time consist shall form a sinking fund, to be held by the Board of Trustees, upon the trusts following, that is to say, upon trust to pay all costs and charges, which may be incurred in respect of the execution of the trusts hereby created, and in the investment and reinvestment as hereinbefore mentioned, and thereafter upon trust to pay the interest upon the bonds of the Company, as the same shall, from time to time, become due and payable, and thereafter upon trust to pay and discharge the bonds of the Company as the same, and the principal money thereby secured, shall mature and become due and payable; and upon this further trust, after full payment and discharge of all sums of money of principal and interest upon the bonds of the Company, and of all costs and charges incurred in respect of the execution of the trusts hereby created, to transfer the said sinking fund, and the securities thereof, to the Company, to and for the absolute use and behoof of the Company; and the trusts hereby created shall thereupon cease and absolutely determine.

vi. The Board of Trustees shall conform to any order or direction respecting the performance of its duties, which may be concurred in by the Company and by the bondholders acting as provided by by-law.

24. That the Board shall have such further and other powers in the premises, as may be conferred upon them by any by-law of the Company approved by the Government. But no such by-law shall be contrary to, or inconsistent with, the provisions of this charter.

25. That a majority of the Board of Trustees may lawfully exercise the powers of the Board, and the action of such majority shall be held to be the action of the Board. But none of the powers hereby vested in the Company or in the Board of Trustees or the majority of them, shall be acted upon contrary to or inconsistent with the provisions of any agreement which shall be duly entered into by the Company or the Board of Trustees, or by both, with any person or persons who may agree to become holders of the bonds of the Company. And any agreement, resolution, or proceeding made or taken contrary to, or inconsistent with, such agreement, to the detriment of such bondholders, shall be absolutely null and void in law, and shall have no force or effect whatever.

LAND MANAGEMENT.

26. That the Board of Directors may, from time to time, appoint Commissioners or Agents for the management and disposal of the lands of the Company, with such powers and duties as shall be provided by the by-laws of the Company.

27. That the Company shall render to the Board of Trustees yearly accounts of all sales, leases or other disposition of lands; and shall from time to time pay over to the Board of Trustees the net proceeds thereof, after deduction of the cost of management and sale, such cost not to exceed ten per centum of the gross proceeds.

POWERS OF COMPANY:

28. That the Company shall, from time to time, cause the names of the several parties interested in the stock of the Company, and the amount of interest therein of such parties respectively, to be entered in a book to be called "The Stock Register," and may in like manner cause the names and interest of the bondholders to be recorded from time to time in a book to be called "The Bond Register"; and duplicates of all registers of stock and bonds of the Company, and of the holders thereof, kept at the principal office of the Company in Canada may be transmitted to and kept by the agent for the time being of the Company in London.

29. That the Company may pay to the shareholders interest on the amount of their paid up capital at the rate of five per centum per annum, during the construction of the railway and works.

30. That the Company shall have power and authority to become parties to promissory notes and bills of exchange for sums not less than one hundred dollars; and all such promissory notes made or endorsed, and such bills of exchange drawn, accepted or endorsed by the President or Vice-President of the Company, under the authority of the Board, shall be binding on the Company; and may also issue scrip with the like signatures, redeemable in the stock of the Company, or in lands, or in both; and in no case shall it be necessary to have the seal of the Company affixed to any promissory note, bill of exchange, or scrip: Provided, however, that nothing in this section shall be construed to authorize the Company to issue any notes or bills of exchange payable to bearer, or intended to be circulated as money, or as the notes or bills of a bank.

31. That the Company may, with the approval of the Government, enter into and conclude any arrangements with any other incorporated railway company in Canada or the United States, for the purpose of making any branch or branches to facilitate a connection between the railways of the Company and of such other incorporated company, and they may, with like approval, enter into arrangements for the mutual interchange of traffic with all railway companies completing their lines to the lines of the Company; and they may, with like approval, lease or acquire such last-mentioned railway or railways, or make running arrangements therewith, and generally may, with like approval, enter into such arrangements as will secure uniform and complete railway connection with the system of railways now or hereafter existing in Canada or the United States.

32. That the Company, after the opening of the railway, or any part thereof, to the public, shall annually submit to the Parliament of Canada, within thirty days after the opening of each session thereof, a detailed and particular account attested by the President and Secretary of the Company, of all moneys by them earned on the part so opened, together with the running expenses thereof, with a classified statement of the tonnage of freight, and the number of passengers conveyed over the said road; and shall comply with any further provisions which Parliament may hereafter make with regard to the form or details of such account or the mode of attesting or rendering the same.

33. That the Company may, until such right is determined by Parliament, undertake the transmission of messages for the public by any line of telegraph they may construct on the line of their railway, and collect tolls for so doing; or may, with the approval of the Government, lease such line of telegraph, or any portion thereof, subject to any provisions herein contained; and, if they think proper to undertake such transactions, they shall be subject to the provisions of the fourteenth and following clauses of chapter sixty-seven of the Consolidated Statutes of Canada.

DIRECTORS AND THEIR POWERS.

34. That the said Sir Hugh Allan, Adams George Archibald, Joseph Octave Beaubien, Jean Baptiste Beaudry, Egerton Ryerson Burpee, Frederic William Cumberland, Sandford Fleming, Robert Newton Hall, John Sebastian Helmcken, Andrew McDermot, Donald McInnes, Walter Shanly, and John Walker (a majority of whom shall constitute a quorum for the transaction of business), shall be Provisional Directors of the Company, and shall have power and authority to elect a President and Vice-President from among their number, to appoint a Secretary, Treasurer, and other officers, to call a general meeting of Shareholders for the election of Directors, as hereinafter provided, and generally to do such other acts as shall be necessary for the conduct and management of the said undertaking, and for finally procuring the election of a Board of Directors by the shareholders.

35. That the Provisional Directors shall hold office until the election of their successors; and shall call a meeting of the shareholders, to be held on such day, as hereinbefore provided for, and at such place in the city of Ottawa as they shall decide, giving due notice thereof to each shareholder; at which general meeting the shareholders present, either in person or by proxy, shall elect thirteen Directors, who shall constitute the Board, and shall hold office until others are elected in their stead; and if any vacancy shall occur by the death, resignation, mental incapacity, insolvency, or disqualification from want of stock of any Director, the vacancy shall be filled for the residue of the current year of office by the Board of Directors.

36. That the Directors be thirteen in number, of whom seven shall be a quorum, and provided such quorum be present, any absent Director may be represented and vote by another Director as his proxy; but no Director shall hold more than one proxy. And the Directors shall retire in the following order, that is to say: four at the end of the first and second years respectively, and five at the end of the third year, and so on in similar proportions, during succeeding years. The Directors so to retire at the end of the first year shall be selected by ballot of the Board. Those to retire at the end of the second year shall be selected by ballot among the nine Directors remaining of the original Board. And at the third and succeeding elections they shall retire by seniority, but the retiring Directors shall be eligible for re-election, and any Director appointed by the Board to fill a vacancy, shall also retire at the end of the current year of office, and a Director shall then be elected by the shareholders in his stead—which Director shall occupy the same position with regard to retirement and seniority as the Director who first vacated the seat. And on the first Wednesday in February, in each year thereafter, or on such other day as may be appointed by a by-law of the Company, there shall be held at the principal office of the Company, a general meeting of the shareholders, at which meeting they shall elect such a number of Directors for the ensuing year as shall be required to supply the places of the Directors so retiring; and public notice of such annual meeting shall be given at least one month before the day of election. Each Director shall be a subject of Her Majesty, and a holder of at least two hundred and fifty shares of the said stock. The election of Directors shall be by ballot, and the President of the Company, and a majority of the Directors shall reside in Canada.

37. That the chief place of business of the Company shall be at the city of Ottawa, but other places at which the Directors or committees of the Directors may meet and transact business may be fixed by the by-laws of the Company.

38. That whenever it shall be deemed expedient by the Board of Directors that a special general meeting of the shareholders shall be convened for any purpose, the Directors shall convene such meeting at the city of Ottawa, by advertisement, in the manner hereinbefore mentioned, in which advertisement the business to be transacted at such meeting shall be expressly mentioned.

39. That any deed required and authorized to be executed on behalf of the Company, shall be held to be valid and binding on the Company, if it be signed by the President or Vice-President and by the Secretary, and the seal of the Company be affixed thereto: and no special authority shall be required for affixing the seal to any such deed.

40. That the Directors of the Company shall have power to administer, conduct and manage the affairs and business of the Company: and shall have and exercise all the powers requisite to enable them to do and perform, make and execute, all such acts, matters and things, deeds and instruments as shall be necessary to carry out the provisions of this Charter, according to the true intent and meaning thereof, including the power of selling, leasing, or otherwise disposing of the lands granted or to be granted in aid of the railway, and of any other lands of the Company not required for the purposes of the railway; except in so far as their powers are expressly limited by the provisions hereof. And they shall also have power, from time to time, to make by-laws for the conduct, management and administration of the affairs of the Company generally; and for the remuneration of the President and Directors of the Company, if such remuneration be deemed advisable; and also such by-laws as are contemplated by the provisions of this Charter for the regulation of divers matters herein required or authorized to be so regulated; and the same to amend or repeal: Provided always, however, that such by-laws shall have no force or effect in any respect in which they, or any of them, shall be contrary to or inconsistent with this Charter, nor in any respect in which they shall require the approval of the Government, until they have received such approval. And such by-laws shall in no case have any force or effect after the next general meeting of shareholders which shall be held after the passage of such by-laws by the Board of Directors, unless they are approved by such meeting; and any copy of the by-laws of the Company, or any of them, purporting to be under the hand of the clerk, Secretary, or other officer of the said Company, and having the seal of the said corporation affixed to it, shall be received as prima facie evidence of such by-law in all courts of the Dominion of Canada.

41. That the Directors of the Company are hereby authorized and empowered to issue bonds, which shall be a first charge on the railway and its appurtenances, and on the tolls and revenues thereof, and on all lands, whether the property of the Company at the time of the issue of such bonds, or thereafter acquired. And such bonds shall be in such form, and for such amount, and with such coupons attached, and they, and the coupons attached thereto shall be payable, at such times and places as the Directors from time to time shall provide. And the payment to the Treasurer of the Company, or to any other person appointed by by-law for the purpose, by any bonâ fide purchaser of any lands of the Company, of the purchase money thereof, and the acquittance by such Treasurer or other person so appointed, of such purchase money; shall operate as a release of the lands so paid for from the effect of such charge; and the Company shall keep all moneys so received separate and apart from its ordinary funds, and shall pay over the nett proceeds thereof to the Board of Trustees as hereinbefore provided. The bonds shall be signed by the President or Vice-President and the Secretary, but the signature of the President or Vice-President to the bonds, and the signature of the Secretary to the coupons, may be lithographed or engraved thereon; and such bonds shall be valid without having the seal of the Company affixed thereto.

Provided that the amount of such bonds shall not exceed forty thousand dollars per mile, to be issued in proportion to the length of railway to be constructed under and by virtue of this charter, unless the issue of bonds to a larger amount be authorized by the Government. And all bonds issued under this charter shall have the same and equal rank and priority, as a first charge on the assets of the Company hereinbefore described.

42. That if, at any time, any agreement be made by the Company with any persons intending to become bondholders of the Company, restricting the issue of bonds by the Company, under the powers conferred by the preceding section, or defining or limiting the mode of exercising such powers; the Company thereafter shall not act upon such powers otherwise than as defined, restricted and limited by such agreement. And no bond thereafter issued by the Company, and no order, resolution, or proceeding thereafter made, passed or had by the Company, or by the Board of Directors, contrary to the terms of such agreement, shall be valid or effectual.

43. That the Directors of the Company may, by by-law, appoint an agent or agents in the city of London, England, and may by such by-law make provision for the payment of dividends, and for the transfer of the stock and bonds of the Company at the said city of London, in such manner, and upon such terms and conditions as shall be provided by such by-law. Provided that all such by-laws for the transfer of stock passed within six years after the date of this Charter, shall be subject to the approval of the Government.

MISCELLANEOUS PROVISIONS.

44. That for the purpose of making an allotment of the land and money subsidies, the railway shall be divided into convenient sections; and so soon as sufficient information has been obtained respecting the difficulty and cost of construction of such sections, the proportion of land and money subsidies applicable to each of them shall be determined by agreement between the Government and the Company; and if the Government and the Company are unable to agree upon such proportion, the same shall be decided upon by three Engineers selected as hereinbefore provided.

45. That "The Railway Act of 1868," as modified by any Act of the Parliament of Canada, of the Session held in the year 1872, with reference to any railway to be constructed under any such Act on any of the lines, or between any of the points mentioned in the Act in this charter first recited, in so far as the provisions of the same are applicable to the undertaking authorized by this charter, and in so far as they are not inconsistent with or contrary to the provisions thereof, are hereby incorporated therewith.

46. And as respects the said railway, that the eighth section of "The Railway Act, 1868," relating to Plans and Surveys, shall be subject to the following provisions:—

It shall be sufficient that the map or plan and book of reference for any portion of the line of the railway, not being within any district or county for which there is a Clerk of the Peace, be deposited in the office of the Minister of Public Works of Canada, and any omission, mis-statement, or erroneous description of any lands therein may be corrected by the Company, with the consent of the Minister, and certified by him; and the Company may then make the railway in accordance with such certified correction.

The eleventh sub-section of the said eighth section of the Railway Act shall not apply to any portion of the railway passing over ungranted lands of the Crown, or lands not within any surveyed township in any Province; and in such places, deviations not exceeding five miles from the line shown on the map or plan, approved by the Government and deposited by the Company, shall be allowed, on the approval of the Government Inspector, without any formal correction or certificate; and any further deviation that may be found expedient may be authorized by order of the Government, and the Company may then make their railway in accordance with such authorized deviation.

The map or plan and book of reference made and deposited in accordance with this section, after approval by the Government, shall avail as if made and deposited as required by the said "Railway Act, 1868," for all the purposes of the said Act, and of this charter; and any copy of, or extract therefrom, certified by the said Minister or his deputy shall be received as evidence in any court of law in Canada.

It shall be sufficient that a map or profile of any part of the completed railway, which shall not lie within any county or district having a registry office, be filed in the office of the Minister of Public Works.

The Company shall not commence the construction of any bridge over any navigable water until they shall have submitted to the Government plans of such bridge, and of all the intended works thereto appertaining, nor until such plans and the site of such bridge shall have been approved by the Government; and such conditions as it shall think fit to impose touching such bridge shall be complied with; nor shall any plan of any such bridge be altered, or deviation therefrom allowed, except by permission of the Government.

47. That the provision made in sub-sections thirty, thirty-one and thirty-two, of section nine of "The Railway Act, 1868," as to incumbrances on lands acquired by the Company, shall apply to lands acquired by the Company in the Provinces of Manitoba and British Columbia, and in the North-West Territories; and as respects lands in the North-West Territories, the Court of Queen's Bench for the Province of Manitoba shall be held to be the Court intended by the said sub-sections.

48. That in the Provinces of British Columbia and Manitoba, any Judge of a Superior or County Court shall have all the powers given by the said Act to a County Judge, and in the North-West Territories such powers shall be exercised by a Judge of the Queen's Bench of the Province of Manitoba.

49. That it shall be lawful for the Company to take from any public lands adjacent to or near the line of the said railway, all stone, timber, gravel, and other materials which may be necessary or useful for the construction of the railway; and also to lay out, and appropriate to the use of the Company, a greater extent of lands, whether public or private, for stations, depôts, workshops, buildings, side-tracks, wharves, harbours and roadway, and for establishing screens against snow, than the breadth and quantity mentioned in "The Railway Act, 1868," such greater extent taken, in any case, being allowed by the Government, and shown on the maps or plans deposited with the Minister of Public Works.

50. And whereas, it may be necessary for the Company to possess gravel pits and quarries, and lands containing deposits of gravel, stone, brick clay, iron or coal, as well as lands for stations and other purposes, at convenient places along the line of railway, for constructing and keeping in repair, and for carrying on the business of the railway; and as such gravel pits, quarries or deposits cannot at all times be procured without buying the whole lot of land whereon such deposits may be found; therefore, that the said Company may purchase, have, hold, take, receive, use and enjoy, along the line of the said railway, or separated therefrom, and if separated therefrom, then, with the necessary right of way thereto, any lands, tenements and hereditaments which it shall please Her Majesty, or any person or persons, or bodies politic, to give, grant, sell or convey unto and to the use of, or in trust for the said Company, their successors and assigns, and it shall and may be lawful for the said Company to establish stations or workshops on any of such lots or blocks of land, and from time to time, by deed of bargain and sale or otherwise, to grant, bargain, sell or convey any portions of such lands, not necessary to be retained for gravel pits, quarries, sidings, branches, fuel-yards, station grounds or workshops, or for effectually repairing, maintaining and using, to the greatest advantage, the said railway and other works connected therewith.

51. That as respects places not within any Province, any notice required by the "Railway Act, 1868," to be given in the "Official Gazette" of a Province, may be given in the Canada Gazette.

52. That deeds and conveyances of lands to the Company for the purposes of this Charter (not being Letters Patent from the Crown) may, in so far as circumstances will admit, be in the form following, that is to say:—

"Know all men by these presents, that I, A.B., in consideration of paid to me by the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, the receipt whereof is hereby acknowledged, grant, bargain, sell and convey unto the said The Canadian Pacific Railway Company, their successors and assigns, all that tract or parcel of land (describe the land), to have and to

HIS EXCELLENCY the GOVERNOR-GENERAL on the 20th February, 1873.

The Committee of Council, understanding that your Excellency is about to communicate with the Right Hon. the Secretary of State for the Colonies, upon the subject of the guarantees undertaken by Her Majesty's Government, and referred to in the Despatches No. 98 of the 23rd October* and that of the 5th December last,† respectfully recommend that your Excellency will take that opportunity of conveying to Lord Kimberley more specifically than has been done in previous Minutes of Council their acceptance of the proposals contained in the said Despatches, and the expression of their satisfaction that the arrangement proposed by the Committee of Council for the negotiation of the loans, the payment of the interest, and the establishment of the Sinking Fund, have met the approval of Her Majesty's Government.

The Committee of Council further recommend that your Excellency will likewise be pleased to inform Lord Kimberley that they readily assent to the request made in the Despatch of the 23rd of October, 1872, that the terms of negotiation, the form of the Bond, and all other proposed arrangements connected therewith be submitted for the approval of Her Majesty's Government.

MY LORD,

Ottawa, 4th March, 1873.

I have the honour to enclose for your information a copy of a Report of Council recommending that American vessels should not be prevented from fishing within Canadian waters before the Act of Congress giving effect to the Treaty of Washington comes into force on the 1st of July next.

I have forwarded a copy of this report to Sir Edward Thornton.

COPY of a REPORT of a COMMITTEE of the HON. the PRIVY COUNCIL, approved by HIS EXCELLENCY the GOVERNOR-GENERAL on the 3rd March, 1873.

The Committee of the Privy Council beg leave to report to your Excellency that the Act of Congress giving effect to the Treaty of Washington does not come into force till 1st July next.

Until that time American fishermen have no legal right to fish in Canadian waters, and their vessels are liable to seizure for doing so.

The Committee are, however, of opinion that no steps should be taken by the Government to prevent American vessels from fishing within the three-mile limit, and that they should have full permission to fish, as far as the Government can grant it.

It is not probable that any seizures will be made before the 1st July at the instance of private parties, but should such a case occur, the Committee will be prepared to advise your Excellency to order the release of the vessel and the remission of any penalties incurred.

No. 10.

Governor HILL, C.B., to the EARL of KIMBERLEY.—(Received 20th September, 1872.)

Government House, Newfoundland,
28th August, 1872.

MY LORD,

I have the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your Lordship's Despatch of the 13th instant,* enclosing two Copies of an Act to carry into effect the Treaty between Her Majesty and the United States of America, signed at Washington on the 8th May, 1871, and suggesting that the question of the extension of the Articles of the Treaty to Newfoundland should be brought before my Advisers with a view to legislation before the meeting of Congress in December.

2. I have laid before my Ministers your Lordship's Despatch and invited their attention to the suggestions contained in it with reference to legislation respecting the Washington Treaty. I learn from them that it would be almost impossible to convene a meeting of the Legislature so as to extend the Articles of the Treaty to Newfoundland before the opening of Congress in December. The occupations of the majority of the members of the House of Assembly and of several members of the Legislative Council would incapacitate them from attending to their sessional duties earlier than the end of January next, at which time it is the present intention of my Advisers to open the Assembly.

3. I observe that the 2nd Section of the Act, cited as "The Treaty of Washington Act," provides for the extension of the Articles of the Treaty as far as they relate to this Colony, to the Island whenever the necessary laws have been passed by the Legislature of Newfoundland and approved by Her Majesty. I shall therefore during the next session again invite the attention of my Executive to the Treaty, and I have no doubt—should nothing unforeseen occur—my Ministers will have little difficulty in inducing the Legislature to accept its provisions.

SIR,

Downing Street, 7th March, 1873.

I have the honour to acquaint you that a telegram has been received at the Foreign Office from Sir Edward Thornton, reporting that the Canadian Fisheries Bill has been passed by Congress, but with the condition that it shall not come into force until the 1st of July next.

* Since this paper was printed information has been received by telegraph that the Newfoundland Legislature has passed an Act extending the provisions of the Treaty to Newfoundland.

CANADA, PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND, AND NEWFOUNDLAND. 19

I have been informed by the Governor-General of Canada, by telegraph, that the Canadian Government do not propose to exclude American fishermen from the waters of Canada in the meantime.

I request that you will inform me as soon as possible whether your Government will be prepared, as I conclude they will, to take the same course.

SIR,

Admiralty, 10th March, 1873.

With reference to your letter of the 4th instant, inclosing a copy of a notification from the Foreign Office that the American Congress has fixed the 1st of July for the Canadian Fisheries Bill coming into force, I am commanded by my Lords Commissioners of the Admiralty to request you will move the Secretary of State for the Colonies to inform them whether any change is contemplated, in consequence of the action of the American Congress, in the instructions to the captains and commanding officers of Her Majesty's ships to be employed in the protection of the fisheries on the coast of Nova Scotia, Newfoundland, &c., as, if such is the case, their Lordships would be glad to be furnished with the particulars before the end of the present month.

I have, &c.,

Mr. HOLLAND to the ADMIRALTY.

SIR,

Downing Street, 19th March, 1873.

I am directed by the Earl of Kimberley to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 10th instant* enquiring whether any change is contemplated, in consequence of the action of the American Congress, in the instructions to the captains and commanding officers of Her Majesty's ships to be employed in the protection of the North American fisheries.

Lord Kimberley desires me to inform you, that on the receipt of your letter an enquiry was addressed to the Lieutenant-Governor of Prince Edward Island, and to the Governor of Newfoundland, as to whether the fisheries of those islands would be opened to Americans during the coming season.

The Lieutenant-Governor of Prince Edward Island has replied to the effect that his Government are prepared to act in accord with Canada in this matter, and the Governor of Newfoundland has informed his Lordship that the fisheries of Newfoundland are now open provisionally to Americans, and that it is probable that the Legislature of that island will soon pass the Act necessary to give effect to the Washington Treaty.

Their Lordships are aware that the Canadian Government, in anticipation of the Fishery Clauses of the Treaty coming into effect from the 1st July next, have determined not to exclude Americans from the fisheries of Canada in the interval, and in these circumstances Lord Kimberley is of opinion that the formal instructions to Her Majesty's naval officers on the North American station as regards the fisheries should be suspended.

It will be necessary, however, that Her Majesty's naval officers should be directed to give such protection as may be required to the Canadian revenue vessels in preserving order amongst the fishermen who may resort to the colonial fisheries.

I am, &c.,
(Signed) H. T. HOLLAND.

Mr. Hammond to the Under-Secretary of State, Colonial Office.

Sir,

Foreign Office, April 25, 1873.

I AM directed by Earl Granville to request that you will inform the Earl of Kimberley that the American Minister called upon him to-day, and placed in his hands the inclosed copy of the Act which has been passed by the United States' Congress in order to make the necessary arrangements for carrying out the provisions contained in Articles XVIII to XXV inclusive, and Article XXX of the Treaty of Washington, and which is to take effect on the 1st of July next.

The Parliaments of Great Britain and of the Dominion of Canada, and the Legislature of Prince Edward's Island, having also passed the necessary Acts, the American Minister suggested, for Lord Granville's consideration, that it might be desirable that he should be authorized by Mr. Fish to sign a Protocol reciting these several Acts, with a declaration that the Articles are to take effect on the 1st of July.

I am to request that you will inform Lord Kimberley that, if he concurs, Lord Granville is disposed to give his assent to this proposal.

An Act relating to the Treaty of Washington, 1871.

Passed the House of Assembly, March 31, 1873.

Passed the Legislative Council, April 28, 1873.

Received Governor's Assent, May 5, 1873.

(Signed) J. L. NOONAN, Colonial Secretary.

WHEREAS a Treaty between Her Majesty and the United States of America was signed at Washington on the eighth day of May, one thousand eight hundred and seventy-one, and was duly ratified on the seventeenth day of June in that year, which, amongst other things, contained the following Article:—

"It is further agreed that the provisions and stipulations of Articles eighteen to twenty-five of this Treaty, inclusive, shall extend to the Colony of Newfoundland, so far as they are applicable. But if the Imperial Parliament, the Legislature of Newfoundland, or the Congress of the United States, shall not embrace the Colony of Newfoundland in their laws enacted for carrying the foregoing Articles into effect, then this Article shall be of no effect; but the omission to make provision by law to give it effect, by either of the Legislative Bodies aforesaid, shall not in any way impair any other Articles of this Treaty."

And whereas it is expedient to provide for giving effect as regards the Island of Newfoundland and its dependencies, to said Articles eighteen to twenty-five of said Treaty, inclusive, so far as they are applicable to this Colony:

Be it therefore enacted, by the Governor, Legislative Council and Assembly, in Legislative Session convened, as follows:—

1. As soon as the law required to carry into operation, on the part of the United States of America, the Articles set out in the Schedule to this Act has been passed by the Congress of the United States, and come into force, all laws of this Colony which operate to prevent the said Articles from taking full effect shall, so far as they so operate, be suspended and have no effect during the period mentioned in the Article numbered thirty-three in the Schedule to this Act: Provided that such laws, rules, and regulations relating to the time and manner of prosecuting the fisheries on the coast of this island shall not be in any way affected by such suspension.

2. The Governor in Council, by any order or orders to be made for that purpose, may do anything further in accordance with the spirit and intention of the Treaty, which shall be found necessary to be done on the part of this Island, to give full effect to the Treaty, and any such order shall have the same effect as if the object thereof were expressly provided for by this Act.

3. This Act shall not come in force until Her Majesty's assent thereto shall have been given, and until the issuing of a Proclamation under provisions of section two of the Act of the Imperial Parliament, entitled "The Treaty of Washington Act, one thousand eight hundred and seventy-two," and shall remain in force during the term of years mentioned in Article thirty-three in the Schedule to this Act.

SCHEDULE.

Articles of the Treaty of Washington of the 8th of May, 1871, which are referred to in the foregoing Act.

ARTICLE XVIII.

It is agreed by the High Contracting Parties that, in addition to the liberty secured to the United States' fishermen by the Convention between Great Britain and the United States, signed at London on the twentieth day of October, one thousand eight hundred and eighteen, of taking, curing, and drying fish on certain coasts of the British North American Colonies therein defined, the inhabitants of the United States shall have, in common with the subjects of Her Britannic Majesty, the liberty, for the term of years mentioned in Article Thirty-three of this Treaty, to take fish of every kind, except shell-fish, on the sea-coasts and shores, and in the bays, harbours, and creeks of the Provinces of Quebec, Nova Scotia, and New Brunswick, and the Colony of Prince Edward's Island, and of the several islands thereunto adjacent, without being restricted to any distance from the shore, with permission to land upon the said coasts and shores and islands, and also upon the Magdalen Islands, for the purpose of drying their nets and curing their fish: Provided that, in so doing, they do not interfere with the rights of private property, or with British fishermen, in the peaceable use of any part of the said coasts in their occupancy for the same purpose.

It is understood that the above-mentioned liberty applies solely to the sea fishery, and that the salmon and shad fisheries, and all other fisheries in rivers and the mouths of rivers, are hereby reserved exclusively for British fishermen.

ARTICLE XIX.

It is agreed by the High Contracting Parties that British subjects, shall have, in common with the citizens of the United States, the liberty, for the terms of years mentioned in Article Thirty-three of this Treaty, to take fish of every kind, except shell-fish, on the eastern sea-coasts and shores of the United States north of the thirty-ninth parallel of north latitude, and on the shores of the several islands thereunto adjacent, and in the bays, harbours, and creeks of the said sea-coasts and shores of the United States and of the said islands, without being restricted to any distance from the shore, with permission to land upon the said coasts of the United States and of the islands aforesaid, for the purpose of drying their nets and curing their fish: Provided that, in so doing, they do not interfere with the rights of private property, or with the fishermen of the United States, in the peaceable use of any part of the said coasts in their occupancy for the same purpose.

It is understood that the above-mentioned liberty applies solely to the sea-fishery, and that salmon and shad fisheries, and all other fisheries in rivers and mouths of rivers are hereby reserved exclusively for fishermen of the United States.

ARTICLE XX.

It is agreed that the places designated by the Commissioners appointed under the first Article of the Treaty between Great Britain and the United States, concluded at Washington on the fifth of June, one thousand eight hundred and fifty-four, upon the coasts of Her Britannic Majesty's dominions and the United States, as places reserved from the common right of fishing under that Treaty, shall be regarded as in like manner reserved from the common right of fishing under the preceding Articles. In case any question should arise between the Governments of Her Britannic Majesty and of the United States as to the common right of fishing in places not thus designated as reserved, it is agreed that a Commission shall be appointed to designate such places, and shall be constituted in the same manner, and have the same powers, duties, and authority as the Commission appointed under the said first Article of the Treaty of the fifth of June, one thousand eight hundred and fifty-four.

ARTICLE XXI.

It is agreed that, for the term of years mentioned in Article Thirty-three of this Treaty, fish-oil and fish of all kinds (except fish of the inland lakes, and of the rivers falling into them, and except fish preserved in oil), being the produce of the fisheries of the Dominion of Canada, or of Prince Edward's Island, or of the United States, shall be admitted into each country, respectively, free of duty.

ARTICLE XXII.

Inasmuch as it is asserted by the Government of Her Britannic Majesty that the privileges accorded to the citizens of the United States under Article Eighteen of this Treaty are of greater value than those accorded by Articles Nineteen and Twenty-one of this Treaty to the subjects of Her Britannic Majesty, and this assertion is not admitted by the Government of the United States; it is further agreed that Commissioners shall be appointed to determine, having regard to the privileges accorded by the United States to the subjects of Her Britannic Majesty, as stated in Articles Nineteen and Twenty-one of this Treaty, the amount of any compensation which, in their opinion, ought to be paid by the Government of the United States to the Government of Her Britannic Majesty in return for the privileges accorded to the citizens of the United States under Article Eighteen of this Treaty; and that any sum of money which the said Commissioners may so award shall be paid by the United States' Government, in a gross sum within twelve months after such award shall have been given.

ARTICLE XXIII.

The Commissioners referred to in the preceding Article shall be appointed in the following manner, that is to say: One Commissioner shall be named by Her Britannic Majesty, one by the President of the United States, and a third by Her Britannic Majesty and the President of the United States conjointly; and in case the third Commissioner shall not have been so named within a period of three months from the date when this Article shall take effect, then the third Commissioner shall be named by the Representative at London of His Majesty the Emperor of Austria and King of Hungary. In case of the death, absence, or incapacity of any Commissioner, or in the event of any Commissioner omitting or ceasing to act, the vacancy shall be filled in the manner hereinbefore provided for making the original appointment, the period of three months in case of such substitution being calculated from the date of the happening of the vacancy.

The Commissioners so named shall meet in the City of Halifax, in the Province of Nova Scotia, at the earliest convenient period after they have been respectively named, and shall, before proceeding to any business, make and subscribe a solemn declaration that they will impartially and carefully examine and decide the matters referred to them to the best of their judgment, and according to justice and equity; and such declaration shall be entered on the record of their proceedings.

Each of the High Contracting Parties shall also name one person to attend the Commission as its Agent, to represent it generally in all matters connected with the Commission.

ARTICLE XXIV.

The proceedings shall be conducted in such order as the Commissioners appointed under Articles Twenty-two and Twenty-three of this Treaty shall determine. They shall be bound to receive such oral or written testimony as either Government may present. If either Party shall offer oral testimony, the other Party shall have the right of cross-examination, under such rules as the Commissioners shall prescribe.

If in the case submitted to the Commissioners either Party shall have specified or alluded to any Report or document in his own exclusive possession, without annexing a copy, such Party shall be bound, if the other Party thinks proper to apply for it, to furnish that Party with a copy thereof; and either Party may call upon the other, through the Commissioners, to produce the originals or certified copies of any papers adduced as evidence, giving in each instance such reasonable notice as the Commissioners may require.

The case on either side shall be closed within a period of six months from the date of the organization of the Commission, and the Commissioners shall be requested to give their award as soon as possible thereafter. The aforesaid period of six months may be extended for three months in case of a vacancy occurring among the Commissioners under the circumstances contemplated in Article Twenty-three of this Treaty.

ARTICLE XXV.

The Commissioners shall keep an accurate record and correct minutes or notes of all their proceedings, with the dates thereof, and may appoint and employ a Secretary and any other necessary officer or officers to assist them in the transaction of the business which may come before them.

Each of the High Contracting Parties shall pay its own Commissioner and Agent or Counsel; all other expenses shall be defrayed by the two Governments in equal moieties.

ARTICLE XXXIII.

The foregoing Articles Eighteen to Twenty-five inclusive, and Article Thirty of this Treaty, shall take effect as soon as the laws required to carry them into operation shall have been passed by the Imperial Parliament of Great Britain, by the Parliament of Canada, and by the Legislature of Prince Edward's Island on the one hand, and by the Congress of the United States on the other. Such assent having been given, the said Articles shall remain in force for the period of ten years from the date at which they may come into operation, and further until the expiration of two years after either of the High Contracting Parties shall have given notice to the other of its wish to terminate the same; each of the High Contracting Parties being at liberty to give such notice to the other at the end of the said period of ten years or at any time afterwards.

Sir,

St. John's, May 5, 1873.

I HAVE the honour to report, for the information of his Excellency the Governor, that the Legislature of this Colony during the last Session passed an Act intituled "An Act relating to the Treaty of Washington, 1871.

This Act was adopted to give effect to the provisions of the Treaty of Washington, 1871, so far as they apply to this Colony.

The proviso contained in the first section has reference to the time for the prosecution of the Herring Fishery on the western coast of the island, and is merely intended to place American citizens on the same footing with our own people in that particular.

Sir,

Downing Street, June 17, 1873.

I SHALL advise the Queen to confirm the Act of the Legislature of Newfoundland entitled "An Act relating to the Treaty of Washington, one thousand eight hundred and seventy-one," by Order in Council, and you will be informed by telegraph when the Order has been passed by Her Majesty.

As regards the time for bringing the Act into operation, Sir E. Thornton has been instructed to inquire whether the President of the United States will be prepared to issue a Proclamation with reference to Newfoundland in accordance with the 2nd section of the recent Act of Congress relating to the Treaty of Washington, and to propose to Mr. Fish the signing of a separate Protocol fixing the date for bringing into effect, as regards Newfoundland, the Articles of the Treaty applicable to that island.

I inclose, for your information, a copy of a telegram addressed by Earl Granville to Sir Edward Thornton on the 13th instant, suggesting the 2nd or 3rd of July as the date which should be fixed for this object.

Sir E. Thornton has also been instructed that the proposed Protocol should contain a clause following, as nearly as possible, the proviso at the end of the 1st Article of the Newfoundland Act, namely, that the laws, rules, and regulations of the Colony relating to the time and manner of prosecuting the fisheries on the coast of the island shall not in any way be affected by the suspension of the laws of the Colony which operate to prevent the Articles XVIII to XXV of the Treaty of Washington from taking full effect during the period mentioned in the XXXIIIrd Article of that Treaty

When the Protocol has been signed I shall communicate with you by telegraph as to the issue of your Proclamation under the 2nd section of the Imperial Act 35 and 36 Vict., cap. 45.

Foreign Office, June 13, 1873.

WITH reference to my despatch of the 7th instant, I am informed by Colonial Office that, under Imperial Act of last Session relative to Fishery Articles of Treaty, Governor of Newfoundland can only issue Proclamation extending these Articles to Newfoundland during the suspension of certain Acts of Parliament, which Acts will only be suspended when the United States Act shall have come into force. As this will not take place until the 1st of July, it appears that the Governor's Proclamation cannot be issued before that date, and the Protocol should, therefore, fix the 2nd or 3rd of July as the day for bringing the Articles of the Treaty into effect in Newfoundland.

No. 1.

CANADA.

The EARL OF DUFFERIN to The EARL OF KIMBERLEY.

MY LORD,

Canada, May 3, 1873.

I HAVE the honour to forward to your Lordship a certified copy of a Bill, entitled "A Bill to provide for the Examination of Witnesses on Oath by Committees of the Senate and House of Commons in certain cases," which has passed both Houses of the Canadian Parliament, and to which I have this day given my assent.

The introduction of this Bill into the House of Commons arose out of the following circumstances:—

On the 2nd April, the Hon. Lucius Seth Huntington, Member for Shefford, in the Province of Quebec, made the following motion:—

"Hon. Mr. Huntington moved that Mr. Huntington, a member of this House, having stated in his place, that he is credibly informed and believes that he can establish by satisfactory evidence,—

"That in anticipation of the legislation of last Session, as to the Pacific Railway, an agreement was made between Sir Hugh Allan, acting for himself and certain other Canadian promoters, and G. W. McMullen, acting for certain United States capitalists, whereby the latter agreed to furnish all the funds necessary for the construction of the contemplated railway, and to give the former a certain percentage of interest in consideration of their interest and position, the scheme agreed on being ostensibly that of a Canadian Company with Sir Hugh Allan at its head,—

"That the Government were aware that negotiations were pending between these parties,—

"That subsequently an understanding was come to between the Government and Sir Hugh Allan and Mr. Abbott, M.P., that Sir Hugh Allan and his friends should advance a large sum of money for the purpose of aiding the elections of Ministers and their supporters at the ensuing general election, and that he and his friends should receive the contract for the construction of the railway,—

"That accordingly Sir Hugh Allan did advance a large sum of money for the purpose mentioned, and at the solicitation and under the pressing instances of Ministers,—

"That part of the moneys expended by Sir Hugh Allan in connection with the obtaining of the Act of Incorporation and Charter, were paid to him by the said United States capitalists under the agreement with him,—it is

"Ordered, That a Committee of seven members be appointed to inquire into all the circumstances connected with the negotiations for the construction of the Pacific Railway, with the legislation of last Session on the subject, and with the granting of the Charter to Sir Hugh Allan and others; with power to send for persons, papers, and records; and with instructions to report in full the evidence taken before, and all proceedings of said Committee;" which was negatived on the following division:—
Yeas, 76; Nays, 107.

As your Lordship will perceive, this motion charges my present Advisers with a very infamous proceeding—with no less a crime than that of having sold Canada's most precious interests to certain American speculators, with a view to debauching the Canadian constituencies with the gold obtained as the price of their treachery.

In making his motion, Mr. Huntington did not accompany it by any statement as to the grounds on which he founded his charge, or by the production of any evidence in support of it; and neither Sir John Macdonald nor any of his colleagues having risen to address the House, a vote was forthwith taken without debate, which resulted in a majority of 31 in favour of the Government in a House of 183.

The next day Sir John Macdonald himself gave notice that he would move the appointment of a Committee for the purpose of investigating Mr. Huntington's charges, and it being further suggested, as I am informed, by some of the Opposition members, that the evidence should be taken on oath, a Bill for that purpose was introduced by The Hon. John Hillyard Cameron, an eminent lawyer of Ontario, and the Chairman of the proposed Committee.

This Bill was accepted by the Government, and passed with scarcely any discussion in the House of Commons.

It was introduced into the Senate by Mr. Campbell, the Postmaster-General, and gave rise to some difference of opinion as to whether its enactments were within the competence of the Canadian Legislature.

In the 18th clause of the Union Act of Canada, it is provided that "The privileges, immunities, and powers to be held, enjoyed, and exercised by the Senate, and by the House of Commons, and by the Members thereof respectively, shall be such as are from time to time defined by Act of the Parliament of Canada, but so that the same shall never exceed those at the passing of this Act held, enjoyed, and exercised by the Commons House of Parliament of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, and by the Members thereof," and the critics of the measure observed that inasmuch as the British House of Commons did not acquire the general right of examining witnesses on oath until a date subsequent to the passing of the Union Act, the Dominion Parliament was precluded by the terms of the foregoing clause from investing the Canadian House of Commons with the powers in question.

It strikes me, however, that the 18th clause of the Union Act was not framed for the purpose of restricting the legislative action of the Dominion Parliament, but that the terms "immunities, privileges, &c.," refer to those immunities and privileges which are inherent in the British House of Commons as a separate branch of the Legislature, and this view seems to be confirmed by the use of the word "defined."

The manifest purpose of the Act was to endow the Canadian House of Commons with a status analogous to that enjoyed by the House of Commons at home; and for obvious reasons it was necessary that the attributes of this status should be distinctly specified in the manner provided for by the 18th clause, but it could scarcely have been intended to preclude either branch of the Canadian Legislature from acquiring, by Act of Parliament, such other powers as experience might prove to be necessary, providing these powers were constitutional in themselves, and did not infringe the prerogatives of the Crown.

That this view was held by my predecessors as well as by the Imperial Government may be deduced from the following circumstances:—

The Canadian Senate is also endowed by the 18th clause of the Act of Union with the same privileges and attributes as the Imperial House of Commons, but these "privileges," &c., are confined by an identic formula within the same limits as those which restrict the powers of the Canadian House of Commons, and which are supposed to render the present "Oaths Bill" ultra vires, viz. to such as were possessed by the British House of Commons at the passing of the Act. Yet one of the first acts of the Canadian Legislature was to invest the Canadian Senate with a general power of examining witnesses at its Bar—a power which was not possessed by the British House of Commons until long after the passing of the Union Act.

It is possible that this Act may have been assented to by the Governor-General, and acquiesced in by the Imperial Government through inadvertence, in which case it could not be appealed to as a precedent for sanctioning an obvious illegality, but there are no corroborating circumstances to justify me in acting on so unlikely an assumption.

Under these circumstances, I trust your Lordship will consider that I have done right in giving the assent of the Crown to the Canadian "Oaths Bill."

Had I deferred doing so, very prejudicial results would have arisen. The investigation of a charge of the gravest nature, affecting the honour of my Constitutional Advisers would have appeared to be indefinitely postponed, while it was being loudly asserted and widely credited throughout the country that the delay had been contrived at the instigation of Sir John Macdonald and his confederates, who were seeking by these devices to defer the exposure of their guilt.

But for this circumstance I might have been tempted, as the point raised is a purely legal one, to have reserved the Bill for your Lordship's consideration, and the more so because, as you will perceive by the enclosed Minute, Sir John Macdonald is inclined to share the misgivings of those who question the competence of the Canadian Parliament in this matter; but as the issue is one not of Colonial but of Imperial concern, and as Sir John tendered his opinion merely for my information, and not as my Adviser—indeed he intimated that he would be glad if I saw my way to assenting to the Bill—I felt at liberty to consult my own judgment, more especially as it may be presumed that my Government would not have promoted the “Oaths Bill” in the House of Commons and fathered it in the Senate, had the Minister of Justice entertained a decided conviction of its illegality.

My conclusions have been further fortified, not only by the opinion of many legal authorities whom I have consulted, but more especially by that of Mr. Alpheus Todd, the author of ‘Parliamentary Government in England,’ who, as your Lordship is aware, is exceptionally qualified to pronounce upon questions of this description, and who has been good enough to discuss the case in a short Memorandum, of which I enclose a copy.

Enclosure 1 in No. 1.

Ottawa, September 8, 1873.

I, Robert Le Moine, Esq., Clerk of the Parliaments and Custodian of the Statutes of the Parliament of Canada, certify the subjoined to be a true copy of the original enactment passed by the Senate and House of Commons of Canada, in the first Session of the Second Parliament, held in the thirty-sixth year of Her Majesty's reign, and assented to in the Queen's name, by the Governor-General, on Saturday, the third day of May, one thousand eight hundred and seventy-three, and afterwards, on the twenty-second day of May of the said year, was disallowed by her Majesty in Council, and proclamation thereof made by his Excellency the Governor-General on the first day of July following.

ROBERT LE MOINE,
Clerk of the Parliaments.

An Act to provide for the Examination of Witnesses on Oath by Committees of the Senate and House of Commons in certain cases.

Her Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate and House of Commons of Canada, enacts as follows:—

1. Whenever any witness or witnesses is or are to be examined by any Committee of the Senate or House of Commons, and the Senate or House of Commons shall have resolved that it is desirable that such witness or witnesses shall be examined upon oath, such witness or witnesses shall be examined upon oath or affirmation, where affirmation is allowed by law.

2. Such oath or affirmation shall be administered by the Chairman or any member of any such Committee as aforesaid.

3. Any witness giving false evidence upon any such examination, shall be subject and liable to all the pains and penalties of perjury, as fixed by the criminal law.

4. The oath or affirmation aforesaid shall be in the following form: “The evidence you shall give on this examination shall be the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth. So help you God.”

Enclosure 2 in No. 1.

“Department of Justice,
“Ottawa, April 30, 1873.

“The undersigned, to whom has been referred, by your Excellency, the Bill passed during the present Session by the Senate and House of Commons, intituled ‘An Act to provide for the Examination of Witnesses on Oath by Committees of the Senate and House of Commons, in certain cases,’ begs leave to report:—

CANADA.

“ ‘ 1. That by the 18th Clause of “ The British North America Act, 1867,” it is provided as follows :—

“ ‘ The privileges, immunities, and powers to be held, enjoyed, and exercised by the Senate and by the House of Commons, and by the members thereof respectively, shall be such as are from time to time defined by Act of the Parliament of Canada, but so that the same shall never exceed those at the passing of this Act held, enjoyed, and exercised by the Commons House of Parliament of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, and by the members thereof.’

“ 2. That subsequently, on the 22nd May, 1868, the Canadian Parliament, by the Act 31st Victoria, chap. 23, in pursuance of the authority so given by the Union Act, defined the privileges of the Senate and House of Commons respectively. The clause doing so is as follows :—

“ The Senate and the House of Commons respectively, and the members thereof respectively, shall hold, enjoy, and exercise such and the like privileges, immunities, and powers, as at the passing of ‘ The British North America Act, 1867,’ were held, enjoyed, and exercised by the Commons House of Parliament of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, and by the members thereof, so far as the same are consistent with and not repugnant to the said Act.

“ At this time neither the British House of Commons, nor any Committee thereof, had power of examining witnesses on oath, except in certain specified cases, such as in Private Bills. That power was only conferred on the British House of Commons and the Committees in 1871, by the Act 34 and 35 Vict., chap. 83.

“ The Bill now referred to the undersigned seeks to confer this power upon any Committee of the Senate or House of Commons, when either House shall have resolved that it is desirable that witnesses should be examined upon oath. The empowering section of the Bill is as follows :—

“ ‘ Whenever any witness or witnesses is or are to be examined by any Committee of the Senate or House of Commons, and the Senate or House of Commons shall have resolved that it is desirable that such witness or witnesses should be examined upon oath, such witness or witnesses shall be examined upon oath or affirmation, where affirmation is allowed by law.’

“ The question has been raised whether it is competent for the Parliament of Canada to confer this power on a Committee of the Senate or House of Commons here, as it is a power which was not possessed or exercised by the British House of Commons at the time of the passing of ‘ The British North America Act, 1867.’

“ The undersigned has come to the conclusion, although not without doubt, that this Bill is not within the competency or jurisdiction of the Canadian Parliament, and that the attention of Her Majesty’s Government should be called to its provisions, and to the doubt that exists with respect to its validity.

“ All which is respectfully submitted.

(Signed) “ JOHN A. MACDONALD.”

Enclosure 3 in No. 1.

“ OPINION IN REFERENCE TO THE MEANING OF THE 18TH CLAUSE OF THE BRITISH NORTH AMERICA ACT OF 1867.

“ This clause is as follows :—

“ ‘ The privileges, immunities, and powers, to be held, enjoyed, and exercised by the Senate and by the House of Commons, and by the members thereof respectively, shall be such as are from time to time defined by Act of the Parliament of Canada, but so that the same shall never exceed those at the passing of this Act held, enjoyed, and exercised by the Commons House of Parliament of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, and by the members thereof.’

“ A Bill having been introduced into the Dominion House of Commons, in the present Session, intituled ‘ An Act to provide for the Examination of Witnesses on Oath by ‘ Committees of the Senate and House of Commons in certain cases,’ a question has been raised as to whether the Dominion Parliament were competent to pass this Bill in view of the restrictions imposed by the 18th clause of the B. N. A. Act aforesaid.

“ In my opinion that clause was intended to restrain the claims of either House to indefinite privileges and immunities, by providing that such privileges shall never exceed those enjoyed by the Imperial House of Commons at a given date. The privileges and immunities herein referred to are those that might reasonably or unreasonably be claimed as inherent in, or necessarily attaching to, the Houses of the Canadian Parliament, pursuant to the maxim that 'all things necessary pass as incident.' By limiting such privileges and powers to those possessed by the Imperial House of Commons in 1867, it prevents, on the one hand, an undue encroachment or extension of privilege, and on the other hand secures to the two Houses and the members thereof respectively, the privileges, immunities, and powers appropriate to them as component parts of the Canadian Parliament.

CANADIAN PACIFIC RAILWAY.

CANADA.

"It has been urged that the Act to authorize the examination of witnesses on oath by Committees of the Senate and House of Commons of Canada, is an extension of their privileges, beyond those sanctioned by the B. N. A. Act, inasmuch as Select Committees of the Imperial House of Commons (not being Private Bill Committees) did not possess such power in 1867, or until, by the Imperial 'Parliamentary Witnesses Oaths Act' of 1871, such power was for the first time conferred upon them.

"It is to be observed, however, that the power so conferred upon Committees by the English House of Commons was not claimed as a 'privilege' inherent in that body. It was merely a power conferred by statute, to facilitate legislative inquiries, similar to that which has been repeatedly conferred upon Statutory Commissions; and in being so conferred it did not trench upon any prerogative of the Crown, or enlarge the constitutional rights of the House of Commons.

"The Dominion Parliament were therefore clearly competent, in my judgment, to confer a similar power upon Committees of the Senate and House of Commons, pursuant to the authority conveyed to that Parliament by the 31st clause of the British North America Act, 'to make laws for the peace, order, and good government of Canada.'

"In a word, the restrictions contained in the 18th clause of the aforesaid Act are restrictions upon claims that might be urged on behalf of the two Houses of the Canadian Parliament, or the members thereof respectively, to inherent or excessive privileges, and are not intended to prevent the exercise of legislative powers by the whole Parliament, provided that the same are exercised within appropriate constitutional limits.

The SECRETARY of STATE for the COLONIES to the GOVERNOR-GENERAL.

"MY LORD,

"Downing Street, June 30, 1873.

"I HAVE the honour to transmit to you an Order in Council disallowing the Act passed by the Parliament of Canada, 'to provide for the Examination of Witnesses 'on Oath by Committees of the Senate and House of Commons in certain cases,' and also the Certificate, as required by the 56th Section of the British North America Act, 1867, stating when the Act was received in this Department. Before tendering any advice to Her Majesty upon this Act, I referred to the Law Officers of the Crown, and I was advised that the Act was ultra vires of the Colonial Legislature, as being contrary to the express terms of Section 18 of the British North America Act, 1867, and that the

CANADA.

Canadian Parliament could not vest in themselves the power to administer oaths, that being a power which the House of Commons did not possess in 1867, when the Imperial Act was passed. The Law Officers also reported that the Queen should be advised to disallow the Act.

"My attention has been called to the fact that by an Act of the Canadian Parliament, cap. XXIV. of 1868, provision is made by the first section for examining witnesses upon oath at the bar of the Senate, and that the Act has been allowed to remain in operation. It appears to have escaped observation both here and in the Colony that though such examination of witnesses is in accordance with the practice of the House of Lords, the powers of the Senate of Canada are limited by the British North America Act, 1867, to such powers as were then enjoyed by the House of Commons, and that the first section of the Canadian Act of 1868 was therefore in contravention of that Act.

"But though the Act of 1868 was not disallowed, I have to point out to you, that under the second section of 28 and 29 Victoria, cap. 63, this first section is void and inoperative, as being repugnant to the provisions of the British North America Act, and cannot be legally acted upon.

"So far as regards the powers given by the Act of 1868 to Select Committees upon Private Bills, they would appear to be unobjectionable, as like powers had, before the passing of the British North America Act, been given to the House of Commons by 21 and 22 Vict., cap. 78."

PRESENT :

THE QUEEN'S MOST EXCELLENT MAJESTY,

Lord President,

Earl of Kimberley,
Lord Chamberlain,

Mr. Gladstone.

"WHEREAS by an Act passed in the thirtieth year of Her Majesty's reign, entitled 'An Act for the Union of Canada, Nova Scotia, and New Brunswick, and the Government thereof, and for purposes connected therewith,' it is, amongst other things, enacted, that where the Governor-General assents to a Bill in the Queen's name, he shall, by the first convenient opportunity, send an authenticated copy of the Act to one of Her Majesty's Principal Secretaries of State, and if the Queen in Council, within two years after receipt thereof by the Secretary of State, thinks fit to disallow the Act, such disallowance (with a Certificate of the Secretary of State of the day on which the Act was received by him) being signified by the Governor-General, by Speech or Message to each of the Houses of the Parliament, or by Proclamation, shall annul the Act from and after the day of such signification."

"And Whereas on the 3rd day of May, 1873, a certain Bill, passed by the Parliament of the Dominion of Canada, entitled 'An Act to provide for the Examination of Witnesses on Oath by Committees of the Senate and House of Commons in certain cases,' was assented to by the Governor-General of the said Dominion of Canada: and whereas the said Act of the Parliament of Canada has been laid before Her Majesty in Council, and it is expedient that the said Act should be disallowed by Her Majesty:

"Now, therefore, Her Majesty, in pursuance of the said Act of the Imperial Parliament, and in exercise of the powers thereby reserved to Her Majesty, as aforesaid, doth by this present Order, by and with the advice of Her Majesty's Privy Council, declare her disallowance of the said Act of the Parliament of Canada. And the Right Honourable the Earl of Kimberley, one of Her Majesty's Principal Secretaries of State, is to give the necessary directions herein accordingly.

No. 4.

The EARL OF DUFFERIN to The EARL OF KIMBERLEY.

MY LORD,

Canada, August 15, 1873.

I HAVE the honour to state, for your Lordship's information, that at half-past three of the afternoon of Wednesday the 13th instant I prorogued Parliament.

As this event is likely to be regarded with dissatisfaction by one of the great political parties in this country, and has been already animadverted upon in no measured terms by a portion of the Canadian press, I propose to give your Lordship a full account of the circumstances under which it has taken place.

Although I have already acquainted your Lordship from time to time with everything which has occurred in connection with the grant of the Pacific Railway Charter, as well as with the proceedings in and out of Parliament to which it has given rise, it may be well to preface my intended statement by a brief recapitulation of its previous history.

The scheme of a Canadian line of railway from the Atlantic to the Pacific first acquired a practical character in 1871, when its construction within ten years from that date became one of the conditions on which British Columbia covenanted to enter into confederation.

The first move towards the realization of the project seems to have been initiated, not by a Canadian, but by an Englishman of the name of Waddington, who, after broaching his proposals in Toronto and elsewhere, apparently without success, eventually succeeded in obtaining the co-operation of a number of capitalists in Chicago and New York, most of whom, though not all, were interested in the "Northern Pacific Railway," a United States line, connecting at Lyndon with the continental system, which it is intended to carry across the northernmost States of the Union to a port on the Pacific, and which will consequently run parallel—though at a lower latitude and over a wider arc—with the proposed Canadian line.

A deputation from these gentlemen seems to have visited Ottawa in the autumn of 1871, and to have had an interview with some members of the Canadian Government, by whom they were informed that the time for entering into negotiations for the construction of the railway had not arrived. For several months no other proposition was received by the Government; but it is stated by Sir Francis Hincks, in a letter of which I append a copy, that, being in Montreal in the month of July of the same year, he met Sir Hugh Allan, and, giving him the names of some of the Americans who had made these advances, expressed his regret that a work of such importance should fall into the hands of foreigners. Acting upon this suggestion, Sir Hugh Allan turned his attention to the matter, and eventually, in conjunction with these American gentlemen and some Quebec friends of his own, formed a Company for the prosecution of the work. But as the Session of 1872 approached, it became evident that the admission of parties connected with the American Pacific to a share in the contract for the Canada Pacific was become unpopular, and, Parliament appearing to share this feeling, it was announced by the Government to Sir Hugh Allan that no proposals emanating from an American Company would be entertained.

On this intimation, Sir H. Allan appears to have addressed himself to the organization of a purely Canadian Company, and gave to the Government the most positive assurances that he had entirely dissociated himself from his American friends.

In the meantime another Company had been formed in Toronto, called the "Inter-oceanic Company," of which Mr. Macpherson, a gentleman of very high standing and character, and a Dominion Senator, was Chairman.

During the ensuing Session—that is, in the Spring of 1872—both the Companies, the "Inter-oceanic" and "Canada Pacific," as Sir Hugh's was now called, obtained Acts of Incorporation, and, at the same time, an Act of Parliament was passed enabling the Government to enter into a contract with one or other of the above-mentioned Companies, or with an amalgamation of the two, or, if they should see fit, to grant a royal charter to a new and altogether distinct Company, in case an agreement should be found impossible with those already in existence.

The terms which Government was authorized to grant to whatever Company undertook the contract were settled in the last Parliament, and will already have been communicated to your Lordship by my predecessor, Lord Lisgar, who, up to this time, was still in office; but it may be convenient to mention that the principal concessions consisted of a grant, under certain conditions, of 50,000,000 acres of land, in alternate blocks along the line, and of a subsidy of $30,000,000 (say 6,000,000*l.* sterling). Of this sum the interest of 2,250,000*l.*, which, by the transference of the fortification loan to the same account, became eventually 3,800,000*l.*, was guaranteed by the Imperial Government.

The Session closed on the 14th June. Parliament was dissolved on the 8th July. On the 25th June I arrived in this country, and became personally cognizant of many of the events I now proceed to record.

From the 15th of July to the 12th of October the elections were being held. As soon as they were concluded, Sir John Macdonald returned to Ottawa, and the Canadian Pacific Railway became a frequent topic of conversation between us. My Government never seem to have favoured the idea of giving the contract to either of the rival Companies, who were then competing for the preference. In Senator Macpherson's Company an Ontario interest was very strongly represented. In Sir Hugh Allan's a Quebec interest predominated. The contemplated undertaking would evidently tax the resources of the country to the utmost. It would be undesirable, therefore, Sir John argued, that any Canadians desirous of putting their shoulders to the wheel should be excluded, and a fusion of the two Companies—as provided for in their Incorporation Acts, and contemplated by the Act of Parliament—was the object to be attained. Into the intricate and somewhat obscure negotiations which then ensued between Mr. Macpherson and Sir Hugh Allan, at the instance of my Government, I need not enter. They are sufficiently displayed in the Blue Book which I subjoin, and which I have marked for reference. It suffices to say that, notwithstanding Sir John Macdonald's efforts to bring the parties to an understanding, the negotiation altogether failed, principally, as it was alleged on the one side, because Sir Hugh Allan had not really broken off his connection with the American interest; and on the other, because Mr. Macpherson was not willing to recognize the claims to the chairmanship of Sir H. Allan, whose pretensions my Government were disposed to favour, in consideration, as they stated, not only of his influential position in the Province of Quebec, but as having been the first Canadian in the field to associate himself with the enterprise.

In reference to this point, I may observe that, although I have no means of knowing either when or to what extent my Ministers may have pledged themselves to favour Sir Hugh Allan's election to the chairmanship, the selection of such a person, the originator of the Oceanic line of communication between Great Britain and Canada, a gentleman who might fairly be regarded as the representative capitalist of the Dominion, and who would be more likely than any other to make an impression upon the English money market, was a choice which, at that time, few seemed disposed to question.

Baffled in their efforts to effect the amalgamation they desired, Sir John Macdonald and his colleagues announced their intention of promoting the formation of a new and independent Company, out of whatever elements of strength were to be found throughout the Dominion, and shortly before the meeting of the new Parliament in March, a Board of Directors was constituted, which included not only some of the leading promoters of the two defunct Companies, but representative men from each of the Provinces of the Dominion. Of this Board Sir Hugh Allan seems to have been elected chairman as a matter of course, and to the Company it represented the Charter was eventually issued.

In previous Despatches I have already described to your Lordship the precautions which were taken to prevent any American interest or foreign capital ever obtaining control over the concern. I am not sufficiently conversant with railway financing to assert, on my own authority, that the restrictions introduced into the Charter with this view are sufficient for their purpose. Money, like water, has a very narrow shoulder, and will find its way wherever it is likely to fructify,—but as far as I can judge, every reasonable precaution seems to have been taken. All the Directors must be British subjects. The President and the majority of the Directors must reside in Canada, and though the shares are transferable, no transfer can be made for the first six years without the consent of the Government, nor after six years without the consent of the Directors—the transfers in both cases being registered in the books of the Company.

Another subject which seemed constantly to pre-occupy the mind of my Prime Minister at this time was the necessity of preventing any one individual, or any one interest or combination of interests, whether represented by Sir Hugh Allan or another, from acquiring a predominant influence on the Directory. Here again I am not sufficiently familiar with the arcana of Board-rooms to know whether the adjustments on which Sir John relied were as effectual for the purpose as they appeared to me to be, but I may observe, that although the scrutiny of Parliament was directed under the light of subsequent events to these especial points, neither House has expressed dissatisfaction with the provisions of the Railway Charter, or the personnel of the governing body. On the contrary, up to the last moment of the Session, on repeated occasions Parliament continued to manifest its confidence in those who framed the one and constituted the other. If therefore, as is alleged, a corrupt modification of the Pacific Railway Charter to the advantage of Sir Hugh Allan and his American friends was the consideration for which these personages squandered the enormous sums asserted to have been spent, it would seem that they have scarcely obtained their money's worth, a result, I should imagine, foreign to the experience of such shrewd men of business.

But though the Parliament of Canada thus unmistakably ratified the railway policy of my Ministers, its verdict on the subject was not destined to pass unchallenged. On the 2nd of April, Mr. Lucius Seth Huntington, a distinguished member of the House of Commons, startled his immediate auditory, as well as the whole political world of Canada, by the unexpected introduction of the following motion:—

“Hon. Mr. Huntington, moved, that Mr. Huntington a member of the House, having stated in his place that he is credibly informed and believes that he can establish by satisfactory evidence,—

“That in anticipation of the legislation of last Session as to the Pacific Railway, an agreement was made between Sir Hugh Allan, acting for himself and certain other Canadian promoters, and G. W. McMullen, acting for certain United States capitalists, whereby the latter agreed to furnish all the funds necessary for the construction of the contemplated railway, and to give the former a certain percentage of interest, in consideration of their interest and position, the scheme agreed on being ostensibly that of a Canadian Company with Sir Hugh Allan at its head,—

“That the Government were aware that negotiations were pending between these parties,—

“That subsequently an understanding was come to between the Government and Sir Hugh Allan and Mr. Abbott, M.P., that Sir Hugh Allan and his friends should advance a large sum of money for the purpose of aiding the elections of Ministers and their supporters at the ensuing general election—and that he and his friends should receive the contract for the construction of the railway,—

“That accordingly Sir Hugh Allan did advance a large sum of money for the purpose mentioned, and at the solicitation and under the pressing instances of Ministers,—

“That part of the moneys, expended by Sir Hugh Allan in connection with the obtaining of the Act of Incorporation and Charter were paid to him by the said United States capitalists under the agreements with him,—it is “Ordered that a Committee of seven members be appointed to inquire into all the circumstances connected with the negotiations for the construction of the Pacific Railway—with the legislation of last Session on the subject, and with the granting of the Charter to Sir Hugh Allan and others; with power to send for persons, papers and records; and with instructions to report in full the evidence taken before, and all proceedings of, said Committee”—which was negatived.

As I have already remarked in a previous Despatch, May 3rd, the charge thus brought against my Government was very grave, viz.—that they had trafficked with foreigners in Canada's most precious interests in order to debauch the constituencies of the Dominion with the gold obtained as the price of their treachery. In making these allegations, however, Mr. Huntington did not enforce them by any confirmatory statement or by the production of any primâ facie proofs of their validity. He merely read his motion and sat down. Neither Sir John Macdonald nor any of his colleagues having risen to address the House, a division was taken without debate, which resulted in a majority of 31 for Government in a House of 183.

Notwithstanding this display of their Parliamentary strength, which I imagine was put forward by way of protest against Mr. Huntington's appeal to his own mere ipse dixit my Government felt that the matter could not thus be disposed of, and accordingly the next day Sir John Macdonald gave notice of the following motion, which was carried on the ensuing Tuesday, April 8th:—

“On motion of the Right Hon. Sir John A. Macdonald, that a select Committee of five members (of which Committee the mover shall not be one) be appointed by this House to inquire into and report upon the several matters contained and stated in a Resolution moved on Wednesday, the 2nd of April instant, by the Hon. Mr. Huntington, member for the County of Shefford, relating to the Canadian Pacific Railway, with power to send for persons, papers, and records: to report from time to time, and to report the evidence from time to time, and if need be to sit after the prorogation of Parliament.

CANADA.

"The members to compose the Committee were then named by the House as follows: Hon. Mr. Blanchet, Mr. Blake, and Hon. Messrs. Dorion (Napierville) Macdonald (Pictou), and Cameron (Cardwell)."

Of the five above-mentioned gentlemen three—viz. Mr. Cameron, Mr. Macdonald, and Mr. Blanchet—may be regarded as regular supporters of the Administration, and two, Mr. Blake and Mr. Dorion—as leading members of the Opposition.

On the debate which took place on this motion, I am informed by my Prime Minister, and here I must remind your Lordship that I have no other means of acquainting myself with what takes place in the House, as I am precluded from being present at its proceedings, and the newspaper reports are quite untrustworthy—that Mr. Mackenzie the leader of the Opposition, as well as Mr. Blake, Mr. Dorion, and Mr. Joly, eminent members of the same party, expressed themselves of opinion that the evidence tendered should be on oath, and the former gentleman further suggested, it being doubtful whether the Committee could sit after the House was once prorogued, that a Bill should be introduced expressly enabling it to do so. I shall have occasion subsequently to refer to this latter circumstance. As the necessity for sworn testimony in respect of such grave charges was generally obvious, an Oaths Bill was introduced into the House of Commons on the 18th of April, was passed through the Senate on the 29th, and received the Royal assent on the 3rd May. The time occupied in getting this measure through Parliament was pronounced unnecessarily long by many members of the Opposition.

Into the motives which induced me to sanction the Oaths Bill, and into its subsequent history, I need not enter, as the former are stated in my Despatch of the 3rd of May and the latter is recorded in your Lordship's communication of June 30th—but I may observe in passing, that amongst other respects in which my conduct has been criticised, the fact of my having communicated to you by the first opportunity a certified copy of the Oaths Bill has been a very general point of attack. I apprehend it will not be necessary to justify myself to your Lordship in this particular. My law-adviser had called my attention to the possibility of the Bill being illegal. Had perjured testimony been tendered under it, no proceedings could have been taken against the delinquent, and if, under these circumstances, I had wilfully withheld from the Home Government all cognizance of the Act, it would have been a gross dereliction of duty. To those in this country who have questioned my procedure it would be sufficient to reply, that I recognize no authority on this side of the Atlantic competent to instruct the Governor-General as to the nature of his correspondence with Her Majesty's Secretary of State.

In the meantime the Committee had met, and on the 5th of May had resolved, amongst other things, "That in view of the absence of Sir George Cartier and the Hon. J. J. C. Abbot, and the impossibility of the investigation with which the Committee is charged being carried on in a proper manner without an opportunity being afforded these gentlemen of being present and hearing the testimony adduced, it was advisable the Committee should adjourn until Wednesday, the 2nd day of July, if Parliament should be then in Session,"—a conclusion which appears to have been arrived at in the Committee by a majority of three to two. On the following day these recommendations were adopted by the House of Commons, on a vote of 107 to 76.

The ordinary business of the Session being now nearly concluded, and it having been admitted, I understand, by all parties, that the Committee could not sit after prorogation, it was arranged that the House should adjourn to such a day beyond the 2nd July as would enable the Committee to complete the investigation and to frame their Report. The date eventually determined on was the 13th of August, which was also settled as the day on which Parliament was to be prorogued.

As the nature of the understanding at the time in respect of this latter event has been warmly controverted, it is necessary that I should here acquaint your Lordship with the facts of the case so far as I am cognizant of them. Early in May—I forget the exact date—Sir John Macdonald waited upon me in my office, and having communicated to me the arrangements contemplated for the convenience of the Committee, informed me that he wished to take my pleasure as to the date of prorogation, mentioning the 13th of August as the one he desired to suggest. Having received my assent to this proposal, he repaired to the House of Commons, and announced from his place as leader of the House and the person responsible for the conduct of public business, that Parliament would be prorogued on the 13th August, stating, as he affirms, in the most distinct terms, that the "re-assembly of Parliament on that day would be pro formâ, that no business would be done beyond the reception of the Report of the Committee, which could then be printed with the evidence, and go before the country; that the members would not be required to return, and that only the Speakers of the two Houses need be in their places." The only observation elicited by this announcement proceeded from Mr. Holton, an Opposition member, who remarked "that to do any business there must be a quorum, and that he and a quorum would be there;" to which Sir John informs me he replied, that "if a quorum was necessary, a sufficient number of members would be found in the neighbourhood of Ottawa,"—a quorum consisting of the Speaker and nineteen others. It was upon this understanding, Sir John assures me, that the House consented to adjourn, and in confirmation of his assertion he has communicated to me the subjoined letter from Mr. Palmer, the member for St. John:—

"SIR,

"St. John, August 11, 1873.

"In consequence of statements that I understand have come from some members of the Commons to the effect that there might be an actual Session of Parliament at the adjournment on the 13th, to you, as the leader of the Government, I beg to make the following statement by way of protest.

"I have to remind you that the House of Commons only consented to adjourn to that time on your pledge openly given in the House that no business should be transacted, nor would the attendance of members be required, as there would be enough around Ottawa to make a quorum; that Mr. Speaker would receive the Report of the Committee on the Huntington charges, so that it might be published, and that then Parliament would be at once prorogued.

"If this promise had not been made, I do not believe the House would have consented to any such adjournment. I certainly would not have given my consent to any adjournment that would have put the country to an expense of a quarter of a million dollars by bringing the Legislature together again.

"At all events, be that as it may, I feel that it would be dishonourable for myself to attempt to do business at an adjournment of the House, at which my colleagues had been told that no business would be done, and that they need not attend, and therefore I must decline to do so; and I protest at any attempt to do business, and I require the Government to fulfil the pledge made to me and to every member of the House, that Parliament would be at once prorogued.

"While I do this, I do not wish to interfere in any way with the right of the Government to call Parliament together whenever they think the exigencies of the country require it; they must be the judges of that, and be responsible for it; but let that be done in the usual way, that all may understand that it is their duty to attend; and when I, together with all my colleagues, am so called upon, I trust that I shall be found in my place, and I shall then feel that whether or not all my colleagues attend, they will not have been kept away by a pledge that they would not be required, and I could therefore honourably join in doing anything that the House might consider for the interests of the country.

"I have the honour to be, &c.,

"Sir John Macdonald,
"Minister of Justice, Ottawa."

"A. L. PALMER,
"Member for the City and County of St. John.

As far as my opinion is concerned, I am quite clear that it was the desire and expectation of Parliament that prorogation should take place at the time mentioned. Every member must have known that Sir John's announcement on the subject was an intimation of the pleasure of the Crown through its official organ in the House, and that the Prime Minister could only have made it after receiving my authority to do so. Formerly, the intentions of the Sovereign on this subject were conveyed to either Chamber by a written message, but though a verbal communication through the First Minister has been now substituted, it does not render this latter mode of communication less formal or official. Had therefore the House of Commons desired to prolong the Session beyond the 13th of August, its proper course would have been to have communicated its wishes to me by an Address. Though the fact that no motion to this effect was even suggested is sufficiently conclusive, there are other circumstances which indicate more or less distinctly the feeling of the House. The motion originally appointing the Committee, and carried on the 8th of April, ordered it to sit, "if need were, after prorogation," and more than one member of the Opposition urged the propriety of a Bill being introduced to enable it to do so. Clearly therefore, when this motion was carried and these suggestions made, the majority who passed the one and the individuals who proposed the other must have contemplated the probability of the Report of the Committee being considered, not in the present but in a subsequent Session of Parliament. Indeed, the mere fact of prorogation being fixed for the 13th of August implies this much, for it is not to be presumed that the House would have proceeded to consider the Report, until both it and the evidence upon which it was founded had been printed and distributed to members; but to enable this to be done an interval of a few days, after Parliament had reassembled and had received the Report, would manifestly have been required before action could have been taken upon it. If, therefore, Parliament had contemplated considering the Report during the current Session, it would have desired a later day to be fixed for prorogation than that on which the mere manuscript copy of the Report was to be laid on its table.

Again, when Mr. Dorion moved in amendment of the motion for the Committee's adjournment to the 2nd July, that "inasmuch as the Committee will have no power either to enforce the attendance of witnesses or to compel them to give testimony without the action of this House, it is essential to the proper conduct of the investigation that it should be prosecuted under circumstances that will admit of the prompt exercise of the authority of the House, it is therefore necessary that the House should sit on the day to which the Committee has leave to adjourn," the House decided against him by a majority of 101 to 66,—one of the Representatives from British Columbia, as I am informed, protesting against members from the more distant Provinces in the Dominion being required to return to Ottawa so late in the summer as the 2nd of July.

But the intention of the House is still further exhibited by the following circumstance. During the Session a Bill was passed increasing the indemnity paid in this country to Members of Parliament for their attendance. Into that Bill a clause was introduced to the following effect: "The said amendments shall apply to the present Session of Parliament, and if either House shall adjourn for more than thirty days such adjournment shall, for the purposes of such Act, be equivalent to a prorogation." This provision was intended by its authors to enable members to receive their salaries and travelling expenses on the 23rd May, the day on which Parliament adjourned, without having to wait for the 13th August, the day named for prorogation. I may also mention that the same day, i.e. on the 23rd of May, I came in state to the Senate Chamber to give my assent to the Bills of the Session; and in view of a progress I intended to make through the maritime Provinces during the summer, I provided, before leaving Ottawa, for the prorogation of Parliament by commission, in order to spare myself the labour and fatigue of a journey of 2,400 miles for what I understood would be a mere formality.

From the foregoing narrative your Lordship will probably agree with me in the conclusion that up to the time when the Houses adjourned, it was clearly the wish and the expectation of Parliament that prorogation should take place on the 13th August. And it is most natural that this should have been the case. The commercial business and the agricultural operations of the year have to be crowded into the five short months of summer. Almost every member of both Houses in this country is actively engaged in business pursuits requiring his personal attendance. To be detained from home at this season implies not only extreme inconvenience but pecuniary loss. Already the lateness of the current Session had bred considerable discontent, and it had been expressly determined by the House that in future the Session should never begin later than the first week of February. The distance from Halifax to Ottawa is something like 1,200 miles, from Victoria in British Columbia it is 4,000 miles. The reassembly of Parliament in August, for the transaction of business, would have cut up the entire summer, as far as many members were concerned, and would have been more or less inconvenient to all but those who reside within a day or two's journey of Ottawa. The majority in the House of Commons appear to have attached but little significance to Mr. Huntington's accusations, for they negatived his motion without even requiring my Ministers to reply to it, and I do not imagine that any one of them contemplated a renewal of the Session on the 13th of August. But though the conduct of the majority who confided in the Government is easily understood, the procedure of the members of the Opposition is more difficult to explain. They had in their possession, it is to be presumed, what they considered convincing proofs of the corruption of Ministers. The matter had been referred to the adjudication of a Committee, and according to the theory of the prosecution, could have but one result. Strong in these convictions, they should never have allowed the announcement of prorogation to have passed unchallenged, but should have resorted to every means known to the Constitution by which such a consummation could have been precluded. Indeed, so obvious was their duty in this respect, that their opponents have attributed to them a deliberate intention of allowing the dispersion of the majority to take place sub silentio, with a view to the packing of a House with their own adherents on the day to which it had adjourned, an operation to them exceptionally easy, as the Parliamentary strength of the Ministers lies principally in the maritime and out-lying Provinces, while their own is close at home in the central region of Ontario and Quebec. The subsequent publication in the newspapers of the documents now known as the Allan and McMullen correspondence is pointed to as having been a move in aid of the same unworthy policy, by supplying a sudden and unexpected pretext for insisting on the immediate intervention of Parliament at a time when the Ministerial supporters were dispersed.

I do not, however, myself attach the slightest credit to this injurious insinuation. Although, undoubtedly, party strife is conducted in this country with less reticence and generosity than at home, and although the combatants "strike below the waistcoat" more frequently than could be wished, my personal knowledge of the leaders of the Opposition convinces me that such a design would be quite foreign to their natures. My own opinion is, that, from first to last, they found themselves impeded by the initial mistake in tactics—as I ventured at the time to consider it—committed by Mr. Huntington in not re-enforcing his motion by the production of some of the documents on which it was founded. Had he done so, Parliament would undoubtedly have listened to him with greater respect, and Mr. Dorion's motion might perhaps have been carried: for though Mr. Huntington's case is far from being proved, no one can now deny that if he was in possession of the Allan correspondence at the time he demanded his Committee, he had a right to require an investigation of the suspicious circumstances thus brought to his knowledge. The premature disclosure of his hand could not have been the objection, for a sufficiency of "pièces justificatives" for his purpose have since been produced. As it was, he could not convince the House of the urgency of the affair, and discouraged by their repeated defeats, the Opposition, I imagine, gave up all hopes of being able to persuade Parliament to dispute the arrangements of the triumphant Minister. Be that as it may, it is certain that the day after the adjournment, most of the members of both Houses dispersed themselves in different directions, some to their homes, some to the States, and some to Europe, without any more intention of returning to Ottawa, on the 13th of August, than myself.

On the 2nd July, Mr. Cameron's Committee met in Montreal, but in the meantime I had received an intimation from your Lordship that the Oaths Bill had been disallowed by the Queen in Council, and I had made the fact public by Proclamation.

Immediately on receipt of this intelligence, communications had passed between Sir John Macdonald and myself as to the course to be pursued. Sir John was inclined to issue a Commission to the members of the Committee, but as he hesitated to do so from an unwillingness to expose the Crown to the rejection of its mandate, I addressed him in the following terms:—

"The Citadel, Quebec, June 28, 1873.

"I beg to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 19th. I am sure you are quite right not to allow the Committee to be postponed beyond the time originally fixed for the opening of its proceedings.

"On the part of the Crown, I should have no objection to the offer of the Commission as you propose, and I think you may with perfect propriety act upon the presumption that the members of the Committee will accept the charge confided to them.

"The Government has stretched its legal conscience and encouraged Parliament, though not without warning, to exceed its legitimate powers in order to facilitate this inquiry. The obstacle now interposed is one with which you have no concern, and beyond your control. You propose to obviate the difficulty by the only means in your power—but a means both legitimate and effectual. No one can doubt that for the purpose for which the Committee was originally constituted, its conversion into a Commission can make no practical difference. As a Commission it will take evidence, and as a Committee it will report upon that evidence to the House. It would be unreasonable to allege that in discharging this double function, and in acquiring in addition to the powers delegated to it by Parliament, a technical authority at the hands of the Crown to take evidence on oath, it abates one tittle of its constitutional independence."

Thus authorized, Sir John communicated with Mr. Cameron in the following letter:—

"SIR,

"Montreal, July 2, 1873.

"As the Act which would have enabled the Committee now sitting in Montreal, of which you are Chairman, to examine witnesses on oath has been disallowed, as being beyond the competence of the Canadian Parliament, I desire to renew to you, as Chairman of the Committee, the offer made by me on the part of the Government on the floor of the House of Commons, to issue a Royal Commission addressed to the gentlemen forming the Committee, which would confer upon them all the powers given to the Committee by the House of Commons, including the examination of witnesses under oath, and the power to send for persons, papers, and records, and containing the same provisions as to the votes of the members of the Committee and yourself as Chairman, as was ordered by the House. The acceptance of this Commission will enable this Committee to proceed with the inquiry, and the examination of witnesses on oath without any important delay. I shall cause a copy of this letter to be sent to each member of your Committee.

CANADA.

"I have the honour to be, your obedient servant,

"J. A. MACDONALD.

"To Hon. J. H. Cameron, &c., &c.

"P.S.—The Commission will contain a clause enjoining the Commissioners to report to the Speaker of the House of Commons.

(Signed) "J. A. MACDONALD."

The majority of the Committee are understood to have been willing to return a favourable reply to this proposal had their colleagues assented; but neither Mr. Dorion nor Mr. Blake considered themselves at liberty to accept the arrangement, and stated their reasons in the following terms:—

"SIR,

"I have the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 2nd inst., received this morning, enclosing a copy of a letter addressed by you to the Hon. J. H. Cameron, Chairman of the Special Committee of the House of Commons, now sitting in Montreal, in which you state that, as the Act which would have enabled the Committee to examine witnesses under oath had been disallowed, as being beyond the competence of the Canadian Parliament, you desire to renew to him, as Chairman of the Committee, the offer made by you on the part of the Government to issue a Royal Commission, addressed to the gentlemen forming the Committee, which would confer upon them all the power given to the Committee by the House of Commons, including the examination of the witnesses by the Committee; but, as I understand your proposal, it is that the Government should give to the several members of the Committee named by the House of Commons to inquire into the charge made against it, a Commission to inquire into the same charges, with power to examine witnesses under oath, and this with a view to carry out the intention of the House, to have this inquiry made under oath. Now, I would beg to call to your attention that the Committee was originally named on your own motion, as an ordinary Parliamentary Committee, without reference to any authority to examine witnesses under oath, and that it was only on the suggestion of the Committee, subsequently made, that the House and Senate unanimously passed the Oaths Bill, although on more than one occasion you yourself made the suggestion, unheeded by the House, that a Commission might be issued instead of passing an Act to authorize the administering of oaths to the witnesses. This alone seems to me to be conclusive that the House of Commons, whose nominee I am on the Committee, did not intend that the inquiry should be carried on by a Commission appointed by the Executive, and responsible as such only to that Executive. It seems to me, moreover, that the authority which is sought to be conferred on the Committee to examine witnesses under oath cannot be attained by the issue of a Royal Commission, for, although the Commissioners appointed might examine witnesses under oath, it would not be as members of the Committee appointed by the House that they would do so, but as Commissioners, whose decisions and proceedings would be subject to the supervision and control of the Executive, under whom they hold their appointment, and not of the House. I have always been willing, as a Member of the House of Commons, to obey its commands in reference to any Parliamentary duties it might impose upon me. In that view I did not shirk the arduous and unenviable position of a member of this Committee of Inquiry, as being part of the labour and duty to which a Member of Parliament is bound to submit; but if, instead of moving for the appointment of a Committee by the House, the Government had proposed to name me on a Commission for the purpose of this inquiry, I would then certainly have declined the proposed Commission. I cannot see why I should now accept it, when it seems to me that the effect of issuing such a Commission would be to supersede the Committee, and more especially in view of the declaration you made immediately before the adjournment of the Session in reference to Mr. Blake and myself, that we should not have consented to serve on the Committee, that men in our positions in England would not have done so, and that you could not expect any fair play at our hands. This alone should be a sufficient reason why I humbly believe I should not be called upon to accept a Commission from the Government of which you are the head, after your public declaration, made in my absence, of my unfitness to perform what the Commission would impose on me.

"SIR,

"Montreal, July 3.

"I have the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 2nd inst., enclosing a copy of a letter addressed by you to the Hon. Mr. Cameron, as Chairman of the Pacific Railway Inquiry Committee. I cannot agree in your statement that the acceptance of a Royal Commission would enable the Committee to proceed with the inquiry and the examination of witnesses on oath. The Committee is, I believe, unanimously of opinion that the acceptance of the Commission would not enable the committee to make progress, and that the action of the Commissioners (whether or not they be the same persons as those who constitute the Committee) would be entirely disconnected from the action of the Committee. Sharing their opinion, I am called on to consider whether I should accept the offer made by the Government, of a Royal Commission addressed to the gentlemen who happen to be members of the Committee, calling on them to inquire into the matters of charge preferred in the statement of Mr. Huntington. I believe that it would be of evil consequence to create the precedent of a Government issuing a Commission of Inquiry into matters of a charge against itself, the Commissioners being, as they are, subject to the direction and control of the accused. I believe that the acceptance of such a Commission would be opposed to the sense of the House of Commons, as manifested by its action last Session, and would, under present circumstances, be calculated to prejudice the inquiry ordered by the House, and to impair the full and efficient exercise of its most ancient and important powers. The House of Commons does not, I think, expect that the Crown or anyone else, least of all the members of its own Committee, will interpose between itself and the great inquiry which it has undertaken. Apart from these and other difficulties, you have yourself interposed a barrier to my acceptance of your offer. During my absence from the House of Commons last Session, you stated in your place that I had done wrong in not declining to fulfil the duty of Committeeman, which had been imposed on me by the House; that English statesmen in my position—which, however, you misstated—would have scorned to do as I had done, and that my speeches during the Session showed that your Government could not expect fair play from me on the inquiry. I shall not condescend to reply to these statements, but I have to say that, although I reluctantly came to the conclusion that I was not free to decline to serve the House of which I am a member, I do not think it consistent with my self-respect to accept the Commission here offered by a Minister who has chosen to so characterize my conduct. I have sent a copy of this letter to Mr. Cameron, for his information as Chairman of the Committee.

"I have, &c.,
(Signed) "EDWARD BLAKE.

"The Right Hon. Sir Jno. A. Macdonald."

I do not presume to question for a moment the propriety of the course adopted by these gentlemen. As Members of the House of Commons, they may have had a more acute appreciation of their Parliamentary obligations than had occurred to my apprehension,—but I trust that your Lordship will not consider that I acted wrongly in thus endeavouring to forward the inquiry by what I considered an opportune expedient.

The Committee being thus precluded from swearing in their witnesses, a motion was made by Mr. Dorion, supported by Mr. Blake, that they should content themselves with unsworn testimony, but the majority considering themselves debarred from this course by the express instructions of the House upon the point, they determined to adjourn until the 13th of August.

This resolution was taken on the 3rd of July. The day after there appeared in the 'Montreal Herald,' a series of letters and telegrams written by Sir Hugh Allan to a Mr. McMullen, and to a Mr. Smith of Chicago, and to some unknown person in the United States in reference to the Canadian Pacific Railway. The day following a long statement on the same subject in the form of an affidavit was issued by Sir Hugh Allan in another newspaper. I have already had the honour of forwarding to your Lordship both these documents, but I think it well to append them to this Despatch for convenience of reference. It is not necessary for my present purpose that I should either analyze or contrast the conflicting assertions observable in these productions. It will be sufficient to note that not only does Sir Hugh Allan admit upon oath that the language of his letters is "inaccurate" but he also denies in the most positive manner the correctness of the inferences sought to be deduced from them. On the whole, as far as I could gather from the tone of the press, and from conversation, these revelations rather improved than otherwise the position of the Ministry. On the one hand, Sir Hugh Allan's letters accounted for and justified Mr. Huntington's pertinacity; on the other, his affidavit—or rather, Sir John Macdonald's telegram quoted in the affidavit—satisfactorily proved that so far from yielding himself or allowing his colleague, Sir George Cartier, to yield to the pressure put upon him by Sir Hugh Allan in the height of the election contest, my Prime Minister had required the immediate and complete cancelling of an arrangement favourable to Sir Hugh to which Sir George had evinced a willingness to subscribe. In illustration of this point, I subjoin Sir George Cartier's letter as well as Sir Hugh Allan's reference to Sir John Macdonald's telegram concerning it.

"DEAR SIR HUGH,

"Montreal, July 30, 1872.

"I enclose you copies of telegrams received from Sir John A. Macdonald; and with reference to their contents I would say that in my opinion the Governor in Council will approve of the amalgamation of your Company with the Interoceanic Company, under the name of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, the Provincial Board of the amalgamated Company to be composed of seventeen members, of whom four shall be named from the Province of Quebec by the Canada Pacific Railway Company, four from the Province of Ontario by the Interoceanic Railway Company, and the remainder by the Government; the amalgamated Company to have the powers specified in the tenth section of the Act, incorporating the Canada Pacific Railway Company, &c., the agreement of amalgamation to be executed between the companies within two months from this date.

"The Canada Pacific Company might take the initiative in procuring the amalgamation; and if the Interoceanic Company should not execute an agreement of amalgamation upon such terms and within such limited time, I think the contemplated arrangements should be made with the Canada Pacific Company under its Charter.

"Upon the subscription and payment on account of stock being made, as required by the Act of last Session, respecting the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, I have no doubt but that the Governor in Council will agree with the Company for the construction and working of the Canadian Pacific Railway with such branches as shall be agreed upon, and will grant to the Company all such subsidies and assistance as they are empowered to do by the Government Act. I believe all the advantages which the Government Act empowers the Government to confer upon any Company will be required to enable the works contemplated to be successfully carried through, and I am convinced that they will be accorded to the Company to be formed by amalgamation, or to the Canada Pacific Company, as the case may be.

"I would add, that as I approve of the measures to which I have referred in this letter, I shall use my best endeavours to have them carried into effect.

"Very truly yours,
(Signed) "GEO. E. CARTIER."

EXTRACT FROM SIR H. ALLAN'S AFFIDAVIT OF JULY 5TH.

"On the same day that I received the above letter from Sir George Cartier, I informed Sir John A. Macdonald of the contents of it, and asked for his sanction of the views which it contained. But he declined to concur in the terms of Sir George's letter, telegraphing to him that he would not agree to them, and that he would come down to Montreal and confer with him respecting them. Thereupon, I immediately informed Sir George Cartier that I should consider the letter addressed to me as being withdrawn; and to my knowledge Sir George telegraphed Sir John that he had seen me, and that as he (Sir John) objected to Sir George's letter it had been withdrawn. I also telegraphed to Sir John on the same day (July 31st) to the effect that I had seen Sir George Cartier, and that he (Sir John) might return my letter or regard it as waste paper, and that I was satisfied with the telegram of the 26th as expressive of the views of the Government."

But any reaction in favour of the Government which might have thus set in was more than counterbalanced by the appearance of another series of letters, which I also re-append, and which are now generally known as the McMullen correspondence. Amid these productions there have been introduced documents of a very compromising character, the one a letter from Sir George Cartier asking for twenty thousand more dollars ($20,000 = 4,000*l.* sterling), and the other a telegram from Sir John Macdonald demanding an additional ten thousand dollars ($10,000 = 2,000*l.* sterling). These latter I subjoin :—

" Montreal, Aug. 24, 1872.

" DEAR MR. ABBOTT,—In the absence of Sir Hugh Allan, I shall be obliged by your supplying the Central Committee with a further sum of twenty thousand dollars upon the same conditions as the amount written by me at the foot of my letter to Sir Hugh Allan of the 30th ultimo.

" GEORGE E. CARTIER.

" P.S.—Please also send Sir John A. Macdonald ten thousand dollars more on the same terms."

" (Immediate, Private.)

" Toronto, Aug. 26, 1872.

" I must have another ten thousand : will be the last time of calling ; do not fail me ; answer to-day.

" JOHN A. MACDONALD.

" To the Hon. J. J. C. Abbott, St. Anne's."

But for the appearance of the foregoing documents, I doubt whether so great an impression would have been produced on the public mind by the statement of Mr. McMullen. I myself have no knowledge of the gentleman, and have no right to impeach his veracity, but it is manifest that many of his assertions are at variance with Sir Hugh Allan's sworn testimony, while others have been contradicted by gentlemen whose credibility it would be difficult to impugn. Even with regard to the documents themselves, it is to be observed that they were neither addressed to Mr. McMullen nor to any one with whom he was associated, and that they could scarcely have come into his possession by other than surreptitious means. They do not therefore necessarily connect themselves with those nefarious transactions to which Mr. McMullen asserts he was privy. It is further contended by the friends of the Government that the sums mentioned or even referred to were not very large—about 12,000*l.* sterling in all—an amount which would go but a little way to defray the legitimate expenses of the 150 Ontario and Quebec Elections, and that there was nothing to show whether they had been proffered as a subscription or as a temporary loan from a wealthy political partisan. Their sinister significance resulted in a great measure from their factitious juxtaposition with Mr. McMullen's narrative. Under these circumstances, though without attaching too much importance to mere conjectural pleas of this kind, I was unwilling to jump to a hasty conclusion on a matter involving both the private and the public honour of my Ministers, and above all things I felt bound not to allow my judgment to be swayed by the current of popular suspicion which this concatenation of documents would naturally produce.

I happened to be at Prince Edward Island when the McMullen correspondence reached my hands, whither two of my Ministers—Mr. Tilley, the Minister of Finance, and Dr. Tupper, the Minister of Customs—had also come for the purpose of settling certain details consequent on the recent confederation of the Island. I immediately sent for these gentlemen, and the strenuous assurances I received from each of them confirmed my hope that matters might be satisfactorily explained. But, however that might be, I knew that our original programme for the indefinite prorogation of Parliament could no longer be adhered to, and that my presence at Ottawa on the 13th of August was imperative. Understanding, however, that preparations were in progress for our public reception at Halifax, I thought it better to proceed thither, and to make no announcement of my subsequent intentions until the last moment. At the same time I wrote to Sir John, and intimated to him that the position of affairs had changed since we parted—that a recess for the usual period was no longer possible, and that it was necessary Parliament should be provided with as early an opportunity as circumstances permitted of pronouncing upon the points at issue between himself and his assailants.

CANADA.

On reaching Halifax, on the 29th July, I found the popular excitement all over the Dominion was intense, and that my supposed views, sympathies, and intentions were becoming not merely the subject of conjecture, but of assertion and comment in the rival newspapers,—the Government press stating, as if upon authority, that my course would be so and so,—announcements which were met by the Opposition prints with strong admonitory or rather minatory articles. As, at this time, I had by no means made up my mind as to the proper course to be pursued, and felt that no decision was possible until I had seen my Ministers, I determined to take an early opportunity of deprecating the introduction of the Governor-General's name into such a controversy. An occasion soon presented itself, and I have the honour to subjoin an extract from a newspaper report of a speech I made at a dinner given to me by the Halifax Club:—

* * * * * “And here, gentlemen, I should be disposed to conclude this imperfect expression of my thanks, were I not desirous of conveying to my friend the Chief Justice the great gratification I have derived from the remarks which have dropped from him in regard to my official position as Governor-General of this great Dominion. Gentlemen, I am well aware that this is, as it were, a domestic festival, and that nothing could be more inopportune than the slightest allusion to any political topic, but I may be permitted to say this much in reference to what has fallen from the Chief Justice, that if there is one obligation whose importance I appreciate more than other as attaching to the functions of my office, it is the absolute and paramount duty of maintaining not merely an outward attitude of perfect impartiality towards the various parties into which the political world of Canada as well as of the Mother-Country is divided, but still more of preserving that more subtle and inward balance of sympathy, judgment, and opinion which should elevate the Representative of your Sovereign above the faintest suspicion of having any other desire, aim, or ambition than to follow the example of his Royal Mistress in the relation she has constantly maintained towards her Ministers, her Parliament, and her people (tremendous applause); to remember every hour of the day that he has but one duty and but one object—to administer his Government in the interests of the whole Canadian people, and of the Dominion at large. (Great cheering.) Of course, gentlemen, having been but one brief year in the country, my character and my sentiments in these respects can scarcely be known; and there is always a danger during the fervour of these political controversies, which seem to be conducted by the press of Canada with peculiar liveliness and animation—(great laughter), of unauthorized references being made to the Governor-General's supposed sentiments, opinions, and intentions, which would convey to the uninstructed reader a very erroneous impression of the conduct and the attitude of the chief of the State. Gentlemen, I do not make this remark by way of complaint. If there is any person in Canada who has been kindly and considerately dealt with by the press, to whom the press of every political complexion has shown indulgence and good will, it is myself, and it is most natural and by no means an uncomplimentary circumstance that the organs of different shades of opinion should persuade themselves that the Governor-General must necessarily be of their way of thinking, and see through their spectacles. (Laughter.) But what I wish to say once for all, and I do not care how widely this remark is disseminated, is this—that there is no human being who is authorized to make any statement or suggestion as to what my opinion or sentiments may be in respect of any political topic, or who has ever been in a position, or is likely to be in a position, to make anything approaching to a conjecture upon points of this description. It is true, my object and my desire is to inform my mind upon every subject affecting the interests of the country, by conversation and by discussion with anyone who can afford me instruction or information; and it would be very unfortunate for me if this freedom of intercourse with all classes and parties in Canada, from which I derive so much benefit and pleasure, should be trammelled by the dread lest this casual intercourse should become the foundation for inference, comment, or conjecture in the press. No, gentlemen, I understand my duty too well ever to allow my judgment or my sympathies to be surprised into political partisanship. My one thought and desire is the welfare of Canada as a whole. To maintain her honour, to promote her prosperity, to do my duty by her and her entire people, is the sole object of my ambition. When I converse with your public men, it scarcely ever occurs to me to remember to what political party they belong. I only see in them persons devoting themselves, each according to his lights, to the service of his country. My only guiding star in the conduct and maintenance of my official relations with your public men is the Parliament of Canada. (Cheers.) In fact, I suppose I am the only person in the Dominion whose faith in the wisdom and the infallibility of Parliament is never shaken. (Great laughter.) Each of you, gentlemen, only believe in Parliament so long as Parliament acts according to your wishes—(cheers and laughter)—and convictions. I, gentleman, believe in Parliament, no matter which way it votes—(laughter)—and to those men alone whom the deliberate will of the confederated Parliament of the Dominion may assign to me as my Responsible Advisers can I give my confidence. (Cheers.) Whether they are the heads of this party or of that party must be a matter of indifference to the Governor-General. (Cheers.) So long as they are maintained by Parliament in their position, so long is he bound to give them his unreserved confidence, to defer to their advice, and loyally to assist them with his counsels. (Applause.) Whenever, in the vicissitudes of party warfare, they are replaced by others—(laughter)—he welcomes their successors with an equally open and loyal regard. (Cheers.) Such private friendships as he may have formed he may have a right to retain. (Hear, hear.) As a reasonable being he cannot help having convictions upon the merits of different policies—(hear)—but these considerations are abstract, speculative, and devoid of practical effect on his official relations. (Cheers.) As the head of a constitutional State, as engaged in the administration of Parliamentary Government, he has no political friends; still less need he have political enemies. (Great cheering.) The possession, or even to be suspected of possessing either, destroys his usefulness. (Loud cheers.) Sometimes, of course, no matter how disconnected he personally may be with what is taking place, his name will get dragged into some controversy, and he may suddenly find himself the subject of hostile criticism by the press of whatever party may for the moment be out of humour. (Laughter.) But, under these circumstances, he must console himself with the reflection that these spasmodic castigations—(laughter)—are as transitory and innocuous—(great laughter)—as the discipline applied occasionally to their idols by the unsophisticated worshippers of Mumbo Jumbo—(immense laughter)—when their harvests are short or a murrain visits their flocks. (Cheers.) For, gentlemen, of this I am certain: although he may sometimes err in his judgment, or fail in serving you as effectually as he might desire, a Viceroy who honestly seeks to do his duty—(cheers)—to whom the interests of Canada are as precious and her honour as dear as his own—(immense cheering)—who steers unmoved an even course, indifferent to praise or blame, between the political contentions of the day—(cheers)—can never appeal in vain to the confidence and generosity of the Canadian people. (Immense applause.)”

But though keeping my final decision in suspense, my mind was much occupied, as your Lordship may imagine, with the consideration of the various courses open to me. On one point I was quite clear—namely, that it would not be right for me to countenance the settlement of the serious issues raised between my Ministers and their opponents—involving, as they did, the personal honour of the most eminent men in Canada, the fate of my Ministry, and the public credit of the country—except at the hands of a full Parliament, in which the distant Provinces of the Dominion were as well represented as those of Ontario and Quebec.

As I have already described to your Lordship in the earlier part of this Despatch, before Parliament adjourned on the 23rd of May I had caused it to be announced to both Houses that Prorogation would take place on the 13th of August. This arrangement, I have no hesitation in saying, was agreeable to what were then the views of the majority both in the Senate and in the Houses of Commons. On the faith of this pledge many gentlemen were gone to so great a distance that it was physically impossible for them to be recalled, and it so happened, from causes to which I have already referred, that by far the larger proportion of these absentees were supporters of the Government. All the members from British Columbia, except Sir F. Hincks, were on the wrong side of the Rocky Mountains. Some Ministerialists were in Europe, as I was informed, others in the States, and even to those in the Maritime Provinces, a return to Ottawa, though not physically impossible, as it was to their colleagues, would prove a great inconvenience at such a season. On the other hand, I learnt that the Opposition were mustering their full force, an operation for which they possessed certain geographical facilities. Were therefore the House of Commons to meet for the transaction of public business, it was evident that important votes might be passed, and decisions taken, contrary to the real sense of the country, and that my Ministers might justly complain that they were being unfairly treated, and their fate determined by a packed Parliament.

But apart from these practical considerations, a grave question of principle seemed to me involved. The Imperial Officer representing the Crown in the Dominion is the natural protector of the federal rights of its various Provinces as secured under an Imperial Act. The sanctity of the rights of any one of these Provinces is not affected by the number of its representatives or the amount of its population. In this view it is especially necessary that, in a country of such enormous distances, ample notice should be given of the times and seasons when Parliament is to sit; but if it be once admitted that the official “fixtures” which regulate the opening or closing of a Session and the conduct of public business are to be capriciously tampered with, and changed at so short a notice as to preclude the distant representatives from being present, it is evident much wrong and inconvenience would result, and the door be opened to a great deal of trickery at the hands of an unscrupulous Minister.

The foregoing considerations pointed pretty distinctly to prorogation as an inevitable necessity of the situation. Only one other alternative indeed either suggested itself then, or has occurred to me since, and that was another adjournment of the House to such a date as would suit the convenience of the absentees. At first, I confess this course appeared to me fairly practicable, but further reflection disclosed difficulties I had not at once seen. In the first place, this was an arrangement which I had not the power of enforcing, and I was confronted by the obvious reflection, that if the Government made a motion to that effect, it might be defeated or met with an amendment tantamount to a vote of want of confidence at the hands of the majority in presence, and I should then find myself landed in the very position which I was quite satisfied ought to be avoided. Even if the opponents of the Government were to refrain from taking so unfair an advantage of their numerical superiority, it was evident that in view of the adjournment preliminary issues would crop up of vital importance relative to the fresh instructions to be given to the Committee; for instance, whether the evidence was to be sworn or unsworn, and if the former, how the oath was to be administered—all of which would necessarily be decided in a manner unduly adverse to the Government, and in the absence of those who had an undoubted right to make their voices heard on the occasion. I was so anxious, nevertheless, to find some way of avoiding a course which I foresaw would be denounced, however unjustly, as an undue exercise of the Queen's prerogative, that I thought it desirable to make a suggestion in this sense to Sir John Macdonald, offering at the same time to become the channel of communication by which an understanding between him and his opponents might be arrived at. Sir John's reply was very much in the sense I had anticipated. He insisted upon the injustice of his Government being given over, bound hand and foot, to the tender mercies of their opponents in the absence of his supporters, whom he had dismissed to their homes with my sanction and with the acquiescence of Parliament. He called my attention to the fact that the Opposition organs, far from hinting at any compromise, were insisting on the fact that a quorum of Parliament could do anything that Parliament itself could do, and were evincing by unmistakable signs that they would show no quarter; that both Messrs. Blake and Dorian had endeavoured to persuade the Committee to content themselves with unsworn evidence, and that if Parliament met for business they would be in a position to pass an instruction to the Committee to that effect, that no man would be willing to risk his life, still less his honour, in the hands of witnesses released from the consequences of perjury and finally; that he would not feel himself safe in entering into any arrangements dependent upon the bona fides of those with whom I had suggested he should treat.

Unfortunately in this country party animosity is intense, and the organs of each side denounce the public men opposed to them in terms of far greater vigour than those to which we are accustomed in England. The quarrel at this moment is exceptionally bitter. The one party openly accuse the other of personal dishonour, while these regard their opponents as unscrupulous conspirators. As a consequence, a mistrust of each other's fair dealings—which I cannot believe to be justified on either hand—has been engendered, which would render the rôle of mediator under any circumstances extremely difficult. As it was, the former part of Sir John's representations, though not the latter, coincided too closely with what had occurred to my own mind to enable me to deny its cogency. There being, however, no further time for correspondence, I left Halifax on Saturday night, the 9th August, and arrived in Ottawa on the morning of Wednesday 13th. Had I been at liberty to have done so, I should have preferred starting sooner, but the town of Halifax had organized a series of popular demonstrations in our honour for Saturday afternoon, and it would have occasioned great dissatisfaction had I absented myself.

Before continuing my narrative, there is one incident connected with my stay at Halifax which perhaps ought to find mention here. Mr. Huntington sent me a sealed packet covered by an official communication to my secretary, which, as I understood from the gentleman who brought it, as well as from Mr. Huntington's letter, contained copies of the incriminatory documents in his possession. As the matters to which the papers referred had become the subject of a public investigation before a House of Commons' Committee, and as I was still uncertain what turn affairs might take, I did not consider it would be proper for me to take personal cognizance of these papers. I therefore returned the packet unopened to Mr. Huntington.

The 13th August was not only the day appointed for prorogation, but it was also the day to which the Committee of Inquiry had adjourned, but as far as I can gather from the subjoined Report of what occurred it came together to very little purpose. Indeed its whole procedure on this occasion is difficult of comprehension, in consequence, I suppose, of the meagreness of the only Report of what passed which I have been able to obtain. In the first place only four out the five members were present, and eventually another, Mr. Dorion, withdrew in the middle of a discussion, leaving what are considered the Government members in a majority. One of these, Mr. Blanchet, then proposed that they should report their proceedings to the House. Mr. Blake, in amendment of this suggestion, moved the adjournment of the Committee, which was carried—the result being that when the House met at three o'clock, as had been arranged six weeks before, for the very purpose of receiving the Committee's Report, no Report of any sort or description was forthcoming. The following is the account of the proceedings referred to:—

“Ottawa, Aug. 13.

“The Pacific Committee met at 11.30. Present: Messrs. Cameron, Blanchet, Blake, Dorion.

“At the request of Mr. Blake, the Resolution passed by the Committee at last meeting—that the Committee cannot proceed without further instructions from the House, was read.

“Mr. Blake moved that the said Resolution be rescinded.

“Yeas—Blake, Dorion.

“Nays—Cameron, Blanchet.

“Resolution lost.

“After some conversation as to the Committee making a Report to the House,

“The Chairman said if Mr. Dorion and Mr. Blake were not in favour of making a Report, and withdrew because they thought no Report should be made, the majority of the Committee would not make any Report.

“Mr. Dorion said he wanted a Report to be made, but did not concur with the majority.

“The Chairman—All we propose to do is simply to Report our proceedings to the House. If you don't like that Report, we need not make any at all.

“Mr. Dorion—If I move any amendment, I would stop the report from being made.

“The Chairman—It is impossible for me to tell the result of merely reporting our proceedings to the House; but if you don't think any Report of our proceedings should be made, I have no objection that it be so resolved. My own impression is that as we reported all our former proceedings to the House, there is no objection to our also reporting those which have taken place since the last meeting of the House.

“Mr. Dorion said he would not interfere with such a step.

“The Chairman—Then I suppose it is so resolved, and we have completed our business.

“Mr. Blake—No, there is a quorum present, and any amendment is in order. I move that the House be asked to give such instructions to the Committee as will enable them to proceed with the inquiry.

“Mr. Dorion here withdrew from the room, and the motion was carried unanimously by Messrs. Cameron, Blanchet, and Blake.

“Mr. Blake inquired of the Chairman—Do you propose to give the House communication of this Resolution?

“The Chairman—Not unless you move it to be done.

“Mr. Blake—Do you propose to communicate any of the previous proceedings?

“The Chairman—I do not.

“Mr. Blanchet—I think we should report our proceedings. I move that the proceedings of the Committee since 17th May last be reported to the House.

“Mr. Blake—I move an amendment that the Committee adjourn till eleven o'clock to-morrow.

“Carried.

“Yeas—Blake, Cameron.

“Nay—Blanchet.

“The Committee then adjourned.”

A few hours after my arrival in Ottawa, Sir John Macdonald called upon me by appointment, and formally submitted the unanimous advice of my Ministers, that Parliament should be prorogued according to the announcement made by my authority in both Houses previous to its adjournment. After some conversation, in which we went over the whole ground, and again examined the suggestion contained in my letter relative to an adjournment, I finally announced to him, that on a due consideration of all the circumstances of the case, the prorogation of Parliament seemed to me inevitable,—that I did not feel myself justified in withdrawing my confidence from Ministers, or in concluding that Parliament had done so, and that therefore I was prepared to be guided by the counsels of himself and his colleagues,—but that I must formally insist on one condition as the price of my assent to prorogation, viz.:—that Parliament should be again convoked within as short a period as was consistent with the reasonable convenience of members, and that I considered six or eight weeks was as long an interval as should intervene before the House re-assembled. Sir John Macdonald did not offer any objection to this proposition—indeed he had already volunteered a suggestion to a similar effect,—and it was agreed that I should meet my Council at two o'clock, in order that it might be ratified in the presence of all my Ministers.

At one o'clock, however, I was unexpectedly informed that a deputation of members of Parliament was desirous of waiting upon me with a Memorial against prorogation. I had not received the slightest intimation of the intention of these gentlemen, yet, although I felt the propriety of such a step upon their part was very questionable, I concluded to receive them.

In the meantime I had repaired to the Council Chamber, as agreed upon, where my Ministers jointly re-submitted the advice they had commissioned Sir John Macdonald to convey on their behalf in the morning. I made the same reply to them as to my Prime Minister, and the re-assembly of Parliament within the time specified was agreed upon. It was, however, suggested that if ten weeks were named as the limit instead of eight, it would be possible to get the preparation of the Estimates sufficiently advanced to roll two Sessions into one, and dispense with the usual Spring Session. Although I was scarcely in a position to know how far this proposal was practicable or would be acceptable to Parliament, it would evidently prove such a saving of expense to the country and of fatigue and inconvenience to members, many of whom would otherwise scarcely have time to return to their homes at all, between an autumn and the usual Session, that I consented to the additional fortnight upon the specific understanding, however, that if in the interval anything should occur which, in my opinion, required Parliament to meet sooner, an expression of my wishes to that effect would be at once acted upon without comment or discussion.

These matters being settled, I returned to where the deputation of remonstrant members was waiting for me. They were introduced by their Chairman, Mr. Cartwright, a gentleman for whom I have a great esteem. In presenting the Memorial, Mr. Cartwright stated that it had been signed by ninety-two members of Parliament, and that another gentleman had intimated his willingness to have his signature attached to it. I found, however, on examining the document, that three of the ninety-two signatures had been affixed by deputy, though, of course, with the full authority of their owners. I note the circumstance, however, as I shall have occasion to refer to it hereafter.

As my interview with my Council had occupied some little time, it had not been possible for me either to study or to write my reply to the Memorial. I was therefore forced to make Mr. Cartwright and his friends an extempore answer, which was afterwards reduced to writing as nearly as possible in the terms actually used. This document, together with the Members' Remonstrance, I subjoin for your Lordship's information.

MEMORIAL.

"The undersigned members of the House of Commons of Canada desire respectfully to approach your Excellency and humbly to represent that more than four months have already elapsed since the Honourable Mr. Huntington made, from his place in the House, grave charges of corruption against your Excellency's Constitutional Advisers in reference to the Pacific Railway contract; that although the House has appointed a Committee to inquire into the said charges, the proceedings of this Committee have, on various grounds, been postponed, and the inquiry has not yet taken place; that the honour of the country imperatively requires that no further delay should take place in the investigation of charges of so grave a character, and which it is the duty and undoubted right and privilege of the Commons to prosecute.

"The undersigned are deeply impressed with the conviction that any attempt to postpone this inquiry, or to remove it from the jurisdiction of the Commons, would create this most intense dissatisfaction; and they therefore pray your Excellency not to prorogue Parliament until the House of Commons shall have an opportunity of taking such steps as it may deem necessary and expedient with reference to this important matter.

"The number of names signed to this document is ninety, within ten of one-half the House. They are as follows:—

REPLY.

"GENTLEMEN,—It is quite unnecessary for me to assure you that any representations emanating from persons possessing the right to speak on public affairs with such authority as yourselves, will always be considered by me with the greatest respect, even had not circumstances already compelled me to give my most anxious thought to the matters to which you are now desirous of calling my attention.

"You say, in your Memorandum, that four months have elapsed since the Hon. Mr. Huntington preferred grave charges of corruption against my present Advisers, in reference to the Pacific Railway contract, and that although the House has appointed a Committee to inquire into these charges, the proceedings of this Committee have on various grounds been postponed, and the inquiry has not yet taken place.

"Gentlemen, no person can regret more deeply than I do these unfortunate delays, the more so as they seem to have given rise to the impression that they have been unnecessarily interposed by the action of the Executive.

"It may be premature at this moment to enter into a history of the disallowance of the Oaths Bill, but this much, at all events, it is but fair to everyone that I should state, viz. that immediately after I had assented to that Act, I transmitted a certified copy of it to the Secretary of State, in accordance with the instructions by which I am bound on such occasions. That, leaning myself to the opinion (an opinion founded on the precedent afforded by the Act of the Canadian Parliament, which empowers the Senate to examine witnesses on oath), that the Act was not ultra vires, I accompanied it by a full exposition of the arguments which could be urged in its support; but on the point being referred by the Secretary of State for the professional opinion of the Law Officers of the Crown, it was pronounced inconsistent with the Act of Confederation, and that therefore the postponement of the inquiry, so far as it has arisen out of this circumstance, has resulted wholly by the operation of law, and has been beyond the control of anyone concerned.

"You then proceed to urge me, on grounds which are very fairly and forcibly stated, to decline the advice which has been unanimously tendered to me by my Responsible Ministers and to refuse to prorogue Parliament; in other words you require me to dismiss them from my counsels; for, gentlemen, you must be aware that this would be the necessary result of my assenting to your recommendation.

"Upon what grounds would I be justified in taking so grave a step?

"What guarantee can you afford me that the Parliament of the Dominion would endorse such an act of personal interference on my part?

"You yourselves, gentlemen, do not form an actual moiety of the House of Commons, and I have no means therefore of ascertaining that the majority of that body subscribe to the opinion you have enounced.

"Again, to what should I have to appeal in justification of my conduct?

"It is true grave charges have been preferred against these gentlemen; charges which

CANADA.

I admit require the most searching investigation; but as you yourselves remark in your Memorandum, the truth of these accusations still remains untested.

"One of the authors of this correspondence which has made so painful an impression upon the public, has admitted that many of his statements were hasty and inaccurate, and has denied on oath the correctness of the deductions drawn from them.

"Various assertions contained in the narrative of the other have been positively contradicted.

"Is the Governor-General, upon the strength of such evidence as this, to drive from his presence gentlemen who for years have filled the highest offices of State, and in whom, during the recent Session, Parliament has repeatedly declared its continued confidence? It is true certain documents have lately appeared in connection with these matters of grave significance, in regard to which the fullest explanation must be given, but no proof has yet been adduced which necessarily connects them with the culpable transactions of which it is asserted they formed a part, however questionable they may appear, as placed in juxtaposition with the correspondence to which they have been appended by the person who has possessed himself of them.

"Under these circumstances, what right has the Governor-General, on his personal responsibility, to proclaim to Canada—nay, not only to Canada, but to America and Europe, as such a proceeding on his part must necessarily do—that he believes his Ministers guilty of the crimes alleged against them? Were it possible at the present time to make a call of the House, and place myself in a direct communication with the Parliament of the Dominion, my present embarrassment would disappear, but this is a physical impossibility. I am assured by my Prime Minister, and the Report of the proceedings at the time bears out his statements, that when Parliament adjourned it was announced by him, as the leader of the House, that the meeting on the 13th of August would be immediately followed by prorogation; that no substantive objection was taken to this announcement; and that, as a consequence, a considerable portion of your fellow-members are dispersed in various directions. I should therefore only deceive myself were I to regard the present Assembly as a full Parliament.

"Since the adjournment, indeed, circumstances have occurred which render your proximate re-assembly highly desirable, but in this country there are physical circumstances which necessarily interpose a considerable lapse of time before the representatives of the various Provinces comprising the confederated Parliament of Canada can assemble, separated as some of them are by thousands of miles from the capital of the Dominion.

"In regulating the times and seasons when Parliament is to be called together, the Executive is bound not only to consider the reasonable convenience of these gentlemen, but also to protect the federal rights of the Provinces which they represent, and under these circumstances I have concluded, on the advice of my Ministers (and even if I differed from them as to the policy of such a course, which I do not, it is a point upon which I should not hesitate to accept their recommendation), to issue a Royal Commission of Inquiry to three gentlemen of such legal standing, character, and authority, as will command the confidence of the public, by virtue of the powers conferred upon me by the Act 31 Vict., cap. 38. On the other hand, I have determined in proroguing Parliament to announce to the members of both Houses my intention of assembling them immediately after the Commission in question shall have concluded its labours. By these means an opportunity will be afforded for the preliminary expurgation of these unhappy matters before a tribunal competent to take evidence on oath; ample opportunities will be given to the members of the more distant Provinces to make their preparations, in view of an autumnal Session; and within two months or ten weeks from this date a full Parliament of Canada will take supreme and final cognizance of the case now pending between my Ministers and their accusers.

"Gentlemen, the situation we have been discussing is one of great anxiety and embarrassment, but I cannot but hope that on a calm retrospect of the various considerations to be kept in view, you will come to the conclusion that in determining to be guided by the advice of my Ministers on the present occasion—in other words, in declining to act as though the charges which have been advanced against them were already proven, and in adhering to arrangements upon the faith of which many of your colleagues are absent from their places—I have adopted the course most in accordance with the maxims of constitutional government, and with what is due to those whom the Parliament of Canada has recommended to my confidence."

After the members had retired, it had become time for me to proceed to the Senate Chamber, and about half-past three o'clock the Speaker appeared at the Bar, and Parliament was prorogued. Considerable excitement, I am informed, prevailed in the House of Commons, and cries of "Privilege" were uttered, when Black Rod made his appearance; but, as far as I can learn, nothing was done or said incompatible with the dignity and self-respect of that Assembly. Only the Ministerialists present, about thirty-five in number, accompanied the Speaker to the Senate Chamber. The Opposition, amongst whom, on this occasion, I suppose must be included thirteen of the ordinary supporters of my Government who had signed the Memorial, remained behind in their places. Upwards of seventy members in a House of two hundred must have been absent—all of whom, with the exception of three, were claimed by Government as their adherents.

In the evening, what is popularly known as an "indignation" meeting was held, under the presidency of Mr. Mackenzie. I have appended to this Despatch a Report of its proceedings.

I have thus recounted, in as faithful language as I can command, the various circumstances connected with the recent prorogation. In doing so, your Lordship will perceive that I have not attempted to discuss, still less to defend, the action of my Ministers on any of the occasions referred to, except so far as the justification of their conduct follows as a corollary to the vindication of the attitude I myself have assumed. The propriety of their procedure is a matter which they will have to settle with the Canadian Parliament. My contestation would be, that the fact of their being hereafter proved innocent or guilty of the accusations alleged against them, or of having acted judiciously or the reverse, is a result which can have no relation to my share in these transactions, and that, given the circumstances in which I found myself, I have acted in the highest interests of the Parliament and of the people of Canada. In the same way, if from time to time I have argued against any of the views maintained by the Opposition, it has only been as contending against their implied condemnation of what I myself have done or said.

Were I to be put upon my defence, my best justification would be found in a review of whatever other courses may be considered to have been possible, but this inquiry has been pretty well exhausted in the course of the preceding statement. The alternatives I have seen suggested by those who are disposed to criticise my conduct are indeed very few. The morning after the news of the prorogation had reached Toronto, but before my pledge in regard to an autumn Session was known, the 'Globe'—a recognized organ of the Opposition, and one of the ablest conducted papers in Canada—in lamenting the prospect of a recess which was to last till February of next year, observed that "a prorogation for two or three weeks would have been a proper course." As I had actually anticipated the pith of these suggestions (for the question of a few extra weeks, I apprehend, could not have become any grave cause of complaint), I naturally might have expected to have been complimented on my action; but although this paper and all the other Opposition journals in Canada have, with a few exceptions, shown great forbearance to me personally—considering the excitement which prevailed and the forcible language in which leading articles are written—I am afraid I must admit to your Lordship that its subsequent allusions to my procedure have not been eulogistic.

But if a short prorogation was wrong, what were the alternatives? An adjournment. But an adjournment is an act of the House, and cannot be compelled by the Executive. The leader of the House had already rejected the suggestion, and not the slightest intimation had ever reached me that such an expedient would be agreeable to the Opposition. On the contrary, their last word within an hour of the time the House was to meet, as conveyed to me by the ninety-two members, amongst whom were Mr. Mackenzie and Mr. Blake, was—"Let us meet and proceed to business as though we were a fully constituted Assembly representing the collective will of the people."

But it has been suggested that I should, on the one hand, have compelled the acquiescence of Sir John Macdonald in an adjournment by refusing to prorogue, while on the other Mr. Mackenzie ought to have been driven into the arrangement under a threat of prorogation.

Now I am quite ready to admit, that one of the functions of a Governor-General is to moderate the animosities of party warfare, to hold the balance even between the contending parties, to see that the machinery of the Constitution is not unfairly strained for party purposes, to intervene with his counsels at opportune moments, and when desired by his Ministers to become the channel of communication with their opponents, or even, though uninvited, to offer himself as negotiator in a difficulty. But the rôle marked out for me above is very different from this. I certainly should not have considered it consistent with my personal honour to have approached my Prime Minister with a threat I had no intention of executing, even had I seen less clearly than I did the objections to the course proposed, while, except at his instance, I should have been still less justified in opening communications with the Opposition. But as I have already explained, the mere negotiation of an adjournment would not have advanced matters in any degree, unless the issues relative to the future proceedings of the Committee could have been settled at the same time; but the divergencies of opinion upon these points were irreconcilable, and could never have been satisfactorily dealt with except by the House in full Session.

If then my choice lay—which seems to be admitted—between a short prorogation and a barren adjournment for a similar period, I do not think it can be disputed that the former was the preferable of the two.

Of course it was always open to me to have dismissed my Ministers, and to have taken my chance of Parliament approving my conduct, but I did not feel myself warranted in hazarding such a step on the data before me. Indeed, the rashness and injustice of the proceeding would probably have aroused such a feeling of dissatisfaction in the minds of what I have no reason to know may not prove the majority of the constituencies that there would have been a great chance—if Sir John and his friends came at all decently out of the affair—of their being borne back into office on the shoulders of the people. If wholly exculpated, your Lordship can imagine what my position would become in presence of the reaction that would have ensued. At all events, as I told the remonstrant members in my reply, I was not prepared by publicly withdrawing my confidence from my Ministers, to proclaim to Canada, to America, and to Europe that I believed untried men guilty of such atrocious crimes as those imputed to them. It is, however, not necessary to debate this line of conduct, as no responsible person in this country has ventured to recommend it.

But though not directly suggesting the dismissal of my Ministers, it has been very generally contended that I should have considered them under a ban, and should have ceased to act on their advice, though still retaining them in office. The establishment of a relationship of this kind between the Crown and its Ministers would be a novel fact in constitutional history, and might have proved difficult of execution. I was to go to my Council and say to them, “Gentlemen, you state that in your opinion the Crown has pledged itself to Parliament to prorogue on a certain day; you assert as a matter of fact that relying on this pledge sixty or seventy members are not in their places, and that to allow the House to proceed to business in their absence would be a gross impropriety, to which you would not consent, and that in view of this circumstance as my Constitutional Advisers, placed about me by the will of Parliament, you unanimously advise me to prorogue. Well, gentlemen, when Parliament last voted, you possessed a commanding majority: whether you have lost the confidence of Parliament or not I cannot tell. You say you have not. Others say you have. Your political opponents have brought grave accusations against you. You are therefore under a ban. You have forfeited my confidence. I do not intend to take your advice, except on mere questions of administration, but—pray retain your places.” To which, of course, these gentlemen would have replied:—“We are highly sensible of your Excellency’s forbearance, perhaps you will favour us with a list of subjects on which you will accept our recommendation, as well as an index expurgatorius of those which are tabooed. The arrangement will lighten our responsibilities, our salaries will remain the same, and our honour”—I cannot exactly conjecture how the sentence would have concluded. But the suggestion that my refusal to take their advice on prorogation would not have been tantamount to a dismissal of them, is too untenable to need refutation.

Before, however, closing this head of the discussion it may be well to examine the grounds on which it is alleged I ought to have withdrawn my confidence from Sir John Macdonald and his colleagues.

In order to answer this question, we must inquire what I had to go upon? There were Mr. Huntington’s statements as displayed in his motion—but these statements were not statements of facts, but of conclusions drawn from facts within Mr. Huntington’s knowledge perhaps, but not within mine, and offered no safe foothold. Next there were Sir Hugh Allan’s statements, but upon which was I to found myself,—upon those in Sir Hugh’s letters, in which he admits there was a good deal of “inaccurate” language, or upon those in his affidavit? If upon the latter, could I have pronounced the Government guilty? Then there were Mr. McMullen’s statements,—but these have been much questioned, and many of them have been contradicted. I do not think the people of Canada would be willing to allow the reputation of any of their representative men to be staked upon evidence of this nature. Lastly, there were Sir George Cartier’s letter, and Sir John Macdonald’s telegram. In respect to these documents, I would merely observe that, suspicious as they might appear, no man would have been justified in acting upon any conclusion in regard to them, until it had been shown with what transactions they were connected. There is as yet no evidence to prove that the sums referred to were consideration moneys for the Pacific Railway Charter; and Sir Hugh Allan states upon his oath that they were not, as will be seen from the subjoined extract from his affidavit:—

“In these and similar ways I expended sums of money approaching in amount those mentioned in those letters, as I conceive I had a perfect right to do; but I did not state in those letters, nor is it the fact, that any portion of those sums of money were paid to the members of the Government, or were received by them or on their behalf directly as a consideration in any form for any advantage to me in connection with the Pacific Railway contract.”

On the other hand, what were the countervailing facts within my knowledge? The theory of the prosecution “is that the terms of the Charter were corruptly modified to “the advantage of Sir Hugh Allan and his American confederates.” Has the bargain been carried out? Certainly not, as far as the Americans are concerned. Their complaint is that they have taken nothing by their motion. I was myself a witness of the pains taken to exclude them when the Charter was being framed. Have Sir Hugh Allan and his friends been gratified with that control over the concern to attain which Mr. McMullen asserts he bribed my Ministers? This is a fact less easy to elucidate, but I myself believe that he has not. At moments when Sir John Macdonald could not have been playing a part he gave me repeated indications of his desire to prevent Sir Hugh from obtaining any commanding influence on the direction. That direction was framed with a view to a proper representation upon it of every Province in Canada, regard being had to the wealth and population of each. It numbers amongst its members gentlemen who had been on the direction of the late Inter-oceanic Company, and it includes the names of men whom everyone would acknowledge would never willingly associate themselves with any dishonourable enterprise. It is difficult to believe that these personages are either the willing or unconscious tools of Sir H. Allan. Hence, we must arrive at the inference that, at all events, if the crime was imagined, it can scarcely have been consummated. This would not in the least excuse its authors, but if a thing has not been done, the fact affords primâ facie grounds for believing that it was not intended to be done. Lastly, I have received the most solemn assurances from my Ministers, both individually and collectively, on their word as men of honour, and on their fealty to the Crown as my sworn Councillors, that they are absolutely innocent of the things laid to their charge.

On a balance of the foregoing considerations, can anyone say that I should have been justified in deliberately violating my first duty as a constitutional ruler on a premature assumption of the guilt of these gentlemen?

But a still more important question remains behind. Had I any means of knowing that my Ministers had forfeited the confidence of the House of Commons,—for, of course, if this were the case, any inward impressions of my own would cease to be elements of the problem?

What were the facts upon which I could rely? During the whole of the preceding Session the Government had marched from victory to victory, as will be seen by the subjoined record of votes taken on test divisions:—

7th March, majority for Government .	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	16
18th do. do. do.	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	25
2nd April, do. do.	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	31*
17th do. do. do.	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	26
7th May, do. do.	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	31
8th do. do. do.	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	33
12th do. do. do.	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	24
16th do. do. do.	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	35

They had left off with a majority of 35 at their command. The ordinary presumption would be that their supporters still adhered to them. Had anything occurred to invalidate this conclusion? The publication of the documents I have referred to? Judging from the process of thought in my own mind, which compelled me to suspend my verdict, I could not bring myself to believe that Parliament had jumped to any premature conclusion. But I had one other indication to assist me. Ninety-two Members of Parliament declared themselves opposed to the views of Ministers on prorogation. Where were the other one hundred and seven, and what were their opinions? Of the thirty-five or forty who were in their places, not one took steps to make me aware that they had ceased to support the Government. Their names were conspicuously absent from the Memorial. The sixty or sixty-five members who were away cannot complain if I have interpreted their absence as an indication that they endorsed the policy of Government, so far at least as prorogation was concerned. That the memorialists were so many and no more was in itself significant, for it gave the measure of the effort made and the maximum result. They were not even a moiety of the House. They were a minority, and therefore not in a position to acquaint me with the wishes of the majority, or to speak in behalf of Parliament at all. So acutely was the force of this fact felt that within a very few days after prorogation, it was industriously circulated by all the Opposition newspapers, that in refusing to acquiesce in the suggestions of the signatories of this Memorial, I had flown in the face of a "majority" of the House of Commons. It is said that hypocrisy is the homage paid by vice to virtue. The pertinacity with which this mis-statement has been propagated, I cannot but regard as a homage to the strength of my position. But not content with this, some papers have even gone farther and stated positively that other gentlemen, friends of the Government, waited upon me the same day and held language similar to the remonstrants—an assertion for which there is not the slightest foundation, for on that day, up to three o'clock, with the exception of the Speaker, the remonstrant members themselves, and my Ministers, I had neither spoken to or heard from a single Member of Parliament.

But it has been subsequently argued, that inasmuch as no division ever took place in a perfectly full House, ninety-two signatures implied a practical majority,—as though my appreciation of what should constitute a majority is to be regulated by my estimate of the cogency of the respective whips. If, however, we are to count noses with such particularity, let us see how the case stands. I admit that the numerical strength of a House is always in excess of its voting power. There will always be accidental vacancies. But the ranks of each side are equally liable to be thinned by casualties. What was the voting power represented by this Memorial? It is true, on the word of the Chairman, I took 93 as the number of persons on whose behalf he spoke, but the actual signatures at the time I had to decide on my course were only 92. Of these, three were affixed by proxy, reducing the momentary voting strength of the body represented to 89; for it is to be presumed that, unless detained from Ottawa, the remaining gentlemen would have signed with their own hands. Now, if we double 89 we get a House of 178, and no later than last Session 183 names appeared on a division list,—so that the 89 remonstrants represented only a minority of the House even on this principle of reckoning. But during the whole of last Session Government had a large majority, a condition of affairs which superinduces a laxity of attendance. Had the two parties been more evenly balanced, had victory depended on only a few votes, the muster of members would have been inevitably stronger, and the maximum division list of 183 undoubtedly exceeded.

But I am not prepared to admit that a Governor-General would be justified in taking so serious a step as was then urged upon me, on the strength of a Memorial signed even by a majority of Members of Parliament. Except so far as bringing a certain amount of pressure to bear upon him for a momentary purpose, a document of this nature is quite inconsequential. It would prove so much waste paper in the presence of a different mandate from the constituencies of many of these gentlemen, and when the time for voting arrived the Governor who relied upon it might very well find a considerable proportion of its signatories on the wrong side of the division list, with a dozen plausible excuses for their having played him false. Indeed, within a couple of hours after the deputation had left my presence, I was assured on trustworthy authority that some of these very persons had openly stated that in signing the Memorial they by no means intended to signify that they withdrew their support from Government.

It is further to be remembered that, although I was in Ottawa at six in the morning, I heard nothing of this Memorial until one o'clock, that three was the hour at which Parliament met, that the gentlemen bringing it must have known that its presentation and perusal must have occupied some time, and that I was bound to communicate it to my Ministers; yet it was upon the strength of a document of this nature, presented in this fashion, when my speech from the Throne was in the hands of the printers, and the guard of honour under arms, that I was expected to take a step which, under such circumstances, must have inevitably led to a change of Government, and possibly a general election.

I have one further point to mention, and I have done. It is a favourite theory at this moment with many persons that when once grave charges of this nature have been preferred against the Ministry, they become ipso facto unfit to counsel the Crown. The practical application of this principle would prove very inconvenient, and would leave not only the Governor-General, but every Lieutenant-Governor in the Dominion very thinly provided with Responsible Advisers; for as far as I have been able to seize the spirit of political controversy in Canada, there is scarcely an eminent man in the country on either side whose character or integrity has not been, at one time or another, the subject of reckless attack by his opponents in the press. Even your Lordship and Mr. Gladstone have not escaped, for it has been more than insinuated that the Imperial Government have been "got at" by Sir John Macdonald, and that the law officers of Her Majesty were instructed to condemn the Oaths Bill contrary to their legal convictions.

In conclusion, I desire to call your Lordship's attention to the fact that in this Despatch I have made no allusion to the Royal Commission, which I have just issued under the advice of my Ministers.

My desire is to keep the transactions relating to the prorogation of Parliament and to the issue of the Commission entirely distinct. These two events are quite disconnected and independent. The reasons which induced me to agree to the prorogation of Parliament had to be considered without reference to the effect of prorogation on the Committee, or at least they appeared sufficiently cogent to overpower any countervailing arguments founded on the necessity of keeping the Committee alive. However much I might have desired to do so, I could not have treated Parliament as a pregnant woman, and prolonged its existence for the sake of the lesser life attached to it. If I have satisfied your Lordship that prorogation under the circumstances was the proper course, the extinction of the Committee was an ill effect with which I had no concern. It is necessary to keep this consideration very clearly before our eyes, otherwise a confusion of ideas will ensue prejudicial to a correct judgment of the case. The extinction of the Committee is being denounced as the worst feature in the transaction by persons who are ready to admit that prorogation was perhaps a necessity, and they insensibly transfer their dissatisfaction with the result to the circumstance which occasioned it. The same class of minds probably conjecture that the destruction of the Committee was the main inducement with my Government for insisting on prorogation; but with speculations of this kind I have nothing to do. I prorogued Parliament for what I considered not only full and sufficient, but imperative reasons. The subordinate consequences incident to the transaction do not therefore come under review.

There is one further point it may be well to remember. I see it is asserted that the Government purposely kept its sixty members away. Of course I have no means of knowing how far this may have been the case. It is probable that having concluded that the Session could not be prolonged, my Ministers may have notified their followers to that effect; but it is an indisputable fact that the absence of a considerable proportion was unavoidable.

In another Despatch I propose to address your Lordship on the subject of the Commission.

I have, &c.,

Enclosure 1 in No. 4.

Montreal, July 18.

The following letter has been addressed by Sir Francis Hincks to the 'Gazette,' and will appear in that paper to-morrow morning:—

"To the Editor of the 'Gazette.'

"SIR,

"Although reluctant to anticipate the formal inquiry into Mr. Huntington's charges, I cannot allow the statement made in the 'Herald' of yesterday by Mr. Geo. W. McMullen to remain unnoticed. In all my proceedings regarding the construction of the Pacific Railway, I have been governed by an opinion, early expressed and never modified, which was that, if the construction of that work was undertaken by proper parties, the Government and the country, instead of thinking that they had conferred a favour on such parties, should feel deeply indebted to them. I shall at present confine my remarks on Mr. McMullen's letter to what affects myself here personally. I have a distinct recollection of Mr. McMullen's visit to Ottawa in July, 1871. He was accompanied by Mr. Smith, of Chicago; Mr. James Beaty, jun., barrister, of Toronto; Mr. Waddington, and Mr. Kersteman. They were bearers of an informal proposal for undertaking the work, and it is true that they had the names of several parties of the highest respectability. Mr. McMullen admits that it speedily became apparent to myself and associates that Mr. Waddington had been over sanguine in the idea that the formation of any Company would be entrusted to his hand. I do not pretend to recollect all that passed in the brief conversation that took place, but the substance was that the Government was not in a position to negotiate on the subject. After the return of the party to Toronto, I had some further correspondence on the subject, which I only refer to that I may show how I came into communication with Sir Hugh Allan. I received a letter on the 24th of July, acquainting me that the writer intended going during the following week to Montreal, along with a gentleman who has been active in promoting railway enterprises, with a view to bringing this scheme under the notice of Sir Hugh Allan and other capitalists in Montreal. I at once sent the following reply:—

CANADA.

“ ‘ Confidential.

“ ‘ MY DEAR SIR,

“ ‘ Ottawa, July 20, 1871.

“ ‘ I have received your letter of the 24th instant. I note that you had yourself arrived at the conclusion that “the whole matter was disorganized and required “complete reconstruction.” You mention your intention of proceeding with Mr. ——— to Montreal to see certain parties. Mr. ——— is reported to be a shrewd business man, and yet, from your account, he is about to see persons regarding a scheme, of the advantages of which neither he nor you can have the slightest idea; at least, I certainly am very ignorant at this moment what aid in land and money the Government will recommend Parliament to grant. How anyone under such circumstances can talk to men of business about being concerned in the scheme, I am at a loss to comprehend, and I am persuaded that, owing to Mr. Kersteman’s most injudicious proceedings, the greatest injury has been done to a great undertaking.

“ ‘ James Beaty, jun., Esq.’

“ ‘ I am,

“ ‘ F. HINCKS.

“ ‘ I readily admit that from the time when the proposals made through Mr. McMullen were first submitted, I was most anxious, but solely on public grounds, that the negotiations should fall into other hands. After having prevented, as I believed I had done, the communication to Sir Hugh Allan, I determined to let him know what was going on. I accordingly gave him the names of the American gentlemen who had made the informal communication, but I certainly could not have requested Sir Hugh to communicate with them. I did not then even know that Sir Hugh Allan was prepared to embark in the scheme, but I readily admit that I was of opinion that several of the American names were wholly unobjectionable, and that Sir Hugh Allan was as likely as any other Canadian capitalist to secure co-operation both in England and Canada. Mr. McMullen refers to an interview, or interviews, with two prominent railway bankers at New York, and prior, I think, to my first communication to Sir Hugh Allan, in the month of August, 1871. During my brief visit to New York in August, 1871, which, I may observe, was wholly unconnected with Pacific Railway matters, I had interviews with the gentleman referred to, and I believe that I did suggest that the American capitalists, who were inclined to promote the undertaking, would find Sir Hugh Allan a better medium of communication with the Canadian Government than Mr. McMullen and his Chicago friends. I acted entirely in the interest of the Canadian people in suggesting to the gentlemen referred to that the parties who had brought the scheme before the Government had not the standing that it was desirable they should have. I was on my way to New Brunswick and Nova Scotia when the conversations in New York took place, and I certainly never gave any address to Sir Hugh Allan. On my return I gave him a list of names, and he remarked that he knew all or most of them by reputation. The next reference to me in Mr. McMullen’s letter is to the meeting of Council on the 5th of October, 1871, when Mr. McMullen says:—‘It was at once apparent that they were not ‘fully in accord among themselves.’ How this was apparent it would be difficult for Mr. McMullen to show, inasmuch as to the best of my recollection no member of the Government said a word except Sir John. Sir John asked Sir Hugh Allan whether he had any proposition to submit, to which Sir Hugh replied by inquiring whether, if he made a proposition, the Government would be prepared to consider it, or enter into negotiations; to which Sir John replied that they were not prepared to do so, and Sir Hugh rejoined that in that case he did not think it advisable to make any suggestion. I have no recollection whatever of holding any private conversation with Mr. McMullen, and I cannot believe it possible that I could have discussed with him the views of Sir George Cartier. It must be borne in mind, that all this time, and for many months afterwards, indeed till after the Session of Parliament of 1872, the objects of the promoters of the Pacific scheme and of the Government were wholly at variance. Mr. McMullen and his followers, both before and after their association with Sir Hugh Allan, were trying in every possible way, and for this they cannot be blamed, to get the Government committed to entrust the building of the railroad to their Company, while the Government were anxious simply to get all possible information so as to enable them to submit a scheme to Parliament that would be acceptable to capitalists, without being too burdensome to the country. It is alleged that after Sir Hugh Allan returned from England, I said something about advertising for tenders, so as to avoid blame. I must, in the first place, declare that I never made any authorized communication to Sir Hugh Allan, nor do I recollect that the subject of advertising for tenders was ever under the consideration of the Government. If Sir Hugh Allan was pressing for immediate action, nothing would be more natural than that I should point out to him that the Government could not enter into a contract without having previously submitted a scheme to Parliament. I may have talked of advertising for tenders as a mode of ascertaining not only the terms of capitalists, but also whether there were any other parties prepared to make offers. I cannot now recollect what passed at these conversations, but I am clear that I merely gave expression to my private opinion, and] that I was pointing out the impossibility of any immediate action being taken. This was not owing, as Mr. McMullen alleges, to the exigencies of the political situation, but simply to the necessity of obtaining the concurrence of Parliament to whatever scheme the Government might finally decide on. The only further reference to me in Mr. McMullen's letter is to certain alleged money transactions. I solemnly declare that I never asked and never obtained, either by loan or gift, any sum of money from Sir Hugh Allan, or from any person on his behalf, or from any person in connection with the Pacific Railway; that I never was sounded by Sir Hugh Allan as to my personal expectations, and never, directly or indirectly, asked or obtained any money in connection with the scheme. Mr. McMullen asserts that I required not only a sum of money for myself, but a situation for my son at a salary of not less than $2,000 per annum. I never made any such demand, but I did, on one occasion, casually say to Sir Hugh Allan, as I had done to other friends, that if he happened to know of any employment for my youngest son I would be glad if he would bear him in mind. I had not the least idea at the time of employment under a Company not likely to be in existence for an indefinite and certainly a long time. Sir Hugh replied, that no doubt when the Pacific Company was formed, he would have no difficulty in finding him employment, and there the matter terminated. This was long before the disputes which arose between the rival Companies, from which time I determined that no one connected with me should have any employment in any such Company, and this determination I communicated to Mr. Abbott. Meantime my son got employment of a different kind, and without any reference to Sir Hugh Allan. I may add, that at the time the conversation took place, my youngest son, who held an appointment in British Guiana, was on leave of absence, and paying a visit to his family. I was anxious that he should resign his appointment, and remain in Canada, and undertook to find him suitable employment. I mentioned him to several friends in Montreal, where I wished him to settle, and I also mentioned him to Sir Hugh Allan. I never imagined that I would incur the risk of being charged with bargaining for my support to the Pacific Railway scheme. I desire to state, in conclusion, that the Canadian Government was never in any way a party to any arrangement between Sir Hugh Allan and his American associates. From the very first there was the strongest opposition to the introduction of the American element on the part of several members of the Cabinet, and for myself, though not unfavourable to Americans being introduced, I always felt that Mr. McMullen was a source of weakness. I further state most positively, that the Government never entered into any agreement to give the Pacific Railway Charter for monetary considerations of any kind. The various conditions and the Charter were discussed on their merits, and Sir Hugh Allan and his immediate friends were repeatedly obliged to yield points which they desired to press. The Government honestly tried to obtain an amalgamation between the two Canadian Companies to the exclusion of Americans, and, failing that, they incorporated a Canadian Company, in which Sir Hugh Allan's influence most certainly does not preponderate.

CANADA. — “Memorandum of the Canada Pacific Railway Company upon the Statement submitted by the Interoceanic Railway Company to the Government of Canada.”

“The undersigned, the Executive Committee of the Canada Pacific Railway Company, have to express their obligations to the Honourable the Privy Council for the courtesy of a communication of the statement of the Interoceanic Railway Company, purporting to set forth the reasons which have induced the latter Company to decline the proposal of amalgamation made by the Canada Pacific Company. And they avail themselves of the opportunity thus afforded them, to make some remarks upon the contents of that statement, though they do not feel that any good result would be attained by answering it fully and in detail.

“They regard with regret the decision of the Interoceanic Company, but as they conceive that it has been brought about chiefly by errors upon matters of fact, they are not without hope that it may be reconsidered.

“In making the proposal of amalgamation, the Canada Company felt that so vast an enterprise required all the strength that could be enlisted in it. They believed that the Government aid, with all the advantages which the Government are empowered to grant, would not be in excess of the requirements of the undertaking, and that there was no room for attempting to diminish such aid or advantages by competition. They consider that the Government had adopted a wise policy in endeavouring to create by consolidation the strongest Company possible, rather than to attempt to effect some insignificant saving by placing the two Companies in competition with each other; and they felt that the only public-spirited and patriotic course was to meet the desire of the Government frankly; and to consent to amalgamation without undue solicitude as to the terms of it. They believed that the gentlemen who represented the Interoceanic Company would be prepared, as they themselves were, to lay aside any feeling of rivalry that may have existed, and to act vigorously in concert with them for the benefit of the undertaking. But at the same time they were, and are, fully prepared to undertake and carry out the enterprise alone; as they have already ascertained, by negotiation with English capitalists, that the plans they have formed for the requisite financial arrangements can, in all probability, be carried out.

“With respect to the propositions which the Interoceanic Company seek to establish by the first portion of their statement, namely, that the organization should be pre-eminently national in its character; and that its means must be drawn first from Canadian, and second and chiefly from British sources; the undersigned have simply to say that any argument for the purpose of sustaining such proposition was quite superfluous, although possibly European capital may require to be sought for outside of Great Britain—no one will dispute the advantages of committing the construction and running of the Pacific Railroad to a Company of Canadian origin and composed of British subjects; nor the disastrous results that might be expected from placing the enterprise under the control of the American Northern Pacific Railway Company. The Canada Company have always entertained the opinions enunciated in their statement on this subject: and as proof of that fact, it will appear, on reference to the draft Charter submitted by that Company to the House of Commons, that they proposed to make their Board of Directors exclusively British; while, on the other hand, the Interoceanic Company proposed by their draft Charter to create a Board which of necessity needed only to be British as to the majority of it. And it was only in consequence of the desire of the Government and Parliament that the two Charters should be identical, and of the objection of the Interoceanic Company to make their Board of necessity exclusively British, that the Canada Company took from the Interoceanic Company's Charter the clause requiring only a majority to be British instead of the whole. And, moreover, the Canada Company have been actively engaged since their incorporation in negotiations with British capitalists, exclusively tending to the acquisition of means for the construction of the railway with every prospect of favourable result, should they be authorized to undertake it.

“In the face of these facts, it would seem that the somewhat elaborate argument of the Interoceanic Company, to prove the expediency of making the Company entirely Canadian and British was not only unnecessary and inapplicable, but possibly might be said to be out of place as coming from that Company.

“The Interoceanic Company having however submitted various arguments in support of these propositions, proceed to apply them to the disadvantage of the Canada Company.

“They assert that it is a matter of notoriety that one of the leading members of the Canada Company, and its Provisional President, has been engaged in negotiation with gentlemen connected with the Northern Pacific Railway, for the organization of a Company for the construction of the road; and they say that the impression still exists everywhere that his original scheme is unchanged, and that his Company, as they term the Canada Company, is intended to co-operate with parties in the United States interested in the Northern Pacific Railway. And they declare that the Interoceanic Company share this belief.

“That, in reality, is the chief ground stated by the Interoceanic Company for declining amalgamation; and as it is easy to show that this ground is entirely unsupported by facts, the Canada Company hope that, this erroneous impression being removed, the course of the Oceanic Company may be materially changed.

“With regard to the assertion that a belief ‘exists everywhere’ that the Canadian Company still intend to carry out the design of combination with American capitalists, it is only necessary to say that the gentlemen who say so no doubt speak truly as to some limited circle with which they are in immediate communication. But the Canada Company emphatically deny that beyond such a limited circle any such belief or even any idea of such a state of things is entertained.

“The Canada Company are aware that a negotiation was commenced during the summer of eighteen hundred and seventy-one, between Sir Hugh Allan and certain American capitalists for the formation of a Company to construct and run the Canada Pacific Railway; but they are informed by Sir Hugh Allan, and have satisfied themselves by a full inquiry into the circumstances and details of that negotiation, that it was not initiated by Sir Hugh, and that it was commenced and supported by influential persons in Canada, as being the only combination that offered itself at that time for the construction and running of the road; but they are satisfied that that negotiation never possessed the character attributed to it by the Interoceanic Company, and they know that Sir Hugh Allan would never have consented to embark with foreign capitalists in a Canadian enterprise in which he takes so great an interest without the most perfect securities and guarantees for its control and conduct in the interest of Canada. But the discussion of the negotiation is entirely foreign to the proposition now being considered. That negotiation terminated when Sir Hugh Allan engaged with others in the formation of the Canada Company, and it has never been renewed.

“The Canada Company never participated in that negotiation, and never considered or entertained any proposition, suggestion, or intention of asking aid from American capitalists, or of combining with them for the prosecution of the railway, or for any other purpose. The only negotiations they have carried on are those already alluded to with British capitalists, and they have never even communicated on the subject of the railway with anyone outside of Canada or Great Britain.

“The Canada Company would further remark on this branch of the subject, that they are unwilling to attempt to gather from the terms of the statement of the Interoceanic Company any meaning which does not plainly appear upon its face. But they cannot omit noticing that the weight of this objection rests upon the suggestion, rather implied than expressed, that the Canada Company is prepared to lend itself to the obstruction of the Canada Pacific Railway, by placing the control of it in the hands of capitalists interested in a rival road. Unless the objection is taken as having this bearing, it would have no weight, and the Canada Company are therefore forced to make a single remark upon this view of it. They desire expressly to state that their Company is composed of gentlemen as fully alive to the interests of Canada, and as deeply interested in its welfare, as the members of the Interoceanic Company, or anyone else can be. And they protest formally and energetically against any imputation, whether expressed or implied, contemplating the possibility of their taking the course which they cannot but interpret as being imputed to them by the statement of the Interoceanic Company. Although probably the Interoceanic Company will accept the positive and unqualified disclaimer which the Canada Company now place on record, it may not be amiss to remark upon the impossibility of any such course being taken as that which is implied in the Interoceanic Company’s objection.

“It will be observed that the aid in money and lands is only to be granted by the Government as the work actually progresses. It is also necessary that the periods for the completion of the various sections of the road should be fixed by the agreement with the Company entrusted with the enterprise. It is also necessary that the Government should fix a period within which the work should be commenced and proceeded with. And it is reasonably to be supposed that there would be a provision in any agreement made with the Government that upon failure in any of these conditions the Company should forfeit its rights to the Government aid. Again, in the proposition of amalgamation which the Canada Company made to the Interoceanic Company it was suggested that the former Company should name a small proportion of the Provisional

CANADA.

Directors, the Interoceanic Company naming a similar number, the intention being that the remainder of the Board, constituting a majority of it, should be agreed upon between the two Companies and the Government.

"Under these circumstances, the undersigned would observe that the carrying out of any such plan as that implied by or imputed to the Canada Company is simply impossible. Supposing, for argument's sake, that they entertained the intention of placing the control of the enterprise in the hands of the Northern Pacific Railway Company, the persons named by them on the Board would constitute but a small minority of it. And without the concurrence of the Interoceanic Company's nominees and those approved of by the Government, it would be utterly impossible not only to alienate the aid given by the Government, but even to obstruct in any material degree the operations of the majority of the Board. And if, which is impossible, the small minority could control the majority so far as either to purport to alienate the aid or obstruct the work, the remedy would be in the hands of the Government, as no portion of the proposed assistance could actually be alienated from the purposes for which it was intended, and the attempt would only result in the forfeiture of the agreement.

"With regard to the assertion of the Interoceanic Company that they 'very generally' and 'equally' represent all the Provinces of the Dominion, and the comparison of importance they draw between the Interoceanic Company's organization and that of the Canada Company, the undersigned would prefer not to discuss it at any length. At the same time, in justice to themselves, they would remark that they have not a word to say against the respectability of the three gentlemen from the Province of Quebec, whose names appear upon the minute of the meeting of the twenty-sixth day of September; but they would ask in what sense or from what point of view can these three gentlemen be said to represent that great and flourishing Province? And as to the other gentlemen from the Province of Quebec, whose names appear in the Bill of the Interoceanic Company, but who did not take part in that meeting, the well-known circumstances of their reception into that Company prevent the expectation that they will exercise any influence in its favour. A list of the Provisional Directors of the Canada Company is submitted herewith to the Government, and the company challenge a comparison of them with the Provisional Directors of the Interoceanic Company. And they do not hesitate to assert that the public of Canada will feel at least as much confidence in the Board constituted of those gentlemen as in the board of the Interoceanic Company. They regret the necessity for saying even so much as this on the subject, as they earnestly deprecate any approach to recrimination or anything that could by any possibility arouse any feeling on the part of the members of the Interoceanic Company; for it is their desire, in answering their statement, rather to endeavour to remove any wrong impression which that Company may have entertained, than to enter into controversy with them, and they have studiously avoided remarking upon many matters contained in the statement of the Interoceanic Company, though they have been in many instances strongly tempted to do so, in order that by avoiding all recrimination and controversial comment upon the line of argument contained in the statement they might manifest their earnest desire to carry out the wish of the Government for amalgamation; not only because such is the desire of the Government, but also because they feel that it is in the interest of the enterprise that all possible strength should be concentrated upon it.

"The undersigned are desirous of making one remark more as to the observations of the Interoceanic Company's statement with regard to politics. The Canada Company have not in any manner or way interfered in politics, and they are at a loss to know to what circumstances the Interoceanic Company can refer in their remark on this subject.

"The Canada Company is composed of persons holding different views in political matters, and those persons have acted in accordance with those views when called upon in any way to act politically since they joined the Company as they did before, and as they probably will continue to do; and the Canada Company have not in any way resorted to sectional or any other pressure to induce the Government to negotiate with them for the construction of the railway. On this point also it will be perceived that the Canada Company confined themselves to vindicating their own position, without assailing or attempting to assail the position or acts of the Interoceanic Company.

"In conclusion, the undersigned respectfully state that the members of the Canada Company claim for themselves in every respect a strong sentiment of patriotism, and as much public spirit as any of their fellow-subjects, and they consider that their names and antecedents are a sufficient guarantee that their claim is well founded. They are as sensible of the disadvantages of any obstruction to the gigantic undertaking in which the Government of Canada is about to embark, as any other person or Company can be. They believe themselves to be as competent as the Interoceanic Company or any other Company or body of men to carry out the undertaking, and they are prepared to assume the responsibility with a complete recognition of the weight of that responsibility, but with assured conviction that they are justified in assuming it. They desire an amalgamation with the Interoceanic Company. They are willing to make it upon terms that may be agreed upon as being perfectly just to both Companies, and satisfactory to the people of Canada. And in the event of such amalgamation, they are prepared to act cordially with the gentlemen who may be associated in the Board of Direction with such members of the Canada Company as may be chosen to form part of it; but if the Interoceanic Company are not prepared to meet them in a similar spirit, they respectfully ask that their proposition to undertake the building and running of the Pacific Railway may meet with the favourable consideration of Government. The whole respectfully submitted.

“Copy of a Report of a Committee of the Honourable the Privy Council, approved by His Excellency the Governor-General in Council on the 16th October, 1872.

“The Committee of the Privy Council have had under their consideration a letter addressed to the Secretary of State by the Honourable D. L. Macpherson, enclosing copy of a Report from the Executive Committee of the Provisional Directors of the contemplated Interoceanic Railway Company, which has been unanimously adopted by the Directors. The Committee of the Privy Council have learned with regret that the suggestion of the Government, that there should be an amalgamation between the two Companies, which obtained during the last Session of Parliament Acts of Incorporation for the construction of a railroad between a terminus on the Pacific Ocean and one on the vicinity of Lake Nipissing with which all the Canadian railroads could connect on equal terms, has not been acted on by the contemplated Interoceanic Company for reasons which are given in the Report of their Executive Committee. The Committee of the Privy Council admit the importance of securing as much unanimity as possible among the Canadian capitalists who are disposed to assume the responsibility of constructing the great work which by the terms of the union of British Columbia with the Dominion became the duty of Parliament to undertake.

“In the opinion of the Committee of the Privy Council there is no ground for rivalry between the Province of Ontario and Quebec, especially as the eastern terminus has been fixed by Parliament at a point convenient for both Provinces.

“The Committee of the Privy Council has not failed to give their attentive consideration to the reasons adduced by the Committee of the Interoceanic Company for opposing the amalgamation with the Pacific Company, while the latter Company, in deference to the wishes of the Government, has expressed its readiness to agree to.

“The Committee of the Privy Council concur in the opinion expressed in the Report, that the success of the Pacific Railway project must mainly depend upon its complete identification with the public sentiment of the country, and that the lands appropriated for the construction of the work should be so dealt with as to enlist the whole energies of the country in their early settlement; and they therefore admit that the organization should be essentially and pre-eminently national in its character, and that success in the British money market is more likely to be attained if the Canadian people themselves become interested in the undertaking.

“It is unnecessary for the Committee of the Privy Council to discuss the question raised in the Report as to the inexpediency of looking to aid from the United States for the construction of the Pacific Railway, as they do not contemplate seeking such aid, but on the contrary, most earnestly desire to accomplish the very object recommended in the Report under their consideration, viz.: the united action of the Canadian people in the work. It is assumed in the Report that the Canadian Pacific Company would be under the control of citizens of the United States connected with the Northern Pacific Company. It is said to be a matter of public notoriety that the original proposal of Sir Hugh Allan, relative to the Canada Pacific Railway, was made in association with the American gentlemen most prominently connected with the Northern Pacific Railway.

“The foregoing statement is the avowed ground of the refusal of the Interoceanic Company to amalgamate with the Canada Pacific Company. The Committee of the Privy Council avail themselves of this opportunity to place on record all that is come to their knowledge regarding the negotiations on the subject of the Pacific Railway; when it became known that the Canadian Government was about to invite the consideration of Parliament to the subject of the admission of British Columbia into the Dominion on conditions, one of which was that Canada would undertake to procure the construction of a Pacific Railway, an enterprising gentleman, an inhabitant of British Columbia, the late Mr. Alfred Waddington, who had already made extensive surveys at his own expense, petitioned Parliament for a Charter to construct that line, intending, it is believed, to obtain aid in England and United States.

“Mr. Waddington had a Bill introduced and printed, but did not proceed with it during the Session of 1871; after the close of the Session Mr. Waddington, in conjunction with one or more gentlemen in Toronto, visited the United States, having, as he always stated, failed in securing any co-operation in Canada, with the view of interesting foreign capitalists in the undertaking. He took with him his own printed Bill, and the Resolutions which had been adopted by Parliament for the admission of British Columbia into the Dominion, on condition that the Pacific Railway should be constructed, and he succeeded in interesting in his project a number of influential capitalists, some connected with the Northern Pacific Railway, others entirely unconnected with it.

"On his return to Canada, Mr. Waddington employed a respectable legal firm in Toronto, as solicitors to the promoters of the railway, and visited Ottawa, armed with a document, signed by a number of gentlemen of known wealth, in which they stated the terms on which they would undertake to construct the railway. The deputation had interviews with some members of the Government, who received them courteously, and listened to their proposals, but informed them that the Government was not then in a position to enter into negotiations. Meantime, the members of the Government, aware of the necessity that existed of proposing a definite scheme during the next Session of Parliament, availed themselves of every opportunity of endeavouring to ascertain the terms on which Canadian capitalists would be willing to undertake the work.

"The scheme, however, was, so far as they could learn, coldly received, and for several months no proposition was received by the Government for the construction of the road, except that already referred to, which was obtained through Mr. Waddington and some friends of his in Toronto. At this stage, a member of the Government, during a casual visit to Montreal, happened to meet Sir Hugh Allan, when he informed him of the proposition which had been made, and mentioned to him the names of the Americans who had made the proposition to the Government. He expressed to Sir Hugh Allan his regret that such a work should be allowed to fall into the hands of foreigners, owing to the apathy of Canadian capitalists. It was after, and in consequence of this conversation, that Sir Hugh Allan put himself in communication with the American gentlemen already referred to, and it is not a little remarkable that the suggestion made to Sir Hugh Allan arose from a desire to carry out the object which the Committee of the Interoceanic Company appear to have in view. That object was to secure the construction of the work under Canadian management, no doubt being entertained that there would be no difficulty in finding safeguards against the dangers anticipated by the Interoceanic Company; such were the circumstances under which Sir Hugh Allan's connection with the American capitalists took place. Sir Hugh Allan was the first Canadian capitalist who made a proposition for the construction of the line, and to him the Government is indebted for the information which enabled them to decide with confidence as to the scheme to be submitted to Parliament. The Committee of the Privy Council think it unadvisable to enter into any discussion of the respective merits or influence of the rival Companies, especially because they remain of opinion that it would be highly inexpedient to select either Company to the exclusion of the other.

"Should they fail in obtaining the concurrence of both Companies to their proposition for an amalgamation on just and equitable principles, they will be compelled, from a sense of duty, to adopt other means to secure their object, which is a cordial co-operation of the Canadian people of all classes and from all sections of the Dominion, in the construction of the Pacific Railroad.

"The Committee of the Privy Council have, in conclusion, to state that they have received the most positive assurances that it is not contemplated by the promoters of the Canada Pacific Company to associate themselves with foreigners, and also that the Company is prepared to accept any proposition made by the Government for the purpose of preventing the enterprise falling into the hands of an alien proprietary. They cannot, under the circumstances, recommend that the individual who was the first Canadian capitalist who entered into negotiations with the Government for the construction of the Pacific Railroad should, with all its associates, be excluded from the management of a work which, as is admitted in the Report under consideration, requires, in order to ensure success, the cordial co-operation of the Canadian people. The Committee of the Privy Council are not without hope that on a reconsideration of the subject, the Interoceanic Company may come to the conclusion that the course which would be most for the advantage of the country that they should follow, would be to act on the suggestion of the Government, and to consent to an amalgamation with the Pacific Company; and they therefore recommend that a copy of this Minute be sent to both Companies, and that they be urged to make an early and earnest attempt to reconcile their differences, and to form an united Company for the construction of the Pacific Railroad.

"His Excellency the Governor-General in Council on the 31st January, 1873.

"The Committee of the Privy Council have had under consideration the correspondence and Reports of Committees of the Provisional Directors of the Canada Interoceanic Railway Company, and of the Canada Pacific Railway Company, and whilst much regretting that these Companies have not been willing to unite and form one Company for the purpose of constructing the Pacific Railway, the Committee of the Privy Council are unable to advise your Excellency to agree with either of the said Companies separately for the construction and working of the whole line of railway described in the Canadian Pacific Railway Act of last Session, 35 Vict., cap. 71; and they are of opinion, and submit it to your Excellency, that it will be more advantageous for the Dominion, and will better ensure the attainment of the purposes of the Act above referred to, that a Company should be incorporated under the powers conferred by the fifteenth section of the above Act, by charter for that purpose.

“And whereas Sir Hugh Allan, of the City of Montreal, Knight; the Honourable Adams George Archibald, of the City of Halifax, C.M.G., a member of the Queen's Privy Council for Canada; the Honourable Joseph Octave Beaubien, of Montmagny, Commissioner of Crown Lands in the Province of Quebec; Jean Baptiste Beaudry, of the City of Montreal, Esq.; Egerton Ryerson Burpee, of the City of St. John, Esq.; Frederick William Cumberland, of the City of Toronto, Esq.; Sandford Fleming, of the City of Ottawa, Esq.; Robert Newton Hall, of the Town of Sherbrooke, Esq.; the Honourable John Sebastian Helmcken, of the City of Victoria; Andrew McDermot, of the Town of Winnipeg, Esq.; Donald McInnes, of the City of Hamilton, Esq.; Walter Shanly, at present of the Town of North Adams, in the United States of America, Esq.; and John Walker, of the City of London, in the Province of Ontario, Esq., have stated their ability and willingness to form such Company, and that they have a subscribed capital of ten million dollars, and that they are ready to enter into an agreement for the construction and working of the said line of railway; the Committee recommend that negotiations be entered into with the said persons for the purpose of settling the terms of an agreement under the Act between the Government and such persons, and that the Minister of Justice be instructed to conduct the same.

Howland, Esq., David Torrance, Esq., John Boyd, Esq., T. Kenny, Esq., Edwin Russell, Esq., J. F. Randolph, Esq., John Starr, Esq., the Hon. D. E. Price ;

“A communication was read from the Government, suggesting that the Interoceanic Railway Company should amalgamate with the Canada Pacific Railway Company. The following Report thereon from the Executive Committee was also read:—

“To the Provisional President, Vice-president, and Directors of the Interoceanic Railway Company :

“Your Executive Committee have had under consideration a communication from the Government, expressing a wish that the Interoceanic Railway Company should amalgamate with the Canada Pacific Railway Company, and they now beg leave to report :

“That they have given their best attention to the proposal, solely with reference to the successful and early completion of the Canadian Pacific Railway.

“The construction and management of an undertaking involving such vast and varied interests must, in their opinion, mainly depend for success upon its complete identification with the public sentiment of the country.

CANADA.

"The subsidy in money, though in itself large, is still insignificant relatively to the enormous outlay that must attend the construction of the work. The Company having to rely upon the disposal of their lands for the greater part of their expenditure, renders it desirable, nay necessary, that the land should be dealt with so as to enlist the whole energies of the country in their early settlement.

"It is therefore of supreme importance that the organization through which the railway is to be built should be essentially and pre-eminently national in its character.

"The sources from whence the Company's means must be drawn are twofold :

1st, Canadian; 2nd (and chiefly) British.

Success in the British money market will, in the opinion of your Committee, depend in a great measure upon the extent to which the Canadian people themselves become interested in the undertaking.

"It is perfectly futile to look to the United States for aid in this work, as it is necessarily a rival to the several existing Pacific Railways. While this remark applies generally to its future as a commercial enterprise, it is in the meantime still more applicable and weighty in reference to the measures required for the early settlement of the vast regions traversed by the rival lines through the United States. The Canadian Pacific Railway Company must compete in Great Britain and Europe generally for the emigration thence, and this can never be done advantageously or successfully in association with any of the American interests concerned in the trans-continental traffic. The suggestion for amalgamation with the Canada Pacific Company, more generally known as that organized by Sir Hugh Allan, forces upon your Committee the consideration of the matters above referred to.

"It is a matter of public notoriety that the original proposal of Sir Hugh Allan, relative to the Canada Pacific Railway, was made in association with the American gentlemen most prominently connected with the Northern Pacific Railway. It is generally believed that the Government are themselves aware of this; and it was mainly owing to the apprehension that the control of a work, upon which the future of the Dominion so much depends, might pass into American hands, that the Interoceanic Company was called into existence.

"The public of Canada instinctively felt that if the parties interested in the Northern Pacific Railway were permitted to control the Canadian line, that such a combination would obstruct the material as well as political alliance with the British possessions on the Pacific Coast, and retard and endanger the successful settlement of the fertile Western Territory of Canada.

"From one end of the Dominion to the other, but more especially in the great Province of Ontario (upon whose people the greater part of the burden of the cost of the railway must fall), there have come unmistakable indications of public opinion on the subject, and the names connected with the Interoceanic Company conclusively show the general determination to make the work distinctively national and Canadian. It may appear invidious to institute comparisons between the relative importance of the Interoceanic Company's organization and that of Sir Hugh Allan's Company, but this cannot be avoided when the proposal is one for amalgamation.

"Your Committee must therefore remark that the Interoceanic Company is probably the largest and most influential combination of men of capital and position which could be found in the Dominion, not confined to one Province, but very generally and equally representing all.

"With respect to the other Company, your Committee submit that it is not in any broad or national sense representative of the Dominion.

"Its active influence is almost exclusively confined to the Province of Quebec, and in that Province to the city of Montreal; but excepting Sir Hugh Allan himself, and two or three other gentlemen, it cannot with fairness be designated as representing the capital and enterprise of even that community.

"It is no injustice to say that the claims of Sir Hugh Allan's Company rest, not upon general public support, but mainly upon the position of Sir Hugh Allan himself. Early though it be in the history of the Canadian Pacific Railway, the dangerous character of such an organization as the Company you are invited to amalgamate with has already been made apparent by its promoters resorting to the arena of politics for that strength and support not due to its intrinsic merits.

"The Interoceanic Company, on the other hand, has relied solely upon general public support, and has in no instance appeared as desirous of unduly influencing the Government.

"If the Canadian Pacific Railway is to be made the subject of undue and improper pressure by one section of the Dominion to the prejudice of others, it will soon acquire a reputation which will destroy public confidence in the enterprise, and occasion either its abandonment or completion at sacrifices far beyond any that the country now contemplates.

“Your Committee readily admit that it would be desirable to secure the united strength of the Dominion in support of this work, and if the Company organized by Sir Hugh Allan really represented Canadian interests, though local, it would be well to have their co-operation.

“But, unfortunately, the impression still exists everywhere, that Sir Hugh Allan's original scheme is unchanged, and that his Company is intended to co-operate with the parties in the United States interested in the Northern Pacific Railway, and your Committee sharing this belief, cannot regard the proposal of amalgamation as otherwise than ill-advised and dangerous to the public interests.

“Your Committee are convinced that such an amalgamation would at once destroy public faith in the Company as a Canadian undertaking.

“They believe that if amalgamation were accomplished, the best friends of the enterprise in Canada would refuse their aid, and that in consequence an excuse would be found for placing it under the control of the rival American Company, or of its chief promoters, in the illusory hope that they would carry it through to completion.

“Your Committee fail to find an adequate reason for asking the Interoceanic Company to part with its individuality.

“The public everywhere evince confidence in it as it is.

“Assurances have been received from every Province in the Dominion (except Manitoba), that the quota of stock allotted to each by the Act of Incorporation would be subscribed, and in some of the Provinces much more than such allotted quota would be taken.

“In this way all classes of the community would be closely identified with the great national work, and the fulfilment of such assurances would vastly strengthen the Company in its negotiations in England and on the continent of Europe.

“By entrusting the execution of the Pacific Railway to the Interoceanic Company, the Government will, in effect, be dealing with the representatives of their own people.

“They will be assured of the application of every dollar and every acre to the sole object which Parliament contemplated in granting the subsidies, and that the lands will not be permitted to pass under foreign control, or be held back from settlement for years, or until those of the Northern Pacific Railway Company are occupied. Your Committee cannot avoid drawing attention to the fact, that the promoters of the line which is our nearest rival route—the gentlemen with whom Sir Hugh Allan has been acting—depend wholly upon the sale of their lands for means to construct that railway. It is, therefore, of extreme importance to the promoters of that line, the Northern Pacific, to get control of the Canadian lands (which almost equal in area England and Scotland), and to retard their settlement until their own are disposed of.

“No more suicidal policy could be pursued by the people of Canada than to allow their rivals to have such an interest in this national undertaking as would virtually transfer to them the ownership and control of 50,000,000 acres of Canadian territory; would invest them with the direction of the immigration policy, which must be inaugurated for the settlement of those lands; confer upon them the power to influence the construction and progress of the railway, and grant to them, in perpetuity, a monopoly of the traffic over the Canadian, which is the shortest and best trans-continental route.

“Your Committee firmly believe that amalgamation means the admission of this rival United States interest into the organization of the Canadian enterprise, and that once admitted and wielded for one object, it would speedily master the divided and weakened Canadian representation. They consider that this danger far outweighs any possible advantage that could result from union with Sir Hugh Allan and his associates. They are convinced that the public would shrink from committing themselves and their means to the undertaking, and they therefore respectfully recommend that the Board of Directors of this Company inform the Government that they cannot be parties to any amalgamation with the Canada Pacific Company, but are prepared forthwith to enter into arrangements on behalf of the Interoceanic Company for the construction and working of the Canadian Pacific Railway.

“Hon. D. L. Macpherson,

“Memorandum of the executive Committee of the Interoceanic Railway Company of Canada, upon the Memorandum submitted to the Government by the Executive Committee of the Canada Pacific Railway Company, dated 12th October, 1872.

“The undersigned, the Executive Committee of the Interoceanic Railway Company, offer their acknowledgments to the Honourable the Privy Council, for communicating to them the Memorandum of the Canada Pacific Company upon the communication addressed to the Government by the Interoceanic Company, on the 30th September last; setting forth their reasons for declining amalgamation with the Canada Pacific Company.

“The undersigned beg to say that when transmitting that statement to the Government, the Interoceanic Company had no intention of entering upon a controversy with the Canada Pacific Company through the medium of the Government. But they do not regret that the Government saw fit to communicate it to the Canada Pacific Company. The object of the Interoceanic Company was merely to communicate, frankly, to the Government the reasons which prevented their complying with the request of the Government to amalgamate with that Company.

“The Interoceanic Company decided against amalgamation after mature deliberation, and under the firm persuasion that they were acting in the true interests of the country. The undersigned will now proceed to comment briefly upon the Memorandum of the Executive Committee of the Canada Pacific Company.

“The undersigned observe that the Committee of the Canada Pacific Company profess to concur fully in the opinion which the Interoceanic Company holds, namely, that the importance to Canada of the Canadian Pacific Railway being owned and worked pre-eminently as a Canadian enterprise, cannot be exaggerated. It is matter for regret that the Canada Pacific Company, or its chief promoter, did not always entertain this opinion; had they or he done so, it is probable the Interoceanic Company would never have sought incorporation.

"The Committee of the Canada Pacific Company seem anxious to establish that the promoters of that Company are more Canadian than the promoters of the Interoceanic Company, because the draft Charter, as originally submitted to Parliament by the former Company, provided that all the Directors should be British subjects, while that of the Interoceanic Company only required that a majority should be so. The undersigned must express surprise that any importance should seem to be attached to what is manifestly unimportant, if not positively trivial. To make the Company really Canadian, it is necessary that the greater part of the stock should be bonâ fide held by Canadians and British subjects.

"It was the purpose of the Interoceanic Company to secure that object, and, it once secured, they saw no reason for excluding any class of their fellow-citizens, whether native born or alien, from participating in the management of the Company.

"Shareholders have the power to control the policy of Companies; Directors are merely their agents or deputies to carry it out. If Canadians hold bonâ fide a controlling amount of the stock of the Canadian Pacific Railway, they will see that the Directors, whatever their nationality, manage the undertaking for the advantage of the shareholders and of Canada; but if a controlling portion of the stock is held by citizens and residents of the United States interested in a rival railway, they will see that their Directors carry out their policy regardless of Canadian interests, even if the law required every member of the Board to be a British subject and a resident of Canada; under such circumstances if any of the Directors prove too patriotic to give effect to the designs of the foreign shareholders, they will be removed and more subservient men elected in their stead.

"The Committee of the Canada Pacific Company argue at great length, that under their proposal for amalgamation it would be impossible to alienate any portion of the public subsidies from the purposes for which they were intended, and that an attempt to alienate them, if made, would result in a forfeiture of the agreement.

"The undersigned see no force or weight in this argument. But even if it has some force, as far as it applies, it would be of little moment; for desirable though it be that the advantages resulting from the construction of the railway should be insured to Canadians, yet these advantages are insignificant when compared with those that would follow the ownership of the road after completion, viz. the possession of a vast territory in the heart of the Dominion, and the control of a large trans-continental traffic.

"The undersigned regret that the Committee of the Canada Pacific Company, while admitting the respectability of the Directors of the Interoceanic Company from the Province of Quebec, should have made three of those gentlemen the subject of invidious attack. The gentlemen referred to are too well known, at home and abroad, as successful merchants of high character and wide influence, to require any vindication from this covert and unwarranted attack. They compare favourably with any gentleman upon the Provisional Board of the Canada Pacific Company, or any other Board of Directors in the Dominion.

"The undersigned do not know what is referred to in the following extract from the Memorandum of the Committee of the Canada Pacific Company:—'And as to the other gentlemen whose names appear in the Bill of the Interoceanic Company, but who did not take part in that meeting, the well-known circumstances of their reception into that Company prevent the expectation that they will exercise any influence in its favour.'

"If the insinuation is intended to charge that the names of any gentlemen were introduced into the Charter of the Interoceanic Company, either as Provisional Directors or Corporators, without their knowledge and consent, the undersigned meet that charge by the most unqualified denial. Of the one hundred and seven names which appear in the Charter of this Company, no name was placed there except at the solicitation or with the permission of the gentleman named; but the undersigned have been given to understand that of the eighteen names which appear in the Charter of the Canada Pacific Company, more than one, and that too of the more influential among them, were used without permission.

"The Committee of the Canada Pacific Company deny, in most distinct terms, that that Company have in any way interfered in politics.

"The undersigned can only assume that the Committee desires to state that no interference in politics took place under authority of a formal resolution of the Provisional Directors of that Company.

"The public press has made the whole country aware of pressure having been brought to bear upon the Government by Sir Hugh Allan during the Montreal election.

CANADA.

"On the eighth day of August last, Sir Hugh Allan delivered a public speech, of which a report appeared in the newspapers published on the following morning. Sir Hugh, then as now, President of the Canada Pacific Company, in that speech, referring to the contract for that enterprise, declared that he had received pledges from Sir George Cartier which were entirely satisfactory to him. His own words were:—'I have every reason to be satisfied with what Sir George has done.' Unless it can be shown that the Provisional Directors of the Canada Pacific Company disapproved of and annulled the agreement or arrangement which Sir Hugh Allan, their President, declared he had concluded to his own entire satisfaction, the undersigned submit that the Canada Pacific Company must be held to be parties to that agreement.

"The undersigned consider that it would have been proper in the Canada Pacific Company to have communicated that agreement to the Interoceanic Company when proposing amalgamation.

"The Interoceanic Company have at all times studiously avoided everything calculated to arouse sectional feeling, and have always held that all traffic intended for the Maritime Provinces and for shipment to Europe via the St. Lawrence, should go by Montreal; but they have likewise held that the interests of the Railway Company and of the Dominion require that the location of the Pacific Railway shall be as near the settled and tax-paying districts of Ontario as the reasonable directness of the line to tide-water may permit. While the Interoceanic Company have avoided all sectionalism, it will be noticed by those who may read Sir Hugh Allan's speech, already referred to, that he unfortunately excites it, and to justify his doing so, advances the extraordinary doctrine, that those for the transport of whose products and merchandise railways are constructed 'have a less direct interest' in their location and economical construction and running than those who have merely the handling of the property at a port of transshipment.

"The Committee of the Canada Pacific Company admit that negotiations were carried on between Sir Hugh Allan and certain American capitalists for the formation of a Company to construct and run the Canadian Pacific Railway, but they say 'that this negotiation was not initiated by Sir Hugh, but was commenced and supported by influential persons in Canada, as being the only combination that offered itself at the time for the construction and running of the road, and they are satisfied that that negotiation never possessed the character attributed to it by the Interoceanic Company, and that they know Sir Hugh Allan would never have consented to embark with foreign capitalists in a Canadian enterprise in which he takes so great an interest without the most perfect securities and guarantees for its control and conduct in the interest of Canada.'

"If, as may be implied from the above, Sir Hugh Allan provided 'securities and guarantees' for the control of the railway by Canadians, the undersigned submit that the production of the agreement would be the satisfactory mode of enabling the Government and country to judge of their sufficiency.

"They must add, however, that in the opinion of the Interoceanic Company, nothing short of the ownership of the undertaking by Canadians would afford real security or guarantee for its control and conduct in the interests of Canada.

"The undersigned are not aware who the influential gentlemen are to whom the Committee refer. They never heard any influential gentleman named as having negotiated with American capitalists except Sir Hugh Allan himself. The Committee of the Canada Pacific Company declare that their Company 'never participated in the negotiations referred to, and never considered or entertained any proposition, suggestion, or intention of asking aid from American capitalists, or of combining with them for the prosecution of the railway or for any other purpose. The only negotiations they have carried on are those already alluded to with British capitalists, and they have never even communicated on the subject of the railway with any outside Canada or Great Britain.'

"The undersigned confess that this statement surprises them, and they have reason to believe the American capitalists with whom Sir Hugh Allan has been negotiating would be equally surprised if they had communication of it, but the undersigned assume that the Executive Committee only mean it to be understood that the Canadian Pacific Company did not authorize, by formal resolution of the Directors, any negotiations with capitalists in the United States. While accepting the denial made on behalf of the Canada Pacific Company, the undersigned assume, as they have already stated, that it is not intended to apply to the acts of their President, for the undersigned learn from one of the promoters of the Interoceanic Company, who has had the opportunity of communicating with gentlemen in the United States who were parties to and interested in the arrangement made with Sir Hugh Allan, that they consider the same to be still in force, but that owing to the feeling existing in Canada against the Canadian Pacific Railway being owned by Americans, they, the Americans, would not in future be known in the project.

“The American capitalists had been led to expect that the amalgamation of the two Canadian Companies would have been effected in September last.

“The undersigned are given to understand, through the same source, that the scheme of the ‘American’ or ‘Allan’ combination for constructing and running the railway, is to connect at Sault St. Marie and at Pembina with the Northern Pacific Railway, and use that line when built between the two points named; that it is intended to send all the traffic between the West, including British Columbia and the Atlantic cities, by the American lines of railway, viâ St. Paul, and sending through Canada only the traffic destined for Europe and the Maritime Provinces.

“This information was obtained by the undersigned about the time the Memorandum of the Committee of the Canada Pacific Company, under consideration, was written. The undersigned feel bound to communicate it to the Government. It confirms in a remarkable manner the opinion expressed to the Government by the InterOceanic Company, and justifies the decision of that Company against amalgamation.

“The correspondent to whom the undersigned are indebted for this information uses the following language in commenting upon it, in which the undersigned fully concur: ‘If this (scheme) is carried out, our great national enterprise, instead of being the successful rival of the American Company, competing for the Asiatic trade, which is now in its infancy, and building up the Dominion as no other undertaking can do, will simply be the Canadian branch of the Northern Pacific Railroad, entirely under its control and dictated to by it relentlessly.’

“The undersigned beg to say that they do not yield to any Company or individual in the earnest desire to promote the earliest possible construction of the Canadian Pacific Railway, compatible with its being a strictly Canadian and British enterprise, and the Canadian Pacific Company cannot more sincerely than the undersigned desire to aid the Government in carrying out this great national undertaking. It would, however, be doing the Government poor service to agree to amalgamation unless the InterOceanic Company believe that the Amalgamated Company would constitute a distinctively Canadian Company of sufficient strength to carry the undertaking to a successful issue. The undersigned are of opinion that amalgamation with the Canada Pacific Company would not lead to this result. They deem it their duty to state to the Government that in their opinion the admitted negotiations of Sir Hugh Allan with gentlemen in the United States, resulting in an arrangement or understanding which is considered opposed to Canadian interests, and which the undersigned, from information in their possession and referred to above, have reason to believe is still substantially existing, will continue to cause the Canadian people to view with suspicion, and prevent their subscribing stock in any Company in which Sir Hugh Allan and his associates appear controlling parties. The undersigned are of opinion that this feeling, instead of being confined to a limited circle, as the Committee of the Canada Pacific Company allege, will be found to influence the people of the whole Dominion.

“The undersigned venture to remind the Government that books for applications for stock in the Canada Pacific Company have been open for months at the capitals of, and large towns in, all the Provinces of the Dominion.

“The Pacific Company have thus had the best means of ascertaining the favour with which they are regarded by the capitalists and people of Canada.

“It is somewhat surprising that their Committee do not, in their Memorandum, inform the Government what amount of stock has been applied for and subscribed up to a given day, say to the first day of October last. Instead of doing so, the Committee’s Memorandum is conspicuously silent in respect to the countenance and aid their Company expect from Canadian sources.

“From this silence, were it not for their repeated protestations that their Company would be pre-eminently Canadian and British, it might fairly be assumed that the Directors had little or no expectation of making it so. For the reasons given above, and those stated in their communication of the 30th September last, the undersigned, on behalf of the InterOceanic Company, feel themselves under the necessity of again declining amalgamation with the Canada Pacific Company; but they beg to reiterate, that from the assurances they have received from capitalists in this and the other Provinces and in England, the InterOceanic Company, as an independent organization, can undertake to construct and run the Pacific Railway in the full confidence of carrying the work successfully to completion, through the instrumentality of a Canadian any British proprietary.

CANADA.

"All of which is respectfully submitted.

“ MEMORANDUM.

“ Office of the Interoceanic Railway Company of Canada, “ Toronto, November 28, 1872.

“ The undersigned Executive Committee of the Interoceanic Railway Company of Canada have the honour to state, that they have had under consideration the Report of the Committee of the Honourable the Privy Council upon the subject of amalgamation of the Interoceanic Company and the Canada Pacific Railway Company, approved by his Excellency the Governor-General in Council on the 16th day of October last, and transmitted to the Provisional President of this Company. In reply, the undersigned beg respectfully to state, for the information of his Excellency the Governor-General, that the communications addressed to the Government by this Company, on the 30th day of September last and on the 25th day of November inst., fully set forth the reasons which induced this Company to decline amalgamation with the Canada Pacific Railway Company.

“ The undersigned deem it unnecessary to re-state those grounds. They will merely add that the promoters of the Interoceanic Company are satisfied that the amalgamation of that Company with the Canada Pacific Company would not fulfil the anticipations of the Government, because, in their opinion, it would not secure the confidence of the people of the Dominion for the amalgamated Company, and that consequently amalgamation, under such circumstances, would be followed by certain failure when the time arrived for organizing the Company upon a Canadian proprietary basis.

“ The principal matters referred to in the Report of the Committee of the Honourable the Privy Council having been, as already stated, discussed at length in the two communications above referred to, the undersigned only consider it necessary to remark upon one other point, now, for the first time, brought under the notice of the Interoceanic Company.

“ The undersigned, with the utmost respect, beg to state they gather from the Report of the Honourable the Privy Council, that the Government impliedly charges the promoters of the Interoceanic Company with remissness in not communicating with the Government during the summer of 1871, and making a proposition for constructing and running the Canadian Pacific Railway.

“ The undersigned submit that they do not see how they could have done so before the Government had announced its readiness to receive propositions.

“ The Committee of the Honourable the Privy Council furnishes, in the opinion of the undersigned, an answer to this charge, as it appears by the Report that when Mr. Waddington and his associates approached the Government to tender for the construction and running of the railway, they were informed that the Government was not in a position to enter into negotiations.

CANADA.

"Should the refusal of the Interoceanic Company to amalgamate result in excluding it from all connection with the Canadian Pacific Railway, the undersigned and their associates will nevertheless have the satisfaction of knowing that if that great national undertaking remains in Canadian and British hands it will be due, in no small measure, to their efforts, and that if it should unfortunately fall into foreign and rival hands, it will be through no fault of theirs, but in the face of their most strenuous exertions to avert so great a calamity.

"DEAR SIR,

"Montreal, Dec. 8, 1871.

"Sir Francis Hincks called at my office this day, and said that, while he was as anxious as ever to arrange with us about the railroad, the feeling of the Government is that if they closed an agreement with us without advertising for tenders, they would be attacked about it in the House. I think this may be true, and in view of it I see no use in our going to Ottawa at present; but I think we should meet and arrange preliminaries ourselves and decide on a course of action. If, therefore, you could come here about the 15th instant, I would go on to New York with you on the 18th, and we could then put the affair in shape. Please advise me if this suits you.

"DEAR SIR,

"Montreal, Dec. 29, 1871.

"I have your note from Pictou, but I have not heard from New York since I left there. A good many rumours are afloat regarding railroad matters, and I have good reason to believe that Mr. Brydges is using all the influence he can with Cartier to thwart our views, not that he has any proposal to make, but he wants to stop the Pacific Railway altogether. A party in the interest of the Hudson's Bay Company, consisting of Donald A. Smith, D. McInnes, G. Laidlow, G. Stephen, Daniel Torrance (of New York), and one or two others, have given notice in the 'Official Gazette' that they will apply for a Charter to make a railroad from Pembina to Fort Garry. That is the only one that affects us. I go to Ottawa on Wednesday, and will return here on Saturday. I will find out there what is going on, but I think we are sure of Cartier's opposition.

"Yours truly,

"DEAR MR. McMULLEN,

"Montreal, January 1, 1872.

"I saw Mr. Brydges yesterday, and found out pretty nearly what he will require to join our railway project. His terms are very high; but as they possibly include more than himself, we may have to concede them. He thinks, however, that the Government will not have the courage to go into the scheme at all, and will shirk it till after the elections. I go to Ottawa on Wednesday, and will see what they propose to do. I will write you as soon as I find out. I intend to return back to here on Saturday night. Wishing you the compliments of the season,

"I am, yours truly,

(Signed) "HUGH ALLAN.

"P.S.—I have a telegram from you this moment, advising me that you are going to New York; I therefore send this letter to the St. Nicholas Hotel there."

"GENTLEMEN,

"Montreal, January 24, 1872.

"My subscription of $1,450,000 to the stock of the proposed Canada Pacific Railway Company includes the sum of $200,000, furnished jointly by you and myself, to be transferred, in whole or in part, to Mr. C. J. Brydges, on condition of his joining the organization, and giving it the benefit of his assistance and influence. In case he refuses or neglects to join before the 15th day of April next, I will transfer at once thereafter to you jointly $100,000 of the before-named subscription, and in case Mr. B.'s influence and co-operation can be secured for a less interest in the Railway Company than the before-mentioned amount, then I will transfer to you one-half of any residue that remains of the said $200,000 after Mr. Brydges' accession to the Company has been secured. It is, however, understood that any residue, or portion of the $200,000 named, may be used to secure any other influence deemed by myself and you desirable or important, on the same terms as is proposed in regard to Mr. Brydges, and may apply to others in addition to him.

"Yours truly,

(Signed) "HUGH ALLAN.

"To Charles M. Smith and George W. McMullen."

CANADA.

“ ‘ DEAR MR. McMULLEN,

“ ‘ Montreal, Feb. 5, 1873.

“ ‘ I returned yesterday from Ottawa. Everything looks well up till the present time; but I may tell you in strict confidence that there are symptoms of coolness between Sir John A. and Cartier, arising from the coquetting of the latter with Blake and Mackenzie to form an alliance and carry the elections next summer, with a view to leave Sir John A. out in the cold. This would not be quite so well for us; but I am going to Toronto on the 7th instant to look after our interest. We are all right with the ‘Globe.’ You have not yet sent me the articles of agreement signed by the parties. Send it immediately, as I need it in my negotiations. I will require you to come down here, by and by, to arrange the construction of the Company, and consult about other matters. In the printed Bill is there not a mistake about the land and taxation? Look at it.

“ ‘ Yours truly,

“ ‘ To G. W. McMullen, Chicago.

(Signed) “ ‘ HUGH ALLAN.

“ ‘ P.S.—I wrote you, but have not received any answer.’ ”

“ ‘ DEAR SIR,

“ ‘ Toronto, Feb. 23, 1872.

“ ‘ I find that Mr. Brydges is making a strong attempt by exciting national feeling to get up an opposition to us in our Pacific schemes. He is endeavouring to get up what he calls a purely Canadian Company, on the representation that we are going to make enormous profits out of it, the most of which will go to parties in the United States. He has written to influential men here, and in other parts of the country, urging them to subscribe stock merely as security, for they never will be called on to pay anything, and he says the Government must give a preference to a Canadian Company. I do not know to what extent he has been successful.

“ ‘ Yours truly,

“ ‘ To C. M. Smith, Chicago.’ ”

(Signed) “ ‘ HUGH ALLAN.

“ ‘ DEAR SIR,

“ ‘ Toronto, February 24, 1872.

“ ‘ Since writing to you yesterday, I have seen Mr. D. L. Macpherson, of Toronto, who is a member of the Dominion Senate, and rather an important person to gain over to our side. He has been applied to by our opponents, and uses that as a lever by which to obtain better terms from us. He insists on getting $250,000 of stock, and threatens opposition if he does not get it. You will remember, he is one of those I proposed as Directors. I will do the best I can, but I think that McMullen, you, and myself will have to give up some of our stock to conciliate these parties.

“ ‘ Yours truly,

“ ‘ C. M. Smith, Esq., Chicago.’ ”

(Signed) “ ‘ HUGH ALLAN.

“ ‘ DEAR SIR,

“ ‘ Montreal, February 28, 1872.

“ ‘ It seems pretty certain that, in addition to money payments, the following stock will have to be distributed:—D. L. Macpherson, $100,000; A. B. Foster, $100,000; Donald A. Smith, $100,000; C. J. Brydges, $100,000; J. J. C. Abbott, $50,000; D. McInnes, $50,000; John Shedden, $50,000; A. Allan, $50,000; C. S. Gzowski, $50,000; George Brown, $50,000; A. S. Hincks, $50,000; H. Nathan, $50,000; T. McGreevy, $50,000—total, $850,000. To meet this I propose that we give up of our stock as follows:—C. M. Smith, $250,000; G. W. McMullen, $250,000; Hugh Allan, $350,000—total, $850,000. Please say if this is agreeable to you. I do not think we can do with less, and may have to give more. I do not think we will require more than $100,000 in cash, but I am not sure as yet. Who am I to draw on for money when it is wanted, and what proof of payment will be required? You are aware I cannot get receipts. Our Legislature meets on the 11th of April, and I am already deep in preparation for the game. Every day brings up some new difficulty to be encountered, but I hope to meet them all successfully. Write to me immediately.

“ ‘ Yours truly,

(Signed) “ ‘ HUGH ALLAN.

“ ‘ C. M. Smith, Esq., Chicago.

“ ‘ P.S.—I think you will have to go it blind in the matter of money—cash payments. I have already paid $8,500, and have not a voucher, and cannot get one.’ ”

“ ‘ MY DEAR MR. McMULLEN,

“ ‘ Montreal, March 4, 1872.

“ ‘ Mr. Macpherson, of Toronto, and Mr. Brydges here, have both notified me to-day that they decline to join us in the Canadian Railway scheme. Their reasons are that the Company is too largely American, and that they want to see it in the hands of Canadians. They tried to detach me from the Company we have formed and get me to join theirs, which of course I declined. I don't know what they can do against us, but I intend going to Ottawa on Monday, the 11th inst., and will try and find out something about it. I will be in Ottawa most of the week.

CANADA.

“ ‘Yours truly,
(Signed) “ ‘HUGH ALLAN.’ ”

“ ‘DEAR MR. McMULLEN,

“ ‘Montreal, April 16, 1872.

“ ‘I must remain here to-night to write my letters for the English mail, which I have been rather neglecting of late. You might make use of your time in seeing such of the Ministers as you can reach, but I wish especially that you would arrange that you and I together should see Sir John A. at 11 o'clock on Thursday. Telegraph me to Prescott Junction to-morrow if you can do this. I enclose a letter which came enclosed to me from New York this day. What can be the matter there? I ought to arrive at Ottawa at 4.30 to-morrow P.M. (Wednesday).

“ ‘Yours truly,
(Signed) “ ‘HUGH ALLAN.’ ”

“ ‘DEAR SIR,

“ ‘Montreal, June 12, 1872.

“ ‘I have this day received a telegram from you, dated New York, asking me to meet you in Ottawa to-morrow on important business. I am unable to go, and if the important business refers to the Pacific Railway scheme, I do not think it necessary I should go. I believe I have got the whole arranged through my French friends, by means you are aware of, and we have now a pledge of Sir G. that we will have a majority, and other things satisfactory. I have told you all along that this was the true basis of operations, and anything else was powder and shot thrown away, and I think so still. You should come here and see me before you carry out any important transaction or pay any money. I want you to get a correct copy of the Government Bill and our own Bill, because we have first to consider how far they will suit our friends, and we may have to go to New York to consult them. I will be in town to-morrow and Friday. I will be absent on Saturday, but will return here on Monday and be here till Friday.

“ ‘G. W. McMullen, Esq.,
“ ‘Russell Hotel, Ottawa.’ ”

“ ‘Yours truly,
(Signed) “ ‘HUGH ALLAN.’ ”

“ ‘MY DEAR MR. McMULLEN,

“ ‘Montreal, July 16, 1872.

“ ‘I feared you had got entirely lost in the depths of matrimony, but I am glad to notice by your letter dated 11th instant that you have got safely back. Since I saw you the Pacific Railway “Canada” scheme had gone through many phases, and its present position is difficult to be described. Sir Geo. Cartier has been in town for some days, and I have had several interviews with him. He now tells me that he does not now, and never did, intend to deal with either Macpherson's Company or ours, and that he only allowed them to get incorporated as a matter of amusement, but he says he always intended that the Government would form its own Company, would carry on the work under the orders of the Government, according to the views of the Government engineers, and with money furnished by the Government. He says that he and Sir John A. made up their minds to this long ago, but did not tell any of their colleagues. A kind of negotiation is going on with Macpherson and myself, relative to the composition of this Government Company, but it has not come to anything as yet; meantime, the period of the elections is drawing near, and unless the matter is arranged satisfactorily to Lower Canada, Sir George Cartier's prospect of being returned is very slim indeed. I cannot foresee with any certainty the ultimate result, but the decision cannot be long put off. I will advise you as soon as anything is positively known.

“ ‘Yours truly,
(Signed) “ ‘HUGH ALLAN.’ ”

“ ‘The following is addressed to an American gentleman in a very high position in New York, whose name has been given to us, but which is for the present withheld :—

“ ‘MY DEAR SIR,

“ ‘Montreal, July 1, 1872.

“ ‘The negotiations regarding the Canadian Pacific Railway are now approaching a termination, and I have no reason to doubt they will be favourable to us. I have been given to understand by Mr. McMullen that he has regularly kept you informed of the progress and position of affairs, hence I have not communicated with you as often as I otherwise would have done. No doubt he has informed you that, thinking as I had taken up the project there must be something very good in it, a very formidable opposition was organized in Toronto, which, for want of a better, took as their cry; 'No foreign influence; no Yankee dictation; no Northern Pacific to choke off our Canadian Pacific,' and others equally sensible. So much effect, however, was produced both in and out of Parliament by these cries, that, after consultation with Mr. McMullen, I was forced unwillingly to drop ostensibly from our organization every American name, and to put in reliable people on this side in place of them. It will have been apparent to you that at this point Mr. McMullen and I differed a little as to the means to be adopted to influence the Government itself. Two opposing Companies, desiring to build the railroad, were formed, the one from Ontario having the greatest number of names, while that from Quebec had the greatest political power. Mr. McMullen was desirous of securing the inferior members of the Government, and entered into engagements of which I did not approve, as I thought it was only a waste of powder and shot. On a calm view of the situation, I satisfied myself that the decision of the question must ultimately be in the hands of one man, and that man was Sir George E. Cartier, the leader and chief of the French party. This party has held the balance of power between the other factions; it has sustained and kept in office and existence the entire Government for the last five years; it consists of forty-five men, who have followed Cartier and voted in a solid phalanx for all his measures. The Government majority in Parliament being generally less than forty-five, it follows that the defection of one-half or two-thirds would at any time put the Government out of office. It was therefore evident that some means must be adopted to bring the influence of this compact body of members to bear in our favour, and as soon as I made up my mind what was the best course to pursue, I did not lose a moment in following it up. A railroad from Montreal to Ottawa, through the French country, north of the Ottawa river, has long been desired by the French inhabitants; but Cartier, who is the salaried solicitor of the Grand Trunk road, to which this would be an opposition, has interposed difficulties, and by his influence prevented its being built. The same reason made him desirous of giving the contract for the Canada Pacific into the hands of parties connected with the Grand Trunk Railway, and to this end he fanned the flame of opposition to us; but I saw in this French railroad scheme and in the near approach of the general elections, when Cartier as well as others had to go to their constituents for re-election, a sure means of attaining my object, especially as I propose to carry it through to the terminus of the Pacific. The plans I propose are in themselves the best for the interests of the Dominion, and in urging them on the public I am really doing a most patriotic action. But even in that view, means must be used to influence the public, and I employed several young French lawyers to write it up in their own newspapers. I subscribed a controlling influence in the stock, and proceeded to subsidize the newspapers themselves, both editors and proprietors. I went to the country through which the road would pass, and called on many of the inhabitants. I visited the priests and made friends of them, and I employed agents to go among the principal people and talk it up. I then began to hold public meetings, and attended to them myself, making frequent speeches in French to them, showing them where their true interest lay. The scheme at once became popular, and I formed a Committee to influence the members of the Legislature. This succeeded so well that, in a short time, it had twenty-seven out of forty-five on whom I could rely, and the electors of the ward in this city, which Cartier himself represents, notified him that unless the contract for the Pacific Railway was given in the interests of Lower Canada, he need not present himself for re-election. He did not believe this, but when he came here and met his constituents, he found, to his surprise, that their determination was unchanged. He then agreed to give the contract, as required, in a way that there would be seventeen Provisional Directors, of which Ontario would have eight and we nine, thereby giving us the control. We at once proceeded to organize the Company, and they named me President, D. McInnes, of Hamilton, Vice-president, E. L. De Bellefeuille, Secretary, and Hon. J. J. C. Abbott, Legal Adviser. We have advertised that the books for subscription of stock will be opened on the 15th July, at the different places named in the Act, and we have notified the Government we are willing to take the contract for building the Canada Pacific Railway on the terms and conditions prescribed in the Act. The next thing to be done is to subscribe stock, which must be done by British subjects only, and ten per cent. of the subscription must be paid in cash at the time of subscribing. We have the right of subscribing nine-seventeenths at present, and of taking up whatever the other party may not subscribe at the end of the month.

I have arranged in the meantime that if you will send a certificate of the equivalent of $1,000,000 gold, having been placed by Jay Cooke & Co. to the credit of the Merchants' Bank of Canada, Montreal, in their own bank, in New York, it will accept the cheeks for the subscription, but no money will pass till the contract is entered into, and then ten per cent. on the whole amount of stock awarded us will have to be paid into the Receiver-General. Be pleased, therefore, to send me as early as possible powers of attorney to subscribe stock, and Jay Cooke & Co.'s certificate above mentioned. I have had several letters from England, offering to take the whole thing up if we desire to part with it, but it looks to me to be too good to part with readily. If you wish any further information, I will go to New York next week, if you desire it, and communicate with you personally. Please telegraph if you wish to see me, and the day. As you may suppose, the matter has not reached this point without great expense,—a large portion of it only payable when the contract is obtained, but I think it will reach not much short of $300,000.

“Yours faithfully,
(Signed) “HUGH ALLAN.

“P.S.—I presume you desire that unless we can obtain and secure a majority of the stock, you would not take any. But on this point I wish to be instructed.

(Signed) “H. A.”

“The following is to the gentleman before alluded to:—

“DEAR SIR,

“Montreal, August 7, 1872.

“I wrote you on 1st July, giving you a detailed account up till that date of the events and my movements in connection with the Canadian Pacific Railway. I have not had any acknowledgment of the receipt by you of that letter, but I suppose it reached you in due course. The question I asked you, however, remains unanswered, and I now proceed to inform you of the progress of the negotiations since the date of my letter. The policy adopted has been quite successful; the strong French influence I succeeded in obtaining has proved sufficient to control the elections, and as soon as the Government realized this fact, which they were unwilling to admit and slow to see, they opened negotiations with me. It is unnecessary to detail the various phases through which it passed, but the result is that we yesterday signed an agreement by which, on certain monetary conditions, they agree to form a Company, of which I am to be President, to suit my views, to give me and my friends a majority of the stock, and to give the Company so formed the contract to build the road on the terms of the Act of Parliament, which are $30,000,000 in cash, and 50,000,000 acres of land, with all other advantages and privileges which can be given to us under the Act, and they agree to do everything in their power to encourage and assist the Company during the whole course of construction. The final contract is to be executed within six weeks from this date, probably sooner. Our opponents are to get a minority of the stock, and they regard us with great jealousy and dislike, in consequence of their defeat, and on that account the Government is obliged to stipulate that no foreigner is to appear as a shareholder, so as to avoid the former cry of selling ourselves to the Northern Pacific, and succumbing to foreign influence. The shares taken by you and our other American friends, will therefore have to stand in my name for some time. We shall get six million dollars of the stock out of the whole capital of ten million of dollars. I again ask you if the parties are willing to take the reduced amount of stock in the same proportions, signed for previously. As it is my duty, I offer it to you, but there are plenty desirous of getting it;—ten per cent. on the amount will have to be paid up and deposited in the hands of the Government as security, but will be returned, I think, as soon as the work is fully begun. The expenses incurred in bringing the matter to this point have been very great. I have already paid away about $250,000, and will have to pay at least $50,000 before the end of this month. I don't know as even that will finish it, but I hope so. Of course this will all have to come from the subscribers to the six million stock. If you elect to go on with the subscription, I will visit New York about the end of this month, to settle the details with you. Please apply as early as convenient.

“I am, yours faithfully,
(Signed) “HUGH ALLAN.”

“ ‘DEAR MR. McMULLEN,

“ ‘Montreal, August 6, 1872.

“ ‘I have been hoping from day to day that some conclusion, which I could communicate to you, would be arrived at, respecting the Pacific Railway negotiation, but some obstacle to cause delay always intervened. The near approach of the elections, however, and the stand taken by my French friends, that they would lend us help till I pronounced myself satisfied, has at length brought the matter to a crisis, and I think the game I have been playing is now likely to be attended with success. Yesterday we entered into an agreement, by which the Government bound itself to form a Company of Canadians, only according to my wishes. That this Company will make me President, and that I and my friends will get a majority of the stock, and that the contract for building the railroad will be given to this Company, in terms of the Act of Parliament. Americans are to be carefully excluded in the fear that they will sell it to the Union Pacific, but I fancy we can get over that some way or other. This position has not been attained without large payments of money. I have already paid over $200,000, and will have at least $100,000 more to pay. I must now soon know what our New York friends are going to do. They did not answer my last letter.

“ ‘Yours truly,

(Signed) “ ‘HUGH ALLAN.’ ”

“ ‘DEAR SIR,

“ ‘Montreal, September 16, 1872.

“ ‘I wanted at this time to have a meeting in New York, to see what our friends there were disposed to do, but to-day I have a letter from — stating that he is leaving New York for Chicago, there to join —, and the two are going to Puget Sound. They say, no meeting can be held till the 15th of July, which will not do at all. I hope in ten days or so to have the contract signed, and would like immediately after to go to England to raise the money to build the line. I have disbursed $343,000 in gold, which I want to get repaid. I have still to pay $13,500, which will close everything off. I will go to New York as soon as the contract is signed, say about the 17th of October, and would be glad to meet you there.

“ ‘Yours truly,

“ ‘Geo. W. McMullen.’ ”

Enclosure 4 in No. 4.

“ EXPLANATORY STATEMENT OF SIR HUGH ALLAN.

(FROM THE ‘MONTREAL GAZETTE.’)

“ In reply to the letters which appeared in Saturday’s paper, Sir Hugh Allan has made the following affidavit :—

“ ‘I, Sir Hugh Allan, of Ravenscraig, in the Province of Quebec, Knight, being duly sworn, depose and say;

“ ‘That I have for some years past taken a strong interest in the development of railway communication throughout the Dominion of Canada, and particularly through the district of country lying to the westward of Montreal, with a view to increasing the facilities of communication between the seaboard and Western America. And that amongst other projects, my attention was early directed to the scheme for constructing a railway between Montreal, as the most Westerly Atlantic seaboard, and the Pacific Ocean.

“ ‘That in the autumn of 1871 I learned, in conversation with Sir Francis Hincks, that certain American capitalists had proposed to the Government, through Mr. Waddington, to organize a Company for the purpose of building the Canada Pacific Railway, but that no action had been taken upon their proposition. That, thereupon, inasmuch as no movement appeared to be contemplated in Canada for the purpose in question, and I doubted if Canadian capitalists could be induced to subscribe to it to any large extent, I obtained from Sir Francis Hincks the names of the persons who had been communicating with Government, and immediately placed myself in correspondence with them, for the purpose of endeavouring to form a Pacific Company, in advance of the measures which were expected to be taken by the Government at the then ensuing Session of Parliament.

“ ‘That, accordingly, after a certain amount of negotiation, I entered into an agreement with Mr. Smith, of Chicago, and Mr. McMullen, who was understood to represent a certain number of American capitalists—in which I reserved for Canadians as much stock as I thought I could procure to be subscribed in Canada, the remainder to be taken up by the Americans interested and their friends. This agreement contemplated a vigorous prosecution of the work of construction, in conformity with the design of the Canadian Government so soon as it should be ascertained, provided the means to be placed at the disposal of the Company were such as in the opinion of the associates would justify them in undertaking the contract. And with regard to this agreement, I most distinctly and implicitly declare that neither in the agreement itself, nor in any conversation or negotiation connected with it, was there any stipulation, statement, or expressed plan, which had for its object any retardation of the work, or any other purpose than its completion throughout at as early a day as would be consistent with reasonable economy in building it. And more particularly, I declare that there was no intention expressed or implied, either in the agreement or in the negotiations which accompanied it, of placing it in the power of the Northern Pacific Railway or any other Company or body of men to obstruct the enterprise in any manner or way whatever.

“That no further steps of importance were taken by myself or associates up to the time of the opening of the Session of Parliament at Ottawa, in respect of the projected Company, except that I placed myself in communication with the Government, offering to organize a Company which would undertake the construction of the road, and discussing the question of the facilities and aid which the Government would probably recommend to be furnished by the country, and in the course of these discussions and negotiations, I endeavoured, as far as possible, to secure for myself the position of President of the projected Company, which was the position my associates were willing to allow me, and to which I thought myself entitled from the active part which I took in the great national enterprise to which the agreement and negotiations in question had reference. And as to this point I had reason to believe, from the first, that the Government was prepared to admit my claim.

“That when the time for the Session of the Canadian Parliament approached, I applied to Mr. Abbott to prepare the requisite legislation; and shortly after Parliament had opened I proceeded to Ottawa for the purpose of ascertaining how matters were progressing, and what prospect there was of a successful prosecution of the undertaking by myself and the persons who were then associated with me. That, previous to this time, however, I had communicated with a large number of persons in Canada on the subject of the proposed Company, requesting their co-operation and assistance, and endeavouring to induce them to subscribe for stock to such extent as I thought fair, considering their position and means. And though I did not meet with any great measure of success in procuring subscriptions of stock, yet it was quite as great as I had anticipated when making my arrangements with the American capitalists. In my negotiations with them, therefore, I provided for the distribution of the stock which those gentlemen were willing to subscribe, or which I believed they would eventually be willing to subscribe, upon the formation of the Company.

“That, when I visited Ottawa, as stated in the last paragraph, I ascertained, by personal observation and communication with the Members of the House, that a strong prejudice had arisen against any connection with American capitalists in the formation of the proposed Company, the fear expressed with regard to that subject being that such capitalists would find it for their interest rather to obstruct the Canadian Pacific, and further the construction of the Northern Pacific, than to act in the interests of Canada by pressing forward the Canadian Road. And though I did not share this fear, and always believed, and still believe, that the persons who proposed to be associated with me would have gone on with the enterprise in good faith to the best of their ability, yet I found the feeling for the moment so strong that I judged it expedient and proper to yield to it, and therefore consented that the legislation to be presented to the House should exclude foreigners from the Company, and that the Directors should be exclusively Canadian.

“That a Bill incorporating the Canadian Pacific Company was then introduced into the House by Dr. Grant, who had been a prominent advocate of the Canadian Pacific scheme, and had introduced in the last previous Session a similar measure at the instance of the late Mr. Waddington and others who were then interesting themselves in the project.

“That notwithstanding that the Bill which was so introduced contemplated by its terms the exclusion of foreigners, I did not feel by any means convinced that the Government would insist upon any such condition, believing as I did, and do, that such a proposition was impolitic and unnecessary. I did not, therefore, feel justified in entirely breaking off my connection with the American associates, although I acquainted them with the difficulty which might arise if the Government took the same position which the majority of the people with whom I conversed at Ottawa appeared to do. I was aware that by the terms of the Bill introduced by the Government, they would have a controlling power as to the terms of the contract, and I was willing to abide by their decision as to the extent of interest, if any, which foreigners might be permitted to hold. And until that decision was communicated to me I felt in honour bound by the agreement I had made to leave the door open for the entrance of my American associates into the Company, unless the contingency arrived of a distinct prohibition by the Government against admitting them. And in informing them of the progress in the affair in Canada, as I did on certain occasions as an individual, and without implicating the Company of which I was a member, I considered that I was only acting fairly by them. And I did not intend thereby to bind, and as I conceive, did not in any way bind or compromise to my views the other members of the Canada Pacific Railway Company, with whom I did not think it necessary to communicate at all on the subject of my occasional correspondence with my American associates, the more especially as this correspondence was entirely private and confidential, and moreover was written with such inattention, as to accuracy of expression, as might be expected in correspondence intended only to be seen by those to whom it was addressed. During my stay at Ottawa, I had some communication of an informal character with members of the Government, and I found that they were still disposed to recognize the value of my services in endeavouring to organize a Company. But in view of the rivalry which appeared to exist in respect of the Pacific scheme, and the strong array of Canadian names which had been obtained by the Inter-Oceanic Company as associates in its project, nothing definite leading me to expect any preference for myself, or for the Company which I was endeavouring to organize, or indeed anything definite relating to the project, was said by the members of the Government with whom I communicated. It appeared to me that while their intentions and opinions had been freely expressed to me when no Company other than that which I was proposing to organize was likely to be formed, the presence of competition amongst Canadians for the contract had decided them to allow matters to take their own course until they should have been enabled to decide after the formation of the Canadian Companies what line of conduct would be most conducive to the interest of the country. And there was, therefore, very little said or done during the Session which gave me any clue to the views of the Government with respect to the course of action which they would probably ultimately adopt.

“ ‘ After the session, the Canada Pacific Railway Company, of which I was a member, proceeded to organize; and notified the Government that they were prepared to take the contract for building and running the Pacific Railway on the terms and conditions mentioned in the Government Bill. They caused stock books to be opened in various parts of the Dominion in conformity with the Act, and took such initiatory steps and such other proceedings as were necessary to enable them to act as an organized corporate body. That it soon after became evident to me that the Government would be best pleased to see an amalgamation of the two Companies incorporated by Parliament, in order that united action might be secured and the greatest strength obtained in the formation of a Canadian Company. And I therefore opened negotiations with the Inter-Oceanic Company for the purpose of endeavouring to effect such an amalgamation, and at the same time the Canada Pacific Company placed itself in communication with the Government with relation to the same subject. It was thereupon intimated that the Government were also desirous that the amalgamation should take place. That thereupon Mr. Abbott, a member of the Canada Pacific Railway Company, proceeded to Toronto to meet Senator Macpherson, and, if possible, to arrange terms of amalgamation that would be satisfactory to both Companies. And after a discussion of the matter during two or three days, in Toronto, between him and Mr. Macpherson, he reported to the Canada Company that there did not appear to be any material difficulty in the way of our amalgamation, except that the claim which I made to be President of the amalgamated Company, and to have the nomination of an equal number of the members of the new one to that nominated by Mr. Macpherson could not be acceded to. Mr. Macpherson's proposal was that he, as representing the Inter-oceanic Company, should have the nomination of a larger number of members in the amalgamated Company than I, and that the question of the Presidency should be left to the Board of Directors. With regard to the Presidency, Mr. Abbott informed the Company that Sir John Macdonald expressed himself as being favourable to my election as President, and that any influence the Government might possess among the members of the amalgamated Company would be exercised for the purpose of aiding in my election to that office, and that probably the difficulty as to the nomination of members to the new Company, between myself and Mr. Macpherson, might be obviated in some way. In other respects, he reported that he could find no divergence of opinion as to the amalgamation of the two Companies between myself and Mr. Macpherson.

“After receiving Mr. Abbott's Report of the negotiation at Toronto, I felt satisfied that no difficulty would occur in bringing them to a successful termination. And as the late Sir George Cartier happened to be in Montreal shortly afterwards, and I was taking considerable interest in his re-election, I met him and had unofficial conversations with him on the subject of the Charter on several occasions, urging that the influence of the Government should be used to procure the amalgamation upon such terms as I considered would be just to myself and the Company over which I presided.

“That Sir George Cartier, was, as I was aware, communicating with the Premier on the subject of the Pacific Railway amongst others; and that at one of the interviews I had with him he showed me a communication from the Premier, of which the following is a copy :—

“July 26, 1872.

“Have seen Macpherson. He has no personal ambition, but cannot, in justice to Ontario, concede any preference to Quebec in the matter of the Presidency or in any other particular. He says the question about the Presidency should be left to the Board. Under these circumstances, I authorize you to assure Allan that the influence of the Government will be exercised to secure him the position of President. The other terms to be as agreed on between Macpherson and Abbott. The whole matter to be kept quiet until after the elections. Then the two gentlemen to meet the Privy Council at Ottawa, and settle the terms of a Provisional agreement. This is the only practical solution of the difficulty, and should be accepted at once by Allan. Answer.

(Signed) “JOHN A. MACDONALD.

“Sir George Cartier, Ottawa.’

“And Sir George Cartier on that occasion gave me the assurance which he was by that telegram authorized by the Premier to convey to me.

“That on further discussion with Sir George Cartier as to the course which the Government would probably take with regard to the amalgamation and the contract to be granted, I urged upon him certain modifications of the terms of the above telegram from Sir John Macdonald, and finally Sir George came to entertain the opinion that I was entitled to have certain of those modifications conceded to me, and expressed his willingness to recommend it to his colleagues. Being desirous of having as definite an expression of opinion from Sir George, as he felt himself justified in giving, I requested that he would put what he stated verbally to me in writing, and accordingly, on the 30th of July, 1872, he wrote to me the following letter :—

(Copy.)

“DEAR SIR HUGH,

“Montreal, July 30, 1872.

“I enclose you copies of telegrams received from Sir John A. Macdonald; and with reference to their contents I would say that in my opinion the Governor in Council will approve of the amalgamation of your Company with the Interoceanic Company, under the name of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, the Provisional Board of the amalgamated Company to be composed of seventeen members, of whom four shall be named from the Province of Quebec by the Canada Pacific Railway Company, four from the Province of Ontario by the Interoceanic Railway Company, and the remainder by the Government; the amalgamated Company to have the powers specified in the tenth section of the Act, incorporating the Canada Pacific Railway Company, &c., the agreement of amalgamation to be executed between the Companies within two months from this date.

“The Canada Pacific Company might take the initiative in procuring the amalgamation; and if the Interoceanic Company should not execute an agreement of amalgamation upon such terms and within such limited time, I think the contemplated arrangements should be made with the Canada Pacific Company under its Charter.

“Upon the subscription and payment on account of stock being made, as required by the Act of last Session, respecting the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, I have no doubt but that the Governor in Council will agree with the Company for the construction and working of the Canadian Pacific Railway with such branches as shall be agreed upon, and will grant to the Company all such subsidies and assistance as they are empowered to do by the Government Act. I believe all the advantages which the Government Act empowers the Government to confer upon any Company will be required to enable the works contemplated to be successfully carried through, and I am convinced that they will be accorded to the Company to be formed by amalgamation, or to the Canada Pacific Company, as the case may be. I would add, that as I approve of the measures to which I have referred in this letter, I shall use my best endeavours to have them carried into effect.

“ ‘Very truly yours,
(Signed) “ ‘GEO. E. CARTIER.’

“ I positively declare that up to the date of this letter I had not any undertaking of any kind or description with the Government, either directly or through any other person, than that contained in Sir John Macdonald’s telegram of the 26th of July, which is given above ; and that telegram and the above letter from Sir George Cartier contains everything that was ever stated or agreed to between any member of the Government and myself on the subject of the Pacific Railway project up to that date.

“ On the same day that I received the above letter from Sir George Cartier, I informed Sir John A. Macdonald of the contents of it, and asked for his sanction of the views which it contained. But he declined to concur in the terms of Sir George’s letter, telegraphing to him that he would not agree to them, and that he would come down to Montreal, and confer with him respecting them.

“ Thereupon I immediately informed Sir George Cartier that I should consider the letter addressed to me as being withdrawn. And to my knowledge Sir George telegraphed Sir John that he had seen me and that as he (Sir John) objected to Sir George’s letter, it had been withdrawn. I also telegraphed to Sir John on the same day (July 31st) to the effect that I had seen Sir George Cartier, and that he (Sir John) might return my letter or regard it as waste paper, and that I was satisfied with the telegram of the 26th as expressive of the views of the Government.

“ I positively and explicitly declare that, excepting so far as an understanding between the Government and myself is expressed in the foregoing correspondence, I had no agreement of any kind or description either verbally or in writing by myself or through any other person in respect of the contract for the Pacific Railway, or of any advantage to be conferred upon me in respect of it. The terms of the Charter, the composition of the Company, the privileges which were to be granted to it, the proportions in which the stock was to be distributed, having been matters for negotiation and settlement up to the last moment, and were only closed and decided upon while the Charter was being prepared in the early part of the present year. And the persons who finally composed the Company were only decided upon within a few days of the issue of the Charter ; I myself being permitted to subscribe only a similar amount of stock to that subscribed by other prominent members of the Company.

“ With reference to certain private and confidential letters published this day in the ‘Montreal Herald,’ and to certain statements in these letters which may appear to conflict in some degree with the foregoing, I must, in justice to myself, offer certain explanations. I desire to state with regard to those letters that they were written in the confidence of private intercourse in the midst of many matters engrossing my attention, and probably with less care and circumspection than might have been bestowed upon them had they been intended for publication. At the same time, while in some respects these letters are not strictly accurate, I conceive that the circumstances, to a great extent, justified or excused the language used in them.

“ With regard to the reference repeatedly made in those letters to the American interest in the stock of the Company, as I have already stated, I had made an agreement with the parties to whom those letters were addressed, associating myself with them in a Company projected for the construction of the Pacific Railway. I had never been informed by the Government that it was their intention not to permit the association of foreigners with Canadians in the organization of the Pacific Company. And in consenting to the legislation introduced into the House, I thought I was only deferring to a prejudice which I myself considered without foundation. I did not hesitate to intimate that if a suitable opportunity offered, they should be permitted to assume a position in the Company, as nearly like that which they and I had agreed upon as circumstances would permit. And as I entirely disbelieved the statements that were made as to their disposition to obstruct the Canadian Pacific, and considered that they might be of great use in furthering its construction, especially in the event of a failure of the negotiations in England, I had no hesitation in placing myself individually in the position of favouring their admission into the Company, if circumstances should permit of it. It was in that spirit that what is said in my private letters now published was written to the gentlemen to whom they were addressed, and if matters had taken such a turn as to permit with propriety of those intentions being carried out, I should have felt myself bound to adhere to them. But, in point of fact, when the discussions as to the mode in which the Company should be formed were entered upon with the Government, late in the autumn, I came to understand decisively that they could not be admitted, and I notified them of the fact, and that the negotiations must cease between us, by a letter which has not been published in the 'Herald' of to-day, but which was in the following terms:—

“ ‘MY DEAR MR. McMULLEN,

“ ‘Montreal, October 24, 1872.

“ ‘No motion has yet (as far as I know) been taken by the Government in the matter of the Pacific Railroad. The opposition of the Ontario party will, I think, have the effect of shutting out our American friends from any participation in the road, and I apprehend all that negotiation is at end. It is still uncertain how it will be given (the contract), but in any case the Government seemed inclined to exact a declaration that no foreigners will have, directly or indirectly, any interest in it. But everything is in a state of uncertainty, and I think it is unnecessary for you to visit New York on this business at present, or at all, till you hear what the result is likely to be.

“ ‘Public sentiment seems to be decided that the road shall be built by Canadians only.

“ ‘Yours truly,
(Signed) “ ‘HUGH ALLAN.

“ ‘G. W. McMullen, Esq.,
“ ‘Pictou, Ont.’

“Up to this period to which this statement extends, the negotiation between the Government and myself had chiefly reference to effecting an amalgamation between the two Companies which were competing for the railway, upon the principle, as I understand, that the enterprise would require all the strength that could be obtained for it, and the united efforts of every one interested in it. And that it would conduce greatly to its success if the persons, in the two Companies, who together comprised most of the prominent men in the Dominion, could be induced to join their energies in pressing forward the project.

“About this time, however, a memorandum was communicated to me which had been received by the Government from the Interoceanic Company, which appeared to destroy the prospect of amalgamation; and although the Canada Company endeavoured to remove the objections made by the Interoceanic Company, they failed in doing so, and the idea of amalgamation was shortly afterwards finally abandoned. Thereupon the Government informed me that it was decided that the contract should not be given to either of the Companies alone, but that the Government would incorporate a new Company if the prominent members of the two incorporated Companies, and any leading Canadians who might be disposed to join them, and able to give assistance, could be induced to subscribe the stock in the proportions which the Government had decided upon, which proportions are those embodied in the Charter. And from that time the efforts of all parties interested in the project was directed towards procuring the association together of the most prominent men of both Companies in the new Company, to be incorporated under the terms of the Government Act of the previous Session. And it was as the result of these efforts that the present Company was formed, composed in a majority of instances of gentlemen with whom I had no communication whatever, and not in any respect as the consequence of any understanding between myself and the Government.

“ ‘From that time also communication between myself and my former associates ceased, having finally been broken off by myself as soon as I ascertained the desire of the Government. And I state further, positively, that no money derived from any fund or from any of my former American associates was expended in assisting my friends or the friends of the Government at the recent general elections.

“ ‘That with regard to the construction which appears to be intended to be placed upon the statements in the letter referred to as to the preliminary expenses connected with the Charter, I state most positively and explicitly, that I never made an agreement or came to any understanding of any kind or description with the Government, or any of its members, as to the payment of any sum of money to any one, or in any way whatever, in consideration of receiving the contract for the Canadian Pacific. I declare that I did expend considerable sums of money in various ways which appeared to me to be advantageous to the Company I had organized, and calculated to strengthen my hands in endeavouring to obtain the contract for that Company, but that I did not on any occasion or in any way pay, or agree to pay, anything whatever to any member of the Government, or to any one on behalf or at the instance of the Government, for any consideration

whatever, in connection with the Charter or contract. As may be gathered from the letters in question, I considered it to be my policy to strengthen my position as far as I possibly could with my own friends and fellow-citizens in the Province of Quebec, and more especially in so far as related to the Montreal Northern Colonization Railway, which I conceived would at some day be the outlet from the Canadian Pacific to the Port of Montreal. And a considerable portion of the money referred to in those letters was expended by me in furtherance of that project in many ways. I considered it for my interest also that those members of Parliament who had shown an interest in the Canadian Pacific enterprise and in other railway enterprises in which I was interested, and who were disposed to assist and further them, should be aided in their elections, and I subscribed some money and lent some money to assist the election of such persons as were my friends and in whom I was interested, but without any understanding or condition with them or any of them as to Parliamentary support or assistance in the event of their election. In these and similar ways I expended sums of money approaching in amount those mentioned in those letters, as I conceive I had a perfect right to do; but I did not state in those letters, nor is it the fact, that any portion of those sums of money were paid to the members of the Government, or were received by them or on their behalf directly or indirectly as a consideration in any form for any advantage to me in connection with the Pacific Railway contract.

“‘I desire also to state further with regard to the envelope and the papers which it contains, which were placed in the hands of the Hon. Mr. Starnes shortly before my departure for England with the delegation of the Pacific Railway, that upon being informed by me that all negotiations between my former American associates and myself on the subject of the Canadian Pacific Railway must cease, large demands were made upon me by Mr. McMullen, based partly upon alleged expenditure by him, and partly upon a claim by him for compensation for his loss of time and services in the promotion of the enterprise so long as he and his friends remained connected with it. These demands at first were of such an extensive character that I declined altogether to entertain them. I was disposed to return to my American associates any money which they might have expended in the matter, and I was ready to compensate Mr. McMullen for the loss of his time and his expenses; but it appeared to me that the sum he demanded was much greater in amount than all such disbursements and expenses could possibly have reached. I felt naturally that by trusting to the honour of my correspondents and writing to them in a manner somewhat inconsiderate, I had placed it in their power to annoy me by the publication of those letters, and I feared that the outcry which might follow their publication in the columns of certain papers which have manifested unceasing hostility to the Canadian Pacific Railway, might injure the prospects of the delegation in England. I therefore authorized an arrangement to be made with Mr. McMullen, by which a sum very much less than his original demands should be paid to him; the greater portion at once, but the remaining and a considerable portion on the delivery of the letters to me after the present Session of Parliament, should they not be published in the interval. This was accordingly done. Mr. McMullen received the greater part of the sum agreed to with him, and the remainder was placed in one of those envelopes in the form of a cheque, the other envelope containing, to the best of my belief, the same letters which had been published in the ‘Montreal Herald’ this morning, together with one or two others, which do not appear there, but which would have established the rupture of all negotiations between the Americans and myself. And this arrangement was made, on my behalf, with Mr. McMullen, without the concurrence or knowledge of any member of the Government,—none of whom were aware that the papers had been deposited in the hands of Mr. Starnes.

“‘And I have signed,

“‘ HUGH ALLAN.

Enclosure 5 No. 4.

STATEMENT BY MR. McMULLEN, WITH DOCUMENTS, &c., &c.

(FROM THE ‘MONTREAL HERALD.’)

“‘SIR,

“‘So much has been of late said about myself, and my connection with the Pacific Railway negotiations, that I think it better to lay a full statement of my position in regard to it before the public than to longer allow myself to be placed in so many wrong situations by those who are of necessity ignorant of many important facts. I have chosen, therefore, to place it in the form of an historical narrative, embracing the incidents that came under my own knowledge from the time I first engaged in the matter until the granting of the charter by the Government to its present holders.

“I visited Ottawa in March, 1871, on a Chicago delegation connected with the enlargement of the canals, and while there met the late lamented Mr. Alfred Waddington and Mr. Wm. Kersteman, who were agitating the subject of a Canadian Pacific R.R., and who introduced the matter to my notice, with a view to organize a company to build the proposed road. After looking at the surveys and explorations of Mr. Waddington, who was well informed on the physical nature of the Pacific coast, I concluded to take the subject before some friends with a view to its serious consideration. In a few weeks, at my request, Mr. Waddington and Mr. Kersteman visited Chicago, and the result was, on their representations, that with my friends I proposed to organize a Company which would undertake to build the road, on terms approximating those which current rumour reported the Government as willing to recommend to Parliament. We visited New York and Philadelphia shortly afterwards, and in about six weeks later (being early in July, 1871) we visited Ottawa with an informal proposal from parties of the highest respectability for undertaking the work. The only members of the Government whom we met were Sir John A. Macdonald and Sir Francis Hincks; and it speedily became apparent to myself and associates that Mr. Waddington had been over sanguine in his ideas that the formation of a Company would be entrusted to his hands. After some conversation which tended to make this clear, and which intimated that the Government would wish to incorporate prominent Canadian names in any Company undertaking the work, we left our address with the two Ministers, with the understanding that if occasion for it arose we were to hear from them. Some few weeks afterwards Mr. Chas. M. Smith, of Chicago, who was my colleague in this matter, received a letter from Sir Hugh Allan, stating that Sir Francis Hincks had requested him to communicate with us in order to effect a union of Canadian and American interests in the Pacific Railroad Company that was to be formed.

“I afterwards found that Sir Francis Hincks had visited New York in the early part of August, 1871, and at interviews with two prominent railway bankers, whose names will readily occur to him, had advised them and their associates to cease negotiations through Messrs. Smith and myself, and open them directly with Sir Hugh Allan, who being a leading Canadian was looked upon by the Government as a proper person to figure prominently in the matter. As the gentlemen applied to were both unwilling and unable to change existing arrangements, Sir Francis, on his return, seems to have given the address left with him in July to Sir Hugh Allan, and his letter to us followed. The result was an interview in Montreal, early in September, 1871, at which preliminaries were settled between Sir Hugh Allan, Charles M. Smith, and myself, by which Sir Hugh was to receive a large personal interest in the stock, and an amount for distribution among persons whose accession would be desirable, and that the cash instalments on such stock should be advanced and carried by others in interest. An interview was held by myself with Sir John A. Macdonald, at the St. Lawrence Hall the day before we met Allan, at which he expressed the approval of the Government at the proposed meeting, and requested me to meet him at Ottawa, after it was over, to let him know the result. I accordingly went to Ottawa, and explained to him that Sir Hugh had entered into verbal arrangements, which would soon assume a more formal shape, and that we had provided for the easy accession of such other Canadian gentlemen as would be of advantage. He seemed quite pleased with it, and promised, on communication with Allan, to set an early day for entering into preliminary arrangements with the Government, in order that the whole matter might be in shape for an early presentation to Parliament. Shortly afterwards, in accordance with this understanding, Sir Hugh notified Mr. Smith and myself to come, and we three met the Cabinet at Ottawa, October 5th, 1871, to settle, as we supposed, the general features of the scheme. There were present Sir John A. Macdonald, Sir Francis Hincks, Sir G. E. Cartier, and Messrs. Tilley, Tupper, Mitchell, Morris, Aikins, and Chapais. It was at once apparent that they were not fully in accord among themselves, in consequence, as Sir F. Hincks informed me, of Grand Trunk jealousy of Allan, represented by the important personage of Sir George Cartier. The settlement of matters, had, therefore, to be postponed until the return of Sir Hugh Allan from England, he sailing on October 7th, and returning the 1st of December. Mr. Smith and I proceeded to New York, to inform our friends of the state of affairs. It was then that we first learned of the visit of the Finance Minister, which I have heretofore narrated, and it was also then that Sir Hugh's first telegram of the published correspondence was received.

CANADA.

"After the return of Sir Hugh Allan from England, he telegraphed to Mr. Smith, of Chicago, that Sir Francis Hincks had called and suggested that the Government would be obliged to advertise for tenders in order to avoid blame, so that the conclusion of an agreement would have to be postponed for several weeks, but suggesting that we have a meeting in Montreal, and afterwards in New York, to execute the contract which was to follow our verbal understanding. Mr. Smith and myself accordingly left Chicago on December 15, 1871, and after visiting Montreal and closing all preliminaries with Allan, we went with him to New York, where the contract was signed by all the parties, under date of December 23rd, 1871. A variety of topics were discussed at interviews and by correspondence, during the winter, and the delays of the Government explained by the exigencies of the political situation. While at first Sir Hugh had announced that no money would be required for such purposes, yet he soon professed to discover that it would be necessary to provide some, to aid in procuring the closing of the arrangements. He at one time announced to Mr. Smith and myself that the $8,500, of which he speaks in one letter, had been lent to Sir John A. Macdonald and Sir Francis Hincks in sums of $4,000 and $4,500 respectively, "with very good knowledge that it was never to be repaid." He also explained that the Finance Minister was taking a great deal of interest in the matter, and that he had sounded him on the extent of his personal expectations, when it reached an assured conclusion. He said Sir Francis had replied that at his time of life an absolute payment would be preferable to a percentage of ultimate profits, and thought he should have $50,000, and in addition the position of Secretary to the Company for his son, at a salary of not less than $2,000. My reply was, that I supposed, as we were into the matter, we would have to meet, in some way, such demands, if we expected to proceed, but that large amounts could not be disbursed on uncertainties. As the Session approached, however, Sir Hugh made application for money, and on March 28th, 1872, a supplementary contract was entered into by which a committee of five were appointed, Sir Hugh being chairman, who were authorized to provide funds. This contract also covered a change in terms to meet the views, as Sir Hugh represented, of the Government, and empowered this Committee to agree to the acceptance of $30,000,000 and 50,000,000 acres of land, exactly the amount the Government recommended, and exactly the amount he then told us they would recommend if we would accept. A levy of $50,000 was made on the American parties, April 1st, 1872, and the amount placed to the credit of Sir Hugh. He drew $40,000 as follows: $15,000 by check, dated May 2nd, 1872, and paid May 4th, 1872; and $25,000 by check, dated May 3rd, 1872, and paid June 6th, 1872. The only explanations which he made to me of the expenditure of this sum were the payment of $4,000 to 'La Minerve' newspaper, and $3,000 each to three other French papers, whose names I cannot positively remember; $6,000 to Attorney-General Ouimet for aid rendered at Ottawa, and an indefinite loan of $10,000 to Sir F. Hincks. I attended during the Session of 1872, and assisted in the passage of the Canada Pacific Railway Charter; and at its close paid the charges under the Private Bills regulations for the Charters of it and the Canada Improvement Company—a Charter which we suggested to Sir Hugh and Mr. Abbott, as a necessary attendant on the railroad legislation. In addition to the payments spoken of, Mr. Abbott was authorized to promise Mr. Langevin $25,000 to aid in elections about Quebec, on condition of his friendly assistance, and Mr. Abbott reported that he had done so.

"Notwithstanding the repeated pledges we had received, and the apparently strong position we occupied, both Sir Hugh and myself had grave fears of the result, in consequence of the position taken by Mr. Macpherson and his friends, and the animosity of the Grand Trunk Railway people to Sir Hugh himself. I met Sir John A. Macdonald in Montreal, after the close of the Session, while on his way to meet Lord Dufferin at Quebec, and he suggested that, as Allan had made so many enemies, I should go to Mr. Macpherson and try to bring about an amalgamation, promising to write a personal letter to Mr. Macpherson, to aid in the desired object. Sir Hugh and Mr. Abbott, however, both dissuaded me from doing so, as it would afford a pretext for the Inter-oceanic Company to raise the American bugbear, which they had been trying to allay, and they promised to take the responsibility with Sir John of my failure to do as agreed.

"I then went to Chicago to await developments, and in July, under date of the 16th, I got a letter from Allan, which seemed quite discouraging in tone, as he said Sir G. E. Cartier told him they never intended dealing with either our Company or Mr. Macpherson's, but would form a new one entirely, under the control of the Government. But Sir Hugh added that the elections were approaching, and then his French friends would make their power felt, and Cartier must either yield to Lower Canada wishes, or else he stood a poor chance to be elected. On August 6th he wrote again, stating that he had brought about what he wished, as the Government had been forced to come to him, and he had secured an agreement for a majority interest in the Company about to be formed to build the road, but that to do this he had to advance a large amount of money, some $200,000 already, and over $100,000 more still to be paid, and wanting to know what the New York friends would do. On the 16th September he wrote again, stating that he had learned of the absence of several of our friends from New York, and that therefore a meeting could not be held until November 15th, which was very unsatisfactory, as he was to have the contract signed within say ten days, and wanted at once thereafter to go to England to raise money. He stated his expenditure to that time as $443,000 gold, with $13,500 more to pay, and he urged speedy arrangement for refunding this. I visited Montreal shortly after the receipt of this letter, to ask him further particulars for the guidance of our friends, who were somewhat startled at the magnitude of the figures, and who proposed to have some reasonable explanation of how the money had been expended before they returned it to Sir Hugh. I reached Montreal about October 1st, and at the interview which followed, Sir Hugh reiterated, and explained the statements in his later letters. He said Sir George Cartier had been very loath to realize the fact that he held the controlling French influence, subject to a satisfactory disposition of the Pacific Charter, but that after a while Sir George did come to believe it, and, much against his will, consented to yield his prejudices, and give Allan the control, with, however, certain provisions about Americans, which would be more of an apparent than real objection, and on the understanding that Sir Hugh should advance money to aid the election of Government supporters. After having Sir George sign an agreement, as stated in letter of Aug. 8th, he commenced paying money, but, as he told me, having Cartier's order in each case, and taking a receipt therefor. When making the agreement he had no idea that the amount of money would be excessively large, and when it had run up to between $190,000 and $200,000, he became alarmed, and told Cartier that he must stop paying the drafts which were coming in so rapidly unless the whole Government would sanction the bargain. He then stated that Sir George sent to Ottawa and received a telegram from Sir John A. Macdonald confirming his action. After this Allan said he proceeded paying until he had advanced $358,000 in addition to $40,000, drawn from New York. I promised to submit his statement to my friends, in New York, and leave the matter for them to decide.

“The next word I had was that he thought he must dissolve all connection with Americans, in a letter dated October 24th. I replied in a few days after, protesting strongly against such action, and in return received a brief letter dated November 11th, in which he stated that he was in entire ignorance of the whole intention of the Government.

“In December I got an urgent letter and telegraph, requesting me to meet him at Toronto or Montreal, but not stating the object. I went to Montreal and had an interview on December 24th, when he announced a final close of any arrangements with Americans, with an utter repudiation of any obligations he was under to them, and stated that he had written to New York, to the effect that he could not continue his arrangements, and must break them entirely off. I protested strongly against such conduct, referred to the contracts we had entered into, and the long association existing, as well as the uniform good faith evinced by our party, stating that I deemed it only honourable in him to insist on the original agreement, or else to retire himself from the proposed Company. When this was refused, I announced my intention of going to Ottawa to lay the matter before Sir John A. Macdonald. On the 31st December, I had an interview of some two hours' duration with Sir John, and placed him in possession of all the facts, and showed him the letters which I had from Sir Hugh in regard to the matter, as well as the original contracts, and the letters to the New York R.R. President, which were recently published in connection with other correspondence. I pointed out to Sir John the allegations made by Sir Hugh as to his agreements with the Government, and narrated to him all the leading facts I have given here. He strenuously denied that the Government had been bribed, and I pointed out that if not, then our Canadian associate must be a swindler in attempting to get refunded nearly $400,000, which he had never laid out. I then requested him to do one of two things—either to allow our original arrangements to be carried out, or else to leave Sir Hugh out of the Government Company, since we did not propose to be a stepping-stone for his personal advancement. Sir John said the Government arrangements had gone so far that he feared they could do neither, and said that from Allan's memorial in answer to the Inter-oceanic Company, and from his assertions since the Session, they had supposed he had entirely broken off with us. I showed the most conclusive evidence—Allan's own letters—that such was not the case, and said if the Government were not in his power, as he stated, they could better afford to take all the risk of his omission from the Company than to face the public when they knew all the facts, as they certainly would, if Allan was put in and allowed to break his sacred obligations with his associates—associates to whom the Government had directed him, and who dealt unreservedly with him in the express belief that he was the chosen representative of the Government, and who had the best of reasons for such belief. He requested a delay of a few days or more to enable him to communicate with Sir Hugh and Mr. Abbott. On the 23rd of January last, I again saw Sir John, at which time two of my friends accompanied me. We then went over the ground again, and added the letters which appeared as addressed to Mr. Smith, and after the interview I gave Sir John, at his request, copies of all these documents, Sir Hugh Allan's checks for the $40,000, and the receipts of Mr. Todd for the Private Bill expenses of the Canada Improvement and Canada Pacific Railroad Companies paid by me, which must have been strange reading to him when compared with the memorial of the Executive Committee of the said C. P. Railroad Company, signed by Hugh Allan, J. J. Abbott, and Louis Beaubien, then in his possession, in which the following remarkable passage occurs, under date October 12th, 1872, which memorial was presented to Parliament during the present Session:—

“ ‘With regard to the assertion that a belief “exists everywhere” that the Canada Company still intend to carry out the design of the combination with American capitalists, it is only necessary that the gentlemen who say so, no doubt speak truly as to some limited circle with which they are in immediate communication. But the Canada Company emphatically deny that beyond such a limited circle any such belief, or even any idea, of such a state of things is entertained.

“ ‘The Canada Company are aware that a negotiation was commenced during the summer of eighteen hundred and seventy-one, between Sir Hugh Allan and certain American capitalists for the formation of a Company to construct and run the Canada Pacific Railway; but they are informed by Sir Hugh Allan, and have satisfied themselves by a full enquiry into the circumstances and details of the negotiation, that it was not initiated by Sir Hugh, and that it was commenced and supported by influential persons in Canada, as being the only combination that offered itself at that time for the construction and running of the road; but they are satisfied that that negotiation never possessed the character attributed to it by the Inter-oceanic Company; and they know that Sir Hugh Allan would never have consented to embark with foreign capitalists in a Canadian enterprise in which he takes so great an interest, without the most perfect securities and guarantees for its control and conduct in the interest of Canada. But the discussion of the negotiation is entirely foreign to the proposition now being considered. That negotiation terminated when Sir Hugh Allan engaged with others in the formation of the Canada Company, and it has never been renewed.

“ ‘The Canada Company never participated in that negotiation, and never considered or entertained any proposition, suggestion, or intention of asking aid from American capitalists or of combining with them for the prosecution of the Railway, or for any other purpose. The only negotiations they have carried on are those already alluded to with British capitalists, and they have never even communicated on the subject of the railway with anyone outside of Canada or Great Britain.’

“ Sir John requested us to meet Abbott and Allan in Montreal, and arrange something satisfactory. Sir Hugh had gone to New York, and while there had called on our friends and assured them that he would still keep good faith with them. While I had the strongest reasons for doubting such assurances, and though subsequent occurrences have confirmed these doubts, yet at their request I desisted from pushing matters against him, further than to procure a settlement of personal outlay and loss, and that of my friends who were with me, a loss directly entailed by his duplicity.

“ This narrative embraces all the leading facts relating to my connection with Sir Hugh Allan, and mainly of my efforts and operations concerning the Pacific Railway; but as a matter of course, there were numerous negotiations of a nature relating to it, which seem unnecessary to detail, unless further occasion should arise. But these facts would all tend to confirm the general points herein stated, and they are such as would occur inevitably in the midst of such prolonged and important negotiations.

" 'MY DEAR SIR,

" 'I submit for your perusal a statement I propose publishing to the people of Canada as to my connection with the Pacific R.R. My reason for doing so is, that I have been subjected to the vilest slanders at the hands of the Ministerial press, of which you are aware. The abundance of such abuse makes it imperative that I should show what the real facts were, and as you and I have had a friendly association in the matter, and you are personally cognizant of many facts, I ask you to give me a letter relating thereto, and containing whatever may be within your recollection as to the circumstances of the case.

" 'DEAR SIR,

" 'Waterloo, July 16, 1873.

" 'I have had an opportunity to look over the statement you make in regard to your connection with the Canada Pacific Railroad, submitted to me for the purpose mentioned in your letter of the 15th, and I have this much to say in regard to it. With the first part of your history of the matter I am personally unacquainted, as our intercourse did not begin until the opening of the Session of 1872, when we were introduced by Mr. Abbott. My negotiations on the subject of the Pacific Railway previous to that time had been with Sir H. Allan and Mr. Abbott, though from the commencement I had been aware of the arrangements made with American parties whom you represented. I was associated during the Session of 1872 with Allan, Abbott, and yourself, in all the stages of procuring the Charter of the Canada Pacific Railroad Company, and in all the efforts made to secure to that Company the contract to build the road, and as a consequence was familiar with many points naturally arising therefrom. I discussed with you my personal position under the proposed arrangements and with yourself, Allan, and Abbott, all the main features of the legislation proposed, and such as were deemed necessary for the object. As you state, there were difficulties in the way of closing matters, and I was aware of the agreement with Mr. Langevin to which you refer, as it was frequently discussed between us and Mr. Abbott. I was also aware from the first of Sir George Cartier's opposition to Sir Hugh Allan, and of the means by which Sir George was forced to forego his opposition.

"In regard to the payment of money for election purposes, I was informed of the arrangement with Sir George Cartier, and was also shown a confirmatory telegram from Sir John A. Macdonald. I understand the affair to be substantially as you have related, and I have reason to believe that large sums of money were actually expended for election purposes under the arrangement.

Enclosure 6 in No. 4.

MEETING OF MEMBERS OF PARLIAMENT IN OTTAWA.

FROM THE 'MONTREAL HERALD.'

"The gentlemen opposed to prorogation held a meeting in the Railway Committee room, immediately after prorogation.

"Hon. L. H. Holton said he thought it would be proper for the deputation who had carried the memorial to the Governor-General to report the result. That memorial had been signed by ninety-three members, which were a clear majority of members who were usually in attendance in the House. It was a memorial only praying him to stay his hand so as not to prevent the House of Commons from inquiring into the most stupendous political and electoral frauds which had ever hitherto been heard of. (Loud cheers.) The practical result was that in the reply this memorial had been scorned by the representative of the Crown. The worst possible insult had thus been put upon Parliament by a Governor-General, acting on the advice of men who were themselves under impeachment for crimes which almost amounted to treason.

"Mr. Cartwright said, as Chairman of the Committee, that the memorial had been received by the Governor-General in a very courteous way, and with the remark that it was drawn in a very proper manner, and that he also sympathized very much with the feelings of the gentlemen of the deputation, but that he was obliged to act upon the advice of the members of his Government. He said also that he had named a Royal Commission, consisting of three legal gentlemen, and would summon Parliament to meet again in the course of about two months. With respect to the Oaths Bill, his Excellency stated that his Ministry were not to blame for its disallowance. He also said that he had to decline to accede to the prayer of the petition, because, unless he did so, he must first dismiss his Ministry, which would imply a conviction of their guilt. His Excellency, however, had expressly requested that there should be no formal publication of his reply until he had delivered it in writing. Mr. Cunningham had stated to his Excellency that the deputation considered that the prorogation would be an infringement of the privileges of Parliament, but that point, of course, his Excellency did not discuss.

"Mr. Cunningham (Manitoba) said that when his Excellency spoke of dismissing his Ministers, he (Mr. C.) stated that the ninety-three members who had signed the memorial considered that the accusations against the Ministry were before the House of Commons, not before his Excellency; and that until they were brought before him, he had no right to issue a Commission, or to take any other step in connection with them.

"Messrs. Burpee and Church confirmed these statements.

"Mr. Paquet also added that his Excellency had made an exposure of facts exactly as they had been made in the Ministerial journals, and had said nothing but what had been said there, except that the advice he was going to adopt was given by his advisers unanimously. He had also remarked that it was impossible for Parliament to proceed to business, since, in consequence of the understanding arrived at, neither the members from Manitoba nor those from British Columbia were present; and he was answered by pointing to Mr. Cunningham, and by the assurance that Manitoba was fully represented. There was, however, no difficulty about seeing on which side his Excellency leaned.

"Hon. Mr. Cauchon said that, although at the end of the meeting of the House Mr. McKenzie had invited those opposed to prorogation to assemble here, he understood there were numbers on the other side who would have gladly been here to protest against the course pursued, but that they were afraid of their party. He disclaimed the idea that this was in any way a party meeting. (Hear, hear.) Every member had been invited to be present, and act in unison on the subject. They would all get a fair hearing, and might express themselves as they felt. (Cheers.) In whatever way the meeting might decide, the feelings of all would be respected. (Applause.)

"Mr. Laflamme, who was loudly called for, said he did not think it his place to address them on the subject; it was more fitting that older politicians should do it. All must feel the outrage which had been perpetrated. (Hear, hear.) It was no question of party. The question now was, whether free government and free inquiry really existed, such as they knew well was embraced within the British Constitution. On this account, the question being so vast and important, he should leave it to older politicians than himself to discuss. He denied that the Committee could not proceed with the investigation, and affirmed that neither the people nor their representatives would submit to being deprived of the rights, liberties, and privileges which belonged to them as British subjects. (Applause.) As far as he knew, a Royal Commission was altogether unnecessary, as the question before them was one which involved the purity of Parliament. As he had before said, this was a proper subject for the older members to discuss. As for himself, he had to-day felt like a Frenchman, as his blood fairly got up at the outrage and insult which had been perpetrated on the people and their representatives. (Hear, hear.) He should defer from further speaking, in order to make way for the leader. (Cries of 'Blake and McKenzie.')

"Mr. Blake urged that it would be well that Mr. McKenzie's speech, which had been so rudely interrupted in the House, should first be completed.

"Mr. McKenzie said he had so much difficulty in the House in offering his motion, he had almost lost his voice. In addition to what Messrs. Cauchon and Laflamme had said, he would remark that ninety-four members of the House had signed the memorial of remonstrance to the Governor-General. (Applause. A voice: 'It is now ninety-five!') In addition to those who had thus declared themselves, there were numbers of Conservatives who felt just as strongly as they did, that this prorogation was an improper act under existing circumstances. If they had not signed this petition of remonstrance, it was because they had themselves sent a remonstrance. (Hear, hear.) It was well understood that some of the Conservatives who had signed the larger petition had acted more or less with us; but those to whom he had previously referred, were outside of that number. No one could contemplate the recent high-handed proceeding without feeling it to be a gross outrage, which must not be permitted. (Hear, hear.) He was quite aware that in times like these, when outrages were consummated by Government, that persons sometimes expressed themselves more strongly than prudence and the circumstances justified; but in this case an attempt had been made to sap the very foundations of the independence of Parliament. (Applause.) Since he had sat in Parliament, he had ever kept in view all legislation which should have a tendency in the direction of Parliamentary independence; but in this instance, to screen Ministers from a charge of the grossest corruption, of which a good prima facie case had been made out, it was attempted to violate that independence. (Applause.) He had no doubt that, from his point of view, the Governor-General was right when he said that he was bound to take the advice of his advisers; but we had one English writer—an authority both on law and history—who had said otherwise. This writer (Goldwin Smith) said plainly in a letter in the 'Witness,' as well as in an article in the 'Canadian Monthly,' that the members of the Committee of Inquiry were right in refusing to allow it, without the authority of the House, to be turned out of doors by a Royal Commission appointed by the parties accused. He takes the ground that the Ministry are not in a position to advise his Excellency as to a prorogation or Commission, but must take the prerogative into his own hand. (Hear, hear.) It must be borne in mind that Parliament had appointed a Committee, whose operations were frustrated by agencies which were controlled by the Administration. (True, true.) He explained that a majority of the Committee were appointed by the Ministry themselves—the accused parties, who declined to take evidence without oath, whilst the majority were perfectly willing to have all the witnesses, even were they Ministers themselves, to be examined without this, not fearing that they would tell a lie. (Applause.) Matters were in this position when the Parliament met, as it had done to-day; constitutionally there was no necessity for swearing witnesses, merely to bring them under the punishment due to perjury if they committed it: this was, because the House could deal with them as it pleased, and punish them if necessary, although they did not see the necessity for it. Members were willing to allow the Oaths Bill to pass. He had been also willing to allow evidence to be taken without the sanctity of an oath, as he believed that those who would tell a lie would have no objection at all to swear to it. (Applause.) While matters were in this state, his Excellency's advisers had advised the Governor to prorogue the Houses, thus turning the people's representatives out of doors, without giving them an opportunity of discussing the matter, or the resolution which he had offered. In order to prevent this, the Usher of the Black Rod had been directed to wait at the door of the Chamber, and knock the very moment the members entered. This was to prevent discussion, and make it impossible to deal with his resolution. At length he got it into the hands of the Speaker, who was the constituted protector of the members of Parliament. He was sorry to say, however, that it appeared to him that his authority was to be used otherwise, for he displayed unusual anxiety to prevent it reaching his own hands and to prevent its entrance on the Minutes. He desired to say that in this country, which was governed by Parliament, a cry would go out from end to end of the land against the indignity which has been put on it, and if the Government sought to escape from the consequences of their crime, they would find that their action only served to intensify the feeling. It now became the members, as rulers of the country, to do nothing unseemly, but to take every step to maintain their dignity; and, at the same time, to use every legitimate and lawful means to obtain the opinion of the country. (A voice: 'That's the advice to-day.')

"Mr. Blake did not think that Mr. Mackenzie had left much room for him to say anything. Up to this he had felt it his duty not to interfere at all in the matter, in the peculiar position in which he felt himself placed, and not to express an opinion on the subject. Now the matter was changed, the functions of the Committee were at an end, and he was no longer fettered by this consideration. He would now give them explanations as to the course which he and his friend Mr. Dorion had pursued when in Montreal, and the sentiments which had influenced them. They felt the position they occupied on the second of July as one of no ordinary difficulty; they were anxious, and they knew the country had the same feeling, that the inquiry should be proceeded with in the most expeditious and effective manner, but, after consideration, recognizing all these things, they took the responsibility of declining to accept a Royal Commission. They were aware that by accepting the Commission the inquiry might at once go on, but they felt they had a far higher duty to perform,—that from the House of Commons they received their instructions, and it was for them to maintain the dignity and independence of that body. As delegates of the people their duty was imperative, and their instructions from the House were not withdrawn; and least of all were they authorized to agree to a change of tribunal. The proposition for a Royal Commission had been made in Parliament by the Premier several times, but no member uttered a word in favour of such a course; and the Chairman of the Committee, the Hon. J. H. Cameron, had himself pointed out the inconvenience of it. These were so great that the Premier abandoned the project on account of the feeling of the House; and that feeling was sound. But the question to-day was infinitely greater than whether this question was true or false. (Loud cheers.) The question now was whether the right of Parliament to try Ministers for their crimes should be taken away. (Repeated cheers.) Those Ministers had, in the representation of more than one hundred members of Parliament—for it appeared that several had made these representations who had not signed the memorial, a number more numerous than had ever taken such a step before—advised the Crown to prorogue. The petition was most moderate, as the men who signed it asked merely that Parliament should have an opportunity of expressing an opinion and taking order; asked only that it should have an opportunity of giving advice. One reason given by his Excellency against proceeding to business was the absence of the members from Manitoba and British Columbia; but every member from Manitoba was present and had signed the petition, and one member for British Columbia could easily have been brought up from Montreal. But why were these gentlemen not present? It was because instead of advising these representatives to be here, the Ministry had advised them not to come. Ministers had first kept the House empty, and then advised his Excellency that, not being full, it was not competent to proceed to business. But that need not have invited a prorogation. It might have been met by an adjournment, though that might have given more cause of complaint to gentlemen who had come, some of them eleven hundred miles, to attend to business; yet such was the public spirit of those who had thus attended, that he did not doubt their willingness to tell the Ministers they would wait till they got their supporters together. What might happen now? There was a sealed packet of papers impounded in the hands of Mr. Starnes, and it was quite possible that, by the prorogation of the House and the consequent dissolution of the Committee, those very important papers might yet get into other hands. Perhaps what he now said might prevent that, but yesterday the House had control of those papers, and two hours ago the control had ceased. The Ministry would not have thus acted unless they had felt that delay was all that they had to depend upon; delay that would give occasion, perhaps, for loss of some important document, possibly for some death that would prevent the disclosure which they dread, for, assuming the published documents to be genuine, the position of the Ministry, and of the country through their acts, was one of the deepest disgrace and humiliation. It was now admitted that the claims of Sir Hugh Allan to the Pacific contract were looked on unfavourably by a portion of the Cabinet, but that he set himself to procure Parliamentary and popular influences, which he brought to bear upon them, until he succeeded in extracting a promise which he considered to be satisfactory. Before obtaining that promise he had threatened to prevent some of them from securing their re-election, and afterwards he assisted them, by his purse and influences, to corrupt the constituencies throughout the country. We know that very large sums were received by Ministers for this nefarious purpose, and that this was contemporaneous with the agreement of the 30th July, which Sir Hugh deemed satisfactory. If those papers were genuine, he repeated that nothing could alter, nothing diminish the infamy of that transaction. It was a bargain to give to a particular person a benefit, at the same time that Ministers accepted from him by gift or loan an immense sum of money, for the purpose of bribing the electors. These otherwise sensible men are not ashamed to say, it is true, that Sir Hugh got the contract, and that he gave an immense sum for the purposes of elections; but one thing had nothing to do with the other. (Laughter.) He was, say these persons, an ardent politician, and gave his money to support his party. (Laughter and cheers.) Do the letters show that he was an ardent politician? Yes, they do; but, Mr. Goldwin Smith has said, it was in the politics of steamboats and railways—(great cheering)—and his party was Sir Hugh Allan. (Laughter.) However, we have Sir Hugh Allan's testimony on this matter; debased as these letters show him to be, he has not told us that he lied in writing them. He only committed a few little inaccuracies, such as he and you and I make in private conversations, since we are only expected to be truthful when we speak in public. (Roars of laughter.) It is, therefore, true that he spent his money to get the contract. It has been pretended that Mr. Huntington was bound to prove every member of the Government to be directly concerned in this matter,—he (Mr. Blake) supposed they must produce an Order in Council where everything was formally agreed to. (Laughter.) But those who were acquainted with Courts of Justice knew that frauds did not usually thus discover themselves. Such things were usually cloaked, and men were often found to say, and even to swear, that simulated papers were genuine; but Courts will put these two things together, and when they find a man with documents, assuring him some great benefit in one hand and a lot of checks in the other, they take them together. (Cheers and laughter.) The business-like receipts and drafts had something to do with this idea. Sir Hugh knew that he was dealing with slippery customers, and therefore he made his terms, and put everything down in writing. The principal actor in the affair, no doubt, to-day regrets this extreme precaution, but the cause of truth and justice has been well served by it. A remark, not unfrequently heard, is to the effect that politicians are alike, and that if one Ministry is ejected the next will do something. He was glad, however, to see that public virtue was not yet so low as to permit anyone to assert this in public. It nevertheless received much private currency, and it should, therefore, be frowned down by all who believed that Canadians were entitled to the responsibility and the happiness of self-government. Men may say 'You will bribe too,' but have we not on our side of the House been endeavouring for years to make bribery difficult, if not impossible? Have we not been pressing for an election law which will give us means of obtaining cheap and searching justice in these particulars? and have we not been told that there was a doubt if this system is suited to the circumstances of the country? (Cheers.) What fair-minded man can now doubt that this affection was only made for the purpose of continuing the system of bribery and corruption which has hitherto prevailed? Who that reads the decisions on electoral petitions could help being ashamed of them? He did not blame the Speaker of the House for these things—for he was inclined, like Mr. Mackenzie, to shut his eyes as much as possible to that officer's failings—but he blamed the law. Because an illiterate man wrote his name Robertsen instead of Robinson, the petition against J. H. Cameron was thrown out, and there were many more similar decisions by which election petitions were prevented from going before even such a wretched tribunal as the present Parliamentary Committee. Yet that infamous law the Ministry had refused to rectify. What would have been the result if the Allan gold had not been scattered broadcast through the country? It was well known that there were everywhere venial persons, indifferent persons, and men with local interest to sell for money; and in counties where opinion was not very decided it was easy to change the expression of it, by purchase of the venial, indifferent, and these local undertakers. Without the outlay of Allan's money no one could doubt that the complexion of this Parliament would have been very different. Among the members, every man may not be as deeply dyed in this iniquity as the Ministry; some may not have known that they added to the crime of corrupting constituencies that of selling their country, but those who did know will resist investigation to the last, as their crime is only a little less than that of those who perpetrated it; but when he saw that with a Parliament, even thus elected, one half of the members should take the decided step that had been taken to assert the rights of the Commons, he felt confident yet in the independence of representatives of the people. Parliament might hereafter resume the investigation, and might re-establish the Parliamentary tribunal. The motion which his friend had made he might then renew, and it would meet with a very different reception from that which it had had that afternoon. He hoped now that those who had thought it was the wish of a factious opposition to desire Parliament should sit while the Committee was sitting, would consider that, of what had taken place all that had occurred since would have been abrogated, and that investigation would now be complete. He hoped there would now be an investigation, not by men chosen by the accused, not by men named by gentlemen in the dock—(laughter)—but by those who should be chosen by Parliament, indifferently to try the question of innocence or guilt—(cheers)—and try an exhaustive examination of evidence. To such a tribunal he was willing to bow, but not to three persons, whoever they might be, appointed by those on whose innocence or guilt they were to decide. He was not ready to abandon the right of Parliament to try this case. He went for maintaining the course of Justice entered on by the House of Commons, which must not be interrupted and should be resumed at the earliest moment. (He sat down amid tremendous cheers.)

“Mr. Huntington said there were occasions that inspired eloquence, great occasions, which made great men, such as the result of the large measure that had to be discussed, and of the warmth of feeling that was elicited. He would pay a poor compliment by making a lengthy speech; but however they might feel, this was a great question. He looked on it as a question, not whether a contract had been sold, but whether this country should or not be governed by Parliament. He desired to speak with reverence for the Crown, but he did not want to go back to the time of Nero, when the depository of power could fiddle while the city burned. There were times when issues were so great that the cause of truth was far greater than any man, however highly he was placed. He had told them in Parliament what he could prove of these terrible charges, if he had an opportunity afforded him. He felt that he could prove these charges then; without that he would not have jeopardized his fair fame by making them; but when he stood up at that time to do his duty, to state when he asked that means might be taken to prevent witnesses from being tampered with, and documents from being made away with, if he had then told them that, failing to wriggle out of the net into which they had betrayed themselves, the Ministry would appeal to the prorogation; if he had told them this, and had suggested that these important papers might, perhaps, be floated away, that Mr. Abbott, when asked about the draft upon him, might assert that he is the attorney of the Pacific Railway Company, and Sir John A. Macdonald himself might assert that he cannot be made to divulge the affairs of State; he might have been laughed at. (Cheers and laughter.)

“If he had half an hour of oral testimony he could explain and confirm, in the most incontestable manner, all the documentary evidence which had been already published. It had been said that he had gone into a mean business because he had got hold of secrets, and therefore could not be thought fit to sit at the table of a knight. (Cheers.) He supposed he ought to have got a certificate from the men who were guilty, in order that they might prove their own guilt. (Laughter.) What must be thought of men who argued in this manner in the press. Having, however, done his duty with the aid of men of all parties who said that he should not be crushed, what more or less could be asked than that the matter should be thoroughly prosecuted by the House of Commons itself? (Cheers.) He never believed that so long as the Ministry could prevent it, there would be any inquiry permitted. (Cheers.) He never thought that Sir Francis Hincks would testify that being advanced in life, he would prefer cash to prospective profits. (Laughter.)

“When Sir John A. Macdonald called himself a man, and when, laying his hand on his heart, he declared that there was no truth whatever in the charges which had been made, was it likely he would have appeared before a Committee and have said that there were papers in the hands of another party which would prove all the charges against him, and which he had sought to destroy. (Cheers.) Was it likely that he would have told them of that telegram asking for another $10,000 with the assurance that he would, if he got that last demand, ask for no more? (Cheers.) Circumstance had, in this matter of delay, been constantly in favour of the Ministry, but Providence had, on the contrary, been always against them. To-day it was a contest of Providence on one side and prorogation on the other; and if they would stand by their own rights, they would find that Providence would gain the victory. (Cheers.) He then returned thanks to several able men who had assisted him in carrying on this prosecution—men who were not all of the party to which he belonged, but who had firmly lent him their support. There were, indeed as many Conservatives as there were Liberals who would feel deeply humiliated at the reflection that the prerogative of the Crown had been to-day trampled in the dust, for the sake of screening men who had rendered themselves guilty of the worst crimes against the liberty of the people. The Hon. Sir John A. Macdonald always showed himself in favour of a Royal Commission, but that project did not take with the House. The honourable members, however, have the promise of this blessing being shed upon them, and Sir John A. Macdonald would now, no doubt, be most anxious to prove his own guilt. (Cheers.) They might, however, see that Sir Francis Hincks did not rush to the front with much alacrity when his evidence was called for; yet under this blessed Commission, this great alacrity will, of course, be exhibited by him. He did not believe it. Sir Hugh, according to his judgment, when called into the witness box, would say that he cannot criminate himself. The Commissioners would say certainly not, and the right honourable gentleman would then rub his hands and say he never thought of that, and that he is inexpressibly sorry. (Cheers.) He had in Parliament told the House that he could prove these charges which he had made, and told them now that although temporary contumely had been thrown on Parliament, it would at least be before Parliament that they would carry this prosecution to its rightful close. (Immense cheering.)

“Mr. Dorion said that instead of a speech he would suggest an adjournment till seven o'clock, and the appointment of a Committee to prepare resolutions to be adopted. He had merely to touch upon the Oaths Bill. Whose fault was it that the evidence had not already been taken on oath? It was the fault of those who had, in an unusual manner, sent this Oaths Bill to England, even before Parliament was adjourned, for he was informed that Bills had never, for many years, been sent to England until three months after the rising of Parliament, and when all the Acts of the Session had been printed and bound and sent at the same time; yet there were two Acts, one of our own Parliament, and one of that of Ontario, which, though liable to the same objection, had never been disallowed to this day. The disallowance must, therefore, have been procured by some influence, he would not say by what, to screen men who had disgraced the names of Canadians. The prerogative right was supposed to be employed to protect the liberties of the people; to-day it has been employed to destroy them, and this act would create an excitement throughout the country, little expected, he believed, by the Governor-General, who, in proroguing the House, had acted upon advice from persons not at all qualified to give it.

“The meeting then adjourned till seven o'clock.

“In the evening a very large and most enthusiastic meeting of members and others was held in the Railway Committee Room, under the presidency of Mr. Mackenzie. The room was crowded to its utmost capacity, and the feeling manifested was that of the deepest indignation against the Ministry, who had trampled on the constitutional rights of the people. The Governor-General was also spoken of as having over-stretched the Royal prerogative, which, instead of being exercised to shield the Ministry from inquiry, should have been used to hasten and second the proper conduct of an inquiry.

“It was moved by Mr. Cauchon, seconded by Mr. Mills, and resolved:

““That in the opinion of this meeting, the prorogation of Parliament without giving the House of Commons the opportunity of prosecuting the inquiry which it had undertaken, is a gross violation of the privileges and independence of Parliament, and of the rights of the people.”

“Moved by Dr. Forbes, seconded by Mr. Cartwright, and “Resolved—‘That, in the opinion of this meeting, the House of Commons is the proper body to institute and prosecute an inquiry into the pending charges against Ministers; and that the action of the accused Ministers, in removing the inquiry from the Commons, and appointing a Commission under their own control to try themselves, is a gross violation of the rights, privileges, and independence of Parliament; and it will

CANADA.

‘be the imperative duty of the House of Commons at the earliest moment at which it is allowed to meet, to take action for the vindication of their rights; and for the resumption of a Parliamentary inquiry.’

“Eloquent and stirring addresses were delivered by Messrs. Cauchon, Mills, Forbes, Cartwright, Hon. A. J. Smith, Isaac Burpee, McDonald (Inverness), Cunningham, Coffin, Goudge (Hants), Fiset, Senators Letellier de St. Just, Christie, Rymal, Hon. John Young, Jetté, Anglin, and Mackenzie.

“The meeting broke up about 10.33 P.M.

“Although many gentlemen who had previously been identified with the Government were present, not one of them expressed dissatisfaction with the proceedings, or in any way indicated their dissent. Each member proposed to bring the matter before his constituents at the earliest possible moment, and there is little doubt that there will be a tremendous agitation throughout the length and breadth of Canada.”

No. 5.

The EARL OF DUFFERIN to The EARL OF KIMBERLEY.

MY LORD,

Canada, August 18, 1873,

F. * No. 4.

IN my previous Despatch of the 15th of August,* I had the honour of informing your Lordship of the circumstances under which Parliament was prorogued on the 13th.

As a consequence of that event, the Pacific Railway Committee of Inquiry became extinct, and, as I have already mentioned, an interval of eight or ten weeks was to elapse before the re-assembly of Parliament. A question consequently arose as to whether, during this short recess, anything could be done to forward the hitherto abortive inquiry touching the Pacific Railway Charter.

When I was at Prince Edward Island, and in communication with my two Ministers, Messrs. Tilley and Tupper,—shortly after the publication of the McMullen correspondence,—I had intimated to them that, should the Committee of the House of Commons find itself unable to prosecute the investigation, the truth must be got at somehow, and that perhaps an inquiry conducted before three Judges of the land might prove a satisfactory issue out of the difficulty. In making this suggestion I was actuated by a double motive. In the first place, I was deeply distressed at the embarrassing relations which existed between my Ministers and myself. These gentlemen were being assailed by irresponsible newspaper correspondents with accusations of the most injurious description. Documents which perhaps in themselves proved nothing, had been brought into an alleged connection with a narrative that invested them with a very sinister signification. The Parliamentary Committee that had undertaken to discover the truth appeared to be paralyzed, and the accused were thus shut out from all means of vindicating their characters. Yet it was to these persons I was bound to recur for advice in all matters affecting the administration of public affairs. Again, as an Imperial officer, it was my duty to watch with especial care over Imperial interests. The allegations current against my Ministers and others, was that they had fraudulently dealt with certain monetary trusts, voted indeed by the Parliament of Canada, but guaranteed, to a considerable extent, by the Imperial Government. This being so, I was evidently bound, apart from any action of the Canadian House of Commons, whose powers of scrutiny seemed for the present of small avail, to obtain satisfaction in regard to these matters by any constitutional methods within my reach. Indeed, from this point of view, it was not the Ministry of the day—who are but an evanescent Committee of Parliament—but the Parliament of Canada itself that was responsible to Great Britain in respect of any malversation which might have occurred, as having confided the disposal of these interests to improper agents.

At the same time, as long as the Parliamentary Committee was in existence, even though it had ceased to act, the resort to any other instrument of investigation was not desirable. Beyond, therefore, the casual suggestion to which I have referred, nothing further was volunteered by me in this sense. When, however, the prorogation of Parliament being decided upon, and the Committee of the House of Commons being about consequently to become extinct, my Government undertook, on its own responsibility, to advise the issue of a Commission to three Judges of character, standing, and acknowledged integrity, I had no difficulty in acquiescing in their recommendation.

I have now, therefore, to inform your Lordship that on the 14th of August I signed a Commission at the instance of my Responsible Advisers, and by virtue of the powers vested in the Governor-General by the Canadian Act of 31 Vict., cap. 38, to the Honourable Judge Day, the Honourable Judge Polette, and Judge Gowan, authorizing them to inquire into the various matters connected with the issue of the Pacific Railway Charter. A copy of the Commission I have the honour to append.

On referring to it, your Lordship will observe that the purview of the Commission is very wide and inquisitorial, and that there is nothing to restrict its reception of anything that may appear to deserve the name of evidence. The professional antecedents of these gentlemen are set forth in the accompanying document, which has been prepared for me by my Ministers. Only one of them is personally known to me, viz. Judge Day, who, as Chancellor of the McGill University, received me on my visit to that Institution. Since that we have improved our acquaintance, and I have no hesitation in stating, both from what I know and have learnt, that I have every confidence in Judge Day's high sense of honour, capacity, and firmness.

I have also considered it my duty to satisfy myself as to the qualifications of the two other gentlemen with whom he is associated, and I am in a position to inform your Lordship, that they are generally regarded as persons of unblemished integrity, sound judgment, and professional ability, while the length of time all three have been removed from politics frees them from the suspicion of political partisanship.

Notwithstanding the creditable antecedents of these personages, they have been sharply assailed by the Opposition press, for which the praises of the Ministerial organs is scarcely an adequate consolation. Perhaps, however, it may not be amiss that I should append two or three articles from newspapers bitterly opposed to the Government, who, nevertheless, are compelled to bear a scant and niggard testimony to the high qualities of these gentlemen.

Under ordinary circumstances, I should have thought it sufficient to have terminated my Despatch at this point, but as matters now stand, it is necessary that I should describe to your Lordship the chief features of the controversy to which the issue of this Commission has given rise.

The objections urged against it seem to be three in number.

1st. That the present investigation is not of the kind contemplated by the Act.

This point is so entirely a question of legal interpretation that I can only be guided in regard to it by my law officer.

2nd. That the issue of the Commission is an invasion of the privilege of Parliament; that Parliament being seized of the matter, no other authority has a right to concern itself in the investigation.

I apprehend that this view cannot be sustained. The powers with which the Commission is vested being legal, and granted by Parliament without limitation, it is difficult to believe that their exercise can be held an interference with the privileges of Parliament. It is not a criminal suit, but a simple inquiry that has been instituted by the House of Commons at the instance of my Ministers. Moreover, Parliament has ceased to conduct this inquiry. The Crown possesses no absolute guarantee that it will be renewed, or that when renewed it will be effectual. If Ministers fall on a vote of want of confidence on the Address, it might prove the interest of so many persons to let the matter drop, that the Committee may not be re-appointed. Unless conducted under oath, the investigation will certainly prove ineffectual, and I am advised that it is doubtful whether any device exists by which a mere Committee of the House of Commons can be enabled to swear its witnesses. If, therefore, an immediate investigation will promote the "good Government of Canada," to quote the words of the Act, I do not apprehend that Parliament can denounce the Commission as a breach of privilege. The House of Commons may declare the issue of the Commission to be inopportune and unadvisable, and may visit with its displeasure the Ministers who counselled its appointment, but it can have no locus standi as against the Crown itself.

Moreover, it must be remembered that the Commission can in no way intercept or supersede the jurisdiction of the House of Commons. It will be quite competent for Parliament to ignore the fact of its having existed. Its influence on the present situation will entirely depend on the way in which it discharges its functions. If the public is convinced that it has elucidated the truth—no matter with what result—its position will be unassailable; if it fails to do so, it will not require the action of Parliament to proclaim its déchéance.

There is yet another way of looking at the matter. Few people will deny that individually I have the right to require an explanation from my Ministers in regard to these transactions. But it is evident that in respect of so complicated a business I have neither the time, nor the knowledge, nor the professional acuteness necessary to unravel the tangled web of incriminatory matter presented to me. If then I possess the legal power, and if, by undertaking to answer for the Act, my Ministers endow me with the constitutional power, can Parliament complain if I take advantage of these circumstances to subject my Ministers, through the Commission that represents me, to such an interrogatory as I may deem advisable, or if I order the collection of such other evidence as may be forthcoming, and is calculated to throw light upon the business?

Nor has Mr. Huntington himself any grounds to dispute my right to take cognizance of this affair. While the Parliamentary Committee was still in existence, he approached me officially and directly with communications incriminating sworn members of my Privy Council. It is true I returned him the documents he forwarded, and declined to take personal cognizance of a matter then before a Committee of the House of Commons, but I retain his covering letter, and it is scarcely competent for him—the Committee having ceased to exist—to decline the jurisdiction of the Commission so far as it is concerned with what he himself brought to my notice. By his own act he has invited my intervention, and submitted the matter to the direct cognizance of the Crown.

Thirdly. The “personnel” of the Commission is complained of as partial to the Government, and as having been chosen by the accused. Into the personal question I need not enter further than I have done. That the Commissioners should have been named by the Government is an accident inevitable to the anomalous situation of affairs; but when we consider the character and antecedents of these gentlemen, that they sit in open court, that their powers of inquiry are unlimited, that they will act under the eyes of unsparing critics, that any appearance of flinching on their part will only stimulate the desire both in and out of Parliament for further inquiry, and that in such an event a review of the case by the House of Commons is extremely probable, I do not think that any practical objection can be taken to them on this account.

I should have much preferred that Sir John's previous offer to the House of Commons Committee should have been renewed, for, although this Committee cannot be pronounced free from those characteristics which adhere to all Parliamentary Committees on such occasions, it might possibly possess greater vigour of evisceration than a Commission, though its ultimate verdict might not prove unanimous. It would, moreover, have been able to command the appearance of Mr. Huntington as a willing prosecutor. That gentleman, as I understand, intends to question the jurisdiction of Judge Day and his colleagues. Of course, the Ministerialists asseverate that he fears being brought to book, that having thoroughly prejudiced the public mind through the agency of Mr. McMullen's letters, he would willingly let the Government lie as long as possible under the odium of a vague charge which accurate inquiry would dispose of; but this seems a groundless aspersion. Mr. Huntington may be, and indeed I trust, and so far believe, is mistaken. He may have “got hold of the wrong end of the stick,” and have been too quick in drawing inferences; it may be doubtful if he is well advised in declining to appear, if that should be his determination, but that after all he has said and done he should have misgivings as to his case, is not credible, and such an injurious supposition is unjustifiable. But the difficulties in the way of making a second offer to Messrs. Blake and Dorion appeared insuperable, for both these gentlemen in declining Sir John's former proposal to make them Commissioners, grounded themselves not only on the necessity of obtaining the House's sanction to their change of status,—an objection which, though somewhat subtle, was perhaps sustainable,—but furthermore asserted that as Commissioners their independence would be destroyed. Mr. Blake, moreover, had stated that on personal grounds he could not consent to act on a Commission appointed under the advice of Sir John Macdonald. As there was no reason to suppose that these gentlemen had changed their minds in these respect, it did not appear advisable to re-approach them on the subject.

Under these circumstances it was evident—if the interval that must elapse before the re-assembly of Parliament was to be utilized—that any inquiry which might be possible must be confided to fresh hands.

That my Ministers should desire an opportunity of making themselves heard, can be well understood. The language used on their behalf is something of this sort:—“For months past we have been the objects of the vilest calumnies. Our most confidential documents have been purloined by an informer, and dishonestly connected with a narrative which is itself untrue. Hitherto we have had no opportunity of rebutting these accusations. The instrument appointed by the House of Commons to do justice

“between us and our traducers has proved powerless for that object. Considering with whom we have to deal, we require the evidence against us to be substantiated by an oath. We are not willing to place our honour at the mercy of our accusers unless protected against perjury. We ourselves are anxious to be heard upon our oaths. We doubt whether a Committee of the House of Commons can acquire the power of swearing in its witnesses without an Imperial Act. We think it but fair before Parliament re-assembles that we should have an opportunity of answering fully, point by point, the injurious allegations brought against us. This cannot be done by mere statements. We desire therefore to subject ourselves to as searching an interrogatory as a skilled tribunal or our most bitter opponents can apply. Unless we have this opportunity we shall meet Parliament at a disadvantage. Our enemies have possessed themselves of the ear of the public for months. We have had no opportunities of counteracting these influences. Let at least our story be heard before a premature decision is snatched from Parliament, saturated as it may have become with these calumnies. We do not wish to escape from the scrutiny of the House of Commons. We know we could not do so,—did we so desire,—but since its action is for a time suspended, do not condemn us to remain, during the interval, under the opprobrium of such accusations.”

It is not my province to examine the force of this pleading. I merely report it for your Lordship's information; but no one can fail to see that my Ministers are fairly entitled, so far as the law allows them, to do whatever in them lies to dissipate the impression occasioned by the enforced silence entailed upon them by the inaction of the late Parliamentary Committee.

I have now concluded my narrative of the two important occurrences in which I have found myself so unexpectedly engaged. My anxieties have been very great, and my position most embarrassing. If I have erred in the conduct of these affairs, I feel I can count upon your Lordship's indulgence to put a favourable construction on my intentions. Trained in the liberal school of politics under the auspices of a great champion of Parliamentary rights, my political instincts would revolt against any undue exercise of the Crown's prerogative. Yet it is of this I find myself accused. I trust, however, that reflection will dissipate such impressions, and that the people of Canada will ultimately feel that it is for their permanent interest that a Governor-General should unflinchingly maintain the principle of Ministerial responsibility, and that it is better he should be too tardy in relinquishing this palladium of colonial liberty, than too rash in resorting to acts of personal interference.

Considering how eager has been the controversy, I cannot hope to escape criticism, but any irritation thus engendered will perhaps be softened by the reflection that coming to this country full of faith in its people and its destinies, I was naturally slow to believe that widespread public and personal corruption should exist among its most eminent public men. If it should turn out that I have been deceived in my estimate of Canadian purity, the error is one which Canada may afford to pardon. If, as I trust will be the case, the integrity of her chief statesmen is vindicated, I shall be well content if the fact of “my not having despaired of the Republic” is forgotten in the general satisfaction such a result will produce.

Be that as it may, there is one circumstance which we can regard with unmitigated satisfaction. The alleged revelations which have taken place have profoundly moved the whole population. Apart from the section of society “within politics” whose feeling may be stimulated by other considerations, every citizen in the country, no matter how indifferent to public affairs, has been dismayed and humiliated by the thought that such things as are alleged to have taken place by Mr. McMullen and Mr. Huntington should be possible. This is a re-assuring sign, and even should it be found, which God forbid, that the Government has been unworthy of the trust confided to it, the indignation and the searchings of heart that will ensue throughout the land will go far to cleanse the public life of Canada for many a year to come.

I must apologize for the length of this and my previous Despatch, but in recording these transactions, I felt that I was contributing to a page of the History of Canada.

THE ROYAL COMMISSION.

(L.S.)

DUFFERIN.

CANADA.

VICTORIA, by the grace of God, of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland
 QUEEN, Defender of the Faith, &c., &c., &c.

To the Honourable Charles Dewey Day, of the City of Montreal, in the Province of Quebec, in our Dominion of Canada, late one of the Judges of the Superior Court, in and for Lower Canada; the Honourable Antoine Polette, of the City of Three Rivers, in the said Province of Quebec, one of the Judges of the Superior Court, in and for Lower Canada; and James Robert Gowan, of the Town of Barrie, in the Province of Ontario, in our said Dominion, Esquire, Judge of the County Court of the County of Simcoe, in the said Province of Ontario, and to all to whom these presents shall come, or whom the same may in any wise concern.

GREETING :

John A. Macdonald, Attorney-General, Canada.

WHEREAS, the Honourable Lucius Seth Huntington, of the City of Montreal, in the Province of Quebec, a member of the Honourable the House of Commons of Canada, in his place in Parliament, did, on the second day of April, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and seventy-three, move the following Resolution:—
 “That he, the said Lucius Seth Huntington, is credibly informed, and believes that he “can establish by satisfactory evidence, that in anticipation of the legislation of last “Session, as to the Pacific Railway, an agreement was made between Sir Hugh Allan, “acting for himself and certain other Canadian promoters, and G. W. McMullen, “acting for certain United States capitalists, whereby the latter agreed to furnish all the “funds necessary for the construction of the contemplated Railway, and to give the “former a certain percentage of interest, in consideration of their interest and position,
 “the scheme agreed upon being ostensibly that of a Canadian Company with Sir Hugh “Allan at its head.

“That the Government were aware that these negotiations were pending between the “said parties.

“That subsequently an understanding was come to between the Government and Sir “Hugh Allan and Mr. Abbott, one of the members of the Honourable the House of “Commons of Canada, that Sir Hugh Allan and his friends should advance a large sum “of money for the purpose of aiding the election of Ministers and their supporters at the “ensuing general election, and that he and his friends should receive the contract for the “construction of the railway.

“That accordingly Sir Hugh Allan did advance a large sum of money for the purpose “mentioned, and at the solicitation and under the pressing instances of Ministers.

“That part of the moneys expended by Sir Hugh Allan in connection with the obtain“ing of the Act of Incorporation and Charter were paid to him by the said United States “capitalists under the agreement with him.

“That a Committee of seven members be appointed to inquire into all the circum“stances connected with the negotiations for the construction of the Pacific Railway with
 “the legislation of last Session on the subject, and with the granting of the Charter to Sir “Hugh Allan and others, with power to send for persons, papers, and records, and with “instructions to report in full the evidence taken before, and all proceedings of, the said “Committee,” which said Resolution, upon a division of the said House, was lost:

And whereas the Right Honourable Sir John Alexander Macdonald, Knight, also a member of the said House of Commons of Canada, in his place in Parliament, did, on the eighth day of April aforesaid, move a Resolution in the words following:—“That a “Select Committee of five members (of which Committee the mover shall not be one)
 “be appointed by this House to inquire into and report upon the several matters con“tained and stated in a Resolution moved on Wednesday, the second day of April instant, “by the Honourable Mr. Huntington, member for the county of Shefford, relating to “the Canadian Pacific Railway, with power to send for persons, papers, and records, to “report from time to time, and to report the evidence from time to time, and if need be “to sit after the prorogation of Parliament,” which said last-named Resolution was carried:

And whereas, by an Act of the Parliament of Canada, passed on the third day of May, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and seventy-three, and in the thirty-sixth year of our reign, intituled “An Act to provide for the Examination of Wit“nesses on Oath by Committees of the Senate and House of Commons in certain cases;”
 it is amongst other things in effect enacted, that—

“Whenever any witness or witnesses is or are to be examined by any Committee of the Senate or House of Commons, and the Senate or House of Commons shall have resolved that it is desirable that such witness or witnesses shall be examined upon oath, such witness or witnesses shall be examined upon oath or affirmation, where affirmation is allowed by law :”

And whereas, the Honourable John Hillyard Cameron, also a member of the said House of Commons of Canada, in his place in Parliament, did, after the passing of the said above-named Act of Parliament, and on the third day of May aforesaid, move a resolution in the following words :—

“That it be an instruction to the said select Committee, to whom was referred the duty of inquiry into the matters mentioned in the statement of the Honourable Mr. Huntington relating to the Canadian Pacific Railway, that the said Committee shall examine the witnesses brought before it upon oath,” which was carried :

And whereas the said Act of Parliament has since the passing thereof been disallowed by Her Majesty :

And whereas no power exists whereby the said Committee, so appointed as aforesaid, can legally administer oaths to witnesses brought before it, whereby one of the objects desired by the said the House of Commons cannot be attained :

And whereas it is in the interests of the good government of Canada, not only that full inquiry should be made into the several matters contained and stated in the said above recited resolution of the 8th day of April aforesaid, but that the evidence to be taken on such inquiry should be taken on oath in the manner prescribed by the said resolution of the 3rd of May aforesaid, and the Governor in Council has deemed it expedient such inquiry should be made :—

Now know ye that, under and by virtue, and in pursuance of the Act of the Parliament of Canada made and passed in the thirty-first year of our reign, intituled “An Act respecting inquiry into Public Matters,” and of an order of the Governor in Council, made on the 13th day of August, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and seventy-three,—We, reposing especial trust and confidence in the loyalty and fidelity of you, the said Charles Dewey Day, Antoine Polette, and James Robert Gowan, have commanded and appointed you to be our Commissioners for the purpose of making such inquiry as aforesaid, of whom, you the said Charles Dewey Day, shall be Chairman, and we do authorize and require you, as such Commissioners, with all convenient despatch, and by and with all lawful ways and means, to enter upon such inquiry and to collect evidence, and to summon before you any parties or witnesses, and to require them to give evidence on oath, or on solemn affirmation, if they be parties entitled to affirm in civil matters, and to produce such documents and things as you may deem requisite to the full investigation and report of the matters and statements aforesaid.

And we do hereby order and direct that the sittings of you, the said Commissioners under this our Royal Commission, shall be held at the City of Ottawa, in our Dominion of Canada.

And we do require you to communicate to us through our Secretary of State of Canada, and also to the Honourable the Speaker of the Senate, and to the Honourable the Speaker of the House of Commons of Canada, as well the said evidence, as any opinions which you may think fit to express thereupon. And we do strictly charge and command all our officers and all our faithful subjects, and all others, that in their several places, and according to their respective powers and opportunities they be aiding to you in the execution of this our Commission.

In testimony whereof we have caused these our letters to be made patent, and the Great Seal of Canada to be hereunto affixed. Witness our right trusty and well-beloved cousin and councillor the Right Honourable Sir Frederic Temple, Earl of Dufferin, Viscount and Baron Clandeboye of Clandeboye, in the County Down, in the Peerage of the United Kingdom, Baron Dufferin and Clandeboye of Ballyleidy and Killeleagh, in the County Down, in the Peerage of Ireland and a Baronet, Knight of our Most Illustrious Order of Saint Patrick, and Knight Commander of our Most Honourable Order of the Bath, Governor-General of Canada, and Vice-Admiral of the same.

At our Government House, in our City of Ottawa, this fourteenth day of August, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and seventy-three, and in the thirty-seventh year of our reign.

By command,

Enclosure 2, in No. 5.

(FROM THE 'MONTREAL HERALD.')

"THE ROYAL COMMISSION.—We are informed that the Royal Commission, who are appointed to investigate the charges made by Mr. Huntington against the Ministry, is to consist of Mr. Justice Day as President, Mr. Justice Polette, of the Superior Court for the district of Three Rivers, and Mr. Justice Gowan, a country Judge, we believe, of Ontario. If this be the case, apart from the outrage of taking out of the hands of the House of Commons, an affair of which that body has taken cognizance, there is nothing in the distinguished character of the men composing the Commission, with the single exception of Mr. Justice Day, which can at all atone for the insult put upon the representatives of the people. Judge Polette is a very respectable member of the Bench. As to Judge Gowan we know nothing."

(FROM THE 'MONTREAL HERALD.')

"THE PERSONAL COMPOSITION OF THE ROYAL COMMISSION.—Of the Chairman of the Royal Commission, Mr. Justice Day, we of course speak only in terms of respect. He is a man of great capacity and learning, and he occupies a position which ought to make him independent. We cannot, however, we confess, imagine by what eccentric freak of judgment he has been induced to take a position, the assumption of which no one better than himself must know to be a direct breach of the privileges of the House of Commons—an assumption which the Commons of England would punish, which has already been condemned by the majority of our own House of Commons in the most formal manner in which they were able to express an opinion, and whose object is merely to enable the leaders of a broken party to shelter themselves from the necessity of appearing before the constitutional tribunal. As to Mr. Gowan, we are also ready to award him the praise of being a highly respectable magistrate, but not one whose distinction, as we before remarked, could lessen the insult offered to Parliament by his employment in this most improper task. There is, however, one circumstance which, if we are rightly informed, makes his appointment exceedingly indecent on a Commission, not like the Parliamentary Committee, composed of opposing forces, but of men whose single merit, if merit they have, is their impartiality—this is his well known friendship, amounting almost to affection, for Sir John A. Macdonald. We are sorry to say that we must speak in quite a different manner of the third associate in this Commission, Mr. Justice Polette, &c. &c. &c."

(FROM 'LE JOURNAL DE QUEBEC.')

"La commission royale, suivant le télégraphe, se composerait, du juge en chef Draper, de l'ex-juge Day et du juge Polette.

"M. Draper était appelé 'the artful Dodger,' et, avec son incontestable habileté, n'eut jamais la confiance, même de son parti.

"Nous n'avons rien à dire, contre MM. Day et Polette, et nous avons seulement à regretter qu'ils aient accepté cette commission, qui est un outrage aux droits du parlement."

Enclosure 3 in No. 5.

MEMORANDUM.

FOR HIS EXCELLENCY THE GOVERNOR GENERAL.

JUDGE DAY,

Was, in 1842 and for some years, Solicitor General for Lower Canada in a Coalition Government.

In 1849 he was appointed a Judge of the Superior Court of Lower Canada by the Reform Government of Baldwin and Lafontaine. While on the Bench he exhibited high qualities as a Judge.

In 1856 he was selected by the Government as one peculiarly qualified and appointed Commissioner to revise and consolidate the Statutes relating to Lower Canada. He was engaged at that work about seven years. Feeling a distaste for returning to the Bench after so long an absence, he retired on the statutory provision.

Since his retirement from the Bench he has been very much engaged as an arbitrator—chosen because of his high reputation for judicial and moral qualities.

Shortly after Confederation, Judge Day was appointed arbitrator by the Government of Quebec, to act with Senator Macpherson and Colonel Gray, chosen by the Government of Ontario and the Government of the Dominion respectively, to adjust the relative debts of Quebec and Ontario, arising out of their former union. Judge Day is Chancellor of the McGill University.

JUDGE GOWAN,

When at the Bar, was partner in business of the late Hon. James E. Small, who was Solicitor-General for Upper Canada, in the Reform Government of 1842, when Mr. Robert Baldwin was Attorney-General. Mr. Small was considered an extreme Reformer, Mr. Gowan a moderate one. They practised Law at Toronto. Mr. Gowan's reputation as a lawyer was speedily established and rose high. In 1843, he was appointed Judge of the County Court of the County of Simcoe, by the Reform Government of Baldwin and Lafontaine. He has held that position ever since, and exhibited therein the best qualities of a Judge, while his charges to the Grand Juries have frequently commanded respectful attention throughout the Province of Ontario.

About the year 1849, Mr. Gowan was appointed by the Governor in Council, a Commissioner, in association with the late Judge Harrison (an English barrister), O'Reilly, Campbell, and Malloch, for the drawing up and establishing of the rules regulating the procedure of Division Courts in Upper Canada. He was afterwards appointed by the Governor in Council, in association with the present Chancellor Spragge and the late Judge Burns, of the Court of Queen's Bench, a Commissioner to regulate the practice and procedure in the Surrogate Courts of Upper Canada.

After the passing of the Common Law Procedure Act, in 1856, the Judges of the Superior Courts of Upper Canada were empowered to draw up rules of procedure for the County Courts, and being empowered to associate with them one County Court Judge for that purpose, they selected Judge Gowan.

When the County Court Judges of Ontario held their Convention at Toronto some years ago, to consult about matters connected with the County Courts, with a view to recommending changes, Mr. Gowan was unanimously chosen as Chairman, notwithstanding the fact that several of the Judges present were senior to him.

In 1857, the late Sir James Buchanan Macaulay having retired from the Chief Justiceship of the Common Pleas in Upper Canada, was asked to accept the appointment of a Commissionership with others, to consolidate the Statutes of Canada and of Upper Canada; he declined to accept the position unless Judge Gowan were associated with him. Mr. Gowan, however, declined to accept an appointment, but agreed to assist the Commissioners and did so.

In 1862, disputes having arisen between the Government and the Contractor for the erection of the Parliament Buildings at Ottawa, respecting the work and the contract, a reference was made to arbitration, the Government choosing one of the arbitrators and the Contractor another; these two arbitrators agreed upon Mr. Gowan as the third arbitrator, it being provided by the reference that they should select a Judge from Upper Canada for that position.

In 1869, he was associated with Judge Wilson of the Court of Queen's Bench, Judge Gwynne of the Common Pleas, and the present Vice Chancellor Strong, on the Commission appointed by the Government of Ontario, to inquire into and report upon the working of the machinery of the Courts of Law and Equity in Ontario, with power to report a scheme for the fusion of those Courts.

Judge Gowan is the Chairman of the Commission of County Court Judges, appointed by the Ontario Government. He has been consulted by each successive Attorney-General for Upper Canada since 1842, on the subject of proposed changes in the Criminal, Municipal, and other Laws.

JUDGE POLETTE.

Was, from 1847 to 1858, a member of the Parliament of Old Canada, when he commanded attention and respect. In 1860, he was appointed Judge of the Superior Court of Lower Canada, and in that capacity he appears to have won the unanimous respect of his brother Judges of the bar and of the public. He was recommended to Sir John A. Macdonald by Chief Justice Meredith, of the Province of Quebec, as a man who is peculiarly fitted by reason of his ability, his integrity, and his thorough independence of character to act on the present Commission.

The Chief Justice was asked to act, but he declined, and recommended Mr. Polette in his stead.

The EARL OF KIMBERLEY to The EARL OF DUFFERIN.

MY LORD,

Downing Street, October 9, 1873.

I HAVE received and laid before the Queen your Lordship's Despatches of the 15th August, and of the 18th August,* giving an account of the circumstances connected with the recent prorogation of the Dominion Parliament, and the issue of a Commission to inquire into the charges brought forward by Mr. Huntington. Her Majesty's Government have read these clear and able statements with much interest. It is not their duty to express any opinion upon the particular measures adopted on the advice of your responsible Ministers, but they fully approve your having acted on these matters in accordance with constitutional usage.

The Earl of Dufferin,
&c. &c. &c.

I have, &c.,
(Signed) KIMBERLEY.

The EARL OF DUFFERIN to The EARL OF KIMBERLEY.

MY LORD,

Canada, October 4, 1873.

I HAVE the honour to direct your Lordship's attention to the subjoined extract from a speech delivered by the Hon. Edward Blake, at London, Ontario, on the 17th of August, in which he deals with the question as to how the Committee of Inquiry on the Pacific Railway Charter might be empowered to obtain evidence on oath:—

“Now there have been pointed out several Parliamentary modes by which oaths may be administered. I shall refer to one, that which at the moment commends itself most to my judgment. It is the proposal that an act should be passed authorizing certain named persons, members of the Committee or others, to administer an oath. This would in fact constitute a Parliamentary as distinguished from a Royal Commission.”

2. I have made the foregoing extract for the purpose of drawing the attention of your Lordship to the possibility of a Bill of the nature indicated by Mr. Blake being sent up for my sanction when Parliament next assembles, and of the consequent advisability of my being provided before hand with instructions from your Lordship as to the manner in which I should deal with it.

3. Your Lordship will perceive that two alternatives are suggested by Mr. Blake, each of which had better be considered separately.

4. Mr. Blake's first proposition is that the individual members of the actual Committee should be empowered by Act of Parliament to swear in their witnesses.

5. Inasmuch, however, as I have already been instructed by your Lordship that the Parliament of Canada does not possess the general power of enabling any of the Committees of the House of Commons to take evidence on oath, I should apprehend that it cannot be supposed to possess the particular power of doing so in respect of the individual members of a Committee.

6. The second alternative of Mr. Blake's is that a similar Act should be passed in which “others” should be endowed with these powers, and in illustration of his meaning he refers to the Commission which was constituted by Act of Parliament to examine into the charges preferred against Lord Melville during Mr. Pitt's administration. But with respect to this proposition it is to be observed that the persons appointed on the statutory Commission of 1804, referred to by Mr. Blake, were not members of the House of Commons, and it is especially provided by the Act in question that in the event of the death of one of the Commissioners his successor should be nominated, not by the House of Commons, but by the King, and must not be a member of Parliament.

7. Under these circumstances were a Bill of the nature suggested by Mr. Blake to be submitted for my sanction, I should feel bound to reserve it for the consideration of the Imperial Government. This course would be rendered still more imperative in consequence of my having received the enclosed memorandum from my responsible law adviser, Sir John Macdonald, whose attention I had drawn to the subject, in which he raises a further objection to the mode of procedure recommended by Mr. Blake.

8. I may remark in conclusion that the conflicting opinions thus expressed by my Minister of Justice, and by one of the most eminent leaders of the Opposition, show that grave and momentous issues would have been immediately raised had Parliament attempted to proceed to the despatch of business on the 13th of August, more especially if the programme of the Opposition, as implied by Mr. Blake's speech, included the reconstruction of the Committee of Inquiry, and the possible selection of new members to serve upon it, under the authority of an Act which it would have been alleged Parliament was not competent to pass.

9. It is obvious that with seventy members of the House of Commons absent, and not a dozen Senators in their places, no arrangements relative to the reconstruction of the Committee, especially if they required any legislative sanction, could have been entered upon on the 13th of August with advantage to the country, with justice to the unrepresented and imperfectly represented Provinces, or with any show of fairness to my Ministers.

Office of the Minister of Justice,
Ottawa, October 3, 1873.

With reference to the suggestion made by Mr. Blake, that an Act might be passed by the Parliament of Canada authorizing the issue of a Royal Commission of Inquiry, and giving such Commission power to take evidence on oath, I am of opinion that it would be within the competence of Parliament to pass such an Act, and that the Courts must hold it to be valid.

It may be doubted, however, whether a measure of this kind should be entertained by Parliament, except at the instance of the Crown.

The Statutory Commission on Naval Accounts, which resulted in the impeachment of Lord Melville, is cited by Mr. Blake. The Act authorizing that Commission was introduced at the instance of the Admiralty. Objection was taken to it on the ground that the Admiralty or Navy Board had power sufficient for the purpose. The Act was, however, considered necessary by the Crown, in order to enforce the attendance of witnesses, and to enable the Commission to take evidence on oath. The Commissioners were named in the Statute, but selected by the Crown. I would suggest that your Excellency should ask for instructions, in anticipation of a measure of the nature indicated being passed here next Session.

Enclosure in No. 8.

Chamber of the Senate,
Ottawa, Thursday, October 23, 1873.

His Excellency the Governor-General, at three o'clock P.M. this day, proceeded in state to the Chamber of the Senate, and having taken his seat upon the throne, His Excellency commanded the attendance of the House of Commons: and that House being present, His Excellency was pleased to open the Second Session of the Second Parliament of the Dominion of Canada, with the following Speech from the Throne:—

Honourable Gentlemen of the Senate,

Gentlemen of the House of Commons,

In accordance with the intimation given by me at the close of last Session, I have caused Parliament to be summoned at the earliest moment after the receipt of the Report of the Commissioners appointed by me to inquire into certain matters connected with the Canadian Pacific Railway.

CANADA.

The evidence obtained under the Commission deserves careful consideration. The Report will be laid before Parliament, and it will be for you then to determine whether it can be of any assistance to you.

A Bill for the Consolidation and Amendment of the Laws in force in the several Provinces relating to the Representation of the People in Parliament will again be submitted to you. By the postponement of this measure from last Session you will have the advantage of including in its provisions the Province of Prince Edward Island, now happily united to Canada.

The Canadian Pacific Railway Company, to whom a Royal Charter was granted, have, I regret to say, been unable to make the financial arrangements necessary for the construction of that great undertaking. They have therefore executed a surrender of their Charter, which has been accepted by me.

You will, I trust, feel yourselves called upon to take steps to secure the early commencement and vigorous prosecution of the construction of that Railway, and thus to carry out, in good faith, the arrangement made with the Province of British Columbia. A measure for this purpose will be submitted for your consideration.

The extension of the bounds of the Dominion has caused a corresponding increase in the work of administration, and seems to call for additional assistance in Parliament as well as in Executive Government. A Bill on this subject will be laid before you.

Your attention will be invited to the consideration of a Bill for the establishment of a General Court of Appeal.

Measures relating to our navigable waters and to the Inspection Laws, will be laid before you; as also a Bill for the establishment of a Dominion Board of Agriculture.

The subject of the law relating to insolvency will necessarily engage your attention.

The efforts made by the several Provinces as well as by the Dominion to encourage immigration, have met with success, and a large number of valuable settlers has been added to our population. I do not doubt that you will continue your liberal aid to this important object.

Gentlemen of the House of Commons,—

I have directed that the accounts of the past financial year shall be laid before you. The prosperous condition of our finances continues, and the revenue has been sufficient to meet all charges upon it.

The estimates for the ensuing year will be laid before you. They have been prepared with due regard to economy, as well as to the efficiency of the public service; and I trust that the supplies which are necessary will be granted without inconvenience to the people.

Honourable Gentlemen of the Senate,

Gentlemen of the House of Commons,

Your best attention will, I doubt not, be devoted to the important interests committed to your charge, and I am confident that your deliberations will redound to the advantage and prosperity of the country.

MY LORD,

Downing Street, November 7, 1873.

I HAVE the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your Lordship's Despatch of October 23,* enclosing a copy of the Speech with which on that day you opened the Session of the Parliament of Canada.

The EARL OF DUFFERIN to The EARL OF KIMBERLEY.

CANADA.

Canada, Nov. 3, 1873.

(Received 19 November.)

MY LORD,

I HAVE the honour to forward for your Lordship's information six copies of the evidence taken before the Royal Commission appointed to inquire into the recent issue of the Canadian Pacific Railway Charter.

2. Prefixed to this evidence will be found the Commissioners' Report of the number and names of the witnesses they summoned, as well as of those who failed to appear, together with a record of other facts connected with their proceedings.

3. The Appendix contains, among other documents, a letter from the Hon. Lucius Seth Huntington, in which he states the grounds upon which he declined the jurisdiction of the Commission.

4. All these papers having now passed under the consideration of the House of Commons and of the Senate, it may be premature as yet to address your Lordship upon them, but as the Commissioners allude to a communication I made to them when about to enter upon their labours, it is fitting I should acquaint your Lordship with its exact nature.

5. When my Ministers originally advised the issue of the Commission, although I did not myself entertain any misgivings as to the constitutional right of the Crown in the matter, I considered that too much pains could not be taken to prevent the proceeding having even the appearance of an attempt to withdraw the case from the ultimate control and cognizance of the House of Commons. With this view I had already conveyed a definite pledge to the remonstrant members on the 13th of August, that within as short a period as could reasonably be fixed upon, Parliament should be summoned for the express purpose of dealing with the matter in whatever way it might determine, and in the same intention, when the Commissioners, shortly before commencing their proceedings, applied to me for instructions on one or two points on which they did not feel at liberty to communicate with Sir John Macdonald, I took the opportunity of reminding them—

First. That their functions were not judicial, but expurgatory and inquisitorial; and,

Secondly, That their procedure should be conducted in such a way as in no degree to prejudice any future action which it might please the House of Commons to take.

6. Acting upon this recommendation, or rather in harmony with it, as they state in their Report, the Commissioners have very properly confined themselves to the collection of the evidence, and have not sought to anticipate the verdict of Parliament by the expression of any opinion of their own upon the facts they have elicited. They add, however, that they are prepared to do so if required.

7. I was the more induced to take the above step on learning that Mr. Huntington would probably decline to appear as a witness, or in any way to further the prosecution of the inquiry.

8. Of course, it was evident—if Mr. Huntington would consent to act either in person or by counsel—that with Sir John Macdonald, Sir Hugh Allan, Mr. Abbott, and others in the witness-box, no concealment would be possible, for in the circumstances in which they were placed the refusal of these gentlemen to answer any question would prove more fatal to their cause than the most damaging admissions; but in default of Mr. Huntington's assistance, it was equally evident that a far greater burden would be thrown upon the Commissioners than had been originally contemplated, and that the chances of an exhaustive investigation would be proportionately curtailed.

9. It was, therefore, with regret I learnt that Mr. Huntington had finally decided not to put in an appearance. Satisfied as I was, notwithstanding this gentleman's remarkably able argument to the contrary, that the appointment of the Commission was—whether assailable or not on other grounds—both a legal and a constitutional act, and, to use the language of the Law Officers of the Crown, in no sense an interference with the privileges of Parliament, it appeared to me an unfortunate circumstance that the conscientious, but, as I now apprehend it will be admitted, the unfounded scruples of Mr. Huntington and his friends upon the point, should have deprived the inquiry of that complete and thorough character it would otherwise have possessed.

10. It is true the diligence of the Commissioners in meeting the additional responsibilities thus imposed upon them, has remedied the defect so far as circumstances permitted, and I am glad to see signs of their services in this respect having at last obtained a tardy recognition at the hands of those who were at first most unfavourably disposed towards them; for there has, perhaps, been no more disagreeable feature in this business than the extraordinary amount of personal abuse which has been heaped upon the heads of these unoffending gentlemen.

CANADA.

11. In England many of our Judges have passed straight from the arena of politics to the Bench, and to these high functionaries has now been assigned an extensive jurisdiction over delicate and hotly contested political issues; but no matter what the verdict they render, it would never enter into the minds of any of their countrymen to question for a moment their professional honour. As far as I have observed the judiciary of Canada occupy as high a moral and intellectual level in relation to the other classes of society in the Dominion, as their brethren in Great Britain. They hold their appointments on the same terms,—their tenure of office is as secure,—nor would it ever have occurred to me that a taint of suspicion could attach to the National Ermine. Yet it seemed to be taken for granted that because Judge Day, Judge Gowan, and Judge Polette had been nominated,—as of necessity was the case,—on the advice of the Government, these eminent personages must therefore be ready to sacrifice their personal honour, their professional reputation, their sense of duty to the Queen, and to their country, in a transparent and ineffectual attempt to screen from justice a Ministry of whom they were absolutely independent.

12. Happily as time went on, a better feeling began to evince itself, the language of the hostile press became more moderate, and although occasional complaints were made that this or that line of interrogation was not followed up with sufficient pertinacity, it came to be admitted that some of the main purposes for which the Commission had been appointed were being promptly and fairly accomplished.

13. These anticipations have been now fulfilled by the acceptance on the part of the House of Commons of the Commissioners' Report, and of the body of evidence placed by them at its disposal,—a result which has found its final consummation in Mr. Mackenzie having founded the vote of censure he is now pressing "on the facts"—to quote the words of his motion—"disclosed in the evidence laid before us."

14. Although I should be unwilling to refer to the appointment of the Commission in any other terms than those I have already used in my original Despatch of August 18th, in which I state that although "I do not apprehend that Parliament can denounce the Commission as a breach of privilege, it would be perfectly competent for the House of Commons to declare its issue inopportune and unadvisable, and to visit with its displeasure the Ministers who counselled its appointment." I cannot help observing that in several respects the practical result obtained can hardly be said to have been unsatisfactory.

15. On the 13th of August last, although four months had elapsed since the inquiry into the Pacific Railway scandal had been first initiated by Mr. Huntington, the investigation had not advanced a step; since then scarcely ten weeks have passed away, yet the whole matter has become ripe for adjudication, and in a day or two a final verdict will have been pronounced.

16. Had no commission been issued, the interval between the 13th of August and the 23rd of October would have remained unutilized. A political crisis most detrimental to the public service, and entailing the most distressing relationships between the Crown and its Ministers, would have been indefinitely prolonged, and at this moment Parliament might probably be still discussing the conditions under which its Committee was to be re-constituted, and what steps were necessary to enable it to obtain sworn evidence.

17. Considerations of this kind however cannot be expected to mitigate the resentment of those who have all along been disposed—I do not say with justice—to regard the appointment of the Commission merely as a tactical device interposed by the accused to clog the course of the inquiry. But with this part of the controversy I have no concern, nor in making the foregoing observations do I wish your Lordship to understand me as undertaking to justify the Commission, or as accepting any responsibility in regard to it. It would not be a convenient practice for the Representative of the Sovereign to indicate the degree or respects in which he may approve or disapprove of any course recommended to him for adoption by his responsible advisers. I issued the Commission at the instance of those whose counsels I considered myself bound to follow, and I did so with the greater readiness, as it enabled me to obtain from my Ministers in an open Court those explanations in regard to their conduct which circumstances had rendered necessary, and which I had a right to require; but the vindication of their procedure in tendering the advice on which I acted does not lie within my province.

18. In conclusion I may observe that, although the Commission has acted as an effectual solvent of the political difficulty, and appears to have elicited all the facts necessary to display the main features of the story, it remains to be seen whether a further prosecution of the Inquiry will be thought advisable by those whom it principally concerns on either side.

I have, &c.,

REPORT

OF THE

ROYAL COMMISSIONERS

Appointed by Commission, addressed to them under the Great Seal of Canada, bearing date August 14, 1873, which Commission will be found printed as Enclosure 1 in No. 5.

REPORT.

To the Right Honourable Sir Frederick Temple, Earl of Dufferin, Viscount and Baron Clandeboye of Clandeboye, in the County of Down, in the Peerage of the United Kingdom, Baron Dufferin and Clandeboye and Bailyleidy and Killeleagh, in the County of Down, in the Peerage of Ireland, and a Baronet, Knight of the Most Illustrious Order of Saint Patrick and Knight Commander of the most Honourable Order of the Bath, Governor General of Canada, and Vice-Admiral of the same:

May it please your Excellency :

The undersigned Commissioners, appointed by Royal Commission addressed to them under the Great Seal of Canada, bearing date the fourteenth day of August, A.D. 1873, Have the honour to report—

1. That they met at Ottawa on the eighteenth day of August last for the purpose of making preparations for the discharge of the duties imposed upon them by the Commission.

2. The course of proceedings was then settled, and the fourth day of September last was appointed for entering upon the examination of witnesses.

3. The Commissioners on undertaking the inquiry they were enjoined to make had hoped that the entire conduct of it would not have been left in their hands, that the Hon. Mr. Huntington or some one who believed that the charges specified in the Commission could be established by evidence, would have conducted the inquiry before them, and they had resolved in such event, not only to accept such aid in the investigation but to allow to the promoter at least the same latitude in the mode of proceeding as the recognized officers in courts of justice are allowed in ordinary judicial investigations, and also to give to the members of the Government a like latitude for defence. This course appeared to the Commissioners to be just, and in accordance with what they believed to be your Excellency's wishes and expectations.

4. In the prosecution of their work the Commissioners have called before them such persons as they had reason to believe could give any information on the subject of it, or otherwise facilitate the investigation, and especially the Hon. Mr. Huntington, to whom a letter annexed to this Report,* was addressed on the 21st August last past, requesting him to furnish to the Commission a list of such witnesses as he might wish to examine, and to proceed on the day named with evidence in the premises.

5. A letter was also addressed to the Hon. the Secretary of State, giving notice of the day appointed for proceeding, a copy of which is also annexed.*

6. In the interval, between the first day of meeting and the day so appointed, summonses were duly served upon Mr. Huntington and others, to appear and give evidence.

7. On the fourth day of September, the Commissioners met, and after the publication of the Commission, the witnesses cited for that day were called.

8. Mr. Huntington failed to appear.

9. The evidence of the Hon. Henry Starnes was taken, and a sealed packet placed in his possession by Sir Hugh Allan and Mr. George W. McMullen was produced and deposited with the Commissioners.

10. The sealed packet was opened, with the consent of Mr. Starnes and Sir Hugh Allan, and the several papers it contained were put in proof.

11. The Commissioners then examined the other witnesses in attendance, and afterwards, on successive days, proceeded to the examination of those whose names are on the list styled "List of Witnesses to be examined," hereto annexed.†

12. Of the thirty-three gentlemen whose names are on that list, twenty-nine have been examined.

13. Two of these, Mr. George W. McMullen and the Hon. A. B. Foster, failed to appear, although duly summoned; the former through a special messenger sent to Chicago for that purpose.

* See Appendix, p. 261.

† See p. 92.

14. The other two, Mr. Henry Nathan and Mr. Donald A. Smith, are resident, the former in British Columbia, and the latter in Manitoba. The distance and consequent delay in securing their attendance, and the large outlay it would cause, rendered it inexpedient, in the judgment of the Commissioners, to call them to give evidence.

15. In addition to those whose names are on the above-mentioned list, the Commissioners have called and examined Mr. Daniel Y. McMullen, Sir Hugh Allan, the Hon. J. J. C. Abbott, and the Hon. Mr. Ouimet.

16. Most of these witnesses were cross-examined on behalf of the Government by Sir John A. Macdonald, or other members of it.

17. Mr. Charles M. Smith, of Chicago, was summoned by the Commissioners, but did not appear.

18. Evidence has also been given by Mr. Frederick C. Martin, and Mr. Thomas White, whose names were furnished by members of the Government, and Mr. George Norris, jun., and Mr. J. A. Perkins, whose names were also so furnished, were cited to appear, but made default.

19. The Commissioners, on the 23rd day of September, while still in the course of their examinations, requested, by public announcement, all persons possessing any information on the subject of the inquiry to appear and give evidence before them.

20. No evidence has been offered in answer to this announcement.

21. The Commission closed its sittings for taking evidence on the first day of October, instant. These sittings were public and open; and accommodation was provided for reporters of the public press.

22. The Commissioners have endeavoured, in obedience to the requirements of the Commission, to obtain from the witnesses all the evidence pertinent to the subject matter of the inquiry which they were able to give.

23. This evidence is contained in depositions, thirty-six in number, and in certain documents, all of which are annexed to this Report, and specified respectively in the accompanying list and schedule.*

24. If the evidence be considered redundant, it has arisen from the nature and circumstances of the inquiry, which rendered it inexpedient to limit its range by the technical rules of evidence observed in the ordinary tribunals.

25. With respect to that portion of the Commission which leaves to the discretion of the Commissioners the expression of their opinions upon the evidence, they have determined not to avail themselves of the liberty so given.

26. They had arrived at that conclusion before they were informed of your Excellency's views on the subject, and they feel confirmed and justified in it by a communication received before their labours commenced, to which your Excellency kindly permits them to allude, relating to one or two points on which they thought it their duty to consult your Excellency before entering upon the execution of their task.

27. In that communication your Excellency was pleased to express the opinion that the functions of the Commissioners were rather inquisitorial than judicial, and that the execution of them should not be such as in any way to prejudice whatever proceedings Parliament might desire to take when it reassembled in October.

28. The Commissioners coinciding with your Excellency in the view that the terms of the Commission do not require them to pronounce judicially on the evidence, consider that their duty will have been fully discharged when they shall have forwarded to the Secretary of State the accompanying depositions and documents with this Report, in triplicate, as required by their instructions—unless a Report of their opinion on the result of the evidence should be specially required.

All of which is respectfully submitted.

IN THE MATTER OF THE COMMISSION

CANADA.

Appointing CHARLES DEWEY DAY, ANTOINE POLETTE, and JAMES ROBERT GOWAN, Commissioners to inquire into and report upon the several matters stated in a certain Resolution moved by the Hon. Mr. HUNTINGTON in the House of Commons on the second day of April, A.D. 1873, relating to the Canadian Pacific Railway.

Present :—THE COMMISSIONERS.

On this fourth day of September, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and seventy-three, personally came and appeared before us, the above-named Commissioners,

The Honble. HENRY STARNES, of the City of Montreal, Banker, who being duly sworn, deposeth and saith :

I received a Subpoena duces tecum to appear before the Commissioners and produce the papers described therein, and I hereby produce them to be filed in this matter. The said papers were placed in my possession for safe keeping by Mr. Abbott on behalf of Sir Hugh Allan and Mr. McMullen. In producing them in compliance with the orders received from the Commission, I beg to state that I object to their being opened without the consent of Sir Hugh Allan. I think it my duty to make this objection, as they were placed in my possession for safe keeping. They are returned as they were placed in my hands as they were when I first received them. The superscription "Henry Starnes, Sir Hugh Allan, G. W. McMullen" was put on by myself; they were placed in my hands a day or two before Sir Hugh Allan's departure for England, to be left with me. There are three distinct parcels, one to Mr. McMullen, one to Sir Hugh Allan, and one addressed to myself. They were handed to me by Mr. Abbott on behalf of Sir Hugh Allan, Mr. McMullen was also present at the time I received them from Mr. Abbott.

I have no knowledge of what those papers contain.

I have no objection to the package being opened providing Sir Hugh Allan's consent is obtained.

(Hon. Mr. Abbott hereupon produced a written consent that the said package of papers be opened by the Commissioners.)

Question.—Have you any knowledge in relation to such negotiations as are described in the charges mentioned in the Commission in this matter, as being carried on between Sir Hugh Allan and Mr. McMullen for the purposes designated in this Commission?

Answer.—I have no personal knowledge.

Q.—Were you a member of an Election Committee in 1872, in conjunction with Mr. Boudry and Mr. Murphy?

A.—I was requested to go upon that Committee, but did not attend regularly.

I am aware that money was received for election purposes. I might state that I was requested by the late Sir George E. Cartier to act on the Committee, as he felt that the elections would be hotly contested and that he was aware that his opponents were well furnished with ample means, and it would be necessary to fight them with money. I objected, as I did not wish to take any part. He, however, felt that there was a desire to make the elections by means of railways, and he was determined to have nothing to do with that, as he wished to make his election upon his own merits, and it would be necessary for me to get friends to subscribe and to get as much money as we possibly could. I went round and got subscriptions. He then told me that Sir Hugh Allan would subscribe liberally, and I believe Sir Hugh Allan did subscribe very largely, but his subscription did not come exactly to my knowledge.

I cannot say how all the money came, but it was deposited with me, and by what means I do not exactly know. It was placed in the Bank of which I am President, and paid out by cheques.

This money was derived from other subscribers as well as from Sir Hugh Allan. The bulk of this money came from Sir Hugh Allan, I understood. Various parties subscribed in smaller or larger sums.

I have no original receipts which were given by the Election Committee. When the receipt was published in the Montreal newspapers, I was astonished, as I had forgotten all about it. I was surprised, for I had signed it, I suppose, in the hurry of the election; I might have signed more than one.

I know nothing about the two letters referred to in the newspapers in connection with the receipt. I have no knowledge as to where either of those letters now is.

CANADA.

The money was not paid upon any specific conditions contained in these letters. There was no condition as far as I know.

I signed this receipt inadvertently, and knew nothing at all about it till it was published in the newspapers.

I have no idea or knowledge in whose hands those letters now are.

I was not induced to give that receipt on account of any particular undertaking. I believe there were more than one receipt given. I have reason to believe there were.

I don't know what amount was derived from Sir Hugh Allan's subscription, except what passed through my hands, and I cannot say now what that amount was.

When I first joined the Committee, I understood it was to look after Sir George Cartier's election, but afterwards the Committee seemed to assume the control of elections outside of Montreal, to what extent I cannot say.

I don't know of any other information that would facilitate the object of this inquiry.

I cannot state exactly the amount I received for the support of the elections, but I think it was about sixty to seventy thousand dollars, which was raised by way of subscriptions and from Sir Hugh Allan. The envelope of the package having been removed by consent of the witness, the following endorsement was written on the inner parcel :—

"Within ten days after the end of the coming session of Parliament, the Hon. Henry Starnes is requested to deliver envelope No. 'one' to Sir Hugh Allan, and envelope No. 'two' to G. W. McMullen, unless objection be made by Sir Hugh Allan to his doing so, in which case he will open the envelope addressed to himself and act as instructed therein.

(Signed) "HUGH ALLAN,
"G. W. McMULLEN.

"Montreal, February 26, 1873."

I know the handwriting of Sir Hugh Allan, but not that of Mr. McMullen. The latter was present when the parcel was given me.

I have no objection now, seeing the consent from Sir Hugh Allan, to open the package. (The package was then opened by the witness and returned to the Commissioners.)

And on this twelfth day of September, 1873, the witness reappeared and made the following addition to his foregoing deposition. In my evidence I stated that the amount of money that passed through my hands was $60,000 to $70,000—on reference to the books of the bank I find it was $66,357.

And further the deponent saith not, and this his deposition having been read to him, he declares it contains the truth, persists therein, and hath signed.

Sworn taken on the fourth of September, 1873, } and acknowledged on the 12th of said } month and year.

IN THE MATTER OF THE COMMISSION

Appointing CHARLES DEWEY DAY, ANTOINE POLETTE, and JAMES ROBERT GOWAN, Commissioners to inquire into and report upon the several matters stated in a certain Resolution moved by the Hon. Mr. HUNTINGTON in the House of Commons on the second day of April, A.D. 1873, relating to the Canadian Pacific Railway.

Present: THE COMMISSIONERS.

On this fourth day of September, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and seventy-three, personally came and appeared before us, the above-named Commissioners,

Sir FRANCIS HINCKS, of the City of Montreal, who being duly sworn, deposeth and saith:

I presume that the best course will be to give a narrative of the circumstances beginning before the legislation. In fact it may be well that I should commence from the earliest stage of the proceedings in regard to the Pacific Railway. I believe the first person with whom I had any conversation that I recollect of on the subject of the Pacific Railway was Mr. Cyril Graham, a gentleman who acted as Commissioner for the Hudson Bay Company, in the years 1870 and 1871.

On his return from the United States, he told me that he had been in communication with several influential gentlemen, and that he thought satisfactory arrangements could be made, by which great economy would be produced with regard to the construction of the Pacific Railway. That he believed the Americans would be prepared to abandon the Western section of the Northern Pacific Road, carrying it through Canadian territory, if the Canadians would abandon their Eastern Section and carry it through United States territory by the Sault Ste. Marie. I heard all that he said upon the subject, and I must say that it produced some impression upon my mind.

About the month of May, 1871, Sir John Rose sent me a copy of a letter which he had addressed Sir John A. Macdonald, in which he informed me, that persons in London had spoken to him very much in the same terms that I have mentioned that Mr. Graham had represented to me, and suggesting in the letter either that we should approach these gentlemen in the United States, or let them understand that they might approach us, and at the same time offering that if he could be of any service in London, that he would be happy to be so.

In consequence of these statements, I certainly formed a pretty strong idea that satisfactory arrangements could be made with capitalists in the United States.

The next circumstance that I would mention, was the arrival in Ottawa of a number of gentlemen of whom Mr. McMullen was one; Mr. Smith of Chicago, was a second; James Beaty, of Toronto a third; and Mr. Kersteman and Mr. Waddington, and I think there was another whose name I cannot recollect, but I think he was a Toronto gentleman.

They asked an interview with members of the Government. The only members in Ottawa at that time were Sir John A. Macdonald and myself. I think I was the person to whom they were first introduced, and Sir John A. Macdonald consented to give them an interview, which they had. We heard what they had to say; they produced a document signed by some six, seven or eight gentlemen of standing in the United States, and of known wealth. I forget their names now, but there was General Cass, Mr. Ogden was another, and I think Mr. Scott, of Philadelphia, was another. The date was in July, 1871, probably about from the tenth to the thirteenth of July.

They were told distinctly that it was not in the power of the Government to enter into any negotiations with them. I think that Mr. Smith and Mr. McMullen had an interview with me in my own room, and we had some little conversation but did not amount to anything. It was simply an understanding that it was impossible for us to enter into negotiations at all at that time. After they had returned to Toronto, I got a letter from a gentleman who had accompanied them there, and who I understood was their professional adviser at the time, and I had some correspondence with him. I refer to Mr. Beaty. In the course of that correspondence, he mentioned his intention of going to Montreal to induce Sir Hugh Allan to join the scheme. He had not at that time been spoken to. I wrote very discouragingly to Mr. Beaty in reply, simply on the ground that I did not see how it was possible to talk about a scheme which the Government had not come to any conclusion upon, as to what assistance they could give. I did not see that the matter was in such a stage as admitted of its being discussed at all. After that I saw Sir Hugh Allan in Montreal, but as I felt that the suggestion of his name came from Mr. Beaty entirely, writing with the sanction of Mr. McMullen, I therefore inferred that the suggestion of Sir Hugh Allan came from them, and as I had been the means of preventing their opening communication, I thought it was only fair to give him the list of names who were willing to engage in the building of the Pacific Railway.

That conversation with Sir Hugh Allan must, I think, have taken place about the beginning of August. I cannot recollect the day exactly, but I do recollect that I told him that Sir John A. Macdonald would be in town I think, either that evening or the next evening. Sir John was passing through to a watering place, and intended to go from the Ottawa boat to the Quebec boat without stopping in Montreal. Sir Hugh did see him. I was not present at the interview, but Sir Hugh told me that he had had a discouraging reply from Sir John, as he did not think the Government was in a position to enter into negotiations. I afterwards went to the Maritime Provinces, and in October Sir Hugh Allan came with these same gentlemen, Mr. McMullen and Mr. Smith having been in communication with him, with another proposition. At that time there was a considerable number of members of the Government present. I have seen Mr. McMullen's statements, and he gives the names of nine of these persons, and I presume he gives them correctly. On that occasion what passed was this: The gentlemen were introduced, Sir John A. Macdonald then asked Sir Hugh Allan whether he had a proposition to make to the Government. Sir Hugh Allan's reply was—"If I make a proposition are you prepared to enter into negotiations on the subject." Sir John answered that "he was not prepared to do so," and Sir Hugh Allan rejoined "Then I am not prepared to make any proposition." That was the whole conversation on the subject that took place at that interview. Sir Hugh Allan went shortly afterwards to England, and returned very early in December. When he returned I had a conversation with him. I must have been in Montreal in December, although I have no very special recollection of it.

Whenever we met, he was always talking of the Pacific Railway and inasmuch as a great number of conversations took place of this kind, I think I ought to state, with regard to evidence of this kind, that where two persons have different interests, and not in a position to understand what is passing in each other's mind, that very often there will be misunderstandings in regard to what passed at these conversations.

My desire was to be as reticent as possible. I had no proposition to make on the part of the Government. He, on the other hand, was most anxious to get the Government to agree to some proposition, so as to enable him to make progress with his arrangements. I say this, because I observe by letters which have been published, that it is alleged that I said something about advertising for tenders, with the view to avoid the Government incurring blame. Now, I have no doubt whatever that I did point out to Sir Hugh Allan that it was wholly impossible for the Government to come to any arrangement without the sanction of Parliament, and it is not improbable that I may have discussed the question about advertising for tenders, but I could scarcely have told him that we were determined to advertise for tenders, because no such determination was ever arrived at. Several conversations took place, and different persons will have different views. I may have suggested to advertise for tenders to find out whether there was any other person besides Sir Hugh Allan, who would come forward and undertake the building of the road. We, as a Government, had pledged ourselves to procure the construction of the Pacific Railway, and we had also determined to try to do it by the instrumentality of a Chartered Company.

We were anxious to find out what persons there were in the Dominion who would undertake the building of the railway, and upon what terms they would be willing to construct it. A number of unauthorized conversations took place with Sir Hugh Allan, but Sir Hugh knew perfectly well that these conversations were unauthorized, and that I was not speaking the sentiments of the Government. I simply stated what occurred to my own mind in the course of the conversations. Sir Hugh also knew perfectly well that my views with regard to the construction of the Pacific Railway harmonized a great deal more with his own than any other member of the Government. He knew that I was not opposed individually to the admission of American capitalists. He was well aware of that from the first. He was well aware that my views were in favour of coming to some arrangements with the Americans, as there would be economy in the postponement of a certain section to a later period so as to get one complete road through. We had a good many conversations, and he was also aware that some members of the Government were much opposed to admitting Americans into the scheme at all. All these conversations took place long before the Session of Parliament—long before any scheme was determined upon by the Government. They were had with a view to my getting all the information I could with regard to the best scheme for constructing the road.

The next circumstance I would advert to was the final arrangement that the Government came to with regard to the railway, which was submitted to Parliament. That scheme was decided upon by the Government, after the most careful consideration, without any conference with any outside persons at all, as to the extent of land and money they would give.

When Parliament met, I would say that during the whole of 1871, there was a great coolness in the principal parts of Ontario with regard to the scheme. No propositions were made such as those that emanated from Sir Hugh Allan. Nothing was done until just about the time of the meeting of Parliament. It then became evident that there would be a proposition made to Parliament for the chartering of more than one Company. The Government did not think it desirable to oppose any of the Charters but to let them take their own course, taking power to establish a separate Company if they should deem it necessary to do so. I may observe that during the Session of Parliament, it became more and more clear, and I was very reluctantly convinced, that it was absolutely necessary to exclude the Americans entirely from the Company, and from that time I may say this became the settled policy of the Government.

Question.—What date do you give to that?

Answer.—The meeting of Parliament.

Q.—Was that previous to the passing of the Act?

A.—During the time the Act was under consideration, and before the passing of the Act. It was then perfectly understood by all the members of the Government that the Americans would have to be excluded. After the Session of Parliament broke up, about the 12th or the 15th of June, I think, I went to the West and was engaged in the election, and I had no communication with Sir Hugh Allan for a great many weeks, probably months—I must have left Ottawa very early in July, and I was not in Montreal after the Session to the best of my recollection. I do not recollect seeing any one, and no arrangement of any kind was made by the Government about the Pacific Railway. Nothing was to be done until after the elections. The next action taken by the Government was, I think, in the month of September or October, 1872, after the elections were entirely over, when negotiations were commenced with a view of procuring an amalgamation of the two Companies—the Interoceanic and the Canadian Pacific—Sir Hugh on behalf of his Company wrote accepting the proposition of the Government, that the two Companies should be amalgamated on condition of their being united on fair terms, taking the principal gentlemen of both Companies. The Committee of the Interoceanic Company, of which Mr. Macpherson was Chairman, gave reasons why they could not join. One of their principal reasons was that Americans were still in the Company. That document was sent to Sir Hugh Allan for his Company to report upon it, and they did report upon it. About the 16th of October, I think, a Minute of Council was prepared, and that Minute gave a full and faithful narrative of everything connected with the Pacific Railway and the negotiations up to that time.

It was hoped that that Minute of Council, as it pledged the Government to prevent the Americans coming in, and stated that the Government would take adequate means of doing so, would induce the Interoceanic Company, as it was called, to join in this amalgamation. They still refused, however, and on their final refusal it became necessary for the Government to see what course they would have to take under the circumstances. Sir Hugh Allan had been very anxious, and my own opinion is that it would not have been an unreasonable demand after the refusal of the other Company to amalgamate, that the Charter should be given to the Company of which he was Chairman. However, the Government, upon a full consideration, determined to adopt a different course of proceeding. I have no doubt they were impressed a good deal by some views of Mr. Macpherson which he put forward very strongly in his correspondence with regard to amalgamation, that no persons from British Columbia were included in the scheme as put forth, and that Sir Hugh had stated that if British Columbia were introduced the maritime Provinces would also require a representation. Mr. Macpherson thought they should be represented, and I have no doubt these arguments had as great a weight with the other members of the Government as they had with me. Finally it was arranged that a Company should be incorporated containing thirteen members, divided into fair proportions between the different sections of the Dominion; from Ontario, five; from Quebec, four, and from each of the other Provinces, one, making thirteen in all. We gave a great deal of consideration to the whole scheme, and finally agreed upon names after a good deal of negotiation. Some names were suggested and withdrawn, others were spoken to but refused to act, and finally these names were agreed upon, certainly without the concurrence of Sir Hugh Allan in any way whatever. On the contrary, it is within my own knowledge that he objected to many of the names. The names were taken as fairly as possible from the Province of Ontario, one of them the Vice-Chairman of the Interoceanic Company, another who had no connection with either, but whom it was desirable that we should select, namely, Mr. Sandford Fleming, and there was only one name that had been originally in the Canada Pacific Company, a gentleman of large means and high standing, Mr. Donald McInnes, of Hamilton. He was the only one from Ontario at all connected with Sir Hugh Allan. From Quebec one name was taken against the most urgent remonstrances of Sir Hugh Allan, Mr. Hall, of Sherbrooke. The gentlemen had each of them the same interests as Sir Hugh Allan, who had only a thirteenth the same as the others. He had no controlling power in the Company whatever. He got no benefit of any kind throughout the whole course of these negotiations. I state most positively that it was impossible for any undertaking to be got up with a greater desire to promote the interests of the country than the Pacific Railway. Every detail was considered with the greatest possible care, and as far as my own individual opinion goes, although I had very little personally to do with the Charter, I think that the Company—I do not refer to Sir Hugh Allan particularly—were treated with less liberality than the Government ought to have shown them. My opinion all along was that it was an enterprise which to be successful, the parties going into it must be treated with the greatest possible liberality. I should say further that there was a stipulation made when these thirteen gentlemen were allowed to subscribe stock that they were to offer it with the exception of a small reservation to each, on the same terms to the public as they were to get it themselves, and offices were to be opened in Ontario, Quebec, and the other Provinces for the subscription of stock. I think that is as far as I can go with regard to the transaction altogether.

Q.—In your reference to July, 1871, have you stated all you recollect that passed then—your statement was that that was an unimportant interview which led to conversation and discussion, but no results?

A.—No results. We listened to what they had to say. I mentioned that an informal proposal was made, signed by a number of gentlemen. I cannot at this moment recollect the exact number of acres per mile that was proposed, but I recollect that it was not based upon a lump sum, but upon getting a bonus of $15,000 a mile cash, and a certain number of miles on each side of the railway, which I do not exactly recollect, likely twenty.

Q.—Do you remember whether there was any expression of the wish or intention of the Government, that prominent Canadian names should be among the members of this Company; was there anything insisted upon of that kind?

A.—Nothing at the meeting of Sir John A. Macdonald and myself with these gentlemen. I think it is probable in private conversation that I may have said that it was unfortunate there were no Canadian names in the Company. It was my feeling at the time, and knowing that it was so, it is probable that I might have expressed it.

Q.—I understood you to say distinctly that anterior to the legislation on the subject in 1872, there were no negotiations between Sir Hugh Allan and Mr. McMullen, as representing the United States capitalists, for the purpose of putting this enterprise into the hands of an American Company, with Sir Hugh Allan at its head?

A.—Of course I was perfectly aware from the fact that Sir Hugh Allan came to Ottawa with these gentlemen, that he was corresponding with them, and that negotiations between him and them were going on, but I never saw their agreement, and never knew there was one until recently, when I saw among the papers published that there was some agreement which I have never seen. I have no knowledge of my own of an agreement between them, and simply knew of the fact that they were corresponding with one another.

Q.—Have you any reason to believe that any of the members of the Government were aware that negotiations were going on?

A.—I am sure that they did not know of any agreement, but they must have known just as I did, that Sir Hugh Allan was negotiating with them from the fact that Sir Hugh Allan came with them to Ottawa, but they knew of no agreement any more than I did, and they never gave any assent to it.

Q.—Have you in your possession any correspondence relating to this matter that you could lay before the Commission?

A.—I had a correspondence very shortly after these gentlemen visited Ottawa in July, 1871, with Mr. Beaty who attended them down and introduced them. It originated with Mr. Beaty. He wrote me a letter. I replied to that letter. He wrote me another, and I replied to that. I have no objection to lay it before the Commission, except simply, the objection of laying before you a confidential correspondence of that kind, but I don't apprehend that there is anything in it that any great objection can be taken to, and I hereby produce them to be fyled.

Q.—Do you mean to contradict, in unqualified terms, that an understanding was come to between the Government and Sir Hugh Allan, and Mr. Abbott, one of the members of the Honourable House of Commons of Canada, that Sir Hugh Allan and his friends should advance a large sum of money for the purpose of aiding the election of ministers and their supporters at the ensuing general elections, and that he and his friends should receive the contract for the construction of the Pacific Railway?

A.—Yes; and I would add this, that of course I cannot positively swear with regard to anything that passed between individual members of the Government and Sir Hugh Allan, but I know of my own knowledge that everything connected with the Pacific Railway Charter came under my own observation, and I know that it was not given with any reference to that whatever.

I positively contradict it.

Q.—Do you know whether such an understanding was come to between these gentlemen—Mr. Abbott and Sir Hugh Allan, and any member of the Government?

A.—I know of none.

Q.—Were your relations with Sir Hugh Allan as intimate as those of the other members of the Government, or more or less?

A.—I should think about the same, very much about the same.

Q.—Have you any knowledge that any money was furnished by Sir Hugh Allan for the support of the elections?

A.—Well, I suppose I may say I have that knowledge now, but if I refer back to the period of the elections, No. I am now aware from circumstances I have heard, and which I suppose the whole public have got, that Sir Hugh Allan was a liberal contributor to the election fund. I am aware of this from circumstances that have come since to my knowledge.

Q.—Had you any knowledge of that at the time or before the elections?

A.—No. Not until long after the elections, a considerable time after.

Q.—Do you know for whose election any particular sums were contributed?

A.—I cannot say that I do. I have reason to believe that there was a very large amount contributed for the Montreal elections.

Q.—You state that Sir Hugh Allan was not to have any controlling influence in the Company; was it not understood that he was to be President?

A.—I do not know that it was so understood. Of course members who went in were perfectly free, I presume, to vote for whoever they pleased. I did not take any part in the communication that passed between any of these gentlemen, and I really do not know what passed. I don't know whether they were canvassed by any member of the Government on behalf of Sir Hugh Allan, but I would not be surprised if they were.

Q.—Can you state any certain sum of money that was contributed by Sir Hugh Allan?

A.—No. I cannot state of my own knowledge. I cannot give hearsay evidence.

Q.—Have you any knowledge that any sum of money was offered to any member of the Government for the purpose of influencing him in connection with the Pacific Railway?

A.—I am perfectly convinced there was nothing of the kind.

Q.—Or any other inducement or advantage?

A.—None.

This may be a proper time to explain a circumstance which has been referred to in the papers, which seems to imply that I desired some inducement of some kind. Reference was made to my having stipulated for a situation on the Pacific Railway for one of my sons. Now I desire to explain exactly what passed. When I wrote my letter very hastily, I at the moment really had forgotten the circumstance which made very little impression upon my mind, but I afterwards distinctly recollected it. My youngest came in October, 1871, to pay a visit to his friends. He then held an office in British Guiana, and came here on leave of absence. I was anxious to keep him in Canada, and to establish him in business. Sometime during the fall of 1871, and while Sir Hugh Allan was absent from the country, a friend in Montreal suggested to me the idea of purchasing out a forwarding business, which was likely to become vacant in consequence of the death of a gentleman, who died in the latter part of November, 1871, and it was supposed that his business after his death would be disposed of. This matter had been brought under my consideration, and I took the opportunity of Sir Hugh Allan's being in Ottawa, to consult him on the subject. He was on a visit for three or four days at Rideau Hall, in January, eighteen hundred and seventy-two (1872), after his return from England. The cause of my having any conversation with him, was simply to ask his advice with regard to this business, as I considered him more competent to give an opinion than any one that I knew of. He strongly advised me to have nothing to do with it, and at the end of the conversation, I simply said, If you hear of any opening for my son, I would be glad if you would bear him in mind. He made the remark that when the Pacific Railway is started, there will be plenty of opportunities, and so little importance did I attach to the conversation that I never mentioned it to my son, and it never crossed Sir Hugh Allan's mind or mine that there was anything corrupt one way or the other, with reference to the conversation. If it was wrong at all, I am alone responsible for it, for no other member of the Government knew anything about it, nor did I attach importance to it. Of course I have seen Mr. McMullen's narrative, and if there is anything I have not noticed, I would like to have an opportunity of adding to this statement.

I say most distinctly that no such conversation was had with me that a round sum of money down would be preferred by me at my time of life. I swear most positively that no such conversation ever took place. No such thing was ever mentioned by me to Sir Hugh Allan or by him to me. There is a statement that I said something of Sir George Cartier's jealousy with regard to the Grand Trunk to the Pacific. Mr. McMullen thought I had a conversation to that effect with him. I can only say that I have no recollection of any such conversation. I don't think that it is at all likely that I had spoken to him about Sir George Cartier's views on the subject, but it is quite correct to say that Sir George was very strongly opposed to the Americans having any interest in the scheme.

Most unquestionably the Americans never received any pledges of any kind or description, as stated by Mr. McMullen.

Q.—Did you not mention a Memorandum, of which you had taken a copy, given you by the Americans?

A.—I took a copy of the names, but not of the Memorandum, and these I handed to Sir Hugh Allan.

There was no money received or paid by the Government for or in consideration of giving the contract.

There is mention made in Mr. McMullen's letter that I received a specific sum of $4,800 from Sir Hugh Allan. I deny this in the most positive terms. I received no sum of money whatever.

Q.—By Sir John A. Macdonald through the Chairman.

Can you state when the elections commenced generally, and when they ended?

A.—My impression is that they commenced about 15th July, or perhaps the beginning of July, and I should say from memory that they ended about the middle of August.

Q.—Up to the time of the return of the writs of the elections which took place in September, was there any policy suggested to the Government, or before the attempt of the amalgamation of the two Companies?

A.—None.

Q.—During all that period was it or was it not understood that a strenuous attempt should be made to effect an amalgamation of the two Companies?

A.—Certainly, and much later I had reason to believe that there was good ground to expect that an amalgamation would take place.

During the whole period the elections were going on, and until long after, perhaps as late as the beginning of October this was the case.

Q.—In October, were or were not the efforts of the Government renewed to effect an amalgamation of the two Companies?

A.—Yes.

Q.—Was there any suggestion from any person to the Government that you are aware of, or was it the policy of the Government to issue a Charter under the Government Act till after the failure of all attempts at amalgamation?

A.—Certainly not.

Q.—Then the Charter which was issued and is now in existence is based on a policy which was only adopted by the Government in October or November after the attempt to amalgamate had proved a failure?

A.—Yes, I should be inclined even to put it to a later period. The arrangement of the new Company took a considerable time. I presume that it was about the latter end of November that the policy of the Government to work by means of a Company of that kind was decided upon.

And further, for the present, deponent saith not.

And on this fifth day of September, 1873, reappeared the said witness who desires to give some explanation of his answer to the question on a preceding page of his deposition, and gives the following explanation:

I wish to answer this question at greater length. I never heard of any suggestion to the Government to issue a Charter under the General Act, and the Government never contemplated issuing such a Charter till they became satisfied that it was impossible to effect an amalgamation between the rival Companies.

The correspondence alluded to in my foregoing deposition is in the words following:—

LETTER MARKED "B."

DEAR SIR,

Toronto, July 17, 1871.

I have been thinking over the suggestion about the introduction of some of our Canadian capitalists into the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, and thought it proper to write to you for the purpose of having your views upon the matter, and especially to have the names you would suggest. Our American friends have no objection; on the contrary, they are anxious to meet the reasonable views of yourself or the Government on that point. You will oblige, therefore, by naming such persons as you think proper to have associated in the matter, either from personal or political considerations. Those who have already done anything in the way of a formation of a company, or with that object in view, we would be specially glad to deal with. We have authority, to a certain extent, to distribute some shares in the concern, which if they would not be of any profit, would not be any loss to the holders, and no money is required. If you could make it convenient to write by return mail, it would be convenient that we might consult with one of the American gentlemen now here.

LETTER MARKED "C."

(Confidential.)

MY DEAR SIR,

Ottawa, 20th July, 1871.

I have been almost constantly confined to the house since I received your letter of the seventeenth, and having at once sent you a telegram, that would enable you to assure your friends that no such arrangement as you suggested would be practicable, I put off writing until I could do so more satisfactorily. It strikes me that you fail to appreciate the suggestion relative to Canadians being induced to interest themselves in the projected railway to the Pacific. I am inclined to believe that some Americans of capital and influence might be induced to take hold of the scheme, but in my judgment they will find it expedient, if not absolutely necessary, to associate themselves with Canadians of equal position and means, by whose instrumentality this very gigantic scheme can be brought favourably before British capitalists. Any scheme requiring large aid from Government will be viewed with great jealousy by the public. It is not the business of the Government to name parties nor to suggest to anyone that they would like particular persons brought into a scheme. The Government have to consider propositions brought before it on their merits, and will be expected, I think, to see that the Canadian promoters of any scheme are not only able, but willing to put money into it—a most indispensable condition, which you seem not to attach any importance to.

I fear that you are going altogether too fast when you refer to an authority to distribute shares in a Company which has not even been formed, and the projectors of which are not yet in a position to take the most initiatory step. I inferred from what I heard from the American gentlemen who lately visited Ottawa, that they had come under a complete misapprehension of facts, and that they believed that Mr. Waddington and Mr. Kersteman had had some previous understanding with the Government. You may rely on it that one of the main difficulties in the present scheme is, that Canada is, as it were, represented by Mr. Kersteman chiefly, who is looked on by those with whom I have conversed, as a "man of straw." It is clear that men of this type would only be taken hold of by capitalists on the ground of their having influence of some kind, for which they must be paid, and if paid, the payment must come from the public chest eventually. The American gentlemen who have means expect, and have a right to expect, a good contract, but it is clear that if they have to subsidize Canadians, their demands will be higher. A great mistake has, I fear, been already made, and your letter induces me to think that you contemplate proceeding further in a wrong direction. The first step will be for the Government to determine what aid they will give in land and money, and things would have gone much smoother if that had been decided before any appeal had been made to capitalists on the other side. When terms have been agreed to, then the names to be inserted in a Charter will become a matter of consideration and negotiation. This is the view which I take, but you will understand that I am merely giving you my own ideas and without consultation. I know, however, that there is great anxiety that this work should get into first-rate hands.

Yours faithfully,
(Signed) F. HINCKS.

LETTER MARKED "D."

(Confidential.)

DEAR SIR,

Toronto, 24th July, 1871.

I am much obliged to you for your last letter and the observations you make therein. I had a keen appreciation of the proprieties and necessities of the case when I understood the matter. You must notice, however, that I never saw Mr. Waddington until I met him on my way to Ottawa; and I believe I had only spoken to Mr. Kersteman about two or three times before that Wednesday when I started for Ottawa upon a notice received two hours before in the Court House that I was expected to go. I learned pretty nearly all I knew on my way down. I had just one conversation that amounted to anything before I left, with Mr. K.

I then perceived that the whole matter was disorganized and required complete reconstruction as far as Canada was concerned, but I could not then back out. I was up to that point only introduced as a lawyer, and of course had to attend to my clients' behests. I could not do even what I thought prudent at Ottawa. The very suggestions made pressed themselves upon my attention from the very beginning; but how to arrange them and how to meet obstacles of the present position I could not then determine. When I returned home with the knowledge I had made, I made up my mind both from the standpoint of public policy and the legal standpoint, that no Senator or Member of Parliament could be in the Company, much less be on the Board as a Director. This settled one question directly, at the same time it opened up new difficulties. The field is very limited for selection when you exclude the Senators and Members of Parliament, and where to appeal was another grave question. Of course we do not now seriously contemplate to have on the Board either Mr. W. or Mr. K., although they have both done a kind of service that must be acknowledged. My own view was, and I think it is or will be your view, that names must be presented to the Canadian and general public that will at the least have the appearance of not only being willing but able to command the money or capital necessary to build the road, and which will meet with the approval of Parliament. These names are few and far between in Canada.

Taking the cue I received, I at once upon my return entered into negotiation with Mr. Laidlaw, who I now am fully aware has been to some extent in communication with gentlemen in Montreal, such as Allan, Stephen, and King, to the same end that we have in view, although nothing substantial has been done. The probabilities are, I will go with him to Montreal before the end of a week or two on this subject. What it may result in I cannot tell. It must not be imagined, however, that the present organization, although immatured and incomplete, is to be despised. I assure you that it is not either in this country or the United States. We do not mean to make any fuss about subsidizing Canadians. Canadians will be quite willing to come into any undertaking that they think will pay, and we do not intend, whatever may be the end, to go into anything else. We have room for others, and mean to get them, and there are shares still open, and we do not expect men to associate in an important enterprise of this sort without substantial inducements. They will not do it for amusement, that I have learned in my short life. As to such men as Waddington and Kersteman, being representative men, it is not thought of. They will, however, put themselves forward, and no one that I know of can prevent them; but all that will, if it is not already, be satisfactorily arranged. There are a few men to be thought of in this connection in Ontario, Gzowski, Laidlaw, Manning, McGivern, and Adam Brown, of Hamilton, Wilson, of Picton, are presentable. Then in Quebec, Hugh Allan, Geo. Stephen, King, of Bank of Montreal, and one or two more that some one else could name would be all that on first sight can lay claim to any notoriety or availability in this direction. Many business men might be suggested both here and there if time permitted, but these are prominent, yet after all they are very few; and of others how many would be willing to take stock with the Grand Trunk before their eyes. Even some of these names are not the most popular in railroad connection. As the matter now stands, I am the representative of the American gentlemen who are interesting themselves in the road. And except for the waywardness of Mr. Waddington, would be the only medium of communication for the Canada gentlemen. I myself am of the opinion that there is plenty of time before the surveys are complete or before Parliament sits to consider all these questions; still such a Company as will be necessary for this purpose to accomplish a work so extensive and important cannot be arranged in a month even; so time had better be taken by the forelock. There is no doubt very crude notions have been entertained about this matter, but I think they are now pretty well dismissed. I am satisfied, however, unless the Government grants are very substantial, few will be inclined to engage in an enterprise of such magnitude.

I remain, yours very truly,

Sir Francis Hincks, Ottawa, Ont.

LETTER MARKED "E."

(Confidential.)

MY DEAR SIR,

Ottawa, 26th July, 1871.

I have received your letter of the 24th inst. I note that you had yourself arrived at the conclusion, before coming to Ottawa, that "the whole matter was disorganized and required complete reconstruction." You mention your intention of proceeding with Mr. Laidlaw to Montreal to see certain parties. Mr. Laidlaw is represented to be a shrewd business man, and yet from your account he is about to see persons regarding a scheme the advantages of which neither he nor you can have the slightest idea of; at least I certainly am wholly ignorant at this moment what aid in land and money the Government will recommend to Parliament to grant. How anyone under such circumstances can look to men of business about being concerned in a scheme, I am at a loss to comprehend, and I am persuaded that owing to Mr. Kersteman's premature and most injudicious proceedings, the greatest injury has been done to a great undertaking.

Believe me, truly yours,

IN THE MATTER OF THE COMMISSION

Appointing CHARLES DEWEY DAY, ANTOINE POLETTE, and JAMES ROBERT GOWAN, Commissioners to inquire into and report upon the several matters stated in a certain Resolution moved by the Hon. Mr. HUNTINGTON in the House of Commons on the second day of April, A.D. 1873, relating to the Canadian Pacific Railway.

Present: THE COMMISSIONERS.

On this fourth day of September, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and seventy-three, personally came and appeared before us, the above-named Commissioners,

ANDREW ALLAN, of the City of Montreal, who being duly sworn, deposeth and saith:

I know Mr. McMullen by sight, but I have never spoken to him. I have heard the charge read, and I have no knowledge of any such agreement as mentioned in it having been made by Sir Hugh Allan and Mr. McMullen as representing certain American capitalists. I have no knowledge of the subject at all. I have no knowledge that any agreement was ever made of the kind between Sir Hugh Allan and G. W. McMullen relating to the furnishing of funds necessary for the construction of the Pacific Railway, George W. McMullen acting for certain United States capitalists.

Q.—Have you any knowledge relating to this matter of the Pacific Railway and the charges that have been read to you?

A.—I have no knowledge of any kind relating to the matter.

Q.—Have you any knowledge that any money was advanced by Sir Hugh Allan to promote the elections?

A.—I have not.

I know nothing personally of the matter at all. The only thing I know is from what I have learned from reading the newspapers.

I am a brother of Sir Hugh Allan, and his partner in business.

Q.—By Sir John A. Macdonald through the Chairman—

Have you been in the habit of discussing these matters with your brother?

A.—I was not. We never spoke about it at all until these matters were published in the newspapers.

IN THE MATTER OF THE COMMISSION

Appointing CHARLES DEWEY DAY, ANTOINE POLETTE, and JAMES ROBERT GOWAN, Commissioners to inquire into and report upon the several matters stated in a certain Resolution moved by the Hon. Mr. HUNTINGTON in the House of Commons on the second day of April, A.D. 1873, relating to the Canadian Pacific Railway.

Present: THE COMMISSIONERS.

On this fourth day of September, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and seventy-three, personally came and appeared before us, the above-named Commissioners,

E. L. DE BELLEFEUILLE, of the City of Montreal, Advocate, who being duly sworn, deposeth and saith:

I have heard the charge read.

Q.—Have you any knowledge of an agreement between Sir Hugh Allan and Mr. McMullen, acting for certain American capitalists, with a view to furnishing funds by the Americans, for the building of the Pacific Railway?

A.—I have none. Not the least.

Q.—Have you any knowledge of any negotiations whatever between Sir Hugh Allan and Mr. McMullen?

A.—I know nothing personally, except what appeared in the public newspapers.

I knew nothing of it before it appeared in the public prints.

Q.—Did you take a part in the late elections of last summer?

A.—I did in some counties, but not in Montreal East.

Q.—Are you aware that any sums of money were supplied from any source whatever, for the purpose of carrying on the elections in Lower Canada?

A.—I know that Sir Hugh Allan did advance some money for the elections, but don't know what amount. That advance was made some time in August I think.

Q.—To whom was the money paid?

The witness objects to this question, inasmuch as he does not see any relation between the question and the accusation which the Commission is instructed to inquire into.

Objection over-ruled.

A.—I know of only one sum of money which was paid, and only one person who received money, namely—Louis Beaubien, of Hochelaga. It was paid to him for the purposes of his election.

Q.—Do you know of any money that was paid for the promotion of Sir George Cartier's election?

A.—I do not know it personally, but I was not a member of the Committee of Sir George Cartier.

Q.—Do you know what amount was advanced to Mr. Louis Beaubien for his election?

A.—He got a cheque for seven thousand dollars from Sir Hugh Allan. I have no personal knowledge of any further sums being advanced by Sir Hugh Allan. This sum advanced to Louis Beaubien was made in September, I think, and I can now remember that he was paid this amount after he was elected. I am positive of that now.

Q.—Why was it given to him then?

A.—To pay the expenses made in his election, and I now well remember Mr. Beaubien gave his note for it. I think he had to refund it. I don't know what delay he would have given him to pay it.

I could not say from what source this money was derived, I only saw the cheque of Sir Hugh Allan. I don't know where the money came from.

Q.—Have you any knowledge whether this money was advanced at the request of any member of the Government?

A.—No; I think that I was the first person and only one to ask Sir Hugh Allan to assist Mr. Beaubien.

Q.—Have you any documents in your possession which would throw light on the subject of the inquiry before the Commission?

A.—I don't see that I have. I was acting as Secretary of the Canada Pacific Railway, and the documents I have are documents regularly filed.

A good deal of correspondence took place between the Canada Pacific Company and the Interoceanic Company in 1872, which is in my possession as guardian. They may have some bearing on the accusation in relation to its first part as regards its connection with the Americans. But so far as the Pacific Railway Company is concerned, I deny most positively any such connection.

I have not got the said correspondence with me, but all the documents contained in it must be in the hands of the Government and have been laid before Parliament.

To Mr. Abbott, through the Chairman.

I was Secretary of the Canada Pacific, of which Company Sir Hugh Allan was President, and under the instruction of the President and the Board, I published an advertisement in the newspapers in all the principal towns in the Dominion stating that stock books had been opened and anybody who wished to subscribe could go to such places and do so. The public were invited to subscribe for whatever amounts they would desire to take in the stock of the Canada Pacific Company. That was during the summer of 1872. I was named Secretary in June. I attended to that business in July, 1872. These books were opened in the towns of the different Provinces of the Dominion. The advertisement was published and the books were sent by me, and they remained there for I think thirty days to enable any person desirous of subscribing in them to do so within the delay mentioned.

The books were returned to me with a certificate of the agents, stating if shares had been subscribed and to what amount.

The whole stock was thrown open to the public. There was no reservation of the stock. Sir Hugh Allan is President of the Montreal Northern Colonization Railway Company, and Mr. Louis Beaubien is its Vice-President; and I know that for two and a-half or three years they were very intimately connected in order to ensure the success of that railway; and it may be, so far as I know, in consequence or in consideration of the friendship existing and such relations between them—Mr. Beaubien and Sir Hugh—that Sir Hugh made this loan of money to help Mr. Beaubien in his election of 1872. When I asked the money from Sir Hugh Allan, I did not in the least mention any interests of Sir Hugh Allan or Mr. Beaubien in the Pacific Railway. I only considered Sir Hugh as a friend of Mr. Beaubien, and I thought that, like some others of his friends, Sir Hugh Allan would help Mr. Beaubien in the election he had made, and which was then completed.

I have no papers on this matter except those which came into my hands as Secretary, except a few letters that can have no bearing on this subject at all.

I have had no correspondence whatever with the Americans.

And further deponent saith not, and this his deposition having been read to him, he declares that it contains the truth, persists therein, and hath signed.

On this fifth day of September, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and seventy-three, personally came and appeared before us, the above-named Commissioners,

VICTOR HUDON, ESQUIRE, of the City of Montreal, Merchant, who being duly sworn, deposeth and saith:

I know Sir Hugh Allan. I do not know Mr. McMullen.

I have no personal knowledge of any arrangement between Sir Hugh Allan and G. W. McMullen, having for object the construction of the Canadian Pacific Railway.

CANADA.

I took some interest in the elections in Montreal in 1872. I was one of the members of Sir George Cartier's Committee for Montreal East.

I am aware that there were sums of money subscribed to carry on that election. Ordinarily in elections we have a Committee and friends who subscribe. I do not know the names of the persons who subscribed at this election. I heard that Sir Hugh Allan was to subscribe. I do not know how much he did subscribe. I know some of the members of the Committee; I think all of them subscribed something. A short time before the election I learned that Sir Hugh Allan had subscribed.

Sir Hugh Allan was not a member of the Committee. I do not know the amount subscribed by Sir Hugh Allan, nor by any other members of the Committee.

I have no knowledge of anyone having subscribed $20,000 during the elections. I have not in my possession any letter or document bearing upon this inquiry.

I have knowledge of the subject of this inquiry only by what I have seen in the newspapers, I have no personal knowledge on the subject. I have stated all I know in reference to the sums of money subscribed for the elections.

And further the deponent saith not, and this his deposition having been read to him, he declares it contains the truth, persists therein, and hath signed.

IN THE MATTER OF THE COMMISSION

Appointing CHARLES DEWEY DAY, ANTOINE POLETTE, and JAMES ROBERT GOWAN, Commissioners to inquire into and report upon the several matters stated in a certain Resolution moved by the HON. Mr. HUNTINGTON in the House of Commons on the second day of April, A.D. 1873, relating to the Canadian Pacific Railway.

Present: THE COMMISSIONERS.

On this sixth day of September, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and seventy-three, personally came and appeared before us, the above-named Commissioners,

LOUIS BEAUBIEN, of the City of Montreal, a Member of the Honourable The House of Commons of Canada, who being duly sworn, depose and saith:

I am a member of the House of Commons. I am Vice-President of the Montreal Northern Colonization Railway. I hold no situation or directorship in the Canadian Pacific Railway. I have heard read the charges which the Commission has been appointed to inquire into.

I know Sir Hugh Allan, and have met Mr. McMullen.

Q.—Are you aware of any agreement or negotiation being made between Sir Hugh Allan and Mr. McMullen relating to the matter expressed in these charges?

A.—I am not aware of any.

Q.—Do you know of any agreement made by Sir Hugh Allan with Mr. McMullen acting for United States capitalists to furnish funds necessary for the construction of the Pacific Railway?

A.—No, I have no knowledge of any such transaction. I was one of the Provisional Directors of the Canada Pacific Company, but I only joined when these things are supposed to have taken place, and have no knowledge of them whatever.

Q.—Was your connection with the Canada Pacific Railway Company subsequent to the period referred to and before the legislation of last Session?

A.—My name was included among the Provisional Directors when that Company was incorporated, that was the first time I was connected with it.

The period I refer to was the Session before the last. I was not a member of the Dominion Parliament then.

Q.—Are you aware of parties who were expected to take up the stock of the Canada Pacific Company?

A.—No, I was not aware.

Q.—Do you know whether any American capitalists were expected to furnish money for the purposes of the railway?

A.—No, I do not.

Q.—Have you ever, or had you at that time seen any list made out by Sir Hugh Allan as to the distribution of stock?

A.—No, I had not.

Q.—Do I understand you to say positively that you know nothing at all relating to this matter expressed in the first clause of the charge which you have just heard read to you?

A.—Nothing at all.

Q.—I see your name signed to a Memorandum of the Canada Pacific Railway Company, upon a statement submitted by the InterOceanic Railway Company to the Government of Canada, along with the names of Sir Hugh Allan and J. J. C. Abbott. Were you a party to a Memorandum of that kind?

A.—I was. It is signed "Hugh Allan," "J. J. C. Abbott," "Louis Beaubien."

Q.—Had you any knowledge of any negotiations concerning the amalgamation of these two Companies?

A.—All I know is what is contained in the Blue Book, entitled, "Charter for the construction of the Pacific Railway, with papers and correspondence." That is all the proposal that I ever heard was made.

Q.—Did you take any personal part in any of the negotiations?

A.—I signed all these documents after being named by the Company on its Committee, which was termed the Executive Committee.

Q.—Do I understand you to say that you signed this document, and took an active part in the negotiations which took place between the Canada Pacific Company and the InterOceanic Company?

A.—I took all the part referred to by these documents.

Q.—Had you any interviews on the subject of the amalgamation?

A.—No; I had none that I remember of.

Q.—Have you any knowledge of the agreement or understanding described in the charge between the persons connected with the railway and the Government?

A.—None.

Q.—Have you any knowledge of any money having been advanced by any persons connected with the railway in Quebec, for the promotion of the elections?

A.—I have reason to believe that Sir Hugh Allan advanced a certain amount of money to be used in the elections.

Q.—What amount?

A.—I cannot say.

Q.—Was it a large sum?

A.—I have no means whatever of judging.

Q.—Do you know of any specific case in which money was advanced by Sir Hugh Allan, for the purpose of aiding the election of Ministers and their supporters at the then ensuing elections?

A.—Not Ministers. I may mention this fact, a friend of mine and a supporter of the Government, some time before the elections wanted me to get up subscriptions for his election, to a small amount. I went to Sir Hugh Allan, and he consented to help that gentleman. The Government never knew of it, and the Government don't know of it now at this present moment. As this was a private matter between Sir Hugh Allan and that gentleman—for I state under oath that the Government know nothing about it—I would not like to give the name of the gentleman. The amount he received was one thousand dollars. The gentleman who advanced the money was Sir Hugh Allan.

In my own case, Sir Hugh Allan was called upon by one of my friends about three weeks after my election. My election took place on the 30th of August, and the money I am going to mention was obtained about the middle of September. My friends called upon Sir Hugh Allan, and told him that my expenses had been a little heavy, and asked him to advance money to help me in paying back the expenses of the election, which were borne by myself. He consented to do so. I received the money and gave him a receipt for it. In that receipt it is not stated that the Government would reimburse Sir Hugh for the amount of it. I could not find a copy of that receipt, but I saw it a month ago when it was mentioned in McMullen's letter. This morning I was taking it down as well as I could remember in my memorandum book. If there is any change in the wording of the receipt, I can swear it is not a material change.

The receipt is as follows:—

"Received from Sir Hugh Allan the sum of seven thousand dollars, which I agree to repay him within one year, if he be not sooner reimbursed, along with other sums advanced by him in aid of the elections."

CANADA.

This note is due now. The amount of the note was obtained at the solicitation of my friend. The Government never knew of this arrangement at all.

I will correct this answer in so far as I have reason to believe that Sir Hugh Allan subscribed money to the Central Committee Fund of Montreal, and I was informed that Sir Hugh Allan stipulated that, if necessary, I would be helped out of the fund. I understood, also, that Sir George Etienne Cartier was opposed to any of the funds being used for that purpose; but I believe that gentlemen on the Committee, notwithstanding this, gave without Sir George's knowledge some money to my friends. I will state, also, that I know that Sir Hugh Allan helped two candidates who were believed to be friendly to the Administration. As the Government did not know that they were assisted, and as neither of them are members of the House, and it being a private matter between them and Sir Hugh, I did not think it necessary to mention it on Saturday in my deposition. I don't think it fair to these two gentlemen to bring their names before the public.

I don't know of any other sum advanced by Sir Hugh Allan, or by any other person on his behalf. I could not say how much was subscribed for the Montreal elections; but I think there was a list passed round, and subscriptions asked from different gentlemen.

I don't know anything further that took place. Sir George E. Cartier's Committee was rather against me. I was not on the Committee; but my opponent, Mr. Hudon, was President of it, which was sufficient to keep me off.

Q.—Did you apply to Sir Hugh Allan yourself to aid you in the payment of your election expenses?

A.—I suppose I must have said a word for myself at that time.

Q.—Did you expect before, or at the time of your election, that this money was to be forthcoming from Sir Hugh Allan?

A.—No, I expected to be elected by acclamation and, if it had not been for Sir George Cartier, I would have been elected by acclamation.

Q.—Why did you apply to Sir Hugh Allan for this money instead of some other wealthy gentlemen?

A.—Sir Hugh Allan was the person more likely than anybody else.

Q.—Had you been in particular relations or in business relation with Sir Hugh Allan?

A.—I was considered as one of the most active parties in the railway, and have been a Director in it from the very beginning, and was one of those who assisted to induce Sir Hugh Allan to come into that Company, and since then I have been in very close relations with him. When I speak above of the railway, I mean the Montreal Northern Colonization Railway. Sir Hugh Allan is President of that road, and I have been Vice-President of it ever since the beginning.

To Sir John A. Macdonald.

Q.—Was Mr. Victor Hudon the Government candidate for the county of Hochelaga?

A.—If being Sir George Cartier's candidate was being the Government candidate, certainly he was the Government candidate. I don't say Sir George was opposed to my election at the latter end, but if Mr. Victor Hudon came forward at all, it was due to the encouragement that Sir George gave him, and I learned that Sir George Cartier advised his friends to vote for Mr. Hudon.

I know that the gentlemen in the office of Sir George Cartier voted for Mr. Hudon.

I made the application for the loan above referred to, to help me to pay the expenses of my election. I did not ask for this loan as a friend of the Government, but simply on account of Sir Hugh Allan being a friend of mine. It was Mr. E. L. De Bellefeuille that got the loan for me.

That sum had never been promised to me before, and I had never expected to get that loan.

Q.—Had Sir George Cartier any knowledge or intimation that you were going to ask for that money before you got it?

A.—No; I suppose when I got it he knew. I suppose Sir Hugh Allan likely told him afterwards, but Sir George may not have known anything about it.

And further, for the present, the deponent saith not.

And on this eighth day of September, 1873, the said witness reappeared and made the following alterations and additions to the foregoing deposition, namely: I wish to remove the words in a former part of my deposition, "so I also went to different friends."

I have been reminded this morning that Mr. Victor Hudon was not President of Sir George E. Cartier's Election Committee, as stated by me in my deposition.

I gave the receipt referred to by me to Sir Hugh Allan. I gave it to him in the city of Montreal. I think it was in his own office.

In my evidence I stated that I saw the receipt about a month ago. I never saw the original of the receipt since I gave it. It was not the receipt that was signed that I kept, it was the project or draft which was not signed, as there were some corrections to be made in the draft. I made a copy of it, and signed this copy and delivered it to Sir Hugh Allan. I have never seen the receipt I signed since I delivered it to Sir Hugh. I saw the draft that I kept the next day after Mr. McMullen's letter appeared in the papers. I think I can find it. The receipt was not written in Sir Hugh Allan's office. It was written in Mr. Abbott's office. It was written on ordinary foolscap paper. For all I can say, that document is in the possession of Sir Hugh Allan at present.

I consider that receipt to be a note. I think I can produce the drafts.

Q.—You say that in this receipt which you have given from memory, “that unless the “money was otherwise reimbursed,” what do you mean by these terms? from whom was it expected to be reimbursed?

A.—I have no means at all of knowing where he expected to be refunded.

Q.—In making use of this expression from what source did you think this reimbursement to come?

A.—I had no idea at all, and my opinion is that Sir Hugh Allan himself did not know where it would come from. Many a time he said that he did not know that he would be otherwise reimbursed. Sir Hugh told me that all the money he was giving in support of the elections he thought would be a dead loss to him. I suppose he expected to be reimbursed from the profits of the enterprise.

Q.—What meaning did you attach to the word “reimbursed” in that respect?

A.—I expected that the friends of the Government would subscribe and would help me.

Q.—Was there any funds provided?

A.—There was a general election fund that had been established.

I had not in my mind then any supposed arrangement between the Government and Sir Hugh Allan. I never knew of any arrangement whatever, and Sir Hugh Allan never told me that there was.

The Commission desires the witness to preserve the draft of the receipt referred to if he can find it, and enjoins him also in that event to forward it to the Commission.

I wish to strike out the following words from my foregoing deposition: “Many a time “he said that he did not know that he would be otherwise reimbursed.”—Sir Hugh told me several times that all the money he was giving in support of the elections he thought would be a dead loss to him.

And further deponent saith not, and this deposition having been read by him, he declares that it contains the truth, persists therein, and hath signed.

Present: THE COMMISSIONERS.

On this sixth day of September, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and seventy-three, personally came and appeared before us, the above-named Commissioners,

NORMAN WILLIAM BETHUNE of the City of Ottawa, Telegraph Manager, who being duly sworn, deposeth and saith:

I reside in Ottawa. I am a manager of the Montreal Telegraph Company.

Q.—Have you in your possession the original of the telegram dated at Toronto, August 26th, 1872, addressed to the Honourable J. J. C. Abbott, Ste. Annes, and signed John A. Macdonald?

CANADA.

A.—I have not.

Q.—Have you the original of a telegram dated Montreal, 26th August, 1872, directed to Sir John A. Macdonald at Toronto, and signed J. J. C. Abbott?

A.—I have not.

Q.—Have you in your possession any telegram signed by either of these parties, Sir John A. Macdonald, or Hon. J. J. C. Abbott, between the first of August and the end of that month?

A.—None that I am aware of.

Q.—Have you searched for anything of the kind?

A.—I have not made search, but I caused the books of the Company to be examined by the clerks, and they found no messages between Sir John A. Macdonald and Sir Hugh Allan or Mr. J. J. C. Abbott, from the first to the thirty-first of August.

The Commissioners desire to have fuller information on the subject, and will require you to examine the books of the Company a month further back and a month afterwards, and would desire that you should examine them yourself, that you may be able to state under oath whether there are any such messages, and what they are.

A.—All original messages previous to the first of August, 1872, are not now in existence, the rule of the Company was that messages should be kept for one year and then destroyed. The present rule is that messages shall be kept for six months and then destroyed. I think it probable that none of those messages are now in existence, as it is the rule of the Company to have them destroyed.

Q.—In whose hands would messages be in Toronto and Montreal?

A.—In Toronto they would be in Mr. Harvey P. Dwight's hands, in Montreal they would be in Mr. James Daker's hands. It is impossible to produce the originals of any telegrams passing through the Ottawa office anterior to the first August, 1872, but we have an entry of these telegrams in the books.

Q.—Can you not examine the books a month previous to August and a month afterwards?

A.—Certainly.

The books of the Company contain no copies of telegrams, but only a copy of the address and signature of parties.

And further, for the present, deponent saith not;

And on this eighth day of September, reappeared the said witness and continued his deposition as follows:—

Q.—Have you examined the books of the Telegraph Company in your office?

A.—I have found it impossible to examine them in the period allotted to me. I find further by the books that Sir John A. Macdonald was absent from Ottawa for a large portion of the time named within which the telegrams referred to are said to have passed.

I have examined the books from first July up to sixth July and for the whole month of September.

Q.—Have the books been examined for the month of August?

A.—They have been examined by my clerks, and I find that Sir John A. Macdonald was not in Ottawa during the month of August, and therefore no telegrams could have been left in the Ottawa office as being sent or received by him during that time.

Q.—Have you any original telegrams in your office received during August or July, 1872, between Sir John A. Macdonald and Mr. Abbott?

A.—No; I have no such originals in my possession.

And further deponent saith not, and this his deposition being read to him, he declares it contains the truth, persists therein, and hath signed.

IN THE MATTER OF THE COMMISSION

Appointing CHARLES DEWEY DAY, ANTOINE POLETTE, and JAMES ROBERT GOWAN, Commissioners to inquire into and report upon the several matters stated in a certain Resolution moved by the Hon. Mr. HUNTINGTON in the House of Commons on the second day of April, A.D. 1873, relating to the Canadian Pacific Railway.

Present: THE COMMISSIONERS.

On the sixth day of September, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and seventy-three, personally came and appeared before us, the above-named Commissioners,

The Honourable DAVID L. MACPIHERSON, of the City of Toronto, Senator, who being duly sworn, deposeth and saith :

I am acquainted with Sir Hugh Allan ; I know Mr. McMullen only slightly. I have heard a portion of the Commission read embodying the charges which the Commissioners are enjoined to inquire into.

Q.—Are you aware of any agreement or negotiations having reference to the formation of a Company of the character of that mentioned in the extract which has just been read to you ; if you have will you please to state your knowledge of it ?

A.—I have no personal knowledge of any agreement being concluded such as is described therein.

Q.—Have you any knowledge of any such negotiation ?

A.—Sir Hugh Allan told me himself in February, 1872, that he was negotiating with Americans with the object of having them take an interest in the Canadian Pacific Railway. The date of this was towards the end of February, 1872. I received a letter dated 27th February, 1872, from Sir Hugh Allan, and replied on the 29th ; these letters have been published, and perhaps the easiest way would be to refer to them. In a letter dated 8th July, 1873, and published, I give the substance of the conversation which Sir Hugh Allan had with me, and also the letters which passed afterwards between us.

The witness read a letter before the Commission embodying the evidence of his knowledge of the matters referred to in the extract of the charge which has been read to him. This letter contains a true statement of the facts therein declared. It is dated July 8th, 1873, and is as follows :—

THE PACIFIC RAILWAY NEGOTIATIONS.

SENATOR MACPHERSON'S STATEMENT.

To the Editor of the ' Mail.'

SIR,—Sir Hugh Allan having admitted the genuineness of the letters published over his name in the 'Globe' and 'Montreal Herald' of Friday last, I ask the favour of space in your columns to correct misrepresentations affecting myself contained in some of these letters.

Sir Hugh Allan, in his letter to Mr. C. M. Smith, of Chicago, dated Toronto, 24th February, 1872, the day after his last interview with me, purporting to be a statement of what had passed between us, says :—"He (Mr. Macpherson) has been applied to by our "opponents, and uses that as a lever by which to obtain better terms from us. He insists "on getting $250,000 of stock, and threatens opposition if he does not get it." Every one of these allegations is absolutely without foundation.

I had not been "applied to by the opponents" of Sir Hugh and his American associates, and did not say that I had been.

I am not aware that they had opponents then, for the leading features of their scheme for constructing the Canadian Pacific Railway were unknown to the public.

So far from demanding $250,000, or any other amount of stock, I avoided the discussion of all details with Sir Hugh, and confined myself in our conversation to pointing out what, in my opinion, were fundamental and insuperable objections to his project from a public point of view. And it will be seen from my letters to him, given below, that within a week of the date of these interviews I had refused to connect myself with him.

If I had not been restrained by other, I may say by higher, considerations from joining Sir Hugh Allan's combination, it is quite evident, from his correspondence now published, that he would not have allowed the question of "terms" to stand in the way of my doing so. Sir Hugh Allan, in his letter to Mr. McMullen, dated Montreal, 4th March, 1872, when advising his friend (Mr. McM.) that Mr. Brydges and myself had declined to join them because "their Company was too largely American, and that we wanted to see it "in the hands of Canadians," proceeds to say: "They (Messrs. Macpherson and Brydges) "tried to detach me from the Company we have formed and get me to join theirs, which, "of course, I declined." So far as I am concerned, this is entirely unfounded.

Mr. Brydges and I had formed [no Company; I was not connected with one at that time, and I am not aware that one existed, or any association of persons intended to form one. I therefore could not have asked Sir Hugh Allan to join any Company. There never was any concerted action between Mr. Brydges and myself in respect to the Canadian Pacific Railway. Neither of us knew that the other had been asked and had declined to join Sir Hugh Allan's combination until after these events. Acting in the belief that Sir Hugh desired and expected that the communications, oral and written, which took place between us in February, 1872, would be regarded as private, I have hitherto abstained from giving them publicity, although in doing so I may have laid myself open to much misconception as to my motives in declining, first, to connect myself with his American scheme, and then in opposing the amalgamation of the Interoceanic and Canadian Pacific Railway Companies.

The version which Sir Hugh Allan has permitted himself to give in his published letters of what passed at our interviews, not only released me from any further obligation of silence, but imposes on me the duty of placing before the public the details I now furnish.

They consist of the following memoranda and letters:—

1st. A memorandum of conversation between Sir Hugh Allan and myself in February, 1872 (prepared soon after these interviews).

2nd. Letters from Sir Hugh to me, dated 27th and 29th February, 1872.

3rd. My letter to Sir Hugh, dated 29th February, 1872.

4th. A memorandum of what passed between the Hon. J. J. C. Abbott, Sir Hugh Allan, and myself, concerning the organization of an amalgamated Company, prepared for the Executive Committee of the Interoceanic Railway Company. The following are copies in extenso of these documents.

(Copy.)

1ST.—MEMORANDUM OF CONVERSATION BETWEEN SIR HUGH ALLAN AND MYSELF IN FEBRUARY, 1872.

In February, 1872, Sir Hugh Allan called upon me and proposed that I should join him in undertaking to construct the Canada Pacific Railway, for the subsidies to be granted by Parliament, and to allow my name to appear as one of the Provisional Directors in an Act about to be applied for to incorporate the Canada Pacific Railway Company. I said that before I could consider the proposal to join him, I must have some general idea of his scheme for carrying out the enterprise. He informed me that he had it understood with the Government that the undertaking should be placed in his hands, and that he had secured the co-operation of parties in New York, of great wealth, who would subscribe the greater part of the share capital, which it was proposed to fix at $10,000,000. With the assistance of these American capitalists he had no doubt the enterprise could be carried to completion successfully. He said that he proposed to place the management in the hands of a Board of eleven Directors, of whom six, including the President, should be British subjects, resident in Canada, and five should be Americans, resident in the United States.

The Canadian members of the Board to be Sir Hugh Allan, the Hon. A. B. Foster, the Hon. J. J. C. Abbott (or the Hon. Thomas McGreevy), Donald A. Smith, Donald McInnes, and myself.

The American members to be Messrs. J. G. Smith, G. W. Cass, William B. Ogden, of Chicago; T. A. Scott, of Philadelphia; and J. Cooke, of New York; all Directors of the Northern Pacific Railroad Company—the two first named being the President and Vice-President of that Company.

I took exception to the proposed organization of the Company, and remonstrated against giving our rivals the control and ownership of our Transcontinental Railway, which could only be carried out with Canadian subsidies in money and land. I pointed out to Sir Hugh that the Americans he referred to would not invest money of their own in the enterprise; that apparently they had none to invest in such enterprises, for that they had obtained from Europe all, or almost all, the capital employed so far, in constructing the Northern Pacific Railway; that if they were allowed to hold the major part of the stock, as he proposed, they would be complete masters of the Canadian Pacific Railway; and that this would enable them to subordinate its traffic arrangements to their interests in the United States, that it would give them control of the settlement of the large territory to be granted to the Company in our North West, and, that they might, and possibly would, so manage its settlement as to imperil the very peace of Canada. Sir Hugh dissented from all these opinions, and in expressing surprise that I should entertain such narrow views, said that he took a cosmopolitan view of the question, that in stipulating that a majority of the Directory should be British subjects, resident in Canada, he had sufficiently guarded Canadian interests. He added that he was unable to state precisely how the stock (10,000,000) would be apportioned; that that was then being determined in New York; that he expected to be fully advised on his return to Montreal, and would communicate the information to me. I objected also to the composition of the Canadian Board, as proposed by Sir Hugh Allan, and urged that it did not fairly or sufficiently represent the various Provinces of the Dominion.

I said that Mr. McInnes and myself would not be sufficient representation from Ontario, and that there was no representative from British Columbia, the Province of all others most interested in the railway. Sir Hugh said that he considered the Board as proposed a good one, and that if British Columbia were represented, the Maritime Provinces would also expect to be represented.

I replied that I thought they ought to be represented; that the undertaking was a Dominion one in the broadest sense; that all the Provinces should have the opportunity of taking an interest in the Company, and of being represented at the Board; that I was quite certain Parliament would not assent to, or the country tolerate any scheme which would place the Canadian Pacific Railway and its subsidies in the hands of foreigners and rivals. After Sir Hugh's return to Montreal, I received the following letters:—

MY DEAR SIR, (Copy.) Montreal, 27th Feb., 1872.
The papers which have come from New York indicate the amount of stock allotted to me as $1,450,000. This I propose to divide in something like the following shares:—

This may not be the ultimate arrangement, as I have not yet even proposed the matter to some of the gentlemen; but, if I can arrange it, there will not be much change. Please advise me at once if you consent that your name shall appear as one of the Provisional Directors, as I must send in the list to the Government without delay.

MY DEAR SIR,—Since writing to you, I am informed that the Hon. George Brown will not be a shareholder at present, and I propose to name Mr. Howland in his place.

Yours truly,
(Signed) HUGH ALLAN.
To Hon. D. L. Macpherson, Toronto.

(Copy 3rd.) Montreal, 29th Feb., 1872.
DEAR SIR HUGH,
I have to thank you for your letter of 27th inst., informing me that there had been allotted to you in New York, shares in the Canada Pacific Railway, for Canadians, to the amount of $1,450,000, and mentioning how you propose to divide the same. Since you asked me to allow my name to appear in the Charter as one of the

CANADA.

Provisional Directors, I have carefully considered your scheme, and have become convinced that Parliament will not assent to it in its present shape, or to any scheme which, like it, would place our great Transcontinental Railway for ever under the absolute control of our rivals, our American neighbours. This would be effected by giving to them, as you do, seventeen-twentieths of the whole stock of the Company. Why should this be done? Canada must give the means in money and land to build the railway. Why should we hand over the control and ownership of the line, with all its incalculable advantages, direct and indirect, during construction and for ever, to foreigners? Such an arrangement is not indispensable to the building of the road, and nothing short of this in my opinion would justify it.

Second only in importance to obtaining the railway, is the securing the control of it, with all its benefits, to our own people.

We have in Canada men of sufficient ability to carry out this great undertaking successfully, whose character and means would be ample guarantee to the Government and the country for the fulfilment of their engagements. Money would have to be obtained from abroad; but the securities would be Canadian, and negotiations should be directed by Canadians.

The assistance of English and foreign financial agents would be necessary, and for their services they would have to be paid; but they should have no interests rival or antagonistic to the Canada Pacific Railway. I should be quite willing that they and their clients should have an interest in the road, but not a controlling one.

The position of the Canadian Directors under your proposed organization of the Company would be uncomfortable and anomalous, at least so it appears to me. They would sit at the Board in virtue of being Canadians, but merely as the nominees and the mere agents—of foreign shareholders.

The interests of these shareholders might conflict with the interests of Canada, possibly very soon. Then, if the Directors stood by their country, I apprehend they would be required to surrender their seats at the first ensuing election for more subservient men.

Holding these views, which I expressed to you when you first offered me a Directorship, and they have strengthened with reflection; and not seeing my way to occupy a seat at the Board with that feeling of independence so essential to usefulness as a Director of any undertaking, especially one of the magnitude of the Canada Pacific Railway, it is my duty to decline the office. I deem it right to give you my reasons therefor frankly and freely. Thanking you for inviting my co-operation,

I remain, &c.,

Sir Hugh Allan, Knight, &c., Montreal.

Toronto, 8th July, 1873.

4. Memorandum.—Early in July, 1872, I casually met the Hon. J. J. C. Abbott, of Montreal, at the Queen's Hotel here, and had some conversation with him respecting the amalgamation of the Interoceanic and Canada Pacific Railway Companies.

We both understood the Government wished the two Companies to amalgamate, and it was also understood that the Government favoured a Directory of thirteen members (the same number as the Cabinet), of whom I, as President of the Interoceanic Company, should name five from Ontario; Sir Hugh, as President of the Canada Pacific Company, four from Quebec, and the Government four—one for each of the other Provinces. Mr. Abbott said that four was too small a number to enable them to obtain an adequate representation of nationalities and localities from the Province of Quebec; that they required six, and would like the numbers to be for Ontario and Quebec seven and six. I replied that as between Ontario and Quebec the proportion of five to four was much less than Ontario was entitled to, while seven to six would make the disproportion still greater. Finally, I said that if amalgamation would be entertained by the Interoceanic Company, and if all the other details were satisfactorily settled, it was possible the Interoceanic Company would not break off negotiations upon the point as to whether the number of Directors named by each Company respectively should be five and four, or seven and six.

I stated very early in our conversation that there would be feeling of unwillingness on the part of the Interoceanic Company to enter into amalgamation at all, many of us doubting whether the objects of the two Companies were the same, ours being to make the Company ultimately organized essentially Canadian, while we feared Sir Hugh Allan and his associates still clung to their old alliance with gentlemen interested in the Northern Pacific Railway on conditions that would place the Canada Pacific Railway in their hands and under their control. Mr. Abbott assured me that this was not the case.

I replied that it was a point on which it would be difficult to satisfy the Interoceanic Company.

Mr. Abbott then referred to the Presidency of an amalgamated Company, and inquired if I would agree to Sir Hugh Allan being appointed to that office.

In reply I stated distinctly that I would not; that while I did not arrogate any claim myself to the Presidency, I should not concede or waive any in favour of Sir Hugh Allan; that, if amalgamation should take place, the new Provisional Board should be left free to elect their President, and that it was not for Sir Hugh Allan and myself to arrange in advance who should be President.

Mr. Abbott was not satisfied with this, and referred to it again on the following day, remarking that unless the Presidency were promised to Sir Hugh, he was afraid no amalgamation would take place.

In the course of the following week, when at Montreal on private business, I, in compliance with a written request from Sir Hugh Allan, called at his office. He at once referred to the Pacific Railway, and said he understood from Mr. Abbott that the only points of amalgamation on which he (Mr. Abbott) and I differed were the number of Directors to be named by each Company, and the question of the Presidency.

I replied that these were the only points we had discussed. That I said to Mr. Abbott, speaking for myself only, that if all the other details of amalgamation were settled satisfactorily, I thought the Interoceanic Company might be induced to consider the necessities of the other Company so far as to make the number of Directors to be named by each of us respectively seven and six.

That with respect to the Presidency, I had told Mr. Abbott that if amalgamation took place, the choice should be left to the Directors, and asked Sir Hugh if he did not think that that would be the proper way.

He replied that he could not say that such was his opinion.

It might be inferred from what Sir Hugh says in his affidavit, published on Saturday last, of Mr. Abbott's interviews with me, that we had been for days closely engaged in discussing terms of amalgamation for the Companies, and generally maturing a scheme for the construction of the Pacific Railway. We had but two brief interviews, and the only subjects discussed were those mentioned in the above memorandum.

My reasons for declining to assist Sir Hugh Allan to carry out what I then regarded, and still regard, as most prejudicial to Canada—I might almost be justified in saying a conspiracy against Canada—are contained in my letter to him quoted above. My reasons for opposing the amalgamation of the two Companies are set forth in the Memoranda addressed to the Government by the Interoceanic Railway Company, published in the Toronto 'Globe' in July last, and submitted by the Government to both Houses of Parliament.

A complete statement of my negotiations with Sir Hugh Allan with a view to the construction of our great Interoceanic Railway is now before the people of Canada, to whose judgment the course which I pursued is unreservedly submitted.

I am, Sir, your obedient servant, &c.,

D. L. MACPHERSON.

In Sir Hugh Allan's letter, dated 27th July, 1872, he advised me that the papers he expected to receive from New York had been received by him, indicating the amount of stock allotted to him to be $1,450,000, that being, as I understood, the proportion of the whole amount of $10,000,000, which had been allotted to Canada, and he intimated in that letter how he proposed to divide that amount, namely $1,450,000, among Canadians.

Q.—Have you got in your possession the list which he gave you, giving the names of those among whom this amount of stock was to be divided?

A.—His letter to me containing the list has been published. I thought I had his original letter with me, but I find I have it not. It is embodied in my published letter of the 8th July, and is dated 27th February, 1872.

My reply to Sir Hugh Allan, dated 29th February, 1872, and referring to his letter, the contents of which I have just described, is embodied in Exhibit "E."

I am not personally aware that Mr. McMullen acted for certain United States capitalists, but understood that he did.

Sir Hugh Allan's letter to me indicates that three-twentieths of the whole stock had been assigned to Canada, and the remaining seventeen-twentieths were to be divided among capitalists in the United States. This was in February, 1872, before there was any legislation whatever, but in anticipation of the ensuing Session.

I have no knowledge except what is stated in Sir Hugh Allan's letter, and know nothing about the certain percentage of interest, that is stated in the charge I have read, which Sir Hugh Allan was to receive.

CANADA.

Q.—Is it in conformity with your knowledge that Sir Hugh Allan was to be at the head of the proposed Railway Company?

A.—Nothing was said at that time by Sir Hugh Allan about his being at the head of the Company, that point was not raised in Sir Hugh Allan's conversation with me then; no personal matters or details were then discussed.

Q.—Have you any knowledge whether the Government were aware that these negotiations were pending between Sir Hugh Allan and the Americans?

A.—I had not an absolute personal knowledge; but I understood that the Government were aware of it, and Sir Hugh Allan himself stated to me that the Government were aware of it. The knowledge which I had in respect to this matter was obtained from Sir Hugh Allan.

Q.—In reference to the following portion of the charge, viz. "that subsequently an understanding was come to between the Government, Sir Hugh Allan, and Mr. Abbott, one of the members of the Honourable House of Government of Canada, that Sir Hugh Allan and his friends should advance a large sum of money for the purpose of aiding the elections of Ministers and their supporters at the ensuing general elections, and that he and his friends should receive the contract for the construction of the railway." Have you any knowledge relating to that subject?

A.—I have no knowledge relating to that subject.

Q.—Do you mean to say that you know of no understanding between the Government and Sir Hugh Allan and Mr. Abbott relating to Sir Hugh Allan's support in the elections?

A.—No; I have no knowledge of any arrangements between the Government and Sir Hugh Allan and Mr. Abbott that Sir Hugh was to furnish money for the elections. I have no personal knowledge that the giving of the contract to Sir Hugh Allan depended on his furnishing money for the elections.

Q.—There was an offer made to you of some of the stock in this contemplated Company, was there not?

A.—In Sir Hugh Allan's letter of 27th February, 1872, my name is put down in the list with others for $100,000; but I was no party to that. Nothing of the kind was discussed between Sir Hugh Allan and myself; everything he alleges connected with that is utterly unfounded. I stipulated for nothing, and I was offered nothing. I at no time negotiated in any way for the insertion of my name as a subscriber of any stock in this Company. I state this most positively.

Q.—Did you give Sir Hugh Allan at any time to believe that you felt disposed in any way to become a party to such an arrangement?

A.—No; I took exception to his scheme when he first explained it to me, and, in reply to Sir Hugh Allan's letter of 27th February, 1872, advising the allotment of stock in New York of the Canada Pacific Company, I, by return mail, declined to have anything to do with his scheme.

Q.—You were, I believe, President of the Interoceanic Railway Company, were you not?

A.—I was.

Q.—I see in the printed pamphlet, marked "Charter for the construction of the Pacific Railway," which was given to Parliament, your name subscribed to a report of a meeting of the Provisional Directors of the Interoceanic Railway Company of Canada, dated 26th September, 1872. Was that an application to the Government for the contract for that Company?

A.—It was informing the Government that the Company was prepared to treat with the Government, and was organized.

That was long after Sir Hugh Allan's application to me; at the time Sir Hugh Allan had negotiations with me, there was no Company in existence. Had it not been for my objections to Sir Hugh Allan's scheme, and my desire, in the interests of the country, to frustrate that scheme, I probably would not have appeared in connection with the Canadian Pacific Railway at all. It was only after I found that Sir Hugh Allan would not abandon his American associates, that I proposed to certain gentlemen in Toronto, and elsewhere, to apply for a Charter and to be prepared to do whatever might seem best when the time for action arrived. The gentlemen to whom I addressed myself agreed in opinion with me, and we petitioned for an Act, incorporating the Interoceanic Company.

Q.—Was this Interoceanic Company formed with a view of defeating the original scheme, with the American capitalists?

A.—Yes.

Q.—Were there any negotiations between the Interoceanic Company and the Canada Pacific Company with respect to amalgamation afterwards?

A.—There was some time afterwards.

Q.—Why was that negotiation unsuccessful?

A.—Because the Interoceanic Company did not believe that the Canada Pacific Company had abandoned their American connections. It is quite true that the Committee of the Canada Pacific Company assured the Government that they never had any communication with Americans. The Interoceanic Company, however, looked upon Sir Hugh Allan as really the Canada Pacific Company, and they had reason to believe that the American gentlemen with whom Sir Hugh had been in negotiation still expected that the understanding which he had with them would be fulfilled, and for that reason the Interoceanic Company declined to amalgamate with the Canada Pacific Company.

In the second Memorandum of the Executive Committee of the Interoceanic Railway Company, addressed to the Government, they stated "that they deem it their duty to state to the Government, that in their opinion the admitted negotiations of Sir Hugh Allan with gentlemen in the United States, resulting in an arrangement or understanding which is considered opposed to Canadian interests, and which the undersigned from information in their possession, and referred to above, have reason to believe is still substantially existing, will continue to cause the Canadian people to view with suspicion and prevent their subscribing stock in any Company in which Sir Hugh Allan and his associates appear controlling parties." I give these reasons from the Memorandum of the reasons on account of which the Interoceanic Company declined to amalgamate.

Q.—Was there any other reason than Sir Hugh Allan's associations with Americans which induced the Interoceanic Company to oppose the Canada Pacific Railway Company?

A.—I think not, except the reasons which are given in the Memoranda contained in the Blue Book referred to, endorsed "Charter for the construction of the Pacific Railway, with papers and correspondence."

Q.—Can you state your grounds for believing in the fact that Sir Hugh Allan was associated with American capitalists?

A.—I had a statement from himself in the conversation which I had with him at an early period, that his associates were American capitalists.

Q.—Had you any statement from him at a later period?

A.—No; I had a conversation with Mr. Abbott, and he assured me that they had dropped the American connection. I told him it would be very difficult to satisfy the Interoceanic Company on the subject.

I have no knowledge at all relating to the elections in Montreal.

Q.—Do you remember any other matter which might be of use in this inquiry?

A.—The only additional matter that took place at all between the Canada Pacific Company and myself was the conversation I have referred to with Mr. Abbott, and what took place then I have also published. It was expressing his desire that an amalgamation would take place. Mr. Abbott, I believe, was one of the Provisional Directors of the Canada Pacific Company, but is not a Director of the present Canadian Pacific Railway Company. He is Counsel, I believe, of the Company now chartered. This conversation took place before the Company was chartered; that is, before the Royal Charter was issued.

Subsequent to the issuing of the Charter, I had no conversation with Sir Hugh Allan.

In 1872, two Acts of Incorporation were granted, one to the Canada Pacific Company and the other to the Interoceanic Company. It was these two Companies which it was proposed to amalgamate, that is, the Canada Pacific Company, which Sir Hugh Allan wished to amalgamate with the Interoceanic Company.

I had this conversation with Mr. Abbott I think in July, 1872. In that conversation he urged upon me the desirability of amalgamation, and also asked me if, in the event of the subject being discussed, and favourably considered, would I consent to Sir Hugh Allan's being President. We also spoke of the number of Directors. The only matter at all personal to Sir Hugh Allan and myself was the question of the Presidency. Mr. Abbott wished that I would consent to the office being filled by Sir Hugh Allan. I told him I would not assent to it in advance, but I set up no claim to the office myself. I thought it should be left to the free choice of the Directors if amalgamation should take place.

Q.—Had you any interview with the Government or any member thereof with relation to this amalgamation?

CANADA.

A.—No personal interview—I had a conversation—or probably two or three conversations—with Sir John A. Macdonald on the subject, in which he urged the importance of amalgamation, putting it on the ground that it was desirable to unite as much as possible the influence and financial strength of the country, but nothing beyond this general expression of opinion. I objected on the ground stated in the Minutes of the Interoceanic Company, and because I felt quite certain that Sir Hugh Allan continued in association with the Americans, and that this would be fatal to the enterprise in his hands, and that if the Interoceanic Company joined with the Canada Pacific, it would be involved in failure and disgrace, and I did not wish either the Interoceanic Company or myself to be involved in these.

To Sir John A. Macdonald:

I include the whole of my published letter, dated 8th July, 1873, in my deposition. In this letter there is contained a memorandum of the conversation which took place in July, 1872, with Mr. Abbott; it is substantially correct.

Q.—When was the last occasion on which you had any communication with myself on the subject of the amalgamation?

A.—I think it was in November last, at Toronto.

Sir John A. Macdonald pressed strongly for the amalgamation of the two Companies at that time. I dissented on pretty much the same grounds as those assigned in the Memorandum of the Interoceanic Company, addressed to the Government.

The printed copy of the letter above referred to, of the 8th of July, 1873, and which is marked "E," contains a full and true statement of all the matters to which it relates.

And further deponent saith not, and this his deposition having been read to him, he declares that it contains the truth, persists therein, and hath signed.

Mr. HUNTINGTON in the House of Commons on the second day of April, A.D. 1873, relating to the Canadian Pacific Railway.

Present: THE COMMISSIONERS.

On this eighth day of September, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and seventy-three, personally came and appeared before us, the above-named Commissioners,

The Honourable JEAN LOUIS BEAUDRY, of the City of Montreal, one of the Members of the Legislative Council, who being duly sworn, deposeth and saith:

I was a Provisional Director of the Canada Pacific Railway Company, incorporated in 1872.

I have no knowledge of an agreement between Sir Hugh Allan and G. W. McMullen, acting for certain American capitalists, for the construction of the contemplated Pacific Railway, to have funds from capitalists of the United States. I have no knowledge whatever of any negotiations or correspondence having taken place with reference to the matters stated above.

I have no knowledge of an understanding between the Government, Sir Hugh Allan and Honourable J. J. C. Abbott, that Sir Hugh Allan and his friends should advance money for the purpose of aiding the election of Ministers and their supporters at the ensuing general elections, and that he and his friends should receive the contract for the construction of the railway in consideration of such subscriptions. From the short duration of the connection I had with the enterprise of the Pacific Railway, I had no means of knowing, and knew nothing of these correspondence. I have no other knowledge except of what I have stated that took place at the meeting of the Board. Nothing took place then that had any respect to the correspondence or negotiations with Americans.

The question as to what source the means for the construction of the Pacific Railway were to be derived was not discussed at the meetings which I attended.

I have no personal knowledge whatever that these funds were to be expected from American capitalists.

I took an active part in the elections of Montreal East in 1872; I was on Sir George Cartier's Committee.

When I attended the Committee for the first time there had already been some organization made, and at the meeting which I attended they asked me to preside over the meeting. It was about the commencement of August, 1872. I was told by some of the members of the Committee that they had a list of subscriptions for the object of defraying the expenses of the election.

I did not see the list of subscriptions myself, but at a certain period of the canvassing I was asked by some of the members of the Committee to go to Mr. Abbott, and I went to Mr. Abbott with two other gentlemen, and then signed a receipt for $20,000 to Mr. Abbott. I did not see the money myself. The receipt was signed in Mr. Abbott's office, in his presence—it was left with Mr. Abbott. I was given to understand that Sir Hugh Allan was a subscriber to the election funds. The expressions made use of in the receipt then signed by me are the only conditions that I am aware of. The Honourable H. Starnes and Mr. Murphy signed the receipt with me.

The only receipt which I signed in connection with these gentlemen is the one above referred to. I have not seen this receipt since. I have no personal knowledge of that receipt having passed from Mr. Abbott's hands, except what I have seen in the newspapers. I am not aware, personally, of any other sums given by Sir Hugh Allan. That receipt refers to the letters of Sir George E. Cartier, dated 30th July and 24th August, 1872. I had not seen those letters when I signed the receipt; but subsequently, the letter of the 30th July was shown to me. It was in the hands of a gentleman who wanted me to state if the article which had appeared the day previous in the 'Gazette' was correct as to the nature of the letter. That gentleman was Mr. Murphy. I did write a letter in conjunction with Mr. Starnes and Mr. Murphy. I think this letter was handed to the Editor of the 'Montreal Gazette.' The letter which the Chairman read to me just now is the letter which I signed, and the contents of it are true. I have taken communication of a printed copy of the letter referred to, in the following terms:—

EXTRACT FROM THE 'MONTREAL GAZETTE,' JULY 23RD, 1873.

THE PACIFIC RAILWAY SCANDAL.

To the Editor of the 'Gazette.'

SIR,—Seeing your Editorial of yesterday, in which reference is made to a letter from Sir George E. Cartier, to Sir Hugh Allan, dated 30th July last, which letter is referred to in the letter of Sir George E. Cartier, of date 24th August, published by Mr. McMullen, we feel bound to state that we have seen the first-mentioned letter, and that your editorial statement that it has no reference whatever to the Pacific Railway Company, or to the Pacific Railway contract, is perfectly correct.

(Signed) J. L. BEAUDRY.
H. STARNES.
P. S. MURPHY.

July 22nd, 1873.

I declare the statement contained in that letter to be true, and I make it a part of my deposition. I don't know, personally, of any other sum of money subscribed for the Montreal elections, for I did not go round with the list; but I have heard there was—I was told by some members of the Committee that there was a list of subscriptions. I don't know what amount was subscribed, and I do not know either what amount Sir Hugh Allan has subscribed. There was a large sum of money paid to the different Election Committees. I was in the General Committee, and there were sub-committees in every ward. I had nothing to do with the distribution of the money or with paying the accounts. Considerable sums of money were paid to these sub-committees. Some of the sums of money paid were drawn from the Metropolitan Bank by cheques. I am not aware of what kind of receipts was given for these sums of money. I believe these $20,000 were paid on account of Sir George E. Cartier's letter of the 24th August. When I signed that receipt I thought that Sir Hugh Allan was a subscriber, and it is the only inference which I can draw from the wording of the receipt. I had no knowledge whatever of any conditions except what is contained in the receipt.

I have no knowledge of any other subscription, except that some friends told me they had subscribed.

CANADA.

The receipt was signed and left with Mr. Abbott, and I did not see the money. I did not see the cheque for the drawing of the $20,000 from the Bank.

And further the deponent saith not, and this his deposition having been read by him, he declares it contains the truth, persists therein, and hath signed.

IN THE MATTER OF THE COMMISSION

Appointing CHARLES DEWEY DAY, ANTOINE POLETTE, and JAMES ROBERT GOWAN, Commissioners to inquire into and report upon the several matters stated in a certain Resolution moved by the Hon. Mr. HUNTINGTON in the House of Commons on the second day of April, A.D. 1873, relating to the Canadian Pacific Railway.

Present: THE COMMISSIONERS.

On this eighth day of September, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and seventy-three, personally came and appeared before us, the above-named Commissioners,

PETER S. MURPHY, of the City of Montreal, Merchant, who being duly sworn, deposeth and saith:

I am a resident of Montreal.

Q.—Have you any knowledge relating to an agreement between Sir Hugh Allan and Mr. G. W. McMullen, representing certain American capitalists, for the building of the Canada Pacific Railway with American funds?

A.—I have not.

Q.—Have you had any particular connection with the original Company?

A.—None at all.

My connection was with the Montreal Northern Colonization Railway Company.

Q.—Had you any knowledge previous to the passing of the Act of Incorporation of the Canada Pacific Railway Company as to any negotiations that were going on?

A.—No. I don't know Mr. McMullen by sight.

Q.—Had you any knowledge of the understanding, subsequent to that period, between Sir Hugh Allan, or Mr. Abbott, and the Government, that Sir Hugh Allan and his friends should advance a large sum of money for the purpose of aiding the elections of Ministers and their supporters at the then ensuing general election, namely, that of 1872; and that he and his friends should receive the contract for the construction of the Pacific Railway; were you aware of any such agreement with the Government or with any member of the Government. Have you any knowledge on this subject whatsoever?

A.—I have no such knowledge whatsoever.

Q.—Had you any communication with Sir Hugh Allan, or with the Government, that would have enabled you to know?

A.—I had not. I know nothing except what I saw in the papers.

Q.—You were interested in the elections of 1872, and took an active part in them, did you not?

A.—I did. I was a member of Sir George Cartier's General Election Committee for the Eastern Division of Montreal.

Q.—Do you know of money having been furnished for the carrying on of the elections there, or in any other part of the city?

A.—Yes. There was a large subscription list passed round, and several gentlemen subscribed. The largest amount subscribed was that by Sir Hugh Allan. Hon. Mr. Starnes stated the other day that it was seventy thousand dollars. My impression is that it did not exceed sixty-five thousand dollars; that is the gross amount of all the subscriptions.

Q.—Do you know of any portion, and if so what portion, was subscribed by Sir Hugh Allan?

A.—His first subscription was ten thousand dollars. I was one of those who signed the receipt for it.

The next sum was for ten thousand dollars more I think, but I am not sure. It was for at least ten thousand more.

Then there was the last or third subscription, or at least it is the only other one of which I have any knowledge. It was for twenty thousand dollars more. I signed the receipt for it.

Q.—Is the name "P. S. Murphy," which I see appended to the printed receipt for $20,000, yours?

A.—Yes. Mr. Betournay's name was also on the receipt for the $20,000 I believe. This receipt is signed "J. L. Beaudry," "Henry Starnes," "P. S. Murphy," "L. Betournay."

Ours was the Central Committee.

Q.—Do you know in whose hands the original of the receipt for the $20,000 now is?

A.—The receipt was given to Mr. Abbott. I was present when it was given, and saw the $20,000 paid. The money was deposited in the Metropolitan Bank.

Q.—Have you any reason to suppose that this receipt has passed out of Mr. Abbott's hands?

A.—No; I have not seen it since. I think it ought to be either in his or Sir Hugh Allan's hands.

Q.—Do you know whether that money was paid in consequence of any letter from Sir George Cartier?

A.—The money was paid in accordance with Sir George Cartier's letter of the 24th August, 1872, and upon the conditions contained in his letter of the 30th July, 1872.

I saw Sir George's letter of the 30th July. I saw it in Sir Hugh Allan's hands at the time, and I saw it a month ago in Mr. Abbott's hands.

It was a little more than a year ago that I saw it with Sir Hugh Allan.

Q.—You published a letter in conjunction with Mr. Beaudry and Mr. Starnes in relation to this letter of Sir George Cartier's of the 30th of July, did you not?

A.—Yes.

Q.—Who has the original of that letter?

A.—It was sent to the 'Gazette.'

Q.—Will you take communication of that letter now, and state to the Commission whether the allegations contained in it are true?

A.—The copy now shown to me is a true copy of the original, and contains the truth.

Q.—You state in this letter that Sir George Cartier's letter of the 30th of July has no reference to the Pacific Railway Company or to the Pacific Railway contract, do you not?

A.—I do. The statement in relation to this matter, published in the 'Gazette,' is perfectly correct.

Q.—Having seen this letter of the 30th July, what statement are you prepared to make upon it?

A.—The same statement as is contained in that letter. I state positively that the contents of that letter are true. I examined Sir George Cartier's letter of the 30th July, and it had no reference whatever to the Pacific Railway Company or to the Pacific Railway contract.

Q.—Were there any other sums than those which you have mentioned subscribed for the promotion of the elections?

A.—There were. I was a subscriber myself, and there were several other subscribers, among whom was Sir Hugh Allan, who was the largest subscriber. The aggregate amount was about $65,000.

We had Committees in all the wards, and the expenses were very great, but the money was not all spent in the Eastern Division. A large portion was spent in elections elsewhere.

I suppose we were robbed, as is general in elections. It was a condition of Sir Hugh Allan's subscription that the expenses of Mr. Beaubien's election should be paid out of the fund if there was a contest. And if we had had a surplus the expenses of Mr. Beaubien would have been paid, but we were short, and therefore it was not done, and that is the reason why Mr. Beaubien's note remains unpaid.

Q.—Did the examination of that letter, which was shown to you by Sir Hugh Allan, purporting to be from Sir George Cartier, leave the impression on your mind which found expression in that letter?

A.—Yes.

Q.—Do you know anything of any telegrams which passed on the subject of these advances between Sir John A. Macdonald and Mr. Abbott?

A.—I saw them in the papers only, and know nothing more about them.

CANADA.

Q.—Was there any application to the Committee for the $7,000 which was given to Mr. Beaubien?

A.—No, I believe not.

And further deponent saith not, and this his deposition having been read by him, he declares that it contains the truth, persists therein, and hath signed.

IN THE MATTER OF THE COMMISSION

Appointing CHARLES DEWEY DAY, ANTOINE POLETTE, and JAMES ROBERT GOWAN, Commissioners to inquire into and report upon the several matters stated in a certain Resolution moved by the Hon. Mr. HUNTINGTON in the House of Commons on the second day of April, A.D. 1873, relating to the Canadian Pacific Railway.

Present: THE COMMISSIONERS.

On this ninth day of September, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and seventy-three, personally came and appeared before us, the above-named Commissioners,

JAMES DAKERS, of the City of Montreal, who being duly sworn, deposeth and saith: I reside in the city of Montreal.

My occupation there is Secretary and General Manager of the Montreal Telegraph Company.

I know Sir Hugh Allan.

I don't know Mr. McMullen. I never saw him.

Q.—Have you any knowledge of any negotiation or agreement between Sir Hugh Allan and G. W. McMullen, in relation to the building of the Canada Pacific Railway?

A.—None whatever.

Q.—Do you mean to say that you have no kind of knowledge relating to that matter at all?

A.—Nothing except what has appeared in the public newspapers.

Q.—Have you any knowledge of any arrangement or understanding between the Government and Sir Hugh Allan for the furnishing of money for the elections in Montreal in 1872?

A.—None whatever except what has appeared in the papers.

Q.—Were you in a position to know anything on this subject to which I refer from your office occupation?

A.—Nothing further than from the messages which passed through our office, but I do not see one out of a hundred perhaps, except there is something of importance brought under my notice. I don't see one-tenth of the communications that pass through the office, and of course I had no means of knowing otherwise.

Q.—Have you any knowledge that money was furnished by Sir Hugh Allan for the elections?

A.—None whatever, except what appeared in the public prints.

Q.—Have you in your possession any telegrams which passed through your office, between Sir John A. Macdonald and Sir Hugh Allan, or the Honourable Mr. Abbott, in the month of August, 1872, referring to the elections, or furnishing money for them?

A.—None; the messages of August, 1872, are all destroyed.

Q.—Are you able to state whether a message signed John A. Macdonald, dated 25th of August, 1872, and directed to Honourable J. J. C. Abbott, Ste. Annes, and marked "immediate, private," in these words, "I must have another $10,000. Don't fail me—last time of calling," ever passed through your office?

A.—I never saw a message of that kind as having passed through our office. There was no such message that I know of, of the 25th August.

Q.—Have you any knowledge whether a message purporting to be sent from J. J. C. Abbott to Sir John A. Macdonald, directed to him at Toronto, and dated Montreal, 26th August, 1872, in these words,—“Draw on me for $10,000,” ever passed through your office?

A.—No; I have no recollection of having seen such a message, nor do I know that such a message ever passed over the line.

Q.—Could these messages have passed through your office without your being aware of it?

A.—Yes.

Q.—Are you positive that all the messages of that date, that is the original telegrams of that date, which have passed through your office have been destroyed?

A.—Yes, I am positive they have been destroyed—and up to the 1st of January, 1873, they have all been destroyed.

Q.—Is there anything in the books of the Telegraph Office in Montreal that would enable you to state if messages in the terms I have referred to ever did pass through office?

A.—Under date the 28th of August, the signature and address taken from a message from Hon. J. J. C. Abbott to Sir John A. Macdonald, appears on our books, but what were the contents of this message I know not.

Q.—Is that the only message which is entered in your books, as passing between the same parties?

A.—There is another address and signature of a message having passed from Sir John A. Macdonald, to the Hon. Mr. Abbott, and which appears in our books on the 24th of August, 1872.

Q.—Have you any means which would enable you to state to the Commission what the contents of these telegrams were?

A.—No means whatever.

Q.—Are you enabled to state by what particular operator in your office they were sent?

A.—I could not tell through what operator they were sent, and I don't think that any operator who received them would be able to tell the contents of them at this distance of time.

Q.—Why are all the original telegrams destroyed?

A.—For want of room is one cause, and another cause is that we don't want, eighteen months, a year, or six months after, to have our operators dragged up to Court and kept there for a whole day. This is a standing order of the office.

To Sir John A. Macdonald through the Chairman:

Q.—How long has this regulation existed as to the destruction of the telegrams?

A.—The regulation for the destruction of them has been in existence for a long period. The regulation for the destruction of them after six months has been in force since January last.

One cause for this new regulation is that there is very little room in which to keep these telegrams.

This regulation had no connection with the telegrams that passed relative to the elections in 1872.

The recommendation for this six months regulation was made by myself, and had nothing whatever to do with the elections. It was made before there was anything known of this Pacific Railway matter at all.

And further deponent saith not, and this his deposition having been read to him, he declares that it contains the truth, persists therein, and hath signed.

On this ninth day of September, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and seventy-three, personally came and appeared before us, the above-named Commissioners,

CHARLES JOSEPH COURSOL, of the City of Montreal, who being duly sworn, deposeth and saith:

I reside in Montreal, my office is Judge of Sessions of the Peace for the Province of Quebec, and Commissioner of Police for the Dominion. I have held that office for several years.

CANADA.

Q.—Did you hold any other office in 1872?

A.—I held the office of Mayor of the city of Montreal. I know Sir Hugh Allan. I saw Mr. McMullen once or twice in Montreal.

Q.—Have you any knowledge of any agreement or negotiation between Sir Hugh Allan and Mr. G. W. McMullen in relation to the construction of the Pacific Railway?

A.—None whatever.

Q.—Have you never known anything of that matter?

A.—I have never known anything of the kind.

Q.—Have you any knowledge of any understanding between the Government, or any member of the Government and Sir Hugh Allan, through the Hon. Mr. Abbott or otherwise, relating to the furnishing of funds by them for the promotion of the elections of 1872 in Montreal?

A.—None whatever; nor is it likely I should have had either. I hope not.

Q.—From your office would you have been likely to have known anything about that?

A.—No, not through my office.

Q.—Have you any knowledge of Sir Hugh Allan's having furnished any funds for the elections of 1872?

A.—No knowledge whatever.

Q.—Do you know of any subscription having been raised for the promotion of Sir George E. Cartier's election?

A.—I heard that there had been a subscription raised for him. I know in one case there was a subscription raised; but I know of no subscription except one, which does not exceed, I believe, two or three hundred dollars. It was given by one of Sir George Cartier's friends.

Q.—Do you mean to say that you know nothing whatever of the subject of this inquiry?

A.—Nothing whatever; I was not a member of any Committee, and did not even vote at the elections, and took no part in them whatever. I know nothing at all of the subject matter of this inquiry, except what I have read in the newspapers.

Q.—Are you aware for what reason your name was put upon the list of witnesses of Mr. Huntington for examination here?

A.—I am not aware; I saw my name on Mr. Huntington's list when it was published during the last Session of Parliament. I met Mr. Huntington yesterday in the street, and I asked him if he knew why my name was put on there. I said to him that if he had any questions he wished put by the Chairman, I would suggest them to the Chairman in order that they might be put to me, and that I might state under oath anything I might know in regard to them. Mr. Huntington then told me that my name had been put there on his list, as it had been suggested to him by somebody during the Session of Parliament, but he did not know or remember what evidence I had to give.

And further deponent saith not, and this his deposition having been read to him, he declares that it contains the truth, persists therein, and hath signed.

IN THE MATTER OF THE COMMISSION

Appointing CHARLES DEWEY DAY, ANTOINE POLETTE, and JAMES ROBERT GOWAN, Commissioners to inquire into and report upon the several matters stated in a certain Resolution moved by the Hon. Mr. HUNTINGTON in the House of Commons on the 2nd day of April, A.D. 1873, relating to the Canadian Pacific Railway.

Present: THE COMMISSIONERS.

On this ninth day of September, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and seventy-three, personally came and appeared before us, the above-named Commissioners,

CHARLES A. LEBLANC, of the City of Montreal, Sheriff, who being duly sworn, deposeth and saith:

I am Sheriff of the district of Montreal, and have been so for nine months.

I know Sir Hugh Allan; I do not know Mr. G. W. McMullen.

Q.—Have you knowledge of any agreement or negotiation between these gentlemen relating to the construction of the Pacific Railway, at any time?

A.—I have not had at any time.

Q.—You positively state that you have no such knowledge?

A.—I state so positively.

Q.—Are you aware of any understanding between Sir Hugh Allan and Mr. Abbott with the Government, that Sir Hugh Allan and his friends should advance money for the promotion of the general election in 1872, and particularly the election of Ministers and their supporters?

A.—I have no knowledge of any such understanding.

Q.—Do you know whether any individual member of the Government had any such understanding with these gentlemen?

A.—I do not know. That is a matter of which I have no knowledge whatever. I never had any conversation with Sir Hugh Allan or any other person with respect to the elections.

Q.—You were not Sheriff at the time those elections were going on, were you?

A.—No, I was not.

Q.—Were you a member of Sir George E. Cartier's Central Election Committee?

A.—Yes; I became a member of it about eight days after it was formed. I heard that Sir George Cartier requested that I should be there: so I went, but I had no time to be there during the day, and I only went when I saw that Sir George wanted me to go. I took an active part in the working of the Committee, particularly at night, as I had no time in the day time.

Q.—Was there any money furnished for the purpose of promoting the elections?

A.—There was undoubtedly by the friends of Sir George Cartier.

Q.—Do you know what amount was subscribed for the purpose?

A.—No, I never inquired, only I asked one or two members if they had enough of money. They said that they thought so for the elections in Montreal.

Q.—Do you know by whom the money was subscribed?

A.—I have not seen the list. I know that I subscribed myself, as I always did, for Sir George Cartier's elections, but I never had anything to do with the money. I always put any money I collected for the election purposes, in the hands of the Cashier. Personally I do not know that Sir Hugh Allan subscribed anything to Sir George Cartier's election. I heard that he did.

Q.—Have you any knowledge of the receipt that was given for $20,000 that was signed by Mr. Murphy, Mr. Beaudry, Mr. Betournay, and Mr. Starnes; do you know if it was received from Sir Hugh Allan from the hands of Mr. Abbott?

A.—I know nothing of it except what I have learnt from the newspapers. I was very much surprised to see it at the time it was published in the papers.

Q.—Then are you prepared to say that you have no knowledge of any sum having been subscribed by Sir Hugh Allan except what you have derived through the newspapers?

A.—Nothing more.

Q.—Do you know anything about the manner in which this money was expended?

A.—I know it was generally expended for the elections. I have not seen the amount. There were only two or three little accounts that I was personally liable for. There may have been some of that money spent for the elections in the country, but I don't know of it personally.

And further for the present, deponent saith not.

And on this tenth day of September, 1873, re-appeared the said witness and made the following addition to his foregoing deposition: When I said that I knew nothing about the contract for the Pacific Railway, I meant to say that I knew nothing about the contract between Sir Hugh Allan and Mr. McMullen, but I now remember that in two instances in the month of June, 1872, Sir George Cartier said, with those energetic words that he generally used, something about the Pacific Railway Company, and that he would never, as long as he would be in the Ministry, consent to any American Company having the contract for building the Pacific Railway. That there were enough of Canadian Companies who were able to do the work, and that he would resign his place in the Ministry if the contract was given to any such Company; and he added, that he hoped his friends would see that the two Companies, meaning that of Sir Hugh Allan and that of Mr. Macpherson, would be amalgamated, and that they would be able to carry the whole matter through without any trouble.

Q.—You say that on two occasions, in the month of June, Sir George Cartier made these remarks you have alluded to. Do you remember when the first conversation occurred?

A.—His first conversation was when I was on a deputation with three other gentlemen.

Q.—Where?

CANADA.

A.—In the Government Buildings at his office.

Q.—Who was present on that occasion?

A.—The Hon. J. L. Beaudry, Mr. Victor Hudon, and Mr. C. S. Rodier, jun., and the Hon. Mr. Chapleau. I cannot say whether they heard these words or not.

Q.—In what capacity were they present and for what purpose?

A.—We came to see, as he was our representative in the East Division, what were his views on the Pacific Railway.

Q.—Was it in answer to such an appeal that these observations were made?

A.—We had a memorial to present to him which was in writing. We left it with him, and then we had a conversation; but I don't know whether the other gentlemen heard what Sir George said, for he spoke to me particularly.

Q.—Was any formal reply given to that memorial?

A.—Not that I know of. We all went into the office together. I think it was then about one o'clock. The memorial was read in my presence, and Sir George answered to it, and said that as our representative we had a right to put to him any question we liked, but as a minister, he could not say anything, but that the interests of Lower Canada would not be overlooked.

Q.—Will you give a circumstantial account of what passed on this first occasion?

A.—I think we have a copy, perhaps, of that memorial. We wanted to know what he thought of the Pacific Railway. I as one of the Directors of the Montreal Northern Colonization Railway, wanted especially to know what he thought about the Pacific, and if an amalgamation could be effected with the Northern Colonization Railway, so as to have the terminus of the Pacific Railway in Montreal.

Q.—At what time in the course of the interviews were these remarks made by Sir George Cartier?

A.—It was just at the time that we were going to leave his office.

Q.—Was it said to you only?

A.—He did not appear to be speaking to me in confidence at all, it was said openly.

Q.—Do you remember if any other gentleman was near at the time?

A.—I cannot remember.

Q.—Can you separate the two occasions, so as to state what was said on the first and what was said on the second occasion?

A.—It was about the same expression that he used on both occasions.

Q.—On the first occasion what was it that Sir George said?

A.—To the best of my opinion it was the very words that I have put into my foregoing deposition.

Q.—What do you mean by "those energetic words" you refer to. Give as near as possible the very words he addressed to you when speaking of the Pacific Railway?

A.—The words he used were, as near as I can remember, as follows:

"Aussi longtemps que je vivrai et que je serai dans le Ministère, jamais une sacrée Compagnie Américaine aura le control du Pacifique, et je résignerai ma place de Ministre plutôt que d'y consentir."

Q.—Were these words said on the first occasion?

A.—I am sure that he made use of them twice, and moreover, I think another time at his own house. He said these words I am sure on the first occasion. He said there were enough of Canadian Companies able to do the work, and that he would resign his place in the Ministry if the contract was given to the Americans.

Q.—Did he say on the first occasion that he hoped that his friends would see that the two Companies would be amalgamated, meaning that of Sir Hugh Allan, and that of Mr. Macpherson, and that the whole matter would be carried through without trouble?

A.—Yes. It was said on leaving the door of his office; we had a second interview with him on 24th June, 1872, when we left him in Ottawa, he wanted us to meet him in Montreal, and we did so on the date I have just mentioned, there were present on this occasion the gentlemen whom I have spoken of, namely:—The Hon. J. S. Beaudry, Victor Hudon, C. S. Rodier, jun., the Hon. Mr. Chapleau. There were a few others present who had nothing to do with our interview.

Q.—Did you still continue in your representative character with him as a prolongation of the first interview?

A.—Yes, it was a prolongation of the first meeting, and it was absolutely the same words that were used as in the first instance.

Q.—Did he enter more fully into the matter then?

A.—No, he did not go more fully into it, with the exception that he again repeated those words in the presence of all the people who were there, and told us we might ask him any question that we liked, in his capacity as our representative, as to what he thought on railway matters, but any question put to him as a minister, he could not answer. As we were at the time preparing for the election, he said he did not want us to bring the matter before the public in connection with the railway scheme, but on his own merits. He said he thought that he had done enough for his country and for the party he represented, and that he ought to be elected on his own merits.

I told him we would do the best we could.

Q.—Did Sir George speak in French or English?

A.—He spoke on both occasions in French. The gentlemen present were all French Canadians.

Q.—On this last occasion, of the 24th June, did you say that Sir George spoke openly in the hearing of all?

A.—Yes; but as to the first occasion I am not quite sure whether the other gentlemen present heard what he said.

Q.—Were you on such intimate terms with Sir George that would have induced him to speak more particularly to you than to the others?

A.—I suppose I was the most intimate with him. I was one of his most intimate friends in Montreal—I mean outside of politics. Ever since we were at college we have been personal friends. I may add that he placed great confidence in me at many times.

Q.—You mentioned that there was another occasion on which Sir George spoke to you personally on this subject; was it in the same spirit?

A.—Yes. This was after the 24th June.

It was at his own place at Long Point. I was down there, as his nomination was to take place the next day, and he wanted to see me, and we had a very long conversation that afternoon. He repeated those very words to me, that it was not necessary to look to foreign Companies to build the Pacific Railway, as we had men in the country who could do the work, and he added that we should try to have an amalgamation made between the two Companies—that of Sir Hugh Allan and that of Mr. Macpherson—and also said that he could not say as to what the Government would do.

To Sir John A. Macdonald, through the Chairman:

Q.—When was the nomination of Sir George Cartier?

A.—It was on the 19th August, 1872.

The election took place on 28th August, 1872.

And further deponent saith not, and this his deposition having been read to him, he declares that it contains the truth, persists therein, and hath signed.

Mr. HUNTINGTON in the House of Commons on the second day of April, A.D. 1873, relating to the Canadian Pacific Railway.

Present: THE COMMISSIONERS.

On this ninth day of September, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and seventy-three, personally came and appeared before us, the above-named Commissioners,

JACKSON RAE, of the City of Montreal, who being duly sworn, deposeth and saith:

I reside in Montreal. My occupation there is General Manager of the Merchants' Bank of Canada.

Q.—Who is President of that Bank?

A.—Sir Hugh Allan.

Q.—Are you connected with Sir Hugh Allan otherwise than in business by any family relations?

A.—None whatever.

Q.—Do you know Mr. G. W. McMullen?

A.—I never saw him, and I never heard of him till the recent correspondence appeared in the newspapers.

Q.—Have you any knowledge of any negotiation or agreement or correspondence between Sir Hugh Allan or any other person in relation to the construction of the Pacific Railway, which took place in 1872?

A.—None whatever.

Q.—Would your relations with Sir Hugh Allan been likely to have enabled you to have known something of this matter?

A.—Not necessarily so.

Q.—No facts connected with that negotiation came to your knowledge?

A.—Nothing ever came under my knowledge connected with any negotiations carried on by Sir Hugh Allan in connection with the Pacific Railway. Nothing whatever.

Q.—Have you a knowledge of any undertaking by Sir Hugh Allan, or by Mr. Abbott, to furnish funds for promoting the elections in Montreal in 1872?

A.—I have no personal knowledge.

Q.—Have you any reason to believe that any such arrangement was made?

A.—Nothing further than mere rumour.

Q.—Did you take any part in the elections in Montreal in 1872?

A.—I did not.

Q.—Are you aware if any sum of money was raised for the purpose of aiding in these elections?

A.—I am not, further than from mere rumour. I had no personal knowledge of it.

Q.—Do you know whether Sir Hugh Allan ever subscribed any money or furnished any sum of money for that purpose?

A.—I have only heard such reports.

Q.—You have not heard that from him?

A.—No, he has not told me.

Q.—Have you any knowledge which would induce you to believe that those rumours were true?

A.—My belief is that the rumours were true, that he did subscribe money.

Q.—Would you give the grounds of your belief, if you please?

A.—Simply from casual remarks of his own, made sometimes to other people in my hearing.

Q.—Have you any idea of the amount which he furnished?

A.—I have not.

Q.—Were any cheques drawn upon his account which would indicate the amount?

A.—I never saw any. They would not necessarily come under my notice in any way, if such existed.

Q.—Would the fact of payment of money for that purpose, be apparent on Sir Hugh Allan's account in the bank?

A.—Not upon the account itself. Whether the vouchers or cheques drawn would show it or not, I am unable to state without a personal examination.

Q.—You mean to say then that you have no knowledge that would enable you to state what amount was subscribed by Sir Hugh Allan?

A.—I have not.

Q.—Do you know to whom the money was paid?

A.—I do not.

Q.—Have you any knowledge whatever of the application of any money, or the mode in which money given in aid of the elections was expended by the Central Committee?

A.—Not the most remote. I know nothing whatever about it.

Q.—Do you know anything of this printed receipt which has been published in the newspapers, signed by Mr. Murphy, Mr. Starnes, Mr. Beaudry, and Mr. Betourney, purporting to be a receipt for $20,000 received from Sir Hugh Allan?

A.—I have seen it in the newspapers. That is the only place I have seen it or heard of it.

Q.—These telegrams of Sir John A. Macdonald to Mr. Abbott, and from Mr. Abbott to Sir John A. Macdonald, have you ever seen them elsewhere than in the newspapers?

A.—Never.

Q.—Has Sir Hugh Allan got more than one account in the Bank; has he a private account different from his business account?

A.—His general business account is under the name of H. & A. Allan. He has a private account besides, but only one.

Q.—Is the condition of that account passed under your view like all other accounts in the bank?

A.—It is.

Q.—Did you observe at the time of the election of any large cheques passing?

A.—Sir Hugh Allan's account is a very large and active one at all times, and I did not notice at the time of the elections anything remarkable about the cheques.

Q.—Is there any connection between your bank and the Metropolitan Bank?

A.—There is none whatever.

Q.—Is there any account that would show exchanges between the two banks; do you exchange from time to time notes?

A.—We do exchange notes and cheques every day. The banks all exchange every day.

Q.—Is there any account that would show the particulars of the exchange each day?

A.—We can see only the figures. The names of the drawers of cheques do not appear.

To Sir John A. Macdonald, through the Chairman—

My connection with Sir Hugh Allan is altogether through the Bank. I am not his political nor his Railway Agent. I was not consulted as to his subscriptions to elections nor as to his arrangements about building Railways.

And further deponent saith not, and this his deposition having been read to him he declares that it contains the truth, persists therein, and hath signed.

IN THE MATTER OF THE COMMISSION

Appointing CHARLES DEWEY DAY, ANTOINE POLETTE, and JAMES ROBERT GOWAN, Commissioners to inquire into and Report upon the several matters stated in a certain Resolution moved by the Hon. Mr. HUNTINGTON in the House of Commons on the second day of April, A.D. 1873, relating to the Canadian Pacific Railway.

Present: THE COMMISSIONERS.

On this eleventh day of September, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and seventy-three, personally came and appeared before us, the above-named Commissioners,

The Honourable JOSEPH OCTAVE BEAUBIEN, of St. Thomas, in the Province of Quebec, who being duly sworn depose and saith:

Q.—Where is your place of residence?

A.—St. Thomas in the Province of Quebec.

Q.—Were you formerly, and are you now, a member of the Legislative Council of Quebec?

A.—Yes, and I am now.

I held the office of Commissioner of Crown Lands in the Province of Quebec.

I know Sir Hugh Allan, I don't know Mr. G. W. McMullen.

Q.—Are you aware of any agreement or negotiations between Sir Hugh Allan and Mr. G. W. McMullen, or any other person, in relation to the construction of the Pacific Railway with funds to be furnished by American capitalists?

A.—None whatever.

Q.—Do you know anything about any negotiations or agreement between those gentlemen in 1872, before the Act of Incorporation was passed relating to the Pacific Railway?

A.—No, sir.

Q.—Had you any relations with those gentlemen that would enable you to know?

A.—No; I had no relations with Sir Hugh Allan before I became a director of the Canadian Pacific Railway.

Q.—In relation to the Canada Pacific Railway, the first one which was incorporated, had you any relations with Sir Hugh Allan which would have enabled you to know of any such agreement or negotiations.

A.—No; I had no conversation with any members of the Government of the Dominion before that. The first knowledge with respect to the Pacific Railway, was when the Company was formed last winter and the Canadian Pacific Railway Company was chartered.

I was appointed Director of that Company. I was nominated by the present Dominion Government.

Q.—Since you have been connected with the Canadian Pacific Company, have you ever had any conversation with any of the Ministers, or any other persons which would enable you to say whether there was such a negotiation as I have alluded to?

A.—No, none whatever. I never had any conversation whatever.

Q.—Do you know Sir Hugh Allan?

A.—Yes.

Q.—Do you know of any arrangement or understanding, between him and the Government, or any member of the Government, in relation to the furnishing of funds for the promotion of the elections of Ministers, and their supporters?

A.—No.

Q.—Do you reside below Quebec?

A.—Yes.

Q.—How far from Montreal?

A.—It must be sixty leagues—one hundred and eighty miles.

Q.—Have you ever had any communication with any of the Ministers or with any person as to the furnishing of funds for the support of the elections in Montreal in 1872?

A.—No, I don't know anything about it. I never received any money from Sir Hugh Allan, or any person acting as the agent or in the interest of Sir Hugh Allan.

Q.—Were any moneys received from Montreal by subscriptions for the support of Ministers in your neighbourhood?

A.—Not that I know of.

Q.—Do you mean to say that you had no manner of communication, or means of knowing how the money was furnished for the promotion of these elections?

A.—No. I never came near those men when this affair is said to have been transacted.

Q.—Do you know for what reason your name was put upon the list of witnesses?

A.—I do not.

Q.—Have you any knowledge by which you can account for your name being there?

A.—They may have thought that I was acting in the elections in the interests of the Government or Ministers; but there are no grounds for that, for about the time of the election I ran myself for the County of Montmagny, which I had represented for a long time, and I never saw during that time Sir Hugh Allan or any one of the Ministers.

Q.—Are you a Member of the Dominion Parliament?

A.—No, not now. I was defeated for the Dominion Parliament.

Q.—You are understood to be a Government supporter?

A.—Yes.

To Sir John A. Macdonald through the Chairman:

Q.—Were you asked by the Ministry to become a Director?

A.—Yes.

Q.—By what Minister were you asked?

A.—By Mr. Langevin.

I reside in the District of Quebec.

Q.—Were you not selected as a representative of the District of Quebec interest as against the Montreal interest?

A.—It was considered so at the time that I represented the Quebec District.

Q. by the Chairman.—How long have you been a member of the Legislative Council, and in public life?

A.—Seventeen years, I think.

I was Commissioner of Crown Lands up to last April. At the time I was appointed on the Board of Directors I held that office, and was a member of the Quebec Government.

And further deponent saith not, and this his deposition having been read to him he declares that it contains the truth, persists therein, and hath signed.

Present: THE COMMISSIONERS.

On this eleventh day of September, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and seventy-three, personally came and appeared before us, the above-named Commissioners,

Reverend DANIEL McMULLEN, of Picton, Province of Ontario, who being duly sworn, deposeth and saith:

Q.—You are a clergyman, Mr. McMullen, are you not?

A.—Yes.

Q.—Of what denomination?

A.—Methodist.

Q.—Is your residence at Picton?

A.—Yes.

Q.—Do you know Mr. George McMullen?

A.—Yes.

Q.—In what relation do you stand to him?

A.—He is my son.

Q.—Do you know Sir Hugh Allan?

A.—No. I never saw him to my knowledge

CANADA.

Q.—Have you any knowledge of a negotiation in which Mr. G. W. McMullen your son was engaged, in relation to the building of the Pacific Railway?

A.—I have some knowledge, the most of which I may say I have gathered from what has been published in the press.

Q.—Have you any other knowledge of a personal character, in regard to this matter, which has come under your personal notice?

A.—None that I am aware of.

I may remark for the information of the Commission, that in the absence of my sons I have a heavy burden of domestic care on my hands in the position which I have occupied for a great many years. I have always had great confidence in the ability of my son to manage any business which he understood. I have never sought information from him unless it was under very pressing circumstances, and then it was done chiefly to relieve myself of the burden and care which at this time of life I was not prepared to bear.

Q.—Has your son been in communication with you in respect to this matter?

A.—No; I know nothing beyond what I have read in the public press.

He has always been very remarkable since early boyhood in business matters, and was always close, and he seldom disclosed any business transaction to the members of my own family.

Q.—Has he been in the habit of communicating or consulting with you?

A.—Not in matters of that kind.

Q.—Has he communicated to you anything in connection with the construction of the Pacific Railway?

A.—I have no recollection of any communication of that kind except at the period at which it was decided and settled that the Government would exclude the American element from the Company, and that the gentlemen for whom he was acting would have no share in the building of the Railway, and supposing that he had spent a very large portion of his time, and that heavy expenses had been connected with it, which he was not well able to lose, and that money had been expended through him on behalf of the persons for whom he was acting, I felt some anxiety lest he might incur some censure for want of energy and fidelity in dealing with the interests of others. I therefore took the liberty—the only time that I think I did make any inquiry into his business matters—of asking him what arrangement was likely to be made for indemnifying himself, and especially the parties for whom he had been acting, so that he would not be exposed to any censure. He assured me that he was fully persuaded and was then in process by which the parties for whom he had acted would be indemnified for the time and expenses he had incurred. I believe that was the only question that I asked him.

Q.—How did you become aware of the expenditure of money by him?

A.—I became aware of it by supposition; I supposed that he would incur expense in dealing with this matter, but I have no recollection of him telling me that he did. I inquired of him in order to relieve my own mind, but it is very little I know intimately or accurately, respecting the whole affair, except what I have gathered from what has been published in the public prints.

Q.—Did he communicate to you any correspondence during the time that it was going on or hold any communication with you on the subject of it?

A.—I don't recollect that he described any of his correspondence, and I did not ask for any, as I thought it would be interfering, and that perhaps he would feel reluctant to communicate to me anything on the subject, and I was therefore a good deal cautious on that ground.

It might naturally be thought that I would be intimately acquainted with those matters, but I am not for various reasons, especially those that I have stated. I had enough else to burden my mind and employ my thoughts and attention, and I studiously endeavoured to avoid inducing him to communicate anything to me on the subject.

Q.—You never saw any of the originals of this correspondence, did you?

A.—No.

Q.—Can you account, Mr. McMullen, for your name being included in the list of witnesses; are you in possession of any knowledge that would account for it to your own mind?

A.—The only reason that I am aware of is the close of the speech made by Mr. Huntington at the prorogation. I read it, but I could not give it in detail.

But he made the remark there, assigning his reason for placing my name on the list of witnesses.

Q.—Can you recollect what that reason was in general terms?

A.—I think he expressed some fear, or suggested to the Committee that perhaps my son might absent himself when called upon to give testimony, and he thought it would be better to secure some member of the family—his father or some of his brothers—that is the only reason that I am aware of.

I am not aware of the reason assigned by the Commission by whom I have been summoned to appear. If there is, I have not seen it. I inferred that the reason mentioned by Mr. Huntington had influenced them.

Q.—Is there any other Daniel McMullen?

A.—I have a son who bears my name that has been some eight or nine years in Parliament. His name is Daniel Y. I have but one name. His name is Daniel Yure McMullen. He resides in Chicago.

I am a minister of the Wesleyan Methodist Church. I am not in possession of a regular charge. The state of my health obliges me to hold a retired position.

My son, Daniel Y. McMullen, is now in attendance here. It happened that at the time I was summoned to appear here he had come on a visit home to his friends, and he came with me.

I am a stranger in Ottawa. I have resided sixty odd years in Canada, since 1811. I am intimately acquainted with the western part of the Province, but this is my first visit to Ottawa.

To Sir John A. Macdonald, through the Chairman:

Q.—Do you know where your son, George W. McMullen, is now?

A.—He is in Chicago; he is there now. He went there some three or four weeks ago. He had been in Pictou before that.

Q.—Is his residence in Pictou or Chicago?

A.—His residence and domicile is in Chicago.

Q.—How long was he in Pictou before he went to Chicago?

A.—Three or four weeks; I could not tell to the day.

And further deponent saith not, and this his deposition being read to him he declares it contains the truth, persists therein, and hath signed.

Sworn and taken on the eleventh day of September, 1873, and acknowledged on the twelfth of said month and year.

IN THE MATTER OF THE COMMISSION

Appointing CHARLES DEWEY DAY, ANTOINE POLETTE, and JAMES ROBERT GOWAN, Commissioners to inquire into and report upon the several matters stated in a certain Resolution moved by the Hon. Mr. HUNTINGTON in the House of Commons on the second day of April, A.D. 1873, relating to the Canadian Pacific Railway.

Present: THE COMMISSIONERS.

On this eleventh day of September, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and seventy-three, personally came and appeared before us, the above-named Commissioners,

DANIEL Y. McMULLEN, of the City of Chicago, who being duly sworn, deposeth and saith:—

Q.—Are you the son of the last witness, Daniel McMullen?

A.—Yes.

Q.—Are you a brother of George W. McMullen?

A.—Yes.

I reside in Chicago.

Q.—What business are you engaged in there?

A.—Banking.

Q.—Are you alone or in co-partnership with any person?

A.—My brothers and myself are together.

Q.—Do you know Sir Hugh Allan?

A.—No.

Q.—Have you any knowledge of an agreement or negotiation in which your brother was engaged in 1871, in relation to the construction of the Pacific Railway?

A.—Yes.

CANADA.

Q.—What is the nature of your knowledge concerning this agreement, is it a personal knowledge or simply derived from what others have told you?

A.—It is both.

Q.—Will you state what personal knowledge you have of it?

A.—I saw the original contract between the American parties and Sir Hugh Allan. I also saw and read quite a large number of Sir Hugh Allan's letters, and I saw nearly all of the documentary evidence that he has or had, that is all the personal knowledge I have; that is the documentary evidence. I saw the original contract that was signed, I believe in New York. The personal knowledge is all documentary, that is with parties directly interested.

Q.—Can you specify any letters which you saw from Sir Hugh Allan?

A.—I could not specify any of them so that you would understand what I meant, except the first letter that he wrote from Montreal. I cannot specify them by date. They were dated along from some time in the fall of 1871, up to the fall of 1872. They date from the beginning of the negotiation in 1871 previous to the elections, till about the first Session of this Parliament.

Q.—Do you know Sir Hugh Allan's handwriting?

A.—I think I would know it. I have no positive knowledge that the signature I saw was his, but the letters came signed Hugh Allan. Part of letters were addressed to C. M. Smith of Chicago, and part were addressed to my brother.

Q.—Do you know in whose possession those letters are now that you speak of?

A.—The only knowledge that I have as to the place of them is from newspaper reports.

Q.—Do you know whether they are or are not in your brother's possession?

A.—They are not in his possession.

Q.—Do you know how he disposed of them?

A.—I only know what he told me. I have no personal knowledge as to how he disposed of them. I can only tell you what he said he did with them.

Q.—What did he say he did with them?

A.—He said they constituted the package in Mr. Starnes' hands in Montreal.

Q.—Did he say that all the letters he had were in that package?

A.—All of the principal were there he said.

Q.—What means have you of knowing Sir Hugh Allan's handwriting?

A.—No means at all, only that I know that my brother addressed letters to him, and that letters came back signed Hugh Allan, addressed to my brother.

Q.—How do you know that your brother wrote to Sir Hugh Allan?

A.—I have seen letters written by my brother addressed to him.

Q.—Did you ever see the parcel which your brother said he gave into Mr. Starnes' hands?

A.—No.

Q.—Can you designate any particular letters which you believe to be from Sir Hugh Allan, besides the one you have mentioned as the first one?

A.—By dates?

Q.—In any way they can be identified.

A.—There were several important letters, in one of which he gave a rough sketch of the sums of money he had expended; and one of the last letters my brother received was in regard to the exclusion of the American element from the Company; and there was another letter, I don't know whether it was in the package or not, giving the amount of stock to be placed in the different parts of Canada.

Q.—What was the subject matter of the first letter to which you allude?

A.—The first letter that I ever saw from Sir Hugh Allan was addressed to C. M. Smith. It merely stated that his address had been given to him by a member of the Government, and that he thought that the time had arrived for the American and Canadian parties to get together.

A letter is shown to witness.

Q.—Is that the letter to which you refer?

A.—No, this is not the letter. The letter that opened the correspondence was written from Montreal, this is written from London. I think it was in 1871, and previous to Sir Hugh Allan sailing for Europe. The one now shown to me was written after the negotiations had proceeded several months.

Q.—Is that the letter you mean now shown to you?

A.—No, it is anterior to that. The first letter that opened the correspondence, I think, was written either in May or June of 1871.

Q.—To whom was that letter addressed?

A.—To Charles M. Smith.

Q.—Did Mr. G. W. McMullen tell you that that letter was included in the package placed in Mr. Starnes' hands?

A.—He told me that the package contained all the letters of importance. He did not indicate to me any special letters.

Q.—Are you confident with respect to the date of it?

A.—The only means I have of knowing is that the negotiations had proceeded some two or three months before the Chicago fire, and that was in October, 1871.

Q.—There are some letters addressed to Mr. Smith in this package; through whom were they obtained from Mr. Smith?

A.—I presume they were given to my brother. The relations between Mr. Smith and my brother and myself are so intimate, that all the correspondence was communicated to us. I handled all the letters of Mr. Smith as well as my brother's, and Mr. Smith handled all my brother's letters in reference to this matter.

Q.—How nearly can you particularize the date in regard to this matter? If you cannot say the day, say the month?

A.—I think it was early in May, 1871.

Q.—You don't know where that letter is now?

A.—It was not considered of sufficient importance to take much care of.

Q.—What other letter do you recollect?

A.—There was a letter detailing the sums of money that Sir Hugh Allan had spent.

Q.—Do you remember the date of that?

A.—I think it was in February. It was in January or February, 1872.

Q.—Here is a letter which reads as follows: "It seems pretty certain that in addition to money payments, the following stock will have to be distributed: To D. L. Macpherson, $100,000," &c. Is this the letter you refer to?

A.—No, it is another letter. I said that I recollected that letter in addition to the other.

Q.—"On whom am I to draw for money." Is that the letter?

A.—I believe that is the letter. On examining it I see that this is the other letter. I recollect this letter. This does not refer to the appropriation of stock in Canada. This is one of the letters that I recollect as having been received by Mr. Smith as coming from Sir Hugh Allan. I saw it after Mr. Smith received it. Within a day or two after he received it, he either called at our office or we called at his office, and all these letters were read by both parties.

Q.—Look at that letter dated 16th September, 1872, and say if it is the letter you refer to relating to the money?

A.—Yes, this is the letter.

Q.—Are there any other letters you can remember of?

A.—I believe that there were two letters that came from Sir Hugh Allan in regard to the breaking up of the arrangements in the fall of 1872. I scarcely think they are in the package, but they may be.

Q.—Why don't you think they were in the package?

A.—Because they did not consider them of sufficient importance.

Q.—Sufficient importance for what?

A.—In regard to the scheme; when he put the letters in the package, he put in all the letters that had important matters in them, in regard to the negotiations, but I don't think he put them in; that is letters which close the negotiations. They were too short and abrupt. The letter dated 11th November is one that was in the package.

Q.—Look at the other letter now shown to you, and say if that is one of the letters you have alluded to.

A.—Yes, both of the letters now shown me are the two letters I have spoken of.

Q.—Do these complete the whole series?

A.—Yes.

Q.—You said there were two letters, which were not thought important, and that you did not suppose they were in the package?

A.—Excuse me, I said that they were not important, I meant my brother told me, he had put in all the important letters, and from my recollections, I suppose he considered them of little importance, but I see he has put them in.

Q.—Have you copies of all correspondence that passed?

A.—No.

Q.—Has your brother?

A.—Not to my knowledge.

Q.—Do you keep a letter book?

A.—Yes.

Q.—Do you copy important letters received and sent?

CANADA.

A.—These letters were never copied. We keep a letter book in which we usually take copies of letters received and sent. They may have been copied by hand. Nearly all of the letters that my brother wrote, either he or I usually copied them in letter form.

Q.—Were they in a particular book?

A.—Not in a book at all, but on a sheet of paper.

Q.—Are these copies in existence?

A.—I don't know that they are.

Q.—Were copies of the letters despatched by you kept?

A.—Yes, it is the copies despatched by us that I refer to.

Q.—Were the letters received copied?

A.—No, they were simply filed away. After the contents of the letters received were known to two or three interested in the scheme, my brother usually took charge of them himself.

Q.—Do you know of any interviews that your brother had with Sir Hugh Allan or anybody else in reference to these matters?

A.—Only what he told me. The only person he ever consulted in my presence were one or two gentlemen in Toronto. It was on one occasion when I was with him in Toronto. We met Mr. James Beaty and his nephew. They were the only persons that we conversed with when I was present.

Q.—You have never been present at any interviews between him and Sir Hugh Allan, or any other person representing Sir Hugh Allan?

A.—I was present at one or two interviews that he had with Mr. Waddington and Mr. Kersteman, in Chicago, but I did not consider that they were themselves directly interested. That was at the very opening of the negotiations.

I live in Chicago. I have been recently in Pictou. I left Chicago on Sunday night. My brother was there at that time. He had not received any subpoena when I saw him.

Q.—Do you know anything more about this matter of your own personal knowledge?

A.—Nothing but the terms of the contract. I saw the contract between the New York parties, my brother, Mr. Smith, and Sir Hugh Allan.

Q.—What date was that?

A.—It is a year since I saw it. I think it was in the fall of 1871. I cannot designate the date.

Q.—Was the contract dated?

A.—I cannot swear positively that it was dated. I have merely reference to the time that it was signed.

Q.—Did you see it signed?

A.—No.

Q.—How can you say it was signed, if you did not see it signed?

A.—I know it was signed between the time that my brother left Chicago and came back, and brought the contract with him.

Q.—Did he prepare a contract before he left Chicago?

A.—He prepared a memorandum on which to make the contract.

Q.—The instrument that you saw apparently signed, was it the instrument that he brought back with him?

A.—I never saw that instrument until after he came back. I have merely his word for it that it was signed.

Q.—Can you say the date?

A.—No, I cannot.

Q.—Have you no recollection at all?

A.—My recollection of the date is, that it was either in December or the last of November, 1871.

Q.—What names did the writing that you saw bear; what signatures were to it?

A.—The American names were W. B. Ogden, George W. Cass, Thomas Scott, Governor Smith of Vermont, and W. G. Fargo.

The majority of these gentlemen live in New York.

Q.—Were these all?

A.—No; Winslow Lanier and Co., I believe, signed. I understood that their signatures stood for a number of other parties, and the President's, I do not remember his name, of the United States and Adams Express Company.

Q.—Did the contract purport to bear Sir Hugh Allan's signature?

A.—Yes; there was the signature—Sir Hugh Allan, my brother, and C. M. Smith.

Q.—At what time did your brother leave for the purpose of procuring this contract?

A.—He left very soon after Sir Hugh Allan returned from England in the fall of 1871—I think it was in the last of November.

Q.—What time did your brother return?

A.—He returned immediately after the holidays.

Q.—How many days was he away?

A.—He was away about five or six weeks, to the best of my recollection.

Q.—Do I understand you to say that he did not frame the contract, but notes upon which the contract was to be framed?

A.—I said he prepared a memorandum for the contract, with the view to a full contract.

Q.—Was it signed by Sir Hugh Allan—you do not know?

A.—I did not see these parties sign.

Q.—Do you know where that instrument is now?

A.—I believe it is in my office.

Q.—Is it there?

A.—I have only my brother's words for it, that a package of papers in the vault contains all these papers. I have not seen it since a year ago.

Q.—Did you see your brother place it in the vault then?

A.—No.

Q.—Did he show it to you himself, or did you ask to see it?

A.—He showed it to me voluntarily, as he did all the documents.

Q.—Are you interested in his business?

A.—We are partners.

Q.—Did he put the document into his package after he had shown it to you?

A.—When he showed it to me we were in Pictou. He went soon after to Chicago, and I have never seen the contract since.

Q.—How soon after you left Chicago did you see him in Pictou?

A.—It was several months. He left Chicago for the purpose of getting this contract signed, and it was afterwards that I saw him in Pictou.

Q.—Had you not seen him in the meantime?

A.—He came to Chicago and returned. The document, as I understood him, remained in New York for some time, and he afterwards went to New York to get it, and it was when passing through Pictou that he showed me the Contract. That was the first, and only time I saw it.

Q.—Do you know what endorsement was on the package given to Mr. Starnes?

A.—No.

Q.—Do you not know anything of it?

A.—All I know of the package is that he told me that the letters were in the package, and that there were two notes addressed to Mr. Starnes, to govern him and his action in regard to the delivery of them.

To Sir John A. Macdonald, through the Chairman:

Q.—You are a partner of George W. McMullen?

A.—Yes.

Q.—I think you have stated that you are intimately acquainted with all the proceedings and arrangements between your brother and Mr. Smith?

A.—Yes.

Q.—Who else in Chicago are interested?

A.—There was Mr. Hurlbert, who assisted somewhat in the negotiations as a friend of Mr. Smith. Our relations with Mr. Hurlbert were not very intimate. We did not consider that he was really negotiating.

Q.—Did you see those letters as they were published in the 'Montreal Herald'?

A.—I saw them published in the 'Globe,' but not in the 'Herald.'

Q.—Do you know who gave them to the 'Herald' to be published?

A.—No.

Q.—Did your brother not tell you?

A.—No.

Q.—Have you any knowledge?

A.—No, I do not know—I never heard.

Q.—Have you any suspicion?

A.—I have not.

Q.—Do you swear that you do not know?

A.—Yes.

Q.—Are you your brother's partner?

A.—Yes.

CANADA.

Q.—Have you seen all the correspondence from end to end?

A.—Yes.

Q.—And yet you have not the slightest idea how these letters got into the 'Montreal Herald' or 'Toronto Globe'?

A.—No.

Q.—Do you swear to that?

A.—I do.

Q.—Did you never hear of your brother giving copies of these letters to anyone?

A.—No.

Q.—Did you never hear of his giving copies to me?

A.—He told me that he showed them to you.

Q.—Do you not remember in one of his letters of his having said that he gave copies to me?

A.—I do not recollect.

Q.—Did he never tell you about giving copies to Mr. Huntington, to Mr. Foster, or to anybody else?

A.—No.

Q.—Have you read your brother's letters that were published?

A.—I have read most of them.

Q.—Do you remember in one of his letters that he said he had given copies of them to me?

A.—My recollection is that in the interview with you he showed you the letters. He never said to me that he had given copies of them to anyone.

Q.—Do you know how much he was to get for putting this correspondence into Mr. Starnes' hands?

A.—I have no recollection of his telling me directly.

Q.—Although you are in business relations with him, you don't know whether he got $20,000 or 20,000 pence?

A.—At the time he gave these letters I was out of the city at a branch office in another part of the State. I know from hearsay what he got, but he did not tell me.

Q.—Was it from Mr. Smith or Mr. Hurlburt?

A.—No. It was from another brother who wrote me while I was absent from the city.

Q.—How much did you get of these $20,000?

A.—Nothing.

Q.—Does not this amount of $20,000 appear in your books?

A.—No.

Q.—You have no interest in that money?

A.—No, I got no share or interest in it.

Q.—And yet you are a partner with your brother and Mr. Smith in all the Pacific Railway matter?

A.—Yes. I said that I was interested in the proceedings. But as far as this money was concerned, I had no share whatever. Our partnership received none. The $20,000 were divided round for current expenses. Mr. Smith got some, and Mr. Hurlburt got some. It was divided among all those acting in the negotiation.

Q.—How did you know that this money was divided round for current expenses?

A.—I heard it from a letter I received from another brother, who was in Chicago when my brother came home.

Q.—Did you ever hear about a $17,000 cheque that was contained in the same letter?

A.—Yes; I heard by the same means that there was a cheque for $17,500; but I don't recollect what my brother told me about it. All I understood was with regard to the general arrangements about the package.

Q.—Did he tell you nothing about this cheque?

A.—He told me the other day that he would forfeit $17,500.

Q.—How was he to forfeit this money?

A.—He said that if the package was given over to Sir Hugh Allan before a certain time after the closing of last Session of Parliament he would forfeit $17,500.

Q.—Did he tell you that if the letters were published by him, he would forfeit $17,500?

A.—No.

Q.—Did he not tell you that if any of the negotiations came out until after a certain time he would forfeit $17,500?

A.—No.

Q.—Did he not tell you about $25,000 that he was to get from Mr. Huntington?

A.—No.

Q.—He did not?

A.—No. He told me that no one ever gave him a cent.

Q.—He told you that, but he did not tell you about the other matter?

A.—He told me about that, but he knew that I had heard about the other matter from my other brother.

Q.—You say that the package contained all the letters of importance, do you know if there were other letters?

A.—I have no knowledge of any others. My brother did not say that it contained all the letters, and I have no knowledge as to whether the package contained all the letters or not.

And further for the present deponent saith not.

And on the twelfth day of September, 1873, re-appeared the said witness, and made the following alterations and additions to the foregoing deposition.

I wish to add that the letters, which passed between Sir Hugh Allan and my brother, date from the beginning of the negotiations, in 1871, until the close of the first Session of Parliament—also in answer to the question, “Why don’t you think that certain letters “are in the package?”

I wish to change the word they in my answer to I, making it read, “Because I did not “consider them of sufficient importance.”

I desire also to add, that the conversation I refer to, with my brother, with regard to the forfeiting $17,500, took place a few weeks ago, and that my brother told me that if the Committee was dissolved, and the package fell into Sir Hugh Allan’s hands, he would forfeit $17,500.

On another point I have been thinking over in my mind, since my examination, and I now remember that my brother and myself had two conversations.

The contract that he showed me at the interview, at Pictou, was a private one between himself and his New York partner.

The contract between the American parties and Sir Hugh Allan was shown to me at Chicago.

I wish to add further that when I saw the charges in the newspapers, that my brother was a paid witness, or something to that effect, I questioned to know if he had received any remuneration. He replied he had not received one cent, and would not even accept his current expenses.

Q.—I think you said that you saw in your brother’s possession, either received by him directly or from other parties, all the evidence that was published in the newspapers, is that so?

A.—I said that I saw the letters that were published in the ‘Globe.’

Q.—Did you see the telegrams that were published?

A.—I saw them after they were published.

Q.—You did not see them before?

A.—No.

Q.—Not any one of them?

A.—Not any telegrams published in connection with his letter. I never saw any of them except in print.

Q.—There is a copy of an alleged telegram from Sir John A. Macdonald to Mr. Abbott, which was published; did you see the original of that?

A.—No.

Q.—Did you see the original of one purporting to be from Mr. Abbott to Sir John A. Macdonald, which has been published?

A.—Not except in print.

Q.—Have you any knowledge in respect to how they were acquired?

A.—No.

Q.—Can you give the Commission any further information on this subject?

A.—I asked my brother how he got those telegrams, and he said he might tell me some time, but he would not then.

Q.—You never saw any of the originals of the telegrams that appeared?

A.—I never saw them till they appeared in print, and I did not know that my brother had them.

Q.—There is a letter from Sir George E. Cartier published also, did you see that?

A.—No.

CANADA.

To Sir John A. Macdonald, through the Chairman :

Q.—Have you seen any other papers connected with the subject of this inquiry further than Sir Hugh Allan's correspondence, and the contract you have spoken of?

A.—Not that I have any recollection of.

Q.—You have not seen any of the papers attached to your brother's second letter I mean the telegrams spoken of by one of the Commissioners?

A.—I don't recollect which was his second letter. On being informed, I say that I never saw these telegrams till I saw them in print.

Q.—When did your brother tell you that he would inform you at some future time where he got these telegrams?

A.—I don't recollect the exact date. It was after the letter appeared. It was in Chicago he told me.

Q.—You had seen all the other papers yourself?

A.—I saw the correspondence.

Q.—But he withheld these telegrams from you, you say?

A.—Yes, I never saw them.

Q.—You asked him where he got them?

A.—Yes, I asked where he got the telegrams, and he said that he would probably tell me sometime.

Q.—You did not press the question after?

A.—No. I thought it was of no use pressing it.

And further deponent saith not, and this his deposition having been read by him he declares that it contains the truth, persists therein, and hath signed.

IN THE MATTER OF THE COMMISSION

Appointing CHARLES DEWEY DAY, ANTOINE POLETTE, and JAMES ROBERT GOWAN, Commissioners to inquire into and report upon the several matters stated in a certain Resolution moved by the Hon. Mr. HUNTINGTON in the House of Commons on the second day of April, A.D. 1873, relating to the Canadian Pacific Railway.

Present: THE COMMISSIONERS.

On the twelfth day of September, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and seventy-three, personally came and appeared before us, the above-named Commissioners,

The Honourable JEAN CHARLES CHAPAIS, of the Parish of St Denis, in the Province of Quebec, who being duly sworn, deposeth and saith:

I am Senator of the Dominion of Canada for the Province of Quebec, and a member of the Legislature. I was one of the Dominion Ministers from the time of Confederation up to 25th January last, when I handed in my resignation.

JUDGE POLETTE—I will read the first part of the charge:

“That in anticipation of the legislation of last Session, as to the Pacific Railway, an agreement was made between Sir Hugh Allan, acting for himself, and certain other Canadian promoters, and G. W. McMullen, acting for certain United States capitalists, whereby the latter agreed to furnish all the funds necessary for the construction of the contemplated railway, and to give the former a certain percentage of interest in consideration of their interest and position, the scheme agreed upon being ostensibly that of a Canadian Company with Sir Hugh Allan at its head.”

Q.—Have you any knowledge of the arrangement there referred to?

A.—Having heard the charge read, I declare that I have no knowledge of it whatever. I know nothing of any, except what I saw in the press, and the legislation referred to in Mr. Huntington's charge took place without there being any such arrangement. I did not learn of any such arrangement being in existence while I was a member of the Dominion Government, nor did I hear of any conversations to that effect. I do not know of any negotiations having taken place with any member of the Government. Several conversations occurred relative to the means to be taken to procure the money necessary for the construction of the Pacific Railway, but I do not know that mention was particularly made of any such arrangements as that referred to in the deed; in all these conversations I always understood that the general desire was that the Pacific Railway should be built with British capital. I never had any interview on the subject with Sir Hugh, nor do I know that any other member of the Government had any in respect of this matter.

JUDGE POLETTE—I will now read another part of the charge:

“That subsequently an understanding was come to between the Government, Sir Hugh Allan, and Mr. Abbott, that Sir Hugh Allan and his friends should advance a large sum of money for the purpose of aiding the elections of Ministers and their supporters, at the ensuing general elections, and that he and his friends should receive the contract for the construction of the railway.”

Q.—Have you any knowledge of that sort?

A.—No; I do not know of any sum having been advanced to the Government for election purposes.

Q.—Do you know of any promise of money having been made?

A.—No; no such promise was ever made to me.

Q.—Was it ever said that any member of the Government had received money to assist in the elections?

A.—It was never said before me.

It is always understood that elections cannot be carried on without money. I understood money was subscribed by the friends of the candidates, but no sum of money was derived for the service suggested. When I speak of aiding the elections, I mean the money that is spent legally.

I do not know if any money was subscribed for the elections of Montreal, except from what has appeared in the press.

Q.—Do you know Sir Hugh Allan?

A.—I know him a little. We have never spoken but twice. Those conversations were not relative to the Pacific Railway. If that subject was ever mentioned, it was in so light and incidental a manner that I never thought anything of it. I think it quite possible that I mentioned it to him on the cars, and I may have asked him “what progress are you making with your Pacific Railway project?”

I knew that Sir Hugh Allan had an interest in the construction of the Pacific Railway, because on one occasion there was a question before me regarding an Act of Incorporation.

The circumstance to which I allude is this: Sir Hugh Allan was one day introduced in the Council Chamber, when I was present, and he expressed there his intention to take an interest in the construction of the Pacific Railway. I think this was in the autumn months of 1871. There had at that time been no legislation on the subject of this railway, but the matter was being discussed. There were only a few words exchanged at that time, only sufficient to give me to understand what I have just mentioned.

There were other Ministers present.

The means were not spoken of at that time for building the Pacific Railway.

I do not remember who were the Ministers present, but I am certain the Prime Minister was there.

Sir Hugh Allan never spoke to me of the election fund.

I did not know he had subscribed until I saw it in the newspapers; I never heard of it from him nor any one else.

I never had any conversation with Mr. Abbott on the subject of moneys to be subscribed by Sir Hugh Allan for the elections, and have no knowledge of any conversation of that kind between him and any other person.

Q.—Were you ever informed of the alleged facts into which this Commission is enjoined to inquire?

A.—No; there was nothing that could lead me to suspect that any such facts were true. I think if they were true I would have known them as a Minister.

By Mr. LANGEVIN, through the Chairman:

Q.—Could you say what was the opinion of the members of the Government on the subject of the construction of the Pacific Railway by Americans and with American capital?

A.—With the exception of one of the Ministers, whom it is not necessary to mention, the Ministers were hostile to the construction of the Pacific Railway by Americans and with American capital.

Q.—Can you state the name of the Minister who was considered favourable to the

CANADA.

Americans in connection with the construction of the Pacific Railway with American capital?

A.—I understand Sir Francis Hincks was not unfavourable to that.

Q.—Do you know particularly if Sir George Cartier was opposed to the construction of the Pacific Railway with American capital?

A.—I have heard Sir George Cartier energetically oppose such a course, and I may here say the same for myself.

Q.—Can you say if the negotiations for granting the Charter to the Company now chartered to construct the Pacific Railway, were anterior to or after the general elections?

A.—These arrangements were posterior to the elections.

Q.—Is it correct that after the general elections the Government did all they could do to convince Sir Hugh Allan and Senator Macpherson, as representing the two incorporated Companies, to consent to an amalgamation of the two Companies, as provided for by the Act authorizing the Government to grant a Charter for building the Railway?

A.—The greatest efforts were made by the Government, and the greatest persuasion was used to induce the interested parties in the two Companies to agree to amalgamation for the building of the road, and it was only after the impossibility of arriving at such an agreement that the Government used the means which the law gave them to exercise in the presence of such an emergency.

Q.—In granting the Charter of the Company which now exists, do you know if the Government had in view the special interests of Sir Hugh Allan; or if, on the contrary, the Government did not do all it could to ensure the construction of the railway by means of a Company capable apparently of securing a representation of the federal interests of the Dominion?

A.—From the commencement to the end the efforts of the Government were constant to form a Company which would afford the best guarantee for the completion of that great work. Those efforts tended to conciliate, as far as possible, the opposing interests of the two Provinces, the most important in the Dominion, I mean Ontario and Quebec; and to that end we chose the organization of the Company now existing, the names affording the best guarantee that the work will be accomplished. We considered the desirability of introducing into the new Company the names which appeared in both Acts of Incorporation of the Company.

Q.—Can you state positively that before the general elections there was no agreement between Sir Hugh Allan and the Government on the subject of the construction of the Pacific Railway?

A.—In my recollection as a member of the Government, there never was any such agreement.

Q.—By the PRESIDENT: Can you say whether Sir Francis Hincks continued to hold his first opinions about American capital, or whether he surrendered them subsequently?

A.—Yes; he gave up his own opinions afterwards, and coincided in the views of his colleagues.

And the said deponent saith nothing more for the present.

On the thirteenth day of September, 1873, the witness again appeared and desired to add the following to his deposition:

At the time of the interview between Sir Hugh Allan and some members of the Cabinet, of which I have above spoken, he was accompanied by two persons named respectively Smith and McMullen. After the usual introduction, the question of the Pacific was mentioned by them. As well as I can remember, the following was the substance of the short conversation which took place on this subject. Sir John A. Macdonald inquired if they had anything to say. To this they replied as follows:—"In case propositions are made to the Government, are they ready to discuss them?" On Sir John replying in the negative, the gentlemen said that under these circumstances they had nothing to say. And the interview thus terminated.

And further the deponent saith not, and this his deposition having been read by him, he declares it contains the truth, persists therein, and hath signed.

Sworn, and taken on this twelfth day of

Appointing CHARLES DEWEY DAY, ANTOINE POLETTE, and JAMES ROBERT GOWAN, Commissioners to inquire into and report upon the several matters stated in a certain Resolution moved by the Hon. Mr. HUNTINGTON in the House of Commons on the second day of April, A.D. 1873, relating to the Canadian Pacific Railway.

Present: THE COMMISSIONERS.

On this twelfth day of September, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and seventy-three personally came and appeared before us, the above-named Commissioners,

The Honourable MATTHEW HENRY COCHRANE, of Compton, in the Province of Quebec, who being duly sworn, depose and saith:—

I reside in Compton, Quebec.

My occupation there is farmer and stock breeder.

I am a member of the Senate.

I know Sir Hugh Allan. I do not know Mr. G. W. McMullen.

Q.—Have you any knowledge of any agreement or negotiation between Sir Hugh Allan and Mr. McMullen in relation to the construction of the Canada Pacific Railway at any time?

A.—None whatever.

Q.—Have you at any time heard any member of the Government or Sir Hugh Allan himself make any reference to the existence of any such agreement or negotiation?

A.—Not to my knowledge.

Q.—Were you, from the nature of your occupation, or from any particular position you were in, likely to become acquainted with negotiations of that character?

A.—I might.

Q.—Have you had any conversation with any of the members of the Government in relation to any contemplated agreement for the building of the Pacific Railway with American capital?

A.—I have not.

Q.—Have you any knowledge of an understanding between Sir Hugh Allan, Mr. Abbott, and the Government, or any members of the Government, for the supplying of money to aid in the election of Ministers and their supporters in the general elections of 1872?

A.—None, aside from what was in the public press; nothing else.

Q.—Has anything in any way come to your knowledge which would lead you to believe that there was such an understanding?

A.—None.

Q.—Did you take an active interest or part in the elections of 1872?

A.—I was interested in them; but I was on no committee whatever.

Q.—Do you know of the subscription of any sums of money for the carrying on of these elections?

A.—One small sum only.

Q.—Was that in the city of Montreal or in the neighbourhood where you live?

A.—It was in Montreal.

Q.—Was that sum subscribed by Sir Hugh Allan?

A.—It was not.

Q.—Do you know what amount was subscribed in Montreal for the promotion of the elections?

A.—I do not.

Q.—Do you know whether Sir Hugh Allan added to that subscription in any way?

A.—I don't, of my own knowledge.

Q.—Have you any knowledge that anybody else, besides this one person whom you have alluded to, subscribed?

A.—I have not.

Q.—Have you any objection to state who he was?

A.—It was the firm of Smith, Cochrane & Co., of which I am a partner. We have been in the habit of doing so at all the general elections, and have been doing it for many years past.

Q.—Have you any knowledge of the matters to be inquired into by this Commission? any knowledge relating to the construction of the Pacific Railway, or to the furnishing of money for the elections, which you have not stated, and which may be of use to us?

CANADA.

A.—I was one of the Provisional Directors of the Interoceanic Company.

Q.—Are you aware of the negotiations which took place for an amalgamation between that Company and the Canada Pacific Railway Company?

A.—Only what I have learned from the press. I never met the Directors but once, and that was in June of 1872, in Toronto. That was before these negotiations took place.

Q.—Do you know why these negotiations failed; why the amalgamation did not take place?

A.—I don't further than what I see in the press.

Q.—Are you aware that your name was put down on the list of witnesses?

A.—I am not.

Q.—Have you any idea what information or what kind of information was expected to be derived from your testimony?

A.—I have not; I have no idea unless it was because I was one of the Provisional Directors in the Interoceanic Company.

To Sir John A. Macdonald, through the Chairman.

I have no idea why I was put on Mr. Huntington's list of witnesses. I never had any conversation with Mr. Huntington on this matter except in a joking way after he had made his charges.

There was nothing said by me that would lead him to believe that I knew anything about this matter; not the slightest.

And further deponent saith not for the present.

And on this thirteenth day of September, 1873, the witness re-appeared and made the following addition to his foregoing deposition: I wish to add to my answer to the question—"Have you had any conversation with any member of the Government in relation to any contemplated agreement for the building of the Pacific Railway with American capital?"—the following: On the contrary, I have repeatedly heard one member of the Government say that on no condition would Americans be allowed to have any control.

Q.—What member of the Government said so, and at what time and where was it said?

A.—It was the Honourable Mr. Pope, in the fall of 1872, on several occasions at Ottawa, and also at Montreal.

And further deponent saith not, and this, his deposition, having been read to him, he declares it contains the truth, persists therein, and hath signed.

IN THE MATTER OF THE COMMISSION

Appointing CHARLES DEWEY DAY, ANTOINE POLETTE, and JAMES ROBERT GOWAN, Commissioners to inquire into and report upon the several matters stated in a certain Resolution moved by the Hon. Mr. HUNTINGTON, in the House of Commons, on the second day of April, A.D. 1873, relating to the Canadian Pacific Railway.

Present: THE COMMISSIONERS.

On this twelfth day of September, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and seventy-three, personally came and appeared before us, the above-named Commissioners,

FREDERICK WILLIAM CUMBERLAND, of the City of Toronto, who being duly sworn, deposeth and saith:

Q.—Where is your place of residence?

A.—Toronto.

Q.—What is your occupation there?

A.—Managing Director of the Northern Railway.

Q.—Do you know Sir Hugh Allan?

A.—I do.

Q.—Do you know Mr. George McMullen?

A.—I do not.

Q.—Have you any knowledge of any agreement or any negotiations between these gentlemen in relation to the building of the Canada Pacific Railway with American capital?

A.—I have not.

Q.—Have you any knowledge of any negotiations in relation to the construction of the Pacific Railway in the winter of 1872, or the autumn of 1871?

A.—Yes.

Q.—Will you state what that knowledge was?

A.—Do you mean negotiations between other parties, or negotiations in which I myself was engaged?

Answer by Commissioner.

I mean negotiations in which Sir Hugh Allan was engaged.

Answer by witness.

None whatever, except for the purpose of the amalgamation of the Interoceanic Company with that of the Canada Pacific.

Q.—Had you any knowledge of any negotiations having for their object the construction of the Pacific Railway with American capital at any time?

A.—None.

Q.—Were you a Provisional Director of the Canada Pacific Company, that was incorporated in the Session of 1872?

A.—I was a Provisional Director of the Interoceanic Company that was incorporated during that Session, but not of the other.

Q.—Was the Interoceanic Company in some sense the rival of the other Company?

A.—It was the Company commonly known as the Macpherson Company.

Q.—Was it antagonistic to the other Company?

A.—Yes, it was the rival of Sir Hugh Allan's.

Q.—Are you a Director of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company—the one now chartered?

A.—I am.

Q.—Have you any knowledge of any negotiations which took place for the amalgamation of the Canada Pacific Railway Company and the Interoceanic Railway Company?

A.—I was aware of an effort being made to bring about that amalgamation, but before the efforts were exhausted I left for England.

Q.—Were there any negotiations between the two Companies having that end in view—the amalgamation?

A.—No, not to my knowledge. The negotiations to which I referred just now were those emanating from the Government. My opinion was sought by a member of the Government as to whether such an amalgamation was possible.

Q.—Who was that member?

A.—The Hon. Mr. Campbell, then Postmaster-General.

Q.—What was your impression as to his views on the subject?

A.—Mr. Campbell evinced very great anxiety to bring about an amalgamation, and asked my opinion as to the possibility of it, so far as I knew the opinions and views of my colleagues on the Interoceanic Board.

Q.—At what time did this conversation take place?

A.—I think it was about the end of October or early in November, 1872.

Q.—Did any amalgamation take place?

A.—No.

Q.—Why not?

A.—I cannot say of my own knowledge, because the efforts towards amalgamation had not been exhausted when I was obliged to leave for England, and I was not aware what course these events took after my interview with Mr. Campbell. I was aware that he acted in some measure upon my advice, my opinion being that an amalgamation was not impossible, and that the majority of my colleagues on the Interoceanic Board would consent to such an amalgamation, provided that they obtained a sufficient guarantee for the exclusion of American influence, to which I had already expressed our objection. Mr. Campbell told me that those guarantees would be given, and of a nature that would be quite satisfactory to us. I then, although recognizing personal difficulties as between Sir Hugh Allan and Mr. Macpherson, expressed the opinion that the majority of my colleagues on the Interoceanic Board would accept such a guarantee and consent to the amalgamation. That, however, did not prove to be correct.

Q.—Was any sufficient guarantee given to the Interoceanic Company?

CANADA.

A.—In my opinion the guarantees that were then suggested by Mr. Campbell were amply sufficient.

Q.—They did not satisfy the Interoceanic Company, did they?

A.—I don't know. I think there were some personal reasons that probably offered additional obstacles.

Q.—How long were those negotiations going on, tending to the amalgamation of the two Companies?

A.—It must have been for a very short time, because I left, immediately after my interview with Mr. Campbell, for England.

Q.—Are you able to say when they began?

A.—My impression is that Mr. Campbell came to me first, so far as Toronto was concerned at any rate. I don't know that I am able to state the date of that conversation with accuracy, for I only remember it as immediately preceding my leaving for England. I think I left for England early in November.

Q.—Had you any conversation with any other Member of the Government on the subject?

A.—Yes. I had a conversation with Sir John A. Macdonald.

Q.—What was the purport of that conversation?

A.—It was after my interview with Mr. Campbell, and I think on my way to England; the conversation was somewhat similar to that which I held with Mr. Campbell. I think I told Sir John the purport of that conversation, and repeated my own views as to the possibility of an amalgamation.

Q.—Was there any conversation especially, as to the exclusion of American capital and of the American element altogether, in your interview with Sir John A. Macdonald?

A.—Yes; both with Mr. Campbell and Sir John A. Macdonald. I explained that the American element would have to be excluded, but I thought if there was a sufficient guarantee given as to that, an amalgamation might be effected.

So far as my knowledge goes, I understood that the Government always held the same views as to the desirability of amalgamation.

Q.—Have you any knowledge concerning the elections of 1872, in the Province of Quebec, particularly in Montreal?

A.—None.

Q.—Have you any knowledge of money being subscribed in aid of the elections of Ministers and their supporters, either in Quebec or Ontario?

A.—I have some knowledge of efforts being made for raising money for election purposes in Ontario.

Q.—Do you know whether Sir Hugh Allan contributed?

A.—I have no personal knowledge; I have learned it from hearsay, and from the newspapers, but I have no knowledge of my own.

Q.—Did that information come from any member of the Government, or from Sir Hugh Allan?

A.—No; from neither.

Q.—Were you on any of the election committees in Ontario?

A.—No, I was not.

Q.—I understood you to say that you know absolutely nothing of the elections in the Province of Quebec?

A.—Nothing whatever.

Q.—You don't know whether any money was subscribed by any party there?

A.—I do not.

Q.—Do you know of any money being received from Quebec for the purpose of elections in Ontario?

A.—No, I do not.

Q.—Am I right in understanding that the great standpoint of the Interoceanic Company was Canadian influence, and in so far as it was a rival and antagonistic to Sir Hugh Allan's scheme, it was supposed to exclude American influence. Was that the chief and prominent distinction?

A.—That appears in the papers to be the reply which the Interoceanic Company gave to the Government.

Q.—Was that the fact?

A.—There is not a question about it. There were some individual reasons also which offered obstacles.

Q.—Do you know anything about the chief object of the Interoceanic Company; was it based upon any principle, or was it merely with the object of making money or something else?

A.—I really don't know. I was invited to join it very early in its history. My impression is that at that time the idea of Canadian and British influence being employed in it was the basis.

Q.—You were subsequently appointed a director in the Chartered Company, the Canadian Pacific, were you not?

A.—Yes.

Q.—At whose instance were you appointed?

A.—I really don't know. The appointment was made during my absence in England.

Q.—It was a Government appointment, was it not?

A.—Yes.

Q.—Do you know how your name came to appear?

A.—I have no knowledge. I have my own suppositions. My suppositions are based upon a conversation that I had with Sir John A. Macdonald before I went to England. The subject of that conversation was to, in the event of amalgamation failing, who might be regarded in Ontario as reliable persons to serve upon the new Board.

Q.—Did he at that time give any indications that he desired you to act upon this Board?

A.—We considered a number of names as to their fitness, and Sir John did me the honour of asking my opinion, and in that list my own name was placed, and I then told Sir John that I gave him carte blanche.

Q.—You have been a long time connected with Railways?

A.—Yes.

Q.—You have the credit of being sharp in these matters?

A.—I had no desire to serve upon that Board.

Q.—Did you gather from Sir John's conversation that it was his desire to seek out competent persons?

A.—We parted with the understanding, that as far as I was concerned, if it was thought I could be useful or he desired that I should serve, he might use my name.

Q.—Were there any gentlemen from the Interoceanic Board named in this Canadian Pacific Company?

A.—Yes; Major Walker.

Q.—Any other?

A.—Mr. Walter Shanly.

Q.—Any other?

A.—I think there were four; I forget the last.

Q.—Who is Mr. Walker?

A.—He is a resident of London, Ontario, and largely interested in oil works in that neighbourhood.

Q. Mr. Shanly is an engineer, is he not?

A.—He is an engineer of the highest standing, and has large railway experience.

My impression is, that there were others who were on the Interoceanic Board appointed Directors of the Canadian Pacific Company, but at this moment I do not recollect them. Looking at the list I see there were Major Walker, Mr. Shanly, and myself—these are the only ones that I recognize from Ontario.

To Sir John A. Macdonald through the Chairman:

Q.—On this occasion, on which you and I had the conversation anterior to your going to England, do I understand that that conversation was as to the formation of a Board in case the amalgamation fell through?

A.—Yes.

Q.—And I was negotiating to get your opinion as to fitting representatives from Ontario on the Board of the Chartered Company? We considered a great many names, including your own, did we not?

A.—Yes.

Q.—You said that if you could be of use in the Company or out of the Company that I might use your name?

A.—I did.

Q.—You took part in the Elections in Ontario, did you not?

A.—I did.

Q.—In Toronto and vicinity?

A.—Yes.

Q.—Did you subscribe to the Elections at Ontario?

A.—I helped at the Elections pecuniarily.

Q.—In subscribing to the Elections, did you consider in any way that you were recompensing the Government for any interest in this railway.

CANADA.

A.—Certainly I did not. I subscribed and paid as a member of the party. I may just add this that I expressed rather strong reasons originally when I was invited to go on the Interoceanic Board; and to yourself, I think, subsequently, with reference to the possibility of my name being placed on the Board of the present Company, and at that interview, anterior to my going to England, I said that I had no desire to serve upon that Board, that I saw nothing in it: That the terms then described by the Government were not such as to attract anybody to the work, but that I was willing to work as a public servant. I did not consider that the terms were sufficiently liberal.

Q.—You agreed to serve upon the Board if it was necessary, from public and patriotic motives?

A.—As a public servant. I saw nothing in it.

And further deponent saith not, and this his deposition having been read to him, he declares that it contains the truth, persists therein, and hath signed.

IN THE MATTER OF THE COMMISSION

Appointing CHARLES DEWEY DAY, ANTOINE POLETTE, and JAMES ROBERT GOWAN, Commissioners to inquire into and report upon the several matters stated in a certain Resolution moved by the Hon. Mr. HUNTINGTON in the House of Commons on the second day of April, A.D. 1873, relating to the Canadian Pacific Railway.

Present: THE COMMISSIONERS.

On this twelfth day of September, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and seventy-three, personally came and appeared before us, the above-named Commissioners,

DONALD MCINNES, of the City of Hamilton, Merchant, who being duly sworn, deposeth and saith:

I reside in the city of Hamilton. My occupation there is that of a merchant.

I know Sir Hugh Allan. I do not know Mr. Geo. McMullen.

Q.—Do you know of any negotiation carried on between these gentlemen, or of any agreement between them in the autumn of 1871 or the winter of 1872 for the purpose of building the Canada Pacific Railway with American capital?

A.—No; I know nothing about it. I may state that I think it was in the autumn of 1871, Sir Hugh Allan asked me whether I would consent to become a director of the Canada Pacific Railway, and I consented. I think he told me in general terms that he was negotiating with some American capitalists, but I know nothing whatever beyond that. I don't think he stated who they were.

Q.—Do you remember about the time this took place?

A.—No. I do not.

Q.—Can you fix about the time?

A.—I cannot charge my memory exactly. I remember the occasion. It was on the train between Cornwall and Montreal. We had been at Cornwall to attend the meeting of a manufacturing company, in which we were both interested, and it was on the way back to Montreal that we had this conversation.

I think it was about the latter end of 1871.

Q.—Had the winter set in?

A.—I think so.

Q.—Did he mention to you the name of Mr. McMullen?

A.—No. I don't think I ever heard of his name until it appeared in print recently.

Q.—Did you understand that any agreement had been made?

A.—No. I understood that no agreement had been made.

Q.—Were you one of the Provisional Directors of the Canada Pacific Railway?

A.—Yes.

Q.—In that capacity did it come to your knowledge that any negotiations were being carried on?

A.—No: it so happened that I never attended any of the meetings.

Q.—Have you had any conversation with any member of the Government that would lead you to think that such negotiations were going on?

A.—No.

Q.—Do you mean to say that you have no other knowledge than that which you have stated above in reference to these negotiations?

A.—None whatever, except, of course, what has recently appeared in the newspapers.

Q.—Are you a member of the present Canadian Pacific Company?

A.—Yes. I was named a Director when I was in England, by Sir John A. Macdonald.

Q.—Can you state why that Company was chartered, instead of the old Company, “the Canadian Pacific,” going on?

A.—No, I cannot state the exact reasons. I was absent in England when that Company was formed.

Q.—Have you any knowledge of any negotiations between the Canada Pacific Company and the Inter-oceanic Company with respect to an amalgamation?

A.—None except what appeared in the public papers.

Q.—You don’t know otherwise than from the public prints that such a negotiation was carried on between the two Companies?

A.—No; I may have heard it mentioned in conversation that such a thing was going on, but nothing beyond that.

Q.—Do you know whether there are any American capitalists among the Directors of the Canadian Pacific Company, or any American capital invested there?

A.—I am not aware of any.

Q.—Have you any knowledge, Mr. McInnes, of money having been subscribed for the support of Ministers and for the aiding of elections of Ministers and their supporters in 1872, at the general elections in Ontario?

A.—Yes; I know there was money subscribed in the constituency where I belong, and paid.

Q.—Do you know whether any money was subscribed by Sir Hugh Allan or Mr. Abbott?

A.—No; I do not know of any.

Q.—Was any money sent up from the Province of Quebec?

A.—None that I am aware of.

Q.—Have you any knowledge relating to the elections in the Province of Quebec?

A.—None whatever.

To Sir John A. Macdonald, through the Chairman:

Q.—I think you are one of the principal merchants in Hamilton?

A.—I am a merchant there.

Q.—It was in your capacity as being a merchant largely engaged in business that Sir Hugh Allan asked you to go on the Board of the Canada Pacific Company?

A.—I presume so.

Q.—And to get a representative from Ontario?

A.—I think so.

Q.—From whom did you first get any information of your being selected to serve on the Board of the Chartered Company?

A.—From yourself. I was in London at the time, and received the news by cable. I received no information other than from yourself. I answered accepting the appointment.

Q.—Have you any particular relations with Sir Hugh Allan?

A.—No, none. I am quite independent of him in business matters, except that we have a joint enterprise in Cornwall in a manufacturing Company.

I know of subscriptions being made at the last elections in Hamilton. That always happened at elections, unfortunately. I know that I subscribed.

Q.—On the right side, and at the right time?

A.—Yes; I did that of my own accord, and not on account of being on the Pacific Railway. Decidedly not. I did not show any great anxiety to get on that Board, or to be connected with that enterprise.

Q.—Was it altogether as a matter of duty and principle that you consented to serve on that Board?

A.—I felt that it was a great national undertaking, and if my services would be of any use in its promotion, that it was my duty to place them at the disposal of such a public work.

And on this thirteenth day of September, 1873, reappeared the said witness and made the following addition to his foregoing deposition:

I desire to add with respect to some correspondence which was published in the newspapers, in which my name was put as receiving by way of gift, as I understood it, the sum of $50,000 of the Canada Pacific stock. I beg to state that Sir Hugh Allan, nor any one else, never made such an unworthy proposal to me.

CANADA.

And further deponeth saith not, and this his deposition having been read to him, he declares that it contains the truth, persists therein, and hath signed.

Mr. HUNTINGTON in the House of Commons on the second day of April, A.D. 1873, relating to the Canadian Pacific Railway.

Present: THE COMMISSIONERS.

On this twelfth day of September, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and seventy-three, personally came and appeared before us, the above-named Commissioners,

ROBERT N. HALL, of the Town of Sherbrooke, in the Province of Quebec, Advocate, who being duly sworn, depose and saith:

I reside in Sherbrooke. My profession is that of an advocate.

I know Sir Hugh Allan. I do not know Mr. G. W. McMullen.

Q.—Have you any knowledge of any negotiation or agreement between Sir Hugh Allan and Mr. McMullen, relating to the construction of the Pacific Railway?

A.—Not the least, no knowledge of it whatever.

Q.—Have you ever had any conversation with any member of the Government in relation to any such agreement?

A.—I have not.

Q.—Have you ever had any means of knowing whether such a negotiation was going on with a view to an agreement of that nature?

A.—I never saw anything to indicate it.

Q.—Is it then a matter concerning which you know nothing at all?

A.—I have no knowledge of it whatever, not the least.

Q.—Have you taken an interest or have you been engaged in railway enterprises?

A.—I have taken quite an interest in the promotion of railways in the section of country in which I live.

Q.—Have you had any interest or taken any part in the movement for building this Pacific Railway?

A.—I was appointed one of the Directors of the Canadian Pacific Company, that is the Chartered Company.

Q.—When did your acquaintance or connection then begin with the enterprise for building this Railway?

A.—It was only a short time before my appointment and before the signing of the contract.

Q.—Before that did you know anything about it or had you taken any interest in the matter?

A.—I had taken quite an interest in it, although I did not identify myself in any way with its promotion.

Q.—You had not been consulted by Sir Hugh Allan or any other person in relation to the construction of it.

A.—No, I had not. I had no connection with Sir Hugh Allan in reference to it. In fact I did not know him before the contract was signed. My acquaintance with him is only since that time.

Q.—Did you take any part in Lower Canada in the general elections of 1872?

A.—I did not.

Q.—Do you know of any money having been subscribed in aid of the election of Ministers or their supporters?

A.—No, I do not. There were very few contested elections in the Townships, the elections were by acclamation—those at least in the part of the Townships where I reside.

Q.—Do you know anything of the Montreal elections?

A.—Nothing whatever.

Q.—Do you know whether there was any subscription of money for the carrying of them on?

A.—I do not.

Q.—Do you know whether Sir Hugh Allan contributed anything in aid of the elections in any part of the Province of Quebec?

A.—I do not. No contribution ever came to my knowledge in any way.

Q.—Are you aware of the reasons for which your name was put on the list of witnesses?

A.—I cannot imagine any reason. I never had any conversation with Mr. Huntington at all. I had no knowledge of anything that tended to support the charges made by him.

To Sir John A. Macdonald, through the Chairman:

Q.—Do you know at whose instance it was that you became a member of the Board of the Canadian Pacific Railway?

A.—At the instance of the Hon. Mr. Pope, Minister of Agriculture; at least I understood I was nominated by him. He is the representative of the Townships in my part of the country. He asked me to become a Director. He said it was desirable that that section of the country should be represented on the Board, and asked me to act. He said there were two representatives from Montreal, and one from Quebec, and he thought therefore that the Eastern Townships should have a representative on the Board.

I was in no respect, that I am aware of, the nominee of Sir Hugh Allan.

I had no personal acquaintance with Sir Hugh Allan at the time. I had reason to believe that Sir Hugh Allan wished to name another gentleman in my place. That gentleman was Mr. Foster. I understood that negotiations, at least the signing of the contract, was delayed on account of Sir Hugh Allan's pressing the nomination of Mr. Foster.

And further deponent saith not, and this his deposition having been read to him, he declares that it contains the truth, persists therein, and hath signed.

IN THE MATTER OF THE COMMISSION

Appointing CHARLES DEWEY DAY, ANTOINE POLETTE, and JAMES ROBERT GOWAN, Commissioners to inquire into and report upon the several matters stated in a certain Resolution moved by the Hon. Mr. HUNTINGTON in the House of Commons on the second day of April, A.D. 1873, relating to the Canadian Pacific Railway.

Present: THE COMMISSIONERS.

On this thirteenth day of September, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and seventy-three, personally came and appeared before us, the above-named Commissioners,

JOSEPH HAMEL, of the City of Quebec, Merchant, who being duly sworn, deposeth and saith:

I know Sir Hugh Allan very slightly. I never had any conversation with him.

I do not know G. W. McMullen.

Having heard read that part of the charge contained in the Royal Commission which reads as follows:

“That in anticipation of the legislation of last Session, as to the Pacific Railway, an agreement was made between Sir Hugh Allan, acting for himself and certain other

CANADA.

Canadian promoters, and G. W. McMullen, acting for certain United States capitalists, whereby the latter agreed to furnish all the funds necessary for the construction of the contemplated railway, and to give the former a certain percentage of interest in consideration of their interest and position, the scheme agreed upon being ostensibly that of a Canadian Company with Sir Hugh Allan at its head,"

I declare that I know nothing of this arrangement. I only know what I have seen in the newspapers, nothing more.

I am not aware whether the Government knew of the existence of such an arrangement between Sir Hugh Allan and G. W. McMullen.

I do not know whether there existed any negotiations between certain persons for the construction of the Canada Pacific Railway.

No Minister or member of Parliament spoke to me on the subject. I declare that I only know of this affair through what I have read in the newspapers.

Having heard read the other part of the charge contained in the Commission, which reads as follows :

"That subsequently an understanding was come to between the Government, Sir Hugh Allan, and Mr. Abbott, one of the members of the Honourable House of Commons of Canada, that Sir Hugh Allan and his friends should advance a large sum of money for the purpose of aiding the elections of Ministers and their supporters at the ensuing general elections, and that he and his friends should receive the contract for the construction of the railway,"

I declare that I know absolutely nothing of such an arrangement, except what I have learned through the press. Sir Hugh Allan never told me that he had advanced money for the elections of Ministers and their supporters, nor did Mr. Abbott, whom I know very slightly. No member of Parliament or Minister ever told me that Sir Hugh Allan had advanced money for the elections of 1872.

I have no knowledge that money was subscribed for the Montreal elections. As to other places, I am aware that subscriptions are always raised to assist the elections of friends of the Government. I do not know that Sir Hugh Allan subscribed to aid the elections, nor Mr. Abbott either. I do not know if the friends of Sir Hugh Allan advanced sums of money for the elections of Ministers or their friends. When I say that I do not know that sums of money were advanced for the elections of 1872, I mean sums coming from this source—that is from Sir Hugh Allan. There were moneys subscribed by other friends of the Government towards the elections, but it was not for the election of Ministers. The subscriptions I have just mentioned may have reached five or six thousand dollars for the election at Kamouraska. I am not aware of any moneys for other elections. I have never had any conversation with members of Parliament or with Ministers on the subject of subscriptions by Sir Hugh Allan or Mr. Abbott, or their friends, for the elections of Ministers or their partisans, and no conversation occurred in my presence on the subject. I know absolutely nothing, of my personal knowledge, of the charges mentioned in the Royal Commission.

I can form no idea why my name was on the list of witnesses unless it was because I am a friend of the Government.

I persist in declaring emphatically that I have no knowledge of any arrangement or understanding such as that mentioned in the charges before the Royal Commission, and I declare that I have had no conversation with Ministers or members of Parliament on this subject, and that they have never spoken about it in my presence.

The money subscribed for Kamouraska was subscribed at Quebec and Kamouraska. It did not come from Montreal.

And further deponent saith not, and this his deposition having been read to him, he declares that it contains the truth, persists therein, and hath signed.

Sworn, taken and acknowledged on the day, month, and year first above written,

IN THE MATTER OF THE COMMISSION

CANADA.

Appointing CHARLES DEWEY DAY, ANTOINE POLETTE, and JAMES ROBERT GOWAN, Commissioners to inquire into and report upon the several matters stated in a certain Resolution moved by the Hon. Mr. HUNTINGTON in the House of Commons on the second day of April, A.D. 1873, relating to the Canadian Pacific Railway.

Present: THE COMMISSIONERS.

On this fifteenth day of September, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and seventy-three, personally came and appeared before us, the above-named Commissioners,

EGERTON R. BURPEE, of the City of St. John, in the Province of New Brunswick, Civil Engineer and Contractor, who being duly sworn, deposeth and saith:

Q.—Are you a member of the Dominion Parliament?

A.—No.

Q.—Do you know Sir Hugh Allan?

A.—I am acquainted with him slightly.

Q.—Do you know Mr. Geo. McMullen?

A.—Yes.

Q.—When did your acquaintance with Mr. McMullen begin, have you known him any length of time?

A.—No; I have known him since about the Session of 1872.

Q.—Were you one of the Provisional Directors upon the Board of the Canada Pacific Railway Company, incorporated during the Session of 1872?

A.—Yes.

Q.—Have you any knowledge, Mr. Burpee, of any agreement between Sir Hugh Allan and Mr. McMullen, representing certain American capitalists, for the building of the Pacific Railway with American capital?

A.—I was told by Mr. McMullen that there was such an agreement.

Q.—Do you remember when he told you that?

A.—At the same time—the Session of 1872.

Q.—Can you specify more nearly the year, month, or day?

A.—It was about the last of the Session.

Q.—Was it after the Act of Incorporation had been passed or before?

A.—It was before.

Q.—What did he say to you on that occasion?

A.—I met him a great many different times. He told me there was an arrangement made with American capitalists, in connection with Sir Hugh Allan, to build the road; and he wished me to become a member of the Company.

Q.—Did he state if there was any condition of that arrangement by which a certain interest was to be paid to Sir Hugh Allan?

A.—No. There was a condition that Sir Hugh Allan was to be one of the Company.

Q.—Do you know who were the American capitalists whom Mr. McMullen represented?

A.—I cannot remember them all; there was a large number. There was Governor Smith mentioned, Jay Cooke, and General Cass.

Q.—Did you understand that the Government of the Dominion was at that time favourable to that arrangement?

A.—No, I did not. It was rather adverse.

Q.—Did Mr. McMullen say anything to you on that subject?

A.—Nothing definite at all, except that he wanted the Government to acquiesce.

Q.—Was this after the agreement to which you have adverted had been signed?

A.—He said it had been signed.

Q.—At whose instance did you become a Provisional Director?

A.—At the instance of Sir Hugh Allan and Mr. Abbott; but I was for a long time interested in the Pacific Railway. We had been talking about it for some four or five years. I was solicited by both the Inter-oceanic and the Canada Pacific Company to join with them. I had a desire to be interested in the work, having already spent four or five years in working in connection with it.

Q.—Were you requested to become a Provisional Director of the Inter-oceanic Company before you were connected with the Canada Pacific Company?

A.—Yes.

Q.—Was the Government aware that you had been requested to become a Director of the Inter-oceanic Company?

CANADA.

A.—I cannot say that they were. Those members of the Government with whom I had any conversation had always told me that the two Companies would be amalgamated; or at least that was their impression.

Q.—Who were those members of the Government?

A.—The members from the Province of New Brunswick, Mr. Tilley and Mr. Mitchell.

Q.—What reason had you to believe that the Government was adverse to the introduction of American capital?

A.—I had been told by members of the Government that it was intended that the road should be built with Canadian or British capital.

Q.—Will you name the gentlemen who told you so?

A.—I do not remember exactly, but I know that it was Mr. Mitchell's idea that the road should be so built.

Q.—Any other besides Mr. Mitchell?

A.—I think there were several others besides him. I think it was Mr. Tilley's idea also.

Q.—From your several conversations with members of the Government what was the conclusion that you came to as to the disposition of the Government in the matter?

A.—I was quite convinced that the two Companies would be united. For that reason I thought that it was immaterial as to which Company I belonged to. My opinion is, from the conversations I had with members of the Government, that the Government was adverse to the admission of American capital.

Q.—Had you any personal knowledge of negotiations tending to the amalgamation of these two Companies—the Interoceanic and the Canada Pacific?

A.—No personal knowledge.

I took no part in these negotiations.

Q.—Do you know why the negotiations were unsuccessful?

A.—No.

Q.—Are you now a member of the Board of Direction of the Canadian Pacific Company?

A.—Yes.

Q.—By whom were you nominated a Director?

A.—By the members of the Dominion Government for the Province of New Brunswick, Mr. Tilley and Mr. Mitchell.

Q.—That Company consists of how many Directors?

A.—Thirteen.

Q.—Do you recollect the date of that Charter?

A.—I think it was in January, 1873. I cannot remember precisely. I was here at the time. Perhaps it was February.

Q.—When you were asked to become a Director of the Canadian Pacific Company, or rather before you were asked to be so, were you consulted in regard to the terms of the Charter?

A.—I had talked it over with different parties, and I was told what the provisions were, and I also had an opportunity of reading it.

Q.—When was the contract given under this Charter?

A.—At the same time, if I recollect right, or a few days afterwards.

Q.—Having seen the Charter, what was your opinion in regard to it, and the terms of the contract upon it?

A.—It was to be entirely Canadian under this new Charter.

Q.—Was the stock subscribed in order to lead to that result?

A.—It was. It was distributed in the different Provinces in proportion to their population. I was requested to get up one-thirteenth of the stock, and before I became a member the greater portion of the stock for New Brunswick was subscribed by other people.

Q.—Then the stock was to be redistributed by the thirteen Directors in their several Provinces?

A.—Yes.

Q.—Were there any prescribed terms on which the stock should be given out by these thirteen Directors?

A.—Yes; there was no one allowed to exceed a certain amount, and it was to be kept entirely in the hands of British subjects. It was to be given out to the different Directors in proportion to the population of the Provinces which they represented; for instance, one-thirteenth of the whole stock was allotted to the Province of New Brunswick.

Q.—Were you prohibited from putting any premium upon it?

A.—Yes.

Q.—Were these thirteen Directors on an equal footing?

A.—Yes; so I understood.

Q.—There was no preference given to any one over the others?

A.—I never could see any.

Q.—As a man experienced in the construction of railroads, do you consider the Charter to be, or the contract to be, one of a particularly favourable and profitable character?

A.—I did not consider it satisfactory.

Q.—Satisfactory to whom?

A.—I mean that I did not consider it advantageous. I considered it a hard contract.

Q.—You stated, did you not, in the beginning of your evidence, that you are a railroad contractor?

A.—Yes.

Q.—Were you induced to take a part in the Directorship of this Company with the hope of making a profit out of it?

A.—I thought so at first, but when I came into this last Company I could not see much chance for making a profit. I expected in the first place when I was working in connection with the road that a profit might be made out of it; that is, years previously I thought so.

Q.—Have you any knowledge of any understanding between the Government and Sir Hugh Allan and Mr. Abbott, for the furnishing of money for the promotion of elections in 1872?

A.—None whatever.

Q.—Where were you during the period of these elections?

A.—In New Brunswick, I think.

Q.—You are not in a position to know anything of the matter?

A.—No.

Q.—Have you any reason to believe that any money was subscribed in the Province of Quebec or Montreal for the purpose of the elections?

A.—It is a matter of which I have absolutely no knowledge.

Q.—I suppose you took some interest in the elections in New Brunswick?

A.—In some of them.

Q.—Do you know if money was subscribed there for the support of the elections?

A.—I did not see any subscribed; but I know money was spent.

Q.—Do you know from what source the money came?

A.—From individual candidates and from their friends for them.

Q.—Have you any knowledge that Sir Hugh Allan or Mr. Abbott furnished any money for election purposes?

A.—I do not know. I have no knowledge whatever.

Q.—Do you know whether any money was sent to New Brunswick for election purposes from the Provinces of Quebec or Ontario?

A.—I have no reason to believe there was.

Q.—Have you had any conversation with any member of the Government which would give you any knowledge upon that subject?

A.—No.

Q.—Or with Sir Hugh Allan?

A.—No.

Q.—You say you know Mr. McMullen. Have you any knowledge of the correspondence which took place between him and Sir Hugh Allan?

A.—Nothing, except what he told me of the correspondence.

Q.—Have you anything to add to what you said he told you in relation to that correspondence?

A.—No.

Q.—You have never seen the correspondence between them—any of the original letters?

A.—I have seen some of the original letters, but I cannot say now what they contained.

Q.—Would you be able to identify any of them now?

A.—I am not certain. I don't think I would.

Q.—Were any of the letters which you saw afterwards published in the public prints?

A.—No; but I have not read them all. I cannot say for certain that they are the same. I would not undertake to say that I could identify them, as I paid at the time very little attention to them.

CANADA.

Q.—Were you present at any of the conferences between Sir Hugh Allan and Mr. McMullen?

A.—No.

Q.—Or with either of these gentlemen and any member of the Government?

A.—No.

Q.—Do you know anything about these telegrams which have been published?

A.—No knowledge whatever.

Q.—Have you any further knowledge relating to the subject of this inquiry?

A.—I don't think of any.

Q.—Do you know whether Sir Hugh Allan received any money from United States capitalists?

A.—Mr. McMullen told me that he had advanced him money for the preliminary expenses of organizing the Company and getting the Charters.

Q.—Have you any other knowledge besides that?

A.—Nothing except from him.

Q.—Did Mr. McMullen say to you for what purpose the money was furnished by him?

A.—It was for the preliminary expenses in getting the Charter and organizing the Company. It was before the first Charter was got.

Q.—Was the use of American capital ever contemplated in the new Charter?

A.—No.

To Sir John A. Macdonald, through the Chairman:

I am a civil engineer as well as a railway contractor. I have had large experience in railways in New Brunswick and elsewhere for the last fifteen years. During the last five years I have directed my attention towards the Pacific Railway—I got up some statistics in reference to it at one time.

I expected to make some profit out of it at one time.

I was asked by the representatives of New Brunswick in the Cabinet to act as a Director. They informed me that they had put my name down and asked me to serve as a representative man from New Brunswick—at least I took it in that light. I had no idea of making any profit out of it as a Director. I had a misgiving as to whether the arrangement was a profitable one for the Company.

I was not asked by Sir Hugh Allan to become a Director of the present Company.

I am quite certain that it was not due to Sir Hugh Allan that I was appointed.

I cannot say that Sir Hugh Allan was opposed to me, but my impression was that he was opposed to me; but I do not know it directly from himself. I thought at the time that he was opposed to me.

The interest of New Brunswick in this Company was one-thirteenth of the whole stock, and as a Director I subscribed one-thirteenth of the stock, and paid a tenth of that amount; at least my friends and myself together paid it. That is, my New Brunswick friends. They took some of the stock for me before I subscribed. Those persons who subscribed for me were all Canadians. No American money was admitted on that subscription list. There was an agreement between me and those New Brunswick friends that the stock should be transferred from me to them.

I know that the Charter provided that there should be no transfer of stock without the consent of the Government, and they understood it so too.

If this were not done, the money deposited was to be paid back by me to them.

Mr. McMullen told me that Sir Hugh Allan had received from the Americans a sum of money to meet the preliminary expenses in getting the Charter for the first Company. I have had a good deal to do with getting up Railway Companies, and have had considerable experience in that way. That is always the first step taken to get funds for preliminary expenses. It always requires money, and sometimes we are obliged to pay it ourselves.

In my conversation with Mr. McMullen, I did not tell him that American capital would be excluded until after this last Charter was granted, or a short time before it was granted. Under the new Charter, as it was drawn, it was not possible for American capitalists to get in without the consent of the Government; at least, I cannot see any way how they could, and I told Mr. McMullen so.

Question by a Commissioner.—What are the names of the persons who joined in the subscription of stock with you?

A.—There were several. There were Mr. Domville, who lives at St. John, and Mr. Ryan, of Miramichi. His home is in Ontario somewhere, I believe. He had some one or two friends with him, whose names I do not know. Their stock was put in his name for them; Mr. McKean was one of them, I think. I have no other names, but both Mr. Ryan and Mr. Domville have friends joined with them in their stock.

My reason for supposing that Sir Hugh Allan was not favourable to my becoming a director was, that I met him several times, and he seemed adverse to have anything to say to me about it, and I never had any conversation with him about it until after I had signed the articles, and then nothing but the ordinary intercourse of one with another; nothing was said with respect to my name having been placed on the directorship.

And further deponent saith not, and this his deposition having been read to him he declares that it contains the truth, persists therein, and hath signed.

City of Ottawa. }

Appointing CHARLES DEWEY DAY, ANTOINE POLETTE, and JAMES ROBERT GOWAN, Commissioners to inquire into and report upon the several matters stated in a certain Resolution moved by the Hon. Mr. HUNTINGTON in the House of Commons on the second day of April, A.D. 1873, relating to the Canadian Pacific Railway.

Present: THE COMMISSIONERS.

On this fifteenth day of September, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and seventy-three, personally came and appeared before us, the above-named Commissioners,

The Honourable ALEXANDER CAMPBELL, who being duly sworn, deposeth and said:

I reside in Ottawa. I am a member of the Privy Council. I am now Minister of the Interior. I have been a member of the Government since the first of July, 1867; that is, of this Government.

Q.—Have you any knowledge of an agreement between Sir Hugh Allan and Mr. G. W. McMullen respecting the construction of the Pacific Railway with American capital?

A.—I have no knowledge of any such agreement.

I know Sir Hugh Allan, but I do not know Mr. G. W. McMullen.

Q.—Are you aware of any negotiations being carried on between these gentlemen having that end in view,—that is, the construction of the Pacific Railway with American capital?

A.—Not of my own knowledge.

Q.—Have you been present at any interviews with those gentlemen, or with either of them, relating to that matter?

A.—None; I never saw Mr. McMullen in my life, to my knowledge, and have been present at no interview with him.

Q.—Are you aware whether the Government encouraged any negotiations for the purpose of building the road with American capital?

A.—I am aware that the Government did not encourage any such negotiations; that they declined to promote or favour any such arrangement.

Q.—When did it first come under your notice that any negotiations tending to that end were going on?

A.—Merely by rumour. I think either during or shortly after the session of 1872.

Q.—Was the opinion of the Government decided upon that matter—that of excluding American capital?

A.—Yes; decided for excluding it.

Q.—When was that decision of the Government apparent?

A.—I think shortly after the end of the session of 1872, it became the pronounced policy of the Government to construct the railway altogether by means of Canadian and British capital, and by means also of the amalgamation of the two Companies.

I think it was made apparent shortly after the close of the session of 1872.

Q.—When you refer to the two Companies, do you mean the Interoceanic and the Canada Pacific?

A.—I do. It was the policy of the Government to amalgamate these two Companies, to exclude American capital, and to give the Charter to the Company, to be composed of these two amalgamated Companies.

CANADA.

Q.—Have you any knowledge of the correspondence which took place between Sir Hugh Allan and Mr. McMullen?

A.—None whatever.

Q.—Would you be able to identify any of the letters that passed between them?

A.—Not in the least.

Q.—Have you read the published letters of Mr. McMullen—the two letters in the press?

A.—I read those which appeared in the 'Montreal Herald.' I have not read a recent account of an interview which some one had with him in Chicago.

Q.—Were you present at any of the interviews which the Government had with him?

A.—No. I never saw Mr. McMullen.

Q.—Are you aware whether Sir Hugh Allan ever received any promise, or any encouragement from the Government, in his negotiations with American capitalists?

A.—None whatever, so far as I know.

Q.—Do you know by whom the negotiations for an amalgamation of the Interoceanic and the Canada Pacific Companies were originally suggested?

A.—I do not.

Q.—Were these negotiations looked upon favourably by the Government, or otherwise?

A.—Favourably. I myself went to Toronto at the request of Sir John A. Macdonald about the end of October, 1872, for the purpose of endeavouring to bring about such an amalgamation, and I know that from the end of the session of 1872—I don't remember exactly what time the session closed—but from that time up to the time of my visit to Toronto, and afterwards—I should say up to the end of November—there were continuous efforts being made by the Government to bring about an amalgamation of those two Companies. Besides my visit, efforts were also made by correspondence. After I returned, Sir John Macdonald went himself for a like object. He went some weeks, I think, after I returned. I went up towards the end of October and saw Mr. Macpherson, the President of the Interoceanic Company. I also saw Mr. Cumberland, who was one of the Directors, and I went to London and saw Mr. Carling, who was another of the Directors, and Major Walker, who, I think, was a member of that Company, but I am not aware whether he was a Director or not. I endeavoured to persuade Mr. Macpherson that his objections as to the American element in the Canada Pacific Company were ill founded, and that the guarantees which the Government were prepared to give were so complete and so absolute, that they would entirely exclude the possibility of the Company being controlled by Americans. I did not conceive that Mr. Macpherson was afraid of American capital, but that American views might control it, and that the lands which were promised to the Company might fall into American hands and be used for American purposes. I endeavoured to convince him by the clauses which would be put in the Charter that it would be impossible for Americans to get control of it, and that the railway would be really and thoroughly controlled by Canadians. That was the object which I had in view, and these were the endeavours which I used. This was late in October.

Q.—You failed to convince him?

A.—Yes; Mr. Macpherson did not himself put forward the idea that he claimed to be at the head of the Company. He stated that he had no personal objects of his own to gratify, but he was persuaded that if it was not stipulated that Sir Hugh Allan should not be at the head of the Company, that American interests would not be excluded. I failed to convince him because of that view which he strongly adhered to. I may add, that during the same visit in the west, I, also saw Mr. Gzowski, his partner, on other matters, and I think that I satisfied him that the guarantees proposed by the Government were sufficient for the purpose of excluding American control. I did not, however, succeed in convincing Mr. Macpherson.

Q.—Did Mr. Macpherson's opinions seem to be shared by all the other members of the Interoceanic Company?

A.—By no means. Mr. Cumberland was quite satisfied that the guarantees were sufficient. Mr. Carling and Major Walker were also satisfied. All three of these gentlemen expressed to me the opinion that Mr. Macpherson in holding firmly to these views, after what I had stated to him, would not continue to represent the views of the gentlemen who had formed his Company.

These gentlemen were satisfied, and they thought that the larger number of the members would be satisfied that the guarantees were sufficient to exclude American control.

Q.—Did anything further pass at that conference with Mr. Macpherson?

A.—No. My visit failed on the ground that Mr. Macpherson could not believe that, so long as it was not agreed that Sir Hugh Allan would be excluded from the Presidency of this Company, American interests would be effectually excluded.

Q.—Did you explain to the gentlemen with whom you had the conference what the Charter was to be?

A.—Yes. The guarantees which we proposed, and which are now in the Charter, were that the original stock list should be subject to the supervision of the Government, and that no changes should take place in that stock list without the consent of the Government; that the election of Directors should be subject to the approbation of the Government, and that no changes should take place in the Directory without the consent of the Government.

There were also provisions made in respect to the control of the lands.

Q.—You went up to Toronto to represent the Government?

A.—I went at the request of the Government, or rather at the request of Sir John Macdonald.

Q.—What time did Sir John Macdonald go there?

A.—Two or three weeks after that, in November.

Q.—What was the result of the whole negotiations?

A.—We could not convince Mr. Macpherson that these guarantees were sufficient unless it was also conceded, and that we should stipulate to exclude Sir Hugh Allan from the Presidency. But, at the same time, he clearly led me to understand that he did not himself put forward any particular claim to the Presidency, but that Sir Hugh Allan should be excluded from that position.

Q.—Was Sir Hugh Allan aware of the part the Government was taking for the purpose of bringing about this amalgamation?

A.—I do not know. I never had any conversation with Sir Hugh Allan about the Canadian Pacific Railway at all.

I presume that he was aware of it, but I don't know it myself.

Q.—Was any further guarantee suggested besides that of excluding Sir Hugh Allan from the Presidency?

A.—No, not in addition to those which I have mentioned.

Q.—Do you know when it was announced to Sir Hugh Allan that the Government would not consent to the admission of the American element in the Company?

A.—Not of my own knowledge. I apprehend it must have been during the Session of 1872.

Q.—After the failure of the negotiations for bringing about the amalgamation, what course did the Government then determine upon?

A.—They determined to avail themselves of the Act which had been passed during the previous Session, in contemplation of such an event, and to form a Company under this Act; a Company composed of the wealthiest and most influential men in the country, giving to each Province a representation on an analagous basis to that which prevails in the Privy Council. Five members from the Province of Ontario, four from Quebec, and so on, it being considered that the Privy Council fairly represents the importance and influence of each Province.

That Charter was granted in consequence of the failure to amalgamate, but very many of its provisions would have found their way into the contract, with either of those Companies, or into that with the united one, supposing we had dealt with an amalgamated Company.

Q.—What was the fundamental principle of that Charter with respect to the distribution of stock: how was it to be divided?

A.—It was an approximation of the representation of the different Provinces composing the Dominion.

Q.—In the choice of the Directors of the Company as representative men from the different Provinces was there any preference or advantage given to one over another?

A.—None: and the desire was to get into the Company men of standing, men of capital and men of railway knowledge. The Government also desired to procure from the several Provinces the best men of respectability, standing, wealth, or railway knowledge.

Q.—Was there any inequality among themselves as to the footing on which they stood as Directors?

A.—None whatever.

Q.—Were the terms upon which this Charter was granted and on which the contract was based more or less favourable than the terms contemplated by the Government at the beginning?

A.—They were the same terms in so far as these terms would be deduced from the Act of Parliament. Where the Act did not prescribe terms the object was to make the

CANADA.

Charter as perfect as possible, and to absolutely exclude the possibility of Americans having any control, and to so frame it as to make it secure the objects we had in view. We spent a great deal of time over it, and so far as my knowledge and ability enabled me to judge, I believe that that Charter was made as perfect in these respects as it could be made. The Charter was intended to exclude American control, to retain control of the lands and money subsidy, to enable the Government to make a safe disposition of that money, and generally to accomplish the objects which the country had in view in granting a Charter for the construction of the Pacific Railway.

Q.—What time was the draft of that Charter made?

A.—The Charter, when I was first asked to take any part in it, was in draft; it was, I should say, about the middle of January. It was completed on the fifth of February. It had been submitted on behalf of the Government to Sir John A. Macdonald and myself, and on behalf of the Railway Company to Mr. Abbott. We spent a great many days over it, discussing the various points. Some put forward by Mr. Abbott on the part of the Company, that such a clause was too stringent, and another clause did not give the advantages which he considered they ought to have, and so on. These clauses were discussed for several days, Mr. Abbott consulting now and again with the persons who were to be Directors of the road.

Q.—On what calculation or data was the price fixed for the construction of this railway?

A.—We did not fix the price; we fixed our contribution to it. It was fixed by statute that the country should give the Company undertaking the works $30,000,000 and 50,000,000 acres of land.

Q.—On what data were these fixed?

A.—They were fixed by Parliament.

Q.—Have you any knowledge personally to state whether the contract given would be a profitable one to the contractors or not?

A.—No, I have not. I may state that the data on which the $30,000,000 in money was fixed was 3,000 miles of railway at $10,000 a mile.

Q.—You have seen the printed letters of Mr. McMullen you say, with the exception of one?

A.—I have.

Q.—Do you know anything of the sums of money which are mentioned there as having been disbursed by Sir Hugh Allan?

A.—I do not.

Q.—These sums are $8,500, to Sir John Macdohald and Sir Francis Hincks, and a large sum of money to newspapers, and a sum promised to the Honourable Mr. Langevin; do you know anything about these sums of money?

A.—Nothing whatever.

Q.—Do you know anything about the matters alluded to in Mr. McMullen's letters?

A.—No. I was present at none of the interviews. I never saw Mr. McMullen.

Q.—Have you any knowledge that Sir Hugh Allan advanced $200,000, as stated in Mr. McMullen's letter?

A.—No.

Q.—Do you know anything about the sums of money alluded to, that is, money advanced for the purposes of the elections?

A.—No; I know nothing about those sums—nothing whatever.

Q.—Do you know anything about money payments to different individuals?

A.—No.

Q.—At the conclusion of this last letter of Mr. McMullen's, I find it printed in these terms:—"From Sir George Cartier to Mr. Abbott, dated August 24th, 1872. In the absence of Sir Hugh Allan, I shall be obliged by your supplying the Central Committee with a further sum of $20,000, upon the same conditions as stated by me at the foot of my letter to Sir Hugh Allan of the 30th ultimo. (Signed) George E. Cartier. P.S.—Please also send Sir John A. Macdonald $10,000 more on the same terms." Do you know anything about that letter?

A.—Nothing.

Q.—Do you know anything about the $20,000 mentioned in it?

A.—I was in Kingston immediately after Sir John A. Macdonald's election, and I understood from him that a certain sum of money had been contributed towards the elections in Ontario by Sir Hugh Allan. I had no personal knowledge of the matter.

Q.—Have you ever seen these telegrams which have been published?

A.—I have not.

Q.—Have you not seen one from Sir John A. Macdonald to Mr. Abbott in these terms:—"I must have another $10,000, will be the last time of calling. Do not fail me"?

A.—No.

Q.—Nor the answer of Mr. Abbott—"Draw on me for $10,000"?

A.—No. The telegram purports to be sent from Toronto. I did not see Sir John after he left Kingston. I know absolutely nothing of them.

Q.—Have you any knowledge, as a matter of fact, that there was any money supplied for the elections by Sir Hugh Allan?

A.—None, except the knowledge I have mentioned.

Q.—Have you any knowledge concerning the elections in Montreal, and in the Province of Quebec?

A.—None.

Q.—Have you any knowledge of any understanding between Sir Hugh Allan and the Government, or any member of the Government, that money should be furnished for supporting the elections?

A.—None whatever. The Government is charged, as I understand, with having made a corrupt bargain with Sir Hugh Allan. Now I think that I am in a position, as a member of the Government, and having been particularly concerned in this Pacific Railway Charter, to say that there was no such bargain with Sir Hugh Allan or his associates, either corrupt or incorrupt. There was no bargain to give them or any one the contract at all. I do not believe that Sir Hugh Allan had any sort of understanding beyond that one given by Sir George Cartier, which was given by him on one day and repudiated by Sir John A. Macdonald on the next. I saw Sir John's telegram to that effect immediately afterwards. Beyond that I do not believe that Sir Hugh Allan had any understanding with the Government, or that there was any bargain, either corrupt or incorrupt, to give him or anybody else this contract until the Charter was about being signed; that would be perhaps the end of January or the early part of February. I am persuaded he had no such understanding. I say this because the allegation is that a corrupt bargain was made either before or during the Session, or at the time of the elections, and I know that during all that time the Government made no bargain to give the contract to any one. I was engaged in Toronto endeavouring to bring about the amalgamation of these two Companies as late as October, and I know that Sir John A. Macdonald was there for the same purpose as late as November, and it was nearly the end of November before we were satisfied that an amalgamation could not be brought about. When I was in Kingston I saw the telegram from Sir George Cartier, giving the terms of the arrangement, which, if I rightly remember, were that the amalgamation of the two Companies should be brought about and the contract given to the amalgamated Company; but failing that, it should be given to the Canada Pacific. These facts were communicated to Sir John A. Macdonald, and he immediately sent a telegram back stating that he would not assent, and that he would go down to Montreal.

I am satisfied there was no bargain with anyone to get the contract until it was absolutely given at the end of January, 1873.

Q.—That letter from Sir George Cartier, dated 24th August, 1872, which I have read to you, contains an allusion at the close of it, to "the same conditions as the amount written by me at the foot of my letter to Sir Hugh Allan of the 30th ultimo." Have you seen that letter?

A.—I have not.

Q.—Do you know where it is?

A.—I do not know of my own knowledge. I understood some time ago that it was in the hands of Sir Hugh Allan. I never saw it.

To Sir John A. Macdonald, through the Chairman:

I was not present at any interviews between the Cabinet and Mr. McMullen. I never saw him.

I was aware that there were two interviews, but I was absent on both those occasions.

The Charter was the result of the failure to amalgamate. I don't mean to convey the idea that the terms of the contract with the amalgamated Company, had there been an amalgamation, would have been different from the terms in the Charter. I presume that the Charter would have been much the same. We were anxious to make the best Charter we could, and to carry out the wishes of the country in relation to the Railway. Whether the amalgamation had taken place or not; whether it had been arranged by the Inter-oceanic Company or the Canada Pacific, or by a Chartered Company, in any case it was the policy of the Government that the terms should be as I have mentioned, and as are contained in the present Charter. That was the policy of the Government immediately after the Session of 1872.

CANADA.

Q.—You say you were aware, and that you had means of knowing, as a member of the Government, that there was no bargain, corrupt or incorrupt, with Sir Hugh Allan before the elections or before November?

A.—None whatever.

Q.—Could there have been such a bargain without your knowing?

A.—It could not be without my knowledge.

Q.—Supposing any one of the thirteen Ministers had made any agreement with Sir Hugh Allan, would it have been of any value whatever?

A.—Not unless it had been yourself. It would have been of no value. In such event, I apprehend, if any one of your colleagues could not have concurred in the advice which, in that case, you would have given his Excellency, he would have been obliged to retire.

Q.—Except myself, any agreement made by a member of the Government with any party would be so much waste paper unless it was sanctioned by the Government?

A.—That is my opinion.

Q.—If Sir George Cartier had made any arrangement with Sir Hugh Allan at Montreal or elsewhere, you say it would have been futile?

A.—If Sir George Cartier had made such an arrangement, and it had not been accepted by his colleagues, he would have been obliged to retire or have given it up and sacrificed his own views.

Q.—As a matter of fact, and in justice to Sir George Cartier's memory, do you know, as one who was socially and intimately acquainted with Sir George Cartier, what his sentiments were with respect to the introduction of American capital into the Pacific Railway enterprise?

A.—Very strong against the admission of either American capital or control. The idea then was not opposition so much to American capital as to Americans controlling the road. He took the extreme ground of excluding American capital as well as American capitalists.

Q.—From the conclusion of the Session to the granting of the Charter, did the Government policy vary for a moment with respect to excluding American capitalists and American control?

A.—Not for a moment. I think the only member of the Government who at any time held different views was Sir Francis Hincks; but finding his colleagues unanimous in the other direction, he yielded his views.

He saw, as well as his colleagues, that the feeling of Parliament was decidedly opposed to American connection.

Q.—Then he yielded to the sentiments of others?

A.—Yes; I think the fixed policy of the Government during the whole period, from the end of the Session of 1872 to the time the Charter was granted, was to exclude American control, and to give the Charter to Canadian or British capitalists, in order to make it a national work, and to carry out national views and objects.

Q.—Was it not also the fixed policy of the Government that the Company which should be entrusted with the building of the Pacific Railway should not be a sectional one?

A.—Yes; the desire was to embrace important interests in the different Provinces of the Dominion, and to get each province as much as possible represented by men of standing, wealth, and railway knowledge. This was done in order to prevent sectional jealousies which might impair the progress of the work.

Q.—Do you know, as a matter of fact, that the existence of the Government greatly depended upon there being no sectional differences, and would not the Government have been greatly endangered by bringing in a sectional Company?

A.—I think so.

Q.—Would it not have been impossible to exclude either Ontario or Quebec?

A.—Impossible. I believe that was the reason why in the very early stage of the matter, I apprehend before the close of the Session of 1872, it was considered to be impossible to give the contract either to the Canada Pacific, Sir Hugh Allan's Company, or to the Interoceanic, Mr. Macpherson's Company. If it were given to Sir Hugh Allan's Company, it would exclude many representative men from Ontario, Mr. Macpherson's Company being comprised principally, though not wholly, of Ontario men.

If the contract were given to the Interoceanic Company, it would have excluded representative men from the Province of Quebec, who were in Sir Hugh Allan's Company, and who considered him as their representative in Railway matters, and who had put him forward as the head of the organization, and as the mouthpiece of their views and wishes. I think very early it became quite clear that the Government could not proceed and deal with either Company, but must endeavour to procure an amalgamation, and so deal, if possible, with the Dominion at large.

It was a matter affecting not only the interests of the railway, but the political existence of the Government.

I am convinced that the Quebec interests could not have been excluded from any arrangement for building the road.

Q.—If so, could Sir Hugh Allan have been excluded?

A.—No.

Q.—Why?

A.—Because he was put forward as a leading representative man. He was a prominent business man, and had been largely engaged in promoting the Northern Colonization Railway, and for two or three years he had put himself forward as the leader of Lower Canada in Railway matters, and was accepted as such by Lower Canada.

Q.—Are you aware that a deputation from Lower Canada—Montreal—came up to Ottawa, and saw Sir George Cartier, to insist that Sir Hugh Allan be viewed as the representative man of Lower Canada?

A.—I was not aware of it.

Q.—You were not aware that Mr. Hudon and Sheriff Leblanc came to Ottawa for that purpose?

A.—No, I am not.

Q.—Sir Hugh Allan is an exceedingly wealthy man, is he not?

A.—Yes.

Q.—What is he reputed to be worth?

A.—From $500,000 to $600,000 a year, I have heard it reported.

Q.—Reference has been made to Sir George Cartier's letter, and to my telegram to him repudiating his quasi arrangement. You were at Kingston at the time I received his telegram. I suppose you saw it almost at the time I received it?

A.—The same day or the next.

Q.—Do you remember my repudiating it at once?

A.—Yes, and also of your telegraphing that you would go down to Montreal, at once, and of your making preparatory arrangements with me to go down if necessary that night.

Q.—My election was then going on, was it not?

A.—I think this was during the nomination week.

Q.—So I made arrangements with you, to enable me to go down and break up such an arrangement, and asked you to attend to my interests in my absence?

A.—Yes.

Q.—Did you see the answer to my telegram?

A.—Yes.

Q.—The arrangement stood according to my previous telegram?

A.—Yes; the only thing you said, I think, was that the influence the Government had on the Board would be used to get Sir Hugh Allan made President.

Q.—You assented to that, and thought it reasonable that the wealthiest man in Canada, and the oldest on the Board, should be President?

A.—Yes; and also because he was the first person who came forward as a Canadian, and took an interest in the project, and was willing to embark his means in it.

Q.—Had Sir Hugh Allan any special reason for desiring the extension of railways westward?

A.—I don't know, except that he was largely interested in the Northern Colonization Road.

Q.—Was he not also largely interested in steam transportation?

A.—Yes.

Q.—Are you not aware that there was an attempt made to get up a rival Company in England?

A.—I have heard so.

Q.—Under whose auspices?

A.—Of the Grand Trunk Railway, I understood. It was however a mere rumour?

Q.—Did that present a cause of fear to Sir Hugh Allan that the steamship line might be excluded from the Western traffic?

A.—It may have been so. I never had any conversation with him on the subject, but I understood that he had those views.

Q.—Are you not aware that he was also interesting himself very much, and pressing on public attention a road still further west than the Northern Colonization Railway. The Toronto and Ottawa Road?

CANADA.

A.—Yes, it was to be a Road to run from here to Carleton Place and Peterborough, through the interior of Upper Canada, and come out to the lake at Toronto.

Q.—The fact is Sir Hugh Allan had determined upon the extension of the Railway system, and desired to connect himself with it?

A.—I understood from general report that he had the idea of a railway system from Montreal westward independent of the Grand Trunk Railway.

To the Commissioners:

I understood you to say that the terms of the Charter were finally settled some time in the latter end of January?

A.—Yes.

Q.—You mentioned also that you had several interviews with Mr. Abbott, as representing that Company?

A.—Yes.

Q.—And his praying that certain alterations might be made?

A.—Yes.

Q.—Did that touch the question of the exclusion of American control?

A.—It did not. That was a conceded point before we sat down.

Q.—Did the Government in any way concede the point in regard to American control?

A.—Not in any way, and he did not desire it. It was a conceded point that it should be excluded before we sat down, and our desire was to frame a Charter so as to make that secure, and he was equally anxious with us that it should be so.

Q.—What was the nature of the alterations he suggested?

A.—I can hardly remember. He may have suggested forty or fifty.

Q.—What principle did they affect?

A.—There was a great deal of detail as to the mode and rapidity by which the $30,000,000 were to be paid, whether the payment was to depend on the construction of certain sections or upon a certain quantity of labour on several sections, and how fast it was safe for the Government to pay it out. He endeavoured to get stipulations for this money to be paid out as rapidly as possible. Sir John Macdonald and myself, on the other hand, endeavoured not to have the money paid until assured evidence had been effected that value had been received for it by the country. And in the same way with regard to lands, his object being to obtain the land as quickly as possible, while our desire was that it should be granted only as the construction of the road progressed. What I mean to say is that he endeavoured to obtain some mode of determining the rate of progress in the work, more favourable than that of leaving it to the decision of the Government or its engineer. It was understood that the payments were to be dependent on the rate of progress. Then as to the way the land was to be dealt with as to the possibility of its being used, in any way injuriously to the interest of the country at large; as to the mode and rapidity of its being patented and a variety of questions of like nature which must occur in a large national undertaking, came up from day to day.

Q.—On how many occasions were you present when Mr. Abbott also was present?

A.—In the discussion of this Charter, we may have spent the best part of seven or eight days.

Q.—Were you there on the first occasion?

A.—I was there every time.

Q.—On that occasion was there anything said with respect to American control or did he claim that any alteration should be made in that part of the Charter which was to exclude American control?

A.—No. It was a conceded point before we sat down, that it should be excluded, and there was no effort made on his part to get the Charter changed on that point.

Q.—That referred to American capitalists as well as American control?

A.—Yes. Whatever Sir Hugh Allan wished, or may have done originally with his friends, Mr. Abbott, as his representative, and that of the Companies said he and they had entirely abandoned any intention of having American interests introduced, and Mr. Abbott was equally anxious with Sir John Macdonald and myself to prevent the possibility of this control or influence being brought in.

Q.—Can you state what was the date of the first interview between the members of the Government and Mr. Abbott, in relation to the final settling the exact terms of the Charter?

A.—I should say towards the end of January, probably about the 20th. I do not remember whether the time was given consecutively or not. I think Mr. Abbott may have had occasion to go to Montreal once or twice.

Q.—In what form was the draft, I mean was it a rough draft?

A.—It was originally in manuscript, and at the time it was presented to me it was in type—in galley.

To Sir John A. Macdonald, through the Chairman :

I think it was the end of January that Mr. Abbott was put in communication with you and myself, but the communications and negotiations had been going on long before that. What I was asked was as to the interviews which resulted finally in the settlement of the Charter.

Q.—The draft of the Charter commenced with a few headings, and by degrees expanded, and became more and more worked into details, until at last we sat down and framed the Charter.

A.—It was set down in detail, printed in galley, revised and reprinted. I think it was printed four or five times, as the alterations were going on before it was finally settled.

I desire to add one word. In that last letter which Mr. McMullen publishes he says, I think with reference to a bill or note made by Mr. Hillyard Cameron, that it was renewed by the Merchants' Bank, and says that the renewal was at the instance of the Government after a visit of the Postmaster-General to Montreal. I was the Postmaster-General at the time, and am the person to whom he referred, and I wish to say that the insinuation conveyed by that paragraph is false; that I knew nothing of the renewal of Mr. Cameron's paper, and that no visit of mine to Montreal had any reference to any such renewal, nor did I ever ask anyone to renew such a note.

And further for the present deponent saith not.

And on this sixteenth day of September reappeared the said witness and made the following addition to his foregoing deposition:—At the close of my deposition I spoke of a statement which Mr. McMullen had made in a letter, that I took some part in having a note renewed which had been made by Mr. Hillyard Cameron. I was speaking from memory as to what Mr. McMullen had stated. Since I gave my testimony I have looked up the statement as it appeared in the papers, and I find his statement is not as to the renewal of a note but as to the inception of it. The statement is: "And now let me add one more fact which will illustrate the position of the Committee and of the absolute control which the accused and their friends have exercised over it. Outside of the amounts which may have been furnished him by Sir John A. Macdonald, the Chairman of the Investigating Committee applied through the Premier for a loan of $5,000 when the elections were all over, and Sir Hugh Allan supposed that he was through paying, and he objected, but after a personal visit of the Postmaster-General to Montreal, and urgent letters and telegrams of Sir John, who announced that it was to help us, the thing was done."

I desire to say in reference to the inception of the note and the original loan, that the insinuation of any visit of mine to Montreal had anything to do with it, is false. I knew nothing of such a loan, and no visit of mine to Montreal had anything to do with it.

Q.—Did you visit Montreal about that time?

A.—I can hardly tell. I never spoke to Sir Hugh Allan on the subject, nor to any officer of the Merchants' Bank. I was not aware until long afterwards that there was such a discount.

Q.—Do you know of Sir John A. Macdonald having written to Sir Hugh Allan in respect to this note?

A.—I do not of my own knowledge.

Q.—Do you know of any telegrams; did you send any telegrams respecting this matter?

A.—None; nor do I know of any having been sent.

Q.—Do you know of any application by Mr. Cameron to any member of the Government to assist him in obtaining this discount?

A.—Not of my own knowledge, but I believe there was some communication on the subject, and that Sir John Macdonald did assist him to get this discount; but I have no personal knowledge of it.

And further for the present deponent saith not.

And on this 17th day of September reappeared the said witness and continued his deposition as follows:—

The amount which I learned from Sir John A. Macdonald in my conversation with him at Kingston, as that which was to be contributed by Sir Hugh Allan to the Ontario Election Fund, was $25,000. This was after Sir John's own election.

Q.—Did you hear of any other sum being promised by Sir Hugh Allan?

A.—I did not until after these discussions took place in the newspapers.

Q.—Did you from any other member of the Government?

A.—I did not, until, as I have said, these matters became rife in the newspapers.

CANADA.

Q.—Do you know at any time of any other sums being furnished by Sir Hugh Allan, than the $25,000?

A.—Not until those newspaper reports came out. But afterwards I did hear so from the conversation I had with Sir John A. Macdonald himself.

Q.—Did it then come to your knowledge that further sums had been subscribed by Sir Hugh Allan?

A.—Yes; there were sums in the aggregate which amounted to $45,000.

Q.—For the Province of Ontario?

A.—Yes.

I desire, with the permission of the Commissioners, to add that on my visit to Toronto, and in the interviews I had with Mr. Macpherson to bring about the amalgamation between the two Companies, I did not desire to make any stipulation as to who was to be President, nor did I desire to make any stipulation upon the subject of the Presidency. It was Mr. Macpherson who desired it to be stipulated that Sir Hugh Allan should not be President.

Q.—Upon the grounds he stated?

A.—Yes.

I desire to say further, that I have had no correspondence whatever with Mr. Abbott about the amount or mode of distribution of any election fund of which Sir Hugh Allan was the chief or sole contributor, or of any other election fund whatever.

I make this statement, as I see in the 'Montreal Herald' it is suggested that such a correspondence took place, and I desire to contradict it.

Q.—Had you any correspondence with Sir Hugh Allan?

A.—No; not with anybody.

And further deponent saith not, and this his deposition having been read to him, he declares that it contains the truth, persists therein, and hath signed.

IN THE MATTER OF THE COMMISSION

Appointing CHARLES DEWEY DAY, ANTOINE POLETTE, and JAMES ROBERT GOWAN, Commissioners to inquire into and report upon the several matters stated in a certain Resolution moved by the Hon. Mr. HUNTINGTON in the House of Commons on the second day of April, A.D. 1873, relating to the Canadian Pacific Railway.

Present: THE COMMISSIONERS.

On this fifteenth day of September, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and seventy-three, personally came and appeared before us, the above-named Commissioners,

The Honourable PETER MITCHELL, of the City of Ottawa, who being duly sworn, deposeth and saith:

I am a member of the Privy Council, and Minister of Marine and Fisheries in the Dominion Government.

Q.—I will read to you the terms of the charge which the Commission is enjoined to inquire into, the first clause of which is as follows:—"That an agreement was made between Sir Hugh Allan, acting for himself and certain other Canadian promoters, and G. W. McMullen, acting for certain United States capitalists, whereby the latter agreed to furnish all the funds necessary for the construction of the Pacific Railway, and to give the former a certain percentage of interest in consideration of their interest and position. The scheme agreed upon being ostensibly that of a Canadian Company, with Sir Hugh Allan at its head." Have you any knowledge of any agreement or negotiation of the kind?

A.—No, not of my own personal knowledge. I have such knowledge as the public prints have lately afforded.

Q.—Is all your knowledge confined to that which you have derived from the press?

A.—Entirely so.

Q.—Were you not aware at any time previous to the publishing of the correspondence that such negotiations were going on?

A.—I was aware from public rumours that Mr. McMullen and Sir Hugh Allan had some intercourse in relation to this matter, and that they had talked of arranging some plan by which American capital could be acquired. That information I got from Mr. McMullen himself.

Q.—You know Sir Hugh Allan and Mr. McMullen, do you not?

A.—Yes; I know both of them.

Q.—And the information you possessed in regard to these negotiations was derived from Mr. McMullen himself.

A.—Yes, as to the fact that such negotiations were going on. I never had any conversation with Sir Hugh Allan on the subject.

Q.—Were you present at any interviews between the members of the Government and Sir Hugh Allan and Mr. McMullen?

A.—I was present at one interview with Sir Hugh Allan, Mr. McMullen, and I think Mr. Smith, but I am not sure whether Mr. Smith was there or not. I don't remember the date, but it was the first interview which Mr. McMullen in his published letter states that I was present; although I don't know whether it was the first or second interview except from what I have seen in the papers.

I think it was the interview which McMullen states in his letter took place early in July, 1871, at which I was present. It will be in the one where he states I was present.

Q.—This interview at which Mr. McMullen says you were present, took place the 5th October, was that the one?

A.—I presume so.

Q.—What passed on that occasion?

A.—Not very much. I understood that these gentlemen came there to make some proposition to the Government, and that he asked an interview with the Government for that purpose. They got the interview, and the substance of what took place was, that when the gentlemen obtained the interview, and the ordinary courtesies had been gone through, Sir Hugh Allan was asked by Sir John A. Macdonald if he had any proposition to make to the Government. Sir Hugh asked the question in reply, "If the Government were in a position to entertain a proposition if he made one?" and Sir John, on behalf of the Government, stated "that the Government were not in a position to accept a proposition" if made at that stage of the proceedings, and Sir Hugh Allan then declined to make any proposition. Very shortly afterwards they bowed themselves out in the ordinary course, as there was no business to be done.

Q.—Was there any discussion at that time concerning the source from which the capital was to be derived?

A.—Not between the Council and Sir Hugh Allan and his associates. I think that the discussion that took place during the interview was exceedingly limited, and almost entirely confined to Sir John A. Macdonald and Sir Francis Hincks, on behalf of the Government. There was a discussion also amongst members of the Government after they had left.

Q.—Was Mr. McMullen understood to be representing American capitalists on that occasion?

A.—I do not know. I understood so myself from what I had heard, but I am not sure whether Mr. McMullen told the other members of the Government or not. I think the conversation was mainly, on their side, confined to Sir Hugh Allan. After they left, the question about American capital was raised and discussed by the Cabinet, and the opinion of each member present was given on that occasion.

Q.—What was the view generally taken?

A.—With the single exception of Sir Francis Hincks, every gentleman was opposed to the admission in any way of American control, and that Americans should have no interest in the construction of the road. Some gentlemen were against American capital too. My own opinion was exceedingly decisive on that point. At the first interview with Mr. McMullen, I told him that I would never consent to the Americans having control of our national road. He spoke of the influence of Sir Hugh Allan in the country, and of his great wealth. I said that Sir Hugh Allan was not all Canada, and I told him that I did not think that my colleagues would consent. After that, Mr. McMullen had very little to say to me.

Q.—It was then the settled policy of the Government at that time to exclude American capital?

A.—It was, with the exception I have mentioned, and I accepted it as the settled policy of the Government.

CANADA.

Q.—Do you know anything of the correspondence which took place between Sir Hugh Allan and Mr. McMullen?

A.—Nothing whatever, except what I have seen in the public prints. I saw none of the original letters. I was told by a member of the Opposition, with whom, officially, I am often brought in contact, that there was a correspondence of a most damaging character between Sir Hugh Allan and Mr. McMullen. He offered to show it to me, but the next day he informed me that he could not get it. I could not believe it myself, and I felt that there was a misrepresentation made in relation to it.

Q.—Was this the only interview at which you were present when Mr. McMullen was also present?

A.—I think so.

Q.—Have you had any conversations with Mr. McMullen apart from that interview?

A.—On two or three occasions when he was here. At the conversation which took place in Chicago I gave a very decided expression of my own opinion as to Americans being permitted to have any control of our Pacific Railway.

On several occasions afterwards, I think when Mr. McMullen was here, or at least once or twice when he was here, he spoke to me of the progress of their work, and seemed to feel very confident about it.

I always told him what my opinion was on the subject.

Q.—Are you prepared to say that the Government or any member of the Government never gave him any encouragement or favour in this project or enterprise, so as to induce him in any way to believe that American capital would be admitted in the building of the road?

A.—I am prepared to say the Government never did, and, except what Sir Francis Hincks said, I am not aware that any member of the Government did. There was no encouragement nor any insinuation of any kind that Americans would be permitted to have any interest in the construction of the railway.

I only speak of my own opinion, and of what transpired in the Council Chamber. I am satisfied in my own mind that no expectation could have been held out that American control would be permitted.

Q.—Have you any knowledge of any negotiations that took place for the bringing about of an amalgamation between the Interoceanic and the Canada Pacific Companies?

A.—I took no part in such negotiations. I was aware that negotiations were going on, but what the particulars were I did not exactly know. All I know was this, that it was the desire of the First Minister to bring about such an amalgamation, and that opinion was coincided in by all of his colleagues.

Q.—Who took an active part in these negotiations?

A.—Sir John A. Macdonald, Hon. Mr. Campbell, and perhaps Sir Francis Hincks?

I don't think Sir Francis took part so much as the others.

Of course the other members of the Cabinet stated their views and approved or disapproved as it struck their minds at the time that the steps were taken or proposed to be taken.

These negotiations began, if I recollect right, shortly after the elections, or it may have been during the Session of 1872.

The Session of 1872 closed, I think, early in June.

The result of the negotiations, as I understood, and as I learned in the Council, was that they failed. Mr. Macpherson declined to accept the terms of amalgamation as proposed.

I had no personal interview with Mr. Macpherson nor with any other gentlemen of the Interoceanic Company. I took no personal part whatever outside of what took place in the Council. I took no part in the negotiations for amalgamation.

Q.—Did you take any personal part in the framing of the Charter?

A.—No. The framing of the draft of the Charter was almost entirely conducted by Sir John A. Macdonald himself, with Mr. Campbell on the part of the Government. The part that I took in the Charter was this: After the first draft was made it was submitted to the Cabinet. We went over the Charter section by section and clause by clause, and spent days over it, sometimes discussing the phraseology and at other times discussing matters of detail. A good deal of difference of opinion was manifested by the different members of the Cabinet in regard to the details. But one prominent point was always kept in view, as to how we could best accomplish the satisfying of the public mind that American control was excluded from the Charter. Outside of that I took no part in the framing of the Charter.

Q.—The determination of Government to issue that Charter—when was it arrived at?

A.—My impression is that it was immediately after the return of Sir John A. Macdonald from Toronto,

I think that was late in the fall of 1872; we had several discussions about it in the Council before that decision was come to. My impression is, although I am not confident about it, that the determination to issue that Carter was fixed upon in the month of December, that was after the failure of the negotiations; at least that seemed to be the settled sentiments of the Government, but it may not have been settled upon before January.

Q.—Was it in consequence of that failure that they determined upon that course?

A.—It was as the only means left open to the Cabinet for carrying out the wishes of Parliament.

Q.—Was that contract given under that Charter under any more favourable terms than had been previously contemplated by the Government?

A.—None that I am aware. It was on very much less favourable terms than Sir Hugh Allan asked. My recollection is that Sir Hugh Allan asked a greater amount of money and a larger quantity of land.

Q.—Had Sir Hugh Allan any advantage over his co-Directors?

A.—I know of none.

As a member representing one of the smaller Provinces, my anxiety was to see that Sir Hugh Allan got no advantage. Both Mr. Tilley and myself, I believe, gave very special attention to that point, and I saw no desire on the part of the Government to give him any special advantage, but on the contrary, looking upon him as a very wealthy man representing the sentiments of a large portion of Quebec, we felt that the great danger was of any man in his position having too much power, for that reason we specially guarded against it.

Q.—Another portion of the charge is, "that subsequently an understanding was come to between the Government, Sir Hugh Allan, and Mr. Abbott, one of the members of the Honourable House of Commons of Canada, that Sir Hugh Allan and his friends should advance a large sum of money for the purpose of aiding the elections of Ministers and their supporters at the ensuing general elections, and that he and his friends should receive the contract for the construction of the railway;" do you know anything about an understanding of that kind?

A.—I do not.

Q.—Was any such understanding made with the Government?

A.—None that I know of.

None was ever heard at the Council Board when I was there. I know none was made with the Government. What might have taken place with individual members of the Government I cannot say. I could not but have been acquainted with it if it had been made with the Government. The whole course of the negotiations and transactions ignored the possibility of any such contract having been made.

Q.—Do you know whether any such understanding was come to between these gentlemen—Sir Hugh Allan and Mr. Abbott, and any member of the Government?

A.—I do not know of any.

Q.—Do you know whether any money was in fact subscribed by Sir Hugh Allan or Mr. Abbott?

A.—I do not know of a dollar being subscribed, except from what I have learned in the public prints.

Q.—Do you know whether money was subscribed by any person for the promotion of the elections in 1872 in Quebec or in your own Province?

A.—I do not know of a dollar except a small sum I authorized a friend to subscribe for me, to one of the elections in our Province.

Q.—Do you know of money having been received from Quebec for promoting the elections in your Province?

A.—I never heard of a dollar having been received, nor do I believe that there was a single shilling given to our Province for any such purpose. If there was, I am entirely ignorant of it.

Q.—Do you know anything of a printed letter purporting to be a letter from Sir George Cartier to Mr. Abbott, dated the 24th of August, 1872, which is as follows:—"In the absence of Sir Hugh Allan, I shall feel obliged," &c., do you know anything about that letter?

A.—I do not, nor did I ever see it until I saw it in one of the Montreal papers.

Q.—Do you know anything of the letter alluded to in this letter as being of the 30th of July?

A.—I do not. I never heard of it until I saw it in the public prints.

CANADA.

Q.—Do you know anything of this telegram which reads, “I must have another ten thousand,” &c.?

A.—I know nothing of it, or of any other telegram of that character; I never heard of it until I saw it in the newspapers.

To Sir John A. Macdonald, through the Chairman:

Q.—What was Sir George Cartier’s opinion as to the admission of American capital into this enterprise?

A.—He was always hostile to allowing American capitalists to be interested in it. His opinions were very decided, and suffered no variation from the beginning. I learned his opinions by his statements at the Council Board, and also visiting occasionally at his house, and in private conversation with him. I occasionally met him at dinner, and I never found but the one opinion entertained by him. And, like myself, he was very decided in his opinion on this point.

Q.—Who selected Mr. Burpee to be a Director on the Canadian Pacific Company?

A.—Mr. Tilley and myself. I never spoke to Sir Hugh Allan in relation to this subject, and certainly not in relation to Mr. Burpee’s appointment. The ground of our selecting Mr. Burpee was, that we considered him the most prominent representative railway man in our Province, and that he would act independently of Sir Hugh Allan. We did not wish that the interests of New Brunswick should be overlooked, and we were anxious to select a man that would represent the interests of New Brunswick at that Board. We selected Mr. Burpee for the purpose of watching Sir Hugh Allan, and to hold out against him if he were inclined towards the Americans. Mr. Burpee was aware of this, and I think sympathized with that feeling himself. There was one opinion entertained by Mr. Tilley and myself, and that was, that with the great wealth and influence of Sir Hugh Allan the interests of our Province should not be overlooked.

Q.—Do you know, or do you not, whether Sir Hugh Allan was favourable to Mr. Burpee’s appointment when he heard of it?

A.—I had no means of knowing, but I understood that he was adverse to the selection of Mr. Burpee. I had no conversation with Sir Hugh Allan on the subject, I learned this from outside rumour.

And further for the present deponeth saith not.

And on the 16th day of September the said witness reappeared, and made the following addition to his foregoing deposition.

In answer to a question put me as to the exact views entertained by Sir Francis Hincks, in relation to the admission of American capital or control in the building of the Pacific Railway, I say that I understood Sir Francis had no objection to any person building the road. My impression is, that Sir Francis looked upon the undertaking as one that, so far from being a benefit to the contractor, would be a loss, and he was anxious that any person would undertake the building of the road. Sir Francis would not, I think, have objected to Americans having control in the building of it. But afterwards Sir Francis coincided in the views of his colleagues, that it was desirable to exclude American control. But previously he looked upon it as so bad a speculation that he would be glad to see Americans or any one else undertake it. He was quite ready to see it built by any person. After the matter, however, was discussed, he coincided in the general views of the majority of the Government.

And further deponeth saith not, and this his deposition having been read to him, he declares that it contains the truth, persists therein, and hath signed.

IN THE MATTER OF THE COMMISSION

CANADA.

Appointing CHARLES DEWEY DAY, ANTOINE POLETTE, and JAMES ROBERT GOWAN, Commissioners to inquire into and report upon the several matters stated in a certain Resolution moved by the Hon. Mr. HUNTINGTON in the House of Commons on the second day of April, A.D. 1873, relating to the Canadian Pacific Railway.

Present: THE COMMISSIONERS.

On this seventeenth day of September, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and seventy-three, personally came and appeared before us, the above-named Commissioners,

The Right Honourable Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD, Knight, Commander of the Bath, and Minister of Justice for the Dominion of Canada, who, being duly sworn, deposeth and saith:

Q.—You are aware of the charges relating to the construction of the Pacific Railway, and to the raising and distribution of funds for the promotion of the elections in 1872, recited in the Commission; will you have the goodness to state to the Commission all the facts within your knowledge relating to this matter?

A.—I suppose it had better be done as a narrative.

In the Session of 1871, Resolutions were passed admitting British Columbia into the Dominion, and it was then provided that a railway connecting the Pacific with the Canadian system of railways should be constructed within ten years. At the same Session there was a Resolution passed in the House of Commons, that the road should be constructed by private enterprise, aided by public subscriptions in money and lands.

There were no other proceedings that Session except a vote to defray the expenses of surveying the line, but it was understood that the Government should prepare and lay before Parliament at its next Session a scheme for the construction of the road. The surveys were commenced and carried through during that summer, but the Government took no action for some time with respect to the construction of the road, or the formation of Companies for that purpose; in fact, had not prepared a scheme, when I was one day waited upon by Mr. Waddington in Ottawa.

Mr. Waddington was an English gentleman whom I knew. He formerly resided in British Columbia, and had spent a good deal of money in railway surveys and explorations, and was an enthusiast in the matter. He told me that by his invitation, as I understood it, some American capitalists from Chicago were coming to Ottawa to make a proposition to the Government for the construction of the Pacific Railway. I told Mr. Waddington that I thought this movement was premature; that the Government could not make any arrangements at all until it had submitted a scheme to Parliament, and obtained the sanction of Parliament. He seemed to be a good deal disappointed, and asked would I refuse to see them. I said certainly not, I would be glad to see them; and Sir Francis Hincks and myself, we being the only two Ministers then in town, saw these gentlemen. We told them that we thought their visit was premature. We said, as a matter of politeness, that we were glad to see that American capitalists were looking for investments in Canada, but that we could not enter into any arrangement or receive any proposition from any body until after the next Session.

They said that they had communicated with other capitalists in New York and elsewhere, whose names they mentioned at the time, and, I think, exhibited a list of their names to Sir Francis Hincks and myself, who were ready to co-operate with them if they could make an arrangement for the construction of the road. Some of the names I knew, some of them I did not, but have since ascertained that they were all of them men of standing and capital in the United States.

Q.—Do you recollect the names of the gentlemen present at the conference?

A.—There was Mr. Smith of Chicago; Mr. McMullen was with him, also from Chicago. He was, however, a Canadian. I think Sir Francis Hincks mentioned other names, but I cannot recollect them at this moment.

I think there were two others.

Q.—Can you fix the date of that interview?

A.—I cannot without reference.

Q.—It was the first interview on the subject?

A.—Yes. The fact of these gentlemen having made this proposition, called our attention, and through Sir Francis Hincks and myself the attention of our colleagues, to the necessity of attempting to get Canadian capitalists to enter upon the subject.

CANADA.

I first communicated with several gentlemen in Ontario, principally in Toronto, endeavouring to enlist their interest in the enterprise. I told them that it was a great pity that a great work of this kind should be carried off by foreign competitors, and if American capitalists could make it a paying enterprise, surely Canadians could do so as well. I spoke to my friends and mentioned the fact that these American gentlemen had come and made this proposition. Sir Francis Hincks, subsequently, on one of his visits to Montreal, saw Sir Hugh Allan on the subject. He did so without any arrangement or instructions from his colleagues or from myself as First Minister. He did so on his own responsibility, just the same as I did to any friends that I saw. As I understood he had a communication with Sir Hugh Allan, which he stated in his evidence. On Sir Francis Hincks's return to Ottawa, he mentioned that he had this conversation, and I thought he had made a mistake, and so did, I believe, most of the members of the Government. At that time it had not occurred to me, or I think to anyone, that these American gentlemen were in any way connected with the Northern Pacific Railway. That had not occurred to any of us. It certainly had not occurred to me, and the reason why I thought that the action of Sir Francis Hincks was premature, was that I thought that the true plan would be to endeavour to get up a strong Canadian Company, in which would be represented the capital of the different sections of the Dominion, and after a body of Canadian capitalists were so formed, they might extend to the United States, or to England, and I thought that it would frustrate that policy to have communication in the first place with Americans. After Sir Francis Hincks had made that communication, Sir Hugh Allan came to Ottawa, with several of these American gentlemen, Mr. McMullen again, Mr. Smith, and I think Mr. Hurlburt of Chicago. We received them in the Council Room, and had some conversation with respect to the railway, but only as a matter of conversation as to the importance of the road and its great advantage to Canada, and so on; but the only business that we did was my asking Sir Hugh Allan, who seemed to be the principal spokesman of the party, if he had any proposition to make. He told us that he had an arrangement with American gentlemen, some of whom were there, for the purpose of getting up a Company to build the Pacific Railway. I said we were desirous of getting applications and propositions of every sort from all parties who took an interest in the matter. He then asked me if we were prepared to consider and enter upon any such proposition if he made it. We said no, we were not prepared; we could enter into no arrangement at that time; we had no authority from Parliament to do so. Sir Hugh Allan said, "I am, then, not prepared to make any proposition," and then they left.

Q.—Do you remember the time of that interview?

A.—I do not. But I see it stated in one of Mr. McMullen's letters that it was on October the 5th, 1871.

Q.—That is the interview to which you allude?

A.—Yes. I cannot say whether this is correct or not, but I have no reason to doubt it.

Q.—There were several members of the Government present besides yourself?

A.—Yes. The Cabinet was pretty full. Mr. McMullen says there were present Sir John A. Macdonald, Sir Francis Hincks, Sir G. E. Cartier, and Messrs. Tilley, Tupper, Mitchell, Morris, Aikens, and Chapais.

I presume his statement in regard to those present is correct.

I would say in reference to this, that before that meeting, I see it observed in the letter of the 18th of July, signed by Mr. McMullen, which appeared in the 'Montreal Herald' and 'Toronto Globe,' that he says that the result of the communication between Sir Hugh Allan and these American capitalists, was an interview in "Montreal early in September, 1871, by which preliminaries were settled between Sir Hugh Allan, Charles M. Smith, and myself, by which Sir Hugh was to receive a large personal interest in the stock, and an amount for distribution among persons whose accession would be desirable, and that the cash instalment on such stock would be advanced and carried on by others." He goes on to say "that an interview was held by myself with Sir John A. Macdonald at the St. Lawrence Hall the day before we met Allan, at which he expressed the approval of the Government at the proposed meeting, and requested me to meet him in Ottawa." Now, that is an incorrect statement. I was at the St. Lawrence Hall, met Mr. McMullen, and he told me that he was entering into negotiations with Sir Hugh Allan; that they proposed to make a proposition to the Government. I heard his statement, and neither expressed approval or disapproval of it. In September we were exactly in the same position as when he had previously met us in Ottawa, and the Government were not in a position to enter into any proposition of the kind, because we had not got the sanction of Parliament.

I said we would consider any proposition that was made, when it was made. I observe also that Mr. McMullen in the same letter states "that at the meeting in October 5th, it was at once apparent that they were not fully in accord amongst themselves, in consequence, as Sir Francis Hincks informed me, of Grand Trunk jealousy of Allan represented in the important personage of Sir George Cartier." This is altogether an erroneous statement; we were quite in accord among ourselves, we were all in accord that we could not consider any proposition until after we had the sanction of Parliament; that we were not in a condition to make any arrangement until Parliament had authorized us to do so. In consequence of its being known that Sir Hugh Allan had entered into this arrangement with American capitalists, it was known to every one—a feeling of fear arose in Ontario, especially in Toronto, that the Pacific Railway might get into American hands and under American control, or might get into American and Montreal hands, and that in the construction of the Board the interests of Ontario might be forgotten or neglected.

This, I think, added to the urgent request of myself on frequent occasions to a number of gentlemen in Toronto, induced I think the formation of the Interoceanic Company. I had spoken to Mr. Macpherson, Mr. Howland, Mr. Cumberland, Mr. Worts, and a number of other gentlemen in Toronto, to try to interest them in it, and the Company was formed. Mr. Macpherson took a warm interest in the forming of it early in the autumn of 1871. The statement had got into the newspapers, and the impression had gone abroad that American capitalists were not interesting themselves in the Canada Pacific Railway on its own merits, but that they were connected with the Northern Pacific Railway, and were endeavouring to make it subservient to the interests of that railway; and the fear arose and spread through Canada, that our railway would be made subordinate to American interests if they were admitted to any share in the enterprise. I was one of those who participated in that fear, and it seemed to be also the opinion of my colleagues, including, latterly, Sir Francis Hincks when he found that the opinion was generally shared by his colleagues against the admission of foreign capital, and that the object of the Americans in getting control of our railway was to connect it with their system of railways. I think the Government became as one in the opinion that American capital should be excluded, although we had not come to any formal decision on the matter. During the Session of 1872 we found that those who usually supported the Government—that the majority of the House of Commons were of the same opinion. It soon became apparent to everyone, I think, to Sir Hugh Allan who was here occasionally promoting the Bill for the incorporation of the Canada Pacific Company, that Parliament would not sanction any scheme which would involve the admission of American capital.

The Government then came to the conclusion that as there were two great bodies of capitalists, one from Montreal and the other from Toronto, both petitioning for Acts of Incorporation, I say the Government came to the conclusion to aid in the passage of Acts of Incorporation of any respectable body of persons who would apply for that purpose; and then the Government might judge afterwards which of the Companies would best subserve the interests of the country, and give them the construction of the road. At the same time we submitted to Parliament the Government Bill, to which allusion has been made, enabling the Government to give the contract to any Company that might be incorporated for the purpose with provisions for the amalgamation of those Companies, and with a provision, if it was thought for the advantage of the country that a Royal Charter should be granted, giving the Government the power to grant such Royal Charter. The Government Act contained a clause to enable the Government to grant a subsidy in land and money. There were two Acts of Incorporation passed, as has already been several times brought before your notice; one for the Interoceanic Railway Company, of which the principal seat was in Toronto, and the other for the Canada Pacific Railway Company, the principal seat of which was in Montreal. So soon as the Session was over, which I think was in June, when Parliament was prorogued, the Government addressed itself to the task of attempting to procure the amalgamation of these two Companies. They represented the interests principally of Quebec and Ontario, although I believe both of those Companies contained names of gentlemen as Corporators from the other Provinces. Still it was generally understood that the Interoceanic Company was the Ontario Company, and that the Canada Pacific was the Quebec Company. The policy of the Government, from the time of prorogation until now, I may say, had never varied. It was that an amalgamation of these two Companies should be procured if possible. We were satisfied that such was the jealousy that had arisen between the two Companies, that it would be impossible to give the Charter to either of these Companies, that is the construction of the road to either of these two Companies. We knew that no Government could exist that would give the contract to either section. If it were given to Sir Hugh Allan's Company, the Government would be certain to alienate the support of their Parliamentary friends from Ontario, and vice versa; so that we spared no pains in the attempt at amalgamation. The Canada Pacific Railway Board always expressed their willingness to amalgamate. The Interoceanic Board expressed an unwillingness to amalgamate. Immediately after the Session of 1872, or shortly after, I went to Toronto for the purpose of seeing my friends there who were interested in the Interoceanic Company, and I pressed them as much as possible to acquiesce in the amalgamation. The elections were to come on between July and September, and we felt as a Government that it was very important to us to go to the country with a scheme perfected and an amalgamation effected with the capitalists of Ontario and Quebec, ready to co-operate in the construction of the Pacific Railway.

After talking the matter over with Mr. Macpherson and other gentlemen in Toronto, I wrote to Montreal and I asked Sir Hugh Allan to come up to Toronto, and Mr. Abbott, a member of Parliament, and who had taken great interest in the Canada Pacific Railway, also to come to Toronto and discuss the matter with Mr. Macpherson. Sir Hugh Allan wrote me that it was impossible for him to come up, but that Mr. Abbott might. Mr. Abbott did come up, and saw Mr. Macpherson, and you will find in the evidence given by Mr. Macpherson a memorandum of the substance of the conference between those two gentlemen. That memorandum I believe to be substantially correct from the information that I had from both of the gentlemen who attended it.

I left Toronto to go to Kingston, to attend to my own election, impressed with the idea that there were no insuperable difficulties in the way of amalgamation.

They had approached very nearly each other. There were only two points of difference. The one was the question of the Presidency, and the other was the number of the Directors. With respect to the number of Directors, it was suggested that they should be thirteen. This suggestion emanated from the Government. We took the number in the Cabinet, which was thirteen, as a sort of precedent, and it was suggested by the Government that the Board of Direction should be chosen in the same way that the Cabinet had been selected; that there should be five members of the Board from Ontario, four from Quebec, and one from each of the other Provinces. That is a detail in which they varied from the Cabinet, as there are no representatives from Manitoba and British Columbia in the Cabinet. We thought that would be a fair mode of adjusting the representation of the Board, and adequate to represent the interests of the different Provinces on the Board. I think it was Mr. Abbott's proposition on behalf of the Canada Pacific Company, that instead of thirteen there should be seventeen Directors for some reason or another; that it would require a larger number of members to represent all the interests; but, as will be seen by the Memorandum, Mr. Macpherson did not approve of this, but thought that this point might be yielded, although it was not, of course, so advantageous for Ontario to have seven representatives as against six from Quebec, as it would be to have five from Ontario against four from Quebec, on a Board of thirteen members.

Then, as regards the Presidency, Mr. Macpherson always held to the same position; that he did not look forward to it himself, he did not press his own claim for it in any way, but he thought that Sir Hugh Allan, from his having originally made this arrangement with the Americans, if he were placed in the position of President, from his acknowledged wealth and influence, would have too much power on the Board, and that he might exercise that power in favour of bringing in American capital.

Still it seemed to me, that as that was really the only question, that is, the question of the Presidency—that we were very near an amalgamation, and I left Toronto, as I have said, impressed with the idea that that difficulty would be removed or could be removed, and that there would be an amalgamation.

When I was at Kingston, attending to my election, I was communicating, I may say, with Sir George Cartier, giving him an account of the progress I had been making at Toronto, and my communications were always of an encouraging nature because I believed that the two Companies would be amalgamated and we would get over this difficulty.

When I was at Kingston Mr. Macpherson came there either to see me, or was there accidentally, I really forget which, but he was at Kingston, and we had a discussion about it, and I found the difficulty still existing about the Presidency, and I made up my mind that there was no use in attempting to procure the amalgamation before the elections, and that matters should be allowed to stand on the terms as discussed between Mr. Macpherson and Mr. Abbott at their meeting in Toronto. I telegraphed Sir George Cartier in that sense. That telegram is set out in the affidavit of Sir Hugh Allan made in Montreal. I have, however, got a rough draft of it. The telegram is dated the 26th July, and is herewith produced and filed marked "G."

I may say, with respect to the expression in that telegram, "that this should be “accepted by Sir Hugh Allan:” that I had regretted to find that there had been a sort of coolness between Sir Hugh Allan and Sir George Cartier, and not only between Sir George Cartier and Sir Hugh Allan, but between Sir George and his Lower Canadian friends. They had got the idea that Sir George was not so friendly as he ought to have been to the Northern Colonization Road, in which a large number of Lower Canadians took great interest, especially the Montrealers, and of which Sir Hugh Allan was President, and that in fact they had got the impression that Sir George Cartier was throwing cold water on all those enterprises which Sir Hugh Allan had entered upon, and this, of course, unless it were removed, would be fatal to Sir George Cartier, and in Lower Canada would lose him Parliamentary support, and, of course, lose the Government Parliamentary support. The idea had been industriously spread abroad that Sir George, as being the Solicitor or Counsel of the Grand Trunk Railway Company, was not anxious to promote any Railway enterprise that might be a rival or competitor of that Railway. This was so much the case that a good deal of feeling had been created respecting Sir George Cartier’s supposed course of action, and that a deputation, which has been already spoken of, which I am aware had come to Ottawa to press upon him, so far as they could, the necessity of taking an active interest in the Northern Colonization Road and other Railways, extending the Northern Colonization west, including the Pacific Railway, and that the Montreal interest, as represented by Sir Hugh Allan, should not be ignored. I sent that telegram on the 26th of July, and I was glad to receive a communication from Montreal, I am not sure whether it was from Sir George himself, or from Mr. Abbott, or Sir Hugh Allan, but from one of the three, stating that Sir George had expressed himself with respect to all these enterprises in a manner which satisfied the Montreal interest, including Sir Hugh Allan and his political friends in Montreal. And I may say here, that it was on hearing that, that any communication arose respecting election funds. When Sir George Cartier and I parted in Ottawa, he to go to Montreal and I to go to Toronto, of course, as leading members of the Government, we were anxious for the success of our Parliamentary supporters at the elections, and I said to Sir George that the severest contest would be in Ontario, where we might expect to receive all the opposition that the Ontario Government could give to us and to our friends at the polls. I said to him you must try and raise such funds as you can to help us, as we are going to have the chief battle there. I mentioned the names of a few friends to whom he might apply, and Sir Hugh Allan amongst the rest, and that he was interested in all those enterprises which the Government had been forwarding. When, therefore, I ascertained that Sir George had put it all right with his friends, I then communicated to my friends in Montreal, Sir George and Mr. Abbott, stating I hoped they would not forget our necessities; that they would see to raise some funds for us in Ontario.

On the 30th, I think, of July, I received a letter from Sir Hugh Allan, addressed to me at Kingston, stating that he had come to an arrangement with Sir George Cartier. He did not send me a copy of the arrangement itself, but he said he had come to an arrangement and had reduced it to writing, stating generally the terms of the arrangement. I was not satisfied with this. It was not in accordance with my telegram of the 26th, and although it was exceedingly inconvenient for me, for I was in the heat of my election, and was receiving a most stern opposition, I telegraphed back at once that I would not agree to it at all, but that I would go down to Montreal that night or the next night, and see them, so that there might be no mistake or misapprehension in the matter. It appears that Sir George Cartier saw Sir Hugh Allan at once, and informed him that I objected to the arrangement that had been made, and that unless the proposition contained in my telegram of the 26th July was adhered to, that I would go down to Montreal and discuss the whole matter with them. I then received two telegrams, one from Sir Hugh Allan and the other from Sir George Cartier, which I fortunately kept, which I shall read. This is dated 31st July. It is from Sir George Cartier. It commences as follows: “I have seen Sir Hugh Allan. He withdraws the letter written “to you, since you make objection to it, and relies for a basis of arrangement on your “telegram to me, of which I gave him a copy, &c.”

I hereby produce and fyle it marked “H.”

At the same time I received this one from Sir Hugh Allan, addressed to myself of the same date. It commences as follows: “I have seen Sir George Cartier to-day, you may “return my letter, &c.”

I hereby produce and fyle it marked “I.”

That was the only arrangement that was ever made between the Government and Sir Hugh Allan, or the Canada Pacific Railway Company which he represented, and I had no discussion or conversation in a contrary sense, either from Sir Hugh Allan or any member of his Company, or from Sir George Cartier, from that time until this. That was the arrangement that was made, by which, till the elections were over, the whole matter connected with the construction of the Pacific Railway should stand in abeyance and that after the elections were over an attempt should be made to amalgamate; and that these two gentlemen, Mr. Macpherson and Sir Hugh Allan, should meet in Ottawa, and form a Provisional Board.

CANADA.

I see that it is mentioned by Mr. McMullen in one of his letters, that there was a subsequent arrangement made on the sixth of August between Sir George Cartier and Sir Hugh Allan. If such an arrangement was made I am quite unaware of it, and more than that I don't believe it.

I am quite satisfied that if Sir George Cartier had made any such arrangement, he would have mentioned it to me. Sir George was a man of the highest honour, and between him and myself there were no political secrets, and if he had made any arrangement of that kind respecting the railway he certainly would have communicated it to me.

I observe that Sir Hugh Allan says in one of his letters, which has been published, dated the 6th or 7th of August, he "yesterday concluded an arrangement with Sir George Cartier." The way I read this is that by yesterday he meant a day or so before, which would be about the 30th July when he signed these papers.

After the elections were over, we renewed our attempts to promote the amalgamation of the Companies.

At my request, my colleague, the then Postmaster General, Mr. Campbell, went to Toronto, with what results you know from his own statement. Early in November, about the 7th or 8th of November, I went to Toronto, and once or twice I thought I had succeeded in overcoming the reluctance of Mr. Macpherson, but after discussing it with him frequently, and pressing all my views upon him, I had at last to leave Toronto unsuccessful in my mission. On my return to Ottawa the Government then addressed itself to the formation of a Company under a Royal Charter. As I have already stated, the Government were satisfied that it would be in the highest degree inexpedient and impolitic to grant the construction of the Road to either of the incorporated Companies. We came to the conclusion that we should exercise the power conferred upon us by the Government Act of the Session of 1872, and endeavour to form a Company in which all the different Provinces would be represented in one, as I have mentioned. And we did grant that Charter as is known.

In the selection of the first Board of Directors and shareholders, the Government had only the one object: that of getting men who would command the confidence of the country, either from being men of capital or being men of known standing, or of being men especially acquainted with the subject of the construction of Railways. The names of various gentlemen were discussed, some were originally selected and afterwards changed. At first the Government thought of some leading men who were in Parliament on account of their wealth and standing. There were several gentlemen who were selected who were members of one house or the other, but afterwards on consideration of the whole question, the Government came to the conclusion that it would be better to exclude all members of Parliament from the Board.

There had been a motion made in the House of Commons during the previous Session to exclude members of Parliament from the Company, and some feeling had been shown on the subject.

The Government therefore came to the conclusion that under the circumstances it would be better to exclude members of Parliament from the Directory.

And now I would state the reasons, so far as I know them, why the gentlemen composing the Board of Direction were chosen.

In Ontario there were five gentlemen selected. Major Walker, of London, was chosen as being a man of standing and wealth, and at the head of the oil interest of Western Canada. He had been connected with the Inter-oceanic Company as a corporator, and he was selected as representing the western interest. At first we had asked Mr Carling, the member for London, to be a Director, but when we came to exclude members of Parliament, Major Walker was selected in his stead. He was selected without any reference to Sir Hugh Allan, or the Quebec interest at all. I don't know whether Sir Hugh Allan was acquainted with Major Walker before or not.

Mr. McInnes was selected as a leading merchant at Hamilton. He was known to Sir Hugh Allan. He was a member of the Canada Pacific Railway Company. He is a western man, and of high standing and character, and the Hamilton interest could not be ignored. Mr. McInnes was in England at the time, and when selected by myself, I telegraphed him by cable, and got his answer by letter accepting.

Col. Cumberland was selected as being a Railway man, and a civil engineer of high standing, and as being a great personal friend of myself. He was going to England at the time, and I asked him if he would agree to serve. He said he would rather not, but that I might command him either in the Company, or out of the Company, if he could be of any service, and I selected him.

Mr. Sandford Fleming was selected by myself and he also went on the Board with the greatest reluctance, and it was only by my strong pressure that he consented. I may add that Sir Hugh Allan was strongly opposed to his being appointed in the Board. He did not object to Mr. Fleming, from any personal reason, but he thought that his services as an engineer would be of more value to the Company if he were not in the Board. I thought that it would be a great advantage to the Company to have a man of Mr. Fleming's standing on the Board, and I insisted on his appointment.

Mr. Shanly was the last; he was placed on the Board at my suggestion. I asked him to serve on the Board. He declined at first, and he came to see me especially on the subject, and at my earnest solicitation he became a member of the Board. He was a member of the Inter-oceanic Board. The Directors for Nova Scotia and New Brunswick were selected by my colleagues in the Government from these Provinces. And I believe in both cases without communication with Sir Hugh Allan, and certainly not at his instance. With respect to Nova Scotia, Mr. Collingwood Schreiber, an Upper Canadian originally, but who had been connected with the construction of railways in the Maritime Provinces, was originally selected as a Director to represent Nova Scotia, but afterwards as Governor Archibald had returned from Manitoba, and as he was a man of high standing and great influence in Nova Scotia, he was substituted by the Nova Scotia members of the Cabinet for Mr. Schreiber.

Mr. Burpee, as Mr. Mitchell has said, was chosen by Mr. Tilley and himself, without any reference to Sir Hugh Allan.

As regards the members of the Board from Quebec, there was first Sir Hugh Allan himself, Mr. Beaudry, a merchant of high standing in Montreal. He may be considered, though I don't in fact remember, as being selected by Sir Hugh Allan, as being his special choice. Mr. Hall was selected by Mr. Pope to represent the Eastern Townships on the Board. Sir Hugh Allan pressed strongly for the appointment of Mr. Foster, or a person representing Mr. Foster. Mr. Foster himself could not be a member of the Board after we came to the conclusion to exclude members of Parliament, as he was a Senator. Sir Hugh Allan therefore desired to have a representative of Mr. Foster on the Board, but Mr. Hall was selected by Mr. Pope.

Hon. Mr. Beaubien, the Commissioner of Crown Lands for Lower Canada, was named by Mr. Langevin. He selected Mr. Beaubien to represent the District of Quebec interest as separate from the Montreal district interest.

The Charter was framed with great care. The principal heads of it were prepared by myself; that is, the leading principles of the Charter were jotted down by myself, and acquiesced in by my colleagues, and were communicated to the gentlemen whom we had selected to form this Board. We had several meetings, I fancy in December and January, at Ottawa, where these matters were discussed.

The provisions of the Charter were added to and enlarged from time to time, and at last Mr. Abbott was selected to meet Mr. Campbell and myself and settle all details of every nature. Mr. Abbott was acting, not on his own account, but as I understood as counsel for the new Company, which was about to be formed. He was early selected as the legal man of the Company, and in that capacity he met us and we worked out the details, most painfully worked at them for a considerable time; had them printed and reprinted, and at last they assumed the form in which they now are in the completed Charter.

I think that I have given you a statement of all the facts connected with the promotion of the Company and what I know of the communications and original arrangements with the Americans. I may say that every precaution that we could think of or that was suggested to us to prevent the Americans getting in either directly or indirectly so as to have control of the Company, was adopted. In the first place, by the election of the thirteen gentlemen who were not only Directors of the Company, but were also shareholders and held all the stock.

They were all gentlemen of high standing and Canadians, and certainly would not, any one of them, be in any way a party to handing over the Canadian Pacific Railway to foreign control. They held the whole of the stock, and not a single share could be transferred for the first six years until the sanction of the Government had been obtained. The reason we selected six years was this; we gave the Company one year—to the first of January next—to raise the necessary funds, and we thought that after five years of active prosecution of the work there would be no fear of the road getting into foreign hands, and that point once gained, the less the Government had to do with the stock the better, for it would fetter the transfer of the stock and of course render it less valuable. The uncertainty as to whether a purchaser would be approved of by the Government would operate against the value of the stock in the market.

Q.—Have you any further statement to make?

A.—Nothing further occurs to me.

I can state and propose to take up the question as to the contribution of election funds. As I have already mentioned, when Sir George Cartier went to Montreal from Ottawa, and I went to Toronto, I asked him to endeavour to get what pecuniary help he could from our rich friends in Montreal; and when I was in Kingston at the time of my own election, I got a letter from Sir Hugh Allan stating that he would contribute $25,000 to the election fund. He used the expression that he would contribute $25,000 to help the friends of the Administration in their elections. I may say here that I considered myself a trustee to that fund, and certainly did not apply any of that money to my own election.

Q.—Have you got that letter?

A.—No; I destroyed it.

It was simply informing me that he would contribute to that extent.

I paid the expenses of my own election; and in fact, I did not receive any funds at all from Sir Hugh Allan until after my own election was over. I was at Toronto the most of the period during which the elections were being held, going off occasionally to one place or another to communicate with my friends. I got pecuniary assistance where I could. In Canada we have not the same organization that they have in England. We have neither a Reform Club nor a Carlton Club to manage elections, and the leaders have to undertake that for themselves. I found as the contest went on that it was getting more severe; representations were coming to me from all parts of Ontario that the Opposition, to use a general expression, had two dollars to our one, and I redoubled my exertions to get subscriptions from all our friends. Sir Hugh Allan was then in Newfoundland, as I understood, and I wrote twice personally to Mr. Abbott, who was acting in Montreal for him, and twice received contributions to the extent of $10,000 each.

Q.—Were these sums both from Mr. Abbott?

A.—I am not sure, but I think so.

Q.—That was in addition to the $25,000, making $45,000?

A.—Yes.

I see that in one of Mr. McMullen's letters of the fourth of August, published in the 'Montreal Herald,' he states that "over $100,000 were sent to Sir John A. Macdonald, "from Montreal, besides a large amount paid to the Central Committee." As to the funds I got from Montreal, they are exactly the sums I have mentioned.

As to the contribution of $25,000, it was sent to me without my having previously asked for it. I had no communication with Sir Hugh Allan, and never asked him for any sum whatever at the time that I received the $25,000, but I have no doubt Sir George asked him to subscribe, and I got the intimation from Sir Hugh Allan that he had subscribed that amount. The other two sums of $10,000 each were given at my request. I wrote to Sir George Cartier in Montreal, with respect to these additional advances, that as we had such a hard fight, he must either borrow or beg funds for me, and I have no doubt that he asked for them. I was not aware until I saw the communication in the newspapers, that he had written to Mr. Abbott, to endeavour to get it for me if he could.

I think this is all the statement I have to make.

Q.—Is there any other matter connected with this charge on which you desire to make a general statement?

A.—There are a number of statements made by Mr. McMullen, which I would like to call your attention to or to which I have already adverted, but would wish to specify more particularly. Mr. McMullen in his letter of the 18th of July, states that Sir Francis Hincks suggested that the Government would be obliged to advertise for tenders, in order to avoid blame, so that the conclusion of an agreement would have to be postponed for several weeks.

To that I will say that the idea of advertising for tenders had been mentioned, with many other suggestions that were made, but it never came to anything. The Government never came to any conclusion to advertise for tenders. Indeed we saw that there would be no object in advertising for tenders as we excluded American capitalists altogether. There was no suggestion that there would be any Companies formed in England to build the road, and all the capitalists in Canada who desired to have anything to do with it were parties to the InterOceanic, or the Canadian Pacific Companies, and so there was no object in advertising. Mr. McMullen says he (Sir Hugh Allan) at one time announced to Mr. Smith and myself that the $8,500 of which he speaks in one of his letters, had been lent to Sir John A. Macdonald and Sir Francis Hincks in sums of $4,000 and $4,500 respectively, with very good knowledge that it was never to be repaid.

With reference to that sum of $4,000 to myself, that is a complete and utter falsehood. I never received $4,000 from Sir Hugh Allan. I never had any money transactions with him in my life. He never gave me any money or never lent me any money in his life. It is utterly false, and I have reason to believe Sir Hugh Allan never said so. Mr. McMullen does not state that we received the money, but that Sir Hugh Allan said so to him, but I do not believe he ever did say so, for two reasons:

In the first place, if he ever did it, it would have been a falsehood, and in the next place, when Mr. McMullen came to see me in December, I think it was then that he came to see me, the first time alone after the elections, I forget the exact date, he came evidently for the purpose of attempting to bully me, and levy black mail upon me, and he spoke very mysteriously of what he could prove.

That Sir Hugh Allan had told him some very strange stories about expenditure of money for members of Parliament, and so on. I was very much surprised to hear that statement, and he said among other things, "he never mentioned your name in connection with any of these expenditures, but he has the names of persons who are very near you." I said he could not very well have mentioned my name, because I never had any money transactions with him. In the first place I know the statement is false, and I am satisfied for these two reasons that Sir Hugh Allan never said so. Again Mr. McMullen says:—"I met Sir John Macdonald in Montreal after the close of the Session, while on his way to meet Lord Dufferin at Quebec, and he suggested that as Allan had made so many enemies, I should go to Mr. Macpherson and try to bring about an amalgamation, promising to write a personal letter to Mr. Macpherson, to aid in the desired object." Now that is in substance untrue, entirely untrue, except the single fact that I saw Mr. McMullen. Mind you I did not seek him out, Mr. McMullen sought me out. I was going to Quebec to see Lord Lisgar off for England. I went from here in the steamer, and went direct from one steamer to the other, and did not enter Montreal at all. How Mr. McMullen found out I was on the boat, I do not know, but certainly he came down to see me. He said the Canada Pacific Railway Board was sitting and was going to take some steps. I was very guarded, I did not know what he had to do with it. I understood of course, there were to be no Americans having anything to do with our Pacific Railway scheme, and I did not therefore understand what he had to do with the matter at all, or why he had come to see me. He was a Canadian himself, but I did not know whether he had any stock or interest in the Pacific Company. I was exceedingly guarded with him. I heard what he had to say. He said the Company was organized. I said it is not the slightest use having anything done until there is an amalgamation. He then said to me that he was going to leave Montreal for Chicago, and he thought he would stop at Toronto on his way home and see Mr. Macpherson.

I think I said it would do no harm, or some answer of that kind. I did not encourage him to go. He informed me that he would go. I made no suggestion to him in regard to it. It would be quite absurd to suppose that if I could not persuade Mr. Macpherson to go in for the amalgamation of the two incorporated Companies that he could do so. It is quite a misstatement. Mr. McMullen says again: "After having Sir George sign an agreement, as stated in the letter of August 6th, he commenced paying money, but, as he told me, having Cartier's order in each case, and taking a receipt therefor. When making the agreement he had no idea that the amount of money would be excessively large, and when it had run up to between $150,000 and $200,000 he became alarmed, and told Cartier that he must stop paying the drafts which were coming in so rapidly unless the whole Government would sanction the bargain. He then stated that Sir George sent to Ottawa and received a telegram from Sir John Macdonald confirming his action. After this Allan said he proceeded paying out money until he had advanced $358,000 in addition to $40,000 drawn from New York." Now this is altogether untrue. He received no such telegram from me. He could not do so, because I never was in Ottawa during that time. I was always in the west attending the elections. From the time I left Ottawa at the end of June or the beginning of July, until the elections were all over, I never was once in Ottawa, and I never made such a communication. It is altogether a falsehood.

Then again as to the meeting which he alleges to have taken place on the 31st of December, he says, "On the 31st of December, I had an interview of some two hours'

CANADA.

"duration with Sir John, and placed him in possession of all the facts and showed him the letters which I had from Sir Hugh in regard to the matters as well as the original contracts, and the letters to the New York Railroad President, which were recently published in connection with other correspondence." He (Mr. McMullen) came to me and complained very much of the way he had been used; that he had devoted himself for some time to this subject and had been thrown overboard. He did not show me those papers. He read me passages from some of the letters. I recognized some of the passages when I read the correspondence published as some of the passages read. I heard what he had to say and what I then said was that according to his own statement, if his statements were true, and those passages read seemed to carry out his statement that I thought Sir Hugh Allan had not used him well, I said, "he ought to have been more frank with you. He could not if he had tried have obtained what he wanted to get. He must have ascertained that last session. He could not by any possibility have effected the purposes you wished him to effect of getting your associates the American capitalists interested in the Company. He could not do so, the public feeling was so great." The feeling expressed in Parliament, and the policy of the Government were all opposed to it, so that, however willing or anxious Sir Hugh Allan might be to carry out that arrangement, it was impossible to do so, and his fault I thought was in not having at once candidly told the American gentlemen with whom he had made this agreement, that such was the fact. On the 23rd of January, that was a very short time before the contract was signed, and after all arrangements had been made, and the selection of the Directors or most of them had been completed, Mr. McMullen came accompanied by Mr. Smith, of Chicago, and Mr. Hurlburt, of Chicago, and they went over the story again. They told me that they had been very badly used, and they had in good faith advanced for preliminary expenses of the Railway a sum of money, that is for the preliminary expenses of the Canada Pacific Railway Company which was incorporated. I stated to them that of course Sir Hugh Allan was liable to them for that money, and must, it seemed to me, as a matter of course, refund it, if he had not already done so. They said they would not put up with such conduct and would see him. I said it is your own affair. Mr. McMullen said they would seize his ships in American ports and take proceedings against him. I said it was quite open for them to do so. I went so far as to say, "I think you are quite right, if I were in your place I think I would proceed against him." They said they would go down to Montreal, and both Smith and Hurlburt said, "You must distinctly understand that we do not come here for the purpose of black-mailing you or black-mailing the Government, but for the purpose of stating our case." In fact they wanted to know whether, by any chance, they could be admitted to have an interest in the Railway.

That was, I understood, the object of their communication. I said to them that it was utterly impossible; that American capital must be excluded, and that the Company must be formed by Canadians, and was, in fact, in process of formation, in the manner in which it now presents itself. They said they would go down and see Sir Hugh Allan, and return this way and see me. I said I would be very glad to see them, and if I could be of any service in settling matters between Sir Hugh Allan and them, I would be very glad.

They did not come this way, however, but I received a letter from Mr. Smith, of Chicago, making a great complaint, that they were excluded, and he wanted to know if I would have any objection to their petitioning the Canadian Parliament for redress. I did not answer that letter. There is a report appearing in the 'Chicago Times' of September 3rd, which was sent to me, containing an account of an interview between a reporter of that newspaper and Mr. McMullen in Chicago.

Q.—Which Mr. McMullen?

A.—Mr. George W. McMullen. Most of that report repeats what has been already published, but I wish to recall the attention of the Commission to it. He says: "That we went to Montreal in September, 1871—and arranged preliminaries—Sir Hugh was to be the agent of the Government. He was to receive for himself a large interest, and an amount of stock which was to be placed where it would do most good, and the cash instalments on the stock were to be advanced by us."

The interviewer asked then—"Was the Government aware of this?"

Mr. McMullen replied: "I told Sir John Macdonald all about it before our meeting with Allan. At the Premier's request I visited him after the meeting at Ottawa, and told him everything, and he was well satisfied." As I said before, I saw Mr. McMullen at the St. Lawrence Hall, and he told me what was doing. I heard him. On both occasions my statements were uniform, that the Government could not enter into any arrangement until after Parliament met.

He reverts in that interview to a statement that Sir Hugh Allan had informed him that he had loaned $4,000 to me; that Sir Hugh Allan had said so.

"Some time after this, Allen stated that he had loaned $4,000 and $4,500 to Sir John A. Macdonald and Sir Francis Hincks respectively, with the knowledge that it was never to be returned." That is untrue. I have already explained why I believe that Sir Hugh Allan did not say so, and if he had said so, Mr. McMullen told me a falsehood when he said that Sir Hugh Allan had never mentioned my name in connection with these transactions. Here is another statement. The Reporter says: "Have you any further proof that the Government was aware of Sir Hugh Allan's bargain with Cartier?"

Mr. McMullen said: "I do not feel at liberty to submit all for publication. I will give a short item that will probably be sufficient. Shortly after the elections were over, and while Sir Hugh Allan was pressing for a fulfilment of his bargain, he began to think that the Government intended to play false. He prepared a complete transcript of all the transaction between him and Cartier and Macdonald, the contracts, supplementary contract, orders for money, telegrams for money, telegrams of Sir John, and memoranda generally, all ready for publication. On the following morning the Government was notified of this, and they yielded to the threat." I can only say that I never heard of such a statement; never saw it; no such threat was ever made, and no communication of the kind was ever made. It is a falsehood complete and entire, without one semblance of truth. Here is another statement which, perhaps hereafter, before this Commission closes, can be more specifically replied to, as it is not a subject with which I am very conversant. The Reporter says: "But $400,000 is a pretty good sum of money for one man to lose. Does Sir Hugh really suffer this loss?" Mr. McMullen says: "Sir Hugh is President of the Merchants' Bank of Canada, a very large institution, which in its current Report shows a Government deposit, without interest, of over $1,200,000, and as all its funds are directly under his control, it is safe to suspect that up to the present time he is even. I understand that another bank in Montreal furnished a portion of the sum by discounting notes secured by Allan's endorsement, and that these are still being carried. This bank also has over $300,000 of Government money on the equally liberal terms of no interest." That statement is untrue. I do not believe the Merchants' Bank have ever at any time deposits of over $300,000 without interest. Funds accumulate in the different banks, and any profit goes to the shareholders and in no way to Sir Hugh Allan except as he is a shareholder. But the sum of $1,200,000 is altogether false. I think these are all the remarks I have to make.

There is one more statement which I desire to make in justice to Mr. Hillyard Cameron. It is stated that at my pressing instance Sir Hugh Allan advanced money or discounted a note of Mr. Cameron's of some $5,000. Mr. McMullen says: "The Chairman of the Investigation Committee applied through the Premier for a loan of $5,000 after the elections were all over, and as Allan supposed he was through paying, he objected, but after a personal visit of the Postmaster-General to Montreal, and the urgent telegrams and letters of Sir John, who announced that it was to help us, the thing was done." The circumstance was simply this: Mr. Cameron told me—we are very great friends—that he was very hard-up, and that he wanted some money and was anxious to get a discount, and he asked me if I would drop a line to Sir Hugh Allan asking him to get his note discounted by the Merchants' Bank. I wrote down asking Sir Hugh to use his influence to get a discount for Mr. Cameron for $5,000, and he got that discount. That is all I know about it. That was in January, before this Investigation Committee, as it is called, was thought of. Parliament did not meet until March. Mr. Huntington did not make his charge against the Government respecting the Pacific Railway until April, and such an idea as the charge being made or the Committee being struck, had certainly not occurred on the 23rd January, 1873. I have just this further to say, that when it was proposed to strike the Committee, there was a good deal of excitement in the House at the time on the subject, as of course you cannot but be aware of, and it was the opinion, or it was believed, as it proved, that there would be a strong party struggle as to the composition of the Committee. I suggested some names to be on that Committee, to my friends. Mr. Hillyard Cameron was not one of those whom I suggested, and when I found it had been so arranged by some of our friends I was disappointed, and expressed my disappointment. So that Mr. Cameron was put on that Committee, I may say, without my consent, I having suggested another and a different member of Parliament, and was quite disappointed that Mr. Cameron was selected. I feel bound to state this in justice to Mr. Hillyard Cameron.

Q.—Mr. McMullen's letters seemed to allege that copies were given you of certain letters between him and Sir Hugh Allan. Did you see these letters?

CANADA.

A.—On the 23rd of January he saw me and said he would send me copies, and he did send me copies.

Q.—Are these copies of the originals which were afterwards included in the sealed packet?

A.—Yes, I think so.

I have got them.

Q.—Are you able to state whether these copies you have are copies of the originals here?

A.—I have got all the copies.

It would take some time to bring them now, as they are at my house.

Q.—You will produce them to-morrow?

A.—I did not get them on the 23rd of January. He promised to send me copies of all the papers, and I subsequently got them.

Q.—Had you any knowledge that that correspondence was going on at that time?

A.—No.

Q.—When did you first become aware of it?

A.—I became aware of this correspondence by seeing it in the 'Montreal Herald.' Of course I was aware of the correspondence at the time I got the copies, and I next saw it in the 'Montreal Herald.'

And further for the present deponent saith not.

And on this eighteenth day of September reappeared the said witness, and continued his deposition as follows:—

Q.—Have you any knowledge of the sealed packet of papers which was placed in the hands of Mr. Starnes?

A.—The first I heard of these papers was when application was made on the floor of the House by Mr. Huntington to have them impounded. I then afterwards saw the packet when it was produced before the Committee by Mr. Starnes. It was sealed, and the members of the Committee who were present put their initials in the vicinity of the seal, but it was not opened.

Q.—Is that envelope now shown to you the one which you saw?

A.—I have no doubt but that is the one. I recognize Mr. Hillyard Cameron's writing on it, and also that of Mr. Blanchet and Mr. Dorion.

Q.—Will you have the kindness to look at the letters contained in that sealed packet, and numbered from 1 to 19, and say whether the copies which have been given to you are copies of these letters?

A.—I would say with respect to these copies that Mr. McMullen, at the meeting which I have spoken of already, stated to me that he would send me copies of the correspondence between Sir Hugh Allan, and Mr. Smith and himself. He did send me copies of that correspondence two or three days after. I see in that correspondence two letters addressed to a gentleman in New York. These letters appeared in the 'Montreal Herald,' and, I think, without the name of that gentleman.

His name I see in those papers. These letters belong to that gentleman, and I do not wish to be a party to making them public, but I will hand them in to the Commission.

On comparing the correspondence sent me with that in the packet which was placed in Mr. Starnes' hands, I may say that there are two telegrams, and a letter previous to the 8th of December, 1871, the earliest date of any communication in the packet.

Q.—Do these copies of the correspondence which were sent to you purport to be copies of a correspondence between Sir Hugh Allan, Mr. McMullen, Charles M. Smith, and this New York gentleman?

A.—Yes.

Q.—These copies have continued in your possession since you first received them?

A.—Yes.

Q.—No copies of them were given by you to any person?

A.—None.

Q.—I perceive that there are some statements in these letters, several of which I wish to call your attention to. In the letter of the 28th of February, 1872, Sir Hugh Allan mentions the distribution of stock in the Canada Pacific Railway Company, $100,000 to Mr. Macpherson; A. B. Foster, $100,000; and so on. Have you any knowledge of an arrangement between Sir Hugh Allan and these gentlemen, of that kind, or of any arrangement which Sir Hugh Allan proposed to make with respect to the distribution of stock?

A.—Not the slightest. I never saw this document or knew that Sir Hugh Allan proposed to distribute the stock among Canadians in this proportion; but I heard from Mr. Macpherson that in a conversation which he had with Sir Hugh Allan, that he had mentioned or written the manner in which he thought it would be right that the stock, in the case of amalgamation, should be distributed in Canada, but the particulars I do not know.

Q.—Then there is the letter of the 7th of August, to which you have already adverted in your examination in chief. In the letters of the 6th and 7th of August, two distinct letters, Sir Hugh Allan states that “We (meaning himself and Sir George Cartier) yesterday signed an agreement by which on certain monetary conditions they agreed to form a Company of which I am to be President, to suit my views, to give my friends a majority of stock, and to give the Company so formed the contract for building the road in the terms of the Act of Parliament, which are $30,000,000 in cash, and 50,000,000 acres of land, with all the advantages and privileges which can be given to us under the Act.” Have you any knowledge of what agreement he refers to in that statement?

A.—No; the only agreement is the one I have mentioned in my examination, namely, that of the 30th July, to which I objected.

Q.—You have no knowledge of such agreement being made on the 5th and 6th August, by Sir George Cartier, or any other member of the Government?

A.—No, I don't believe he ever did make such an agreement.

Q.—Do you know of any agreement which was entered into between Sir Hugh Allan and Mr. McMullen, and certain capitalists in New York, in relation to the construction of the Pacific Railway?

A.—Yes.

Q.—When did you first become acquainted with that agreement?

A.—I know that Sir Francis Hincks had mentioned to Sir Hugh Allan the names of these gentlemen, and had suggested that Sir Hugh should put himself in communication with them. After that I cannot speak with any certainty. I was not aware that any arrangement had really been come to until shortly before Sir Hugh Allan came with these gentlemen to Ottawa, and then when they came to Ottawa we declined to enter into any discussion of the matter with them.

Q.—Did you see the agreement?

A.—Not until I received a copy of it from Mr. McMullen.

Q.—Is it among the papers you handed in?

A.—No; I have only given you the correspondence. I also produce and fyle other papers marked “K.” Though these I received at the same time as the copies of the correspondence, the papers I now produce show drafts of Sir Hugh Allan to the extent of $40,000 mentioned in Mr. McMullen's letter, and the contract as originally entered into in New York, with a modification of it afterwards.

Q.—When was the decision arrived at by the Government to exclude American capital?

A.—I don't remember when there was a formal announcement of our policy on that point, but from the time it was first mooted in the press that American capitalists who were seeking to be concerned in the construction of road, were interested in the American Northern Pacific Railway and other United States systems of railways, the Government began more and more to doubt the expediency of allowing American capitalists to have anything to do with it. The Government was not favourable to allowing Americans to come in, inasmuch as we foresaw the difficulty of preventing the control of the road, after its construction, from falling into their hands if they were allowed to construct the road. This feeling grew in the country more and more intense as the subject was discussed by the press, and as public excitement and public feeling was increasing against it, the Government individually, and as a body, before Parliament met, came to the conclusion that it was impossible to allow Americans to have any interest in the road.

Q.—Was this before April, 1872?

A.—Before April, 1872. When Parliament met and I had an opportunity of seeing the members of Parliament, it was then evident that this was the general, almost the universal, feeling in the House.

Q.—Was any encouragement at any time given to the proposal to build the road with American capital by the Government or any member of it?

A.—No, except the communication I have already mentioned made by Sir Francis Hincks, I am not aware of any communication of any kind between any member of the Government and these gentlemen. On the two occasions when these gentlemen were present in Ottawa I principally conducted the conversation with them, and certainly I gave no encouragement to Mr. McMullen or the American capitalists.

Q.—Was there any communication or correspondence with Sir Hugh Allan on the subject which would lead him to believe that the Government would favour that mode of building the road?

CANADA.

A.—No, I am certain Sir Hugh Allan when he came up he found out that the Government and Parliament were equally opposed to the admission of American capital.

Q.—You say when Sir Hugh Allan came up here he found that out. Can you fix the date?

A.—No, I don't at all remember. I remember this fact, however, that Mr. Abbott, who took a great deal of interest in the promotion of the Bill before the House, stated distinctly to me as a member of the Government that he had undertaken it on the solemn assurance that only Canadian capital should be concerned in the enterprise, and that he had that assurance from Sir Hugh Allan.

Q.—When did the Government first determine to unite the interests of Ontario and Quebec and the other Provinces together in one common Company for the building of this road under the Royal Charter?

A.—Immediately after my return from Toronto, in November, I think. I got here about the 22nd of November. We then came to the conclusion that we would not—although the Interoceanic Company had declined to have any amalgamation—give the construction of the road to the Canada Pacific Company, but that we must issue a Royal Charter. Even if they had consented to an amalgamation taking place between the two Companies, it would have been too late to amalgamate under the Act. By the Government Act it is provided that the amalgamation must take place within one month after the passing of the Act; so that if the two Companies had amalgamated they could only have gone on under one of the Acts of Incorporation. It would have been a matter of indifference whether they proceeded under one of the Acts of Incorporation or under a Royal Charter.

Q.—At what time was it that the Government determined not to give the contract to the Canadian Pacific Company, and contemplated the formation of another Company by the amalgamation of the Interoceanic Company with that of the Canada Pacific, for the purpose of carrying on the work?

A.—We at no time contemplated giving the construction to any one of the Companies, but we formally came to the conclusion to grant a Royal Charter on my return from Toronto.

Q.—When was the idea of forming the Interoceanic Company first originated?

A.—During the summer or autumn of 1871. I had been pressing Mr. Macpherson, Mr. Wm. Howland, son of the Lieut.-Governor, Col. Cumberland, and other gentlemen to take up the question, and had spoken to my friends and leading men in Ontario, not to allow Americans to come in and build the railway.

Q.—Have you any reason to believe that the Company was formed because of the opinion you expressed to your friends in Toronto?

A.—I am sure of it.

Q.—Was it from the beginning formed upon the basis of excluding all American capital?

A.—No. With respect to the Interoceanic Company I am not perfectly informed; I do not think that when they first commenced to discuss the formation of the Interoceanic Company, they contemplated the exclusion of American capital; I think on the contrary, that in the Interoceanic Company's Act of Incorporation, if I remember aright, there is some provision that the majority should be British subjects; I forget now what the expression is, but there is something in that Act which from my recollection indicates that there was no positive exclusion of American capital.

Q.—Was there anything which indicated an intention to exclude the controlling influence of American capital in the road?

A.—I have no doubt that they had that in their minds; that those who were promoting the Interoceanic Bill had determined that they would not allow American capital to have control. I have no doubt that that was one of the inducements to their getting up the Company. In the first place they thought it was a great thing for Canadians to be engaged in that great national enterprise. In the second place, as I thought myself, and as I expected they thought that Canadians ought to be interested in it, and no doubt their desire to be interested in it was greatly increased by their fears and the rumours which some of them had heard that it was an attempt of American capitalists to get hold of the control of this great work, but I cannot speak specifically on that.

Q.—Have you stated at what time you gave up the expectation of bringing about an amalgamation between these two Companies?

A.—About the 14th, 15th, or 16th of November. I had thought at one time that I had succeeded in removing all the objections, and that amalgamation would have taken place, but I failed.

Q.—Was it at that period that the Government determined on issuing the Charter of the present Company?

A.—I returned here about the 22nd November, and of course we had no time to lose. We immediately addressed ourselves to get up a Company composed of representative men from all the different Provinces who would accept the Royal Charter.

Q.—Was that determination the result of the failure to bring about the amalgamation?

A.—It was.

Q.—You stated yesterday that the number of Directors in the Company is thirteen, and the distribution was a good deal governed by the principle which had governed the selection of members of the Cabinet. Was there any inequality of condition or advantages among the several Directors?

A.—There was not. I forgot in my statement yesterday one or two points. In speaking of the personnel of the Directory, I forgot to allude to the two Directors from British Columbia and Manitoba. With respect to Manitoba, the Government asked Mr. Donald Smith, a member of Parliament from that part of the country, the representative man in Canada of the Hudson Bay Company, to be a member of the Board. The Government thought it would be a great advantage to get the assistance and influence of that powerful corporation in England if the Company had to go to that market to borrow, to get them interested in the Pacific Railway, and we asked Mr. Smith to become a Director; and with that view, and a person greatly interested in the matter, he attended several of the informal meetings that we had. We had a good many of them here; but when the Government came to the conclusion to exclude members of Parliament, Mr. Smith was, of course, excluded, and we consulted him as to getting a representative man from Manitoba. He recommended Mr. McDermott, whom he represented to be a wealthy merchant in Winnipeg, for whom he acted, and from whom he had procured a power of attorney to act. That is how Mr. McDermott was appointed. In the same way Mr. Helmeken, of British Columbia, was appointed. He is a gentleman of very high standing there, who was one of the delegates to Canada to settle with the Canadian Government as to the terms of union between British Columbia and the Dominion, and who was afterwards asked to become a senator, from his well-known high standing and character in British Columbia; and I know, as a matter of fact, that he was asked to be the first Premier since Confederation, by Lieut.-Governor Trutch. He also declined that. He is considered a man of high standing, and, therefore, we asked him to become a Director. He did become a Director, and Mr. Nathan, a member of Parliament from British Columbia, representing Victoria, was his attorney. I had forgotten to mention these two things.

Then you asked me as to whether there was any advantage of one Director over the others. There was none. The plan upon which the Government acted was this; there were to be thirteen Directors, each to take one-thirteenth of the stock, and each to pay up a tenth to form a deposit of $1,000,000 which the Government Act required. We stipulated with these Directors that they should be in fact trustees for their several Provinces; that they should not hold more than $100,000 each of stock at first, on which they would each pay $10,000; and that they should give an opportunity to the people of their different Provinces to subscribe for the rest of the stock as they chose. Such subscription being of course provisional, until sanctioned by the Government, as it was a provision that no transfer could be made of any shares without the consent of the Government, and then, in case the stock was not subscribed in the different Provinces, whatever was unsubscribed should be placed in the open market with the same condition that no person should get any stock whatever until their names were submitted and approved of by the Government.

Q.—Who was elected President?

A.—Sir Hugh Allan.

Q.—Do you know whether he was elected through the influence of the Government?

A.—I know that he was not elected through the influence of the Government. I know it in this way: that, for convenience sake, I was made the sole means of communication between the Government and the Provisional Board of Directors. I know, therefore, that when they met I made no suggestion at all, because it was not necessary that I should do so. They all seemed to assume that Sir Hugh Allan, from his wealth and standing, and having taken it up first, was to fill the position as a matter of course. That seemed to be understood by all the gentlemen. If there had been any doubt about it, I should have carried out what I said I would do in my telegram. I would have said I hope you will elect Sir Hugh Allan, but I did not do so.

Q.—The Government did not find it necessary, then, to exercise its influence, promised by your telegram of the 26th of July?

A.—They did not find it necessary. I do not remember making any communication to any member of the Board on that subject for all seemed to take it as a matter of course. I am more particular about that, because several of them did speak to me about who should be Vice-President.

CANADA.

Q.—Who is the Vice-President?

A.—Major Walker, of London.

Q.—Does Sir Hugh Allan, in consequence of being President, enjoy any peculiar advantages, other than the distinction, of course?

A.—The only advantage he has is sitting at the head of the table regulating the proceedings, and having the name of President; but by law he has no advantage, and that view I pressed strongly on Mr. Macpherson and other members of the Interoceanic Company, and that every Director made his own position on the Board according to his ability.

Q.—Did Sir Hugh, then, in the course of his negotiations in relation to this whole matter, obtain from the Government any advantage greater than these other gentlemen?

A.—No, none whatever.

Q.—I think you say, in your examination in chief, that after your telegram of the 26th July—after that arrangement was made—that these arrangements were made between Sir George Cartier and Sir Hugh Allan, with respect to the furnishing of funds for the support of the elections. Did you not state something to that effect?

A.—No; I did not state that.

Q.—Have you any correspondence relating to that matter—of the money to be subscribed in Montreal by Sir Hugh Allan?

A.—No, I have not.

Q.—Was Sir Hugh Allan the only one that you mentioned?

A.—I mentioned other names.

I think it hardly fair to mention the names of those other gentlemen. I mentioned Mr. Brydges' name, and Mr. George Stephen's name, and several other names. I have no doubt I mentioned Mr. Ogilvie's name, and other friends.

Q.—Had you any reason for mentioning Sir Hugh Allan's name beyond that which actuated you in mentioning the names of the other gentlemen?

A.—Yes, I had. I thought Sir Hugh Allan was especially interested in getting a Railway Parliament returned, and that he was interested in sustaining the Government which would carry out the railway policy which they had inaugurated.

Q.—Did you consider him then to have a direct personal interest in the result of elections?

A.—Yes. I considered him to have a strong personal interest in this way. Sir Hugh Allan had, as is well known, a very large interest in the Steamships line, and in getting freights for that line. He knew, as it was well known in the country, that there was an opposition line being got up, under the auspices of the Grand Trunk Railway Company, to run to England; and it is well known that he was alarmed at this, because he naturally assumed that, if the rival line were connected with the Grand Trunk Railway, there would be preference given to that line over his own in matters of freight from the west. Sir Hugh Allan, I think I am not wrong in supposing that this excited him very much, and that it was the primary cause of his connecting himself with the Northern Colonization Road from Montreal westward, and encouraging the building of the Northern Road between Montreal and Quebec, and the extension of the inner line between Ottawa and Toronto, so as to have another and competing line which would give his line of steamers fair play. I think I am not wrong in believing that this was the origin of his connecting himself so strongly and warmly with these lines, and these lines would not, I think, especially the road from Ottawa to Toronto, be early undertaken unless there was a chance of the Pacific Road going on westwards. I think he had a special interest in this line and the western extension, and besides, as he expressed himself to me and everyone else no doubt, he had a great pride, at his age and with his means and standing, in connecting himself with this great national enterprise. Sir Hugh Allan could have been under no mistake as to his position long before the elections took place, with reference to the Pacific Railway.

It was not necessary for him to advance or subscribe one shilling in order to ensure to himself, if he thought proper, an interest in the Pacific Railway Company. He knew in the first place that the Canada Pacific Railway, of which he was President, and the representative man from Lower Canada, could not be ignored in any Company that was formed to build the Pacific Railway. He must have ascertained early when Parliament met, from the feeling in Parliament, that he could not get for his Company the exclusive right to construct the road. The interests of Ontario forbade that. His Company could not be excluded, but could only have an interest in common with Ontario. So that without his subscribing a single sixpence to elections, or to any other purpose, he knew quite well that the Quebec interest must be represented to any Railway Company that was formed, and that he was the representative man from Quebec, and would be supported by the whole influence of Quebec as such. The only danger was that the Railway policy adopted by the Parliament, which had expired, might be reversed by the coming Parliament. He knew that the policy of the Government in carrying out the Pacific Railway had been strongly opposed by the Opposition to the Government; that it was argued very strongly that the road was beyond our means, and would over-tax our resources; therefore, that was the danger to him. He desired to connect himself with the Pacific Railway, which would be the complement of all those other lines with which he had connected himself. And the whole Railway policy of the Government might be reversed if the Opposition succeeded in carrying the country. He was, therefore, interested in exactly the same way—to use an illustration from England—he had the same interest in supporting the Government in its policy in this country, as the great body of licensed victuallers, in England, have to oppose the present Government there, because they disapproved of some of the legislation of the past, and fear hostile legislation in the future. I consider that Sir Hugh Allan had a very strong interest in the securing a Government majority in the present Parliament.

Q.—You said that you received a letter from Sir Hugh Allan, during the progress of your election, subscribing $25,000 for election purposes?

A.—Yes. Stating that he was ready to subscribe $25,000.

Q.—What became of that letter?

A.—I destroyed it; it might have been stolen.

Q.—Did that letter contain any terms or conditions upon which the subscription was made?

A.—None whatever.

Q.—Can you recollect the terms in which it was expressed?

A.—I cannot pretend now to recollect the words, but it was simply stating that he was quite ready to help to assist in the election of the friends of the Government or our Western friends; something like that, to the extent of $25,000.

Q.—Was that the only letter or communication you received from him on the subject of his subscription?

A.—That was the only letter I received from him, and I had no personal communication with him on these points at all. Sir George Cartier doubtless had in Montreal.

Q.—I think you stated that you received two other sums of $10,000 each?

A.—Yes. I must retract my statement that they both came from Mr. Abbott. The first $10,000 was from Sir Hugh Allan, and I have no doubt that is the $10,000 mentioned in that communication of Sir George Cartier's. The other $10,000 I got subsequently from Mr. Abbott, Sir Hugh Allan being at the time in Newfoundland, I think.

Q.—These were all the sums?

A.—Yes.

Q.—Was Sir Hugh Allan's subscription of the $25,000 before or after the 24th of August?

A.—It was before the 24th of August. It was early in August, I think.

Q.—I see in that letter of Sir George Cartier's a reference made to terms and conditions of his in a letter of the 30th of July, and that is repeated in the postscript. Have you ever seen that letter of the 30th July?

A.—Never until it was alluded to in the publication. I have seen it since.

Q.—In whose hands is it?

A.—In Sir Hugh Allan's hands. No doubt he has it to produce. I know the general contents of it, but I cannot give it with any degree of accuracy.

Q.—That is the letter to which reference is made in this letter and postscript of Sir George Cartier's, is it?

A.—I presume so.

Q.—Because there was one letter of the 30th July published. It is not that?

A.—No, it is not the published letter.

Q.—What was the disposal of the money which was sent to you?

A.—I used it to aid our friends in the different parts of Ontario in their elections.

Q.—Had you an Election Committee in your election at Kingston?

A.—I had.

Q.—Was any portion of it applied to your own election?

A.—No portion of it whatever.

Q.—Was any employed to reimburse what was expended on it?

A.—As to reimbursing my expenses, I paid every farthing of my own election expenses, unless some of my constituents paid some money that I do not know of out of their own pockets. I paid all the expenses of my own election, and did not reimburse myself for any portion of my own election expenses out of these funds. On the contrary, I added to the election fund out of my own limited means to help my friends elsewhere.

CANADA.

Q.—Do you know the entire amount Sir Hugh Allan contributed to the elections both in Ontario and Quebec?

A.—I cannot speak with any certainty.

Q.—The second sum of money received by you, of $10,000, was in consequence, I think, of a telegram which has appeared?

A.—I would not like to swear that I sent exactly that telegram, because I do not remember its terms, but I sent a telegram, and I have no doubt that this is the telegram.

Q.—It is given at the end of Mr. McMullen's letter?

A.—That was the second "and last time" I suppose. It says it will be the last time of calling, so I take it that it refers to the last $10,000. I have no doubt it did.

Q.—That telegram is dated 26th August, 1872, addressed to the Hon. J. J. C. Abbott, and signed by yourself. Is that the one you mean, "I must have another $10,000; will be the last time of calling. Do not fail me. Answer to-day?"

A.—I have no doubt I telegraphed to him, and I have no reason to doubt that this is a copy of the telegram.

Q.—Was that telegram answered?

A.—I have before me this telegram, "Draw on me for $10,000." I don't remember, but I have no doubt he did answer and did send me such a telegram. I did draw upon him for $10,000, and I would not have drawn upon him without authority.

Q.—Were there any other telegrams between you and Mr. Abbott, or Sir Hugh Allan, or receipts relating to money for election purposes?

A.—No. There were no other telegrams with Sir Hugh Allan, and those I have referred to. I may have telegraphed to Mr. Abbot in connection with the elections, but I have no recollection of doing so.

I may perhaps now refer to a statement which I see in the Chicago 'Times,' which I intended to have spoken of yesterday. It is as follows. The Reporter asks him: "Can you prove that Sir John Macdonald knew of this bargain?" Mr. McMullen replied, "I can, and will even show his telegrams, one admonishing Allan to shell out, because he had a big thing; another telegram declaring in the most positive manner that he endorsed the arrangement made by Sir Hugh with Cartier, and would hold himself bound by it. He confirmed the bargain unreservedly." Reporter asks, can you prove that? Mr. McMullen answers—"I will put witnesses on the stand who saw the telegram, one of them a very prominent man and a friend of Cartier's. I will name the man who wrote the second of these transactions." I can only say that I never sent such a telegram. It is quite an untruth. I never sent any telegram to Sir Hugh Allan, saying that I endorsed any arrangement made by Sir George Cartier and Sir Hugh Allan. I cannot understand how the idea that I sent such a note or telegram got abroad, or how Mr. McMullen could have got the idea that I sent any such telegram to Sir Hugh, calling on him to shell out, for he had got a big thing. I have been thinking how he could invent such a thing, and the only clue I have is simply this: I remember in writing or telegraphing to Mr. Abbott, that I said that we had a great enterprise before us, and we should fight it out thoroughly. I made use of some such expression to Mr. Abbot, as it was a great game or great enterprise that we had before us, which was quite true; we had a great game in seeking to carry as many elections as we could in Canada, and to secure a majority. That is the only clue which I can think of in regard to that telegram. "A big thing" is an American expression which I never use that I am aware of.

Q.—Do you know what passed between Sir Hugh Allan and Sir George Cartier on the subject of this subscription?

A.—I do not; I may say that Sir George wrote me no letters; he was then in very bad health, sinking under the disease which caused his untimely death; what communications we had were by telegraph, and they were very short.

Q.—Was there any understanding that for any subscription more or less, direct or indirect Sir Hugh Allan was to receive any exceptional advantage from the Government?

A.—I say distinctly there was no arrangement that he was to get any advantage of any kind.

Q.—Was there any understanding?

A.—No understanding. There was no agreement or understanding to give him any advantage of any kind.

Q.—Have you any reason to believe that Sir Hugh Allan gave that large subscription in consequence of an expectation of any kind?

A.—I have no doubt Sir Hugh Allan gave these subscriptions for the one object of sustaining the Government and their railway policy in connection with the Pacific Railway, he being assured that that policy would be sustained with the influence and power of the Government if it remained a Government.

To the Hon. Mr. Campbell, through the Chairman:—

Q.—You have had very many years' experience of elections?

A.—Yes.

Q.—During thirty or thirty-five years?

A.—During about forty years, from 1836.

Q.—At all elections, I believe there is a certain expenditure of money?

A.—Yes.

Q.—What is the character of that expenditure?

A.—It is an uncertain expenditure. There is what they call the legitimate expenses, which every candidate has to undertake—the expenses of canvassing, printing, and advertising—those are the legitimate expenses. There is also a very large expenditure, which is very common in this country, although it is contrary to the Statute. It is, however, I believe, so universal that I have never known any serious contest before an Election Committee on that ground. I refer to the expenditure for teams to bring the voters to come to the polls. My experience has been, with respect to this item, that you cannot get the voters to come to the polls on either side unless some effort is made to provide conveyances for them.

Q.—That constitutes a very serious item?

A.—Yes, I have always understood that to be the chief item.

Q.—Then there is more or less treating?

A.—Yes, and dinners and things of that kind, all of which are contrary to the Statute, but they generally prevail in Canada.

Q.—Did you find at the elections which occurred last, in 1872, any particular necessity for spending money?

A.—There was this necessity, that I don't suppose there ever was a fiercer struggle for the mastery than that which took place between the two parties, especially in Ontario. Every effort was made on both sides to carry their candidates. There was an unusual amount of exertion put forth, the exertions of the Opposition being much greater in 1872 than they were in 1867.

Q.—The exertions of the Opposition?

A.—Yes, and of course there was a corresponding exertion made by the party to which I belong.

Q.—And there was a corresponding increase in the expenditure?

A.—Yes.

Q.—You had a very general knowledge of the contest in Ontario?

A.—Yes.

Q.—You found that there was an expenditure of a much larger amount than usual on both sides?

A.—Of course I am not in the secrets of the Opposition, but I found such a concurrent opinion in Ontario from independent sources that money was being spent very largely, unusually so by the Opposition, that I had no doubt about it. Of course some of those statements might have been exaggerated in particular localities, but the same report came from all quarters. I have recently seen statements that may perhaps at some time see the light verifying that fact.

Q.—You were at the head of the Government during the last elections, and also during the previous general elections?

A.—I was during the election of 1867, and of the last elections. I have been, if not at the head of the Government, a member of it since 1854, with the exception of the twenty months which Mr. Sandfield Macdonald was in power, and the six or eight days during which Mr. Brown was in power.

Q.—Is there any other machinery in Canada for raising funds to meet election expenses except the efforts of individuals?

A.—There is no such machinery here as prevails in England. In each constituency, I suppose, the different parties raise a fund, and they usually have a central fund.

Q.—There is no such machinery as the Carlton Club and the Reform Club in England, but the head of the Government charges himself with doing as much as possible among his friends for the general funds?

A.—The leaders of parties which divide the country, exercise their influence amongst their friends to raise funds for that purpose.

CANADA.

Q.—You spoke of the appointment of Mr. Hall, and said that the first name suggested was that of the Hon. Mr. Foster. Do you mean that the appointment of Mr. Foster was strongly pressed on the Government by anyone?

A.—Before we settled that there were to be no members of Parliament on the Board, Sir Hugh Allan and Mr. Abbott both asked that Mr. Foster should be appointed.

The Government left that to Mr. Pope, who is a member of the Government, and he selected Mr. Hall, as I understood, on Mr. Foster saying that he would not resign his Senatorship to become a Director.

Q.—That was just about the time of the Charter being signed?

A.—Yes.

Q.—Up to that time Mr. Abbott and Sir Hugh Allan had been pressing the appointment of Mr. Foster?

A.—Yes. And, if I remember rightly, Mr. Foster was offered a position on the Board if he would resign his Senatorship, which I understood he declined to. I was informed by Mr. Pope of the fact, and he selected Mr. Hall. If I remember rightly, Sir Hugh Allan desired that if Mr. Foster was not appointed some one representing him should be chosen, and he suggested his brother.

I wish to make one remark. I stated that when Sir George Cartier and I parted, when he went to Montreal before the elections, I suggested to him certain names besides Sir Hugh Allan, and I gave him those names. I do not wish it to be understood that I know that these gentlemen subscribed. I do not know whether they did or not. I merely suggested some friends of the Conservative party.

And further deponeth saith not, and this his deposition having been read to him, he declares that it contains the truth, persists therein, and hath signed.

IN THE MATTER OF THE COMMISSION

Appointing CHARLES DEWEY DAY, ANTOINE POLETTE, and JAMES ROBERT GOWAN, Commissioners to inquire into and report upon the several matters stated in a certain Resolution moved by the Hon. Mr. HUNTINGTON in the House of Commons on the second day of April, A.D. 1873, relating to the Canadian Pacific Railway.

Present: THE COMMISSIONERS.

On this eighteenth day of September, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and seventy-three, personally came and appeared before us, the above-named Commissioners,

The Honourable HECTOR L. LANGEVIN, of the City of Ottawa, who, being duly sworn, deposeth and saith:

Q.—You are aware, Mr. Langevin, of the terms of the charge recited in the Commission; the alleged agreement with American capitalists for building the Pacific Railway; the knowledge of the Government of this agreement, and the subsequent charge that there was an understanding between the Government, and Sir Hugh Allan, and Mr. Abbott, to furnish funds for promoting the elections in 1872, for which they were to receive the contract for building the road. You are familiar with these allegations, will you have the goodness to make a statement in detail, giving all the facts within your knowledge relating to these charges?

A.—About the arrangement for the contract between Sir Hugh Allan and the American capitalists, I knew nothing until I saw it mentioned in the newspapers. I may say, as was said by others, that the Government and the different members of the Government were from the beginning opposed to Americans obtaining the contract and the control of the Canadian Pacific Railway, with the exception of Sir Francis Hincks, but finding afterwards that his colleagues were unanimous on the subject, he gave up his own opinion, and agreed with us that the Company to be formed should be formed by Canadians or British subjects. The charge made by Mr. Huntington that the Government or members of the Government, in consideration of funds to be furnished or paid to the Government, or any member or members of the Government, made any agreement, or had any understanding with Sir Hugh Allan and Mr. Abbott, or Sir Hugh Allan or Mr. Abbott, or anyone else, for the building of the Canadian Pacific Railway, or for the obtaining of the contract, or for any advantage or any gain connected with it; that charge is false. The Government never had any such understanding, or ever made any such promise or any such bargain, and in so far as I know, and I have no doubt that if it had been otherwise I would have known it, there has been no bargain, no contract, no understanding of that kind between Sir Hugh Allan and Mr. Abbott, or either of them, or the Americans on the one side and any member of the Government on the other. I try to make it as general and as special as possible, because I want to give a complete denial to the charge. I may now say about the giving of the contract to Sir Hugh Allan or to anyone else, that the statements made by me here about the action of the Government are perfectly correct. The Government did not make any arrangement with Sir Hugh Allan, or with anyone else, for the building of the Canadian Pacific Railway until after the general elections of 1872. Up to that time there was no promise or arrangement of any kind made by the Government or any member of the Government about the building of the road. I may also add that the Government were determined from the beginning to give no advantage to one Province over any other. We knew full well that Sir Hugh Allan was considered by the Lower Canadians as their representative man in this matter. We knew that he had taken from the beginning a very important part in the promotion of the railway: but on the other hand we had to consider that this railway was not for the Province of Quebec alone, but also for the other Provinces, I should say for the whole Dominion. On the other hand, the Toronto interest was very important. Our Toronto friends were very pressing, and by Toronto friends I mean the financial interests of Ontario; that interest was very pressing, and of course they as well as the Quebec or Montreal interests were doing their best to have the upper hand in this railway. We had therefore to be very careful as a Government, that no preponderance should be given to one Province over the other, but that in giving the Charter the interests of the whole Dominion should be considered and taken care of. We therefore did all that we could to bring about an amalgamation of the two Companies; that is to say, the Canada Pacific Railway Company and the Interoceanic Railway Company, the first having as its representative Sir Hugh Allan, and the other the Hon. Mr. Macpherson. However, the negotiations which we had with those two Companies failed. We could not induce the Interoceanic Company to amalgamate, and therefore we had to decide what course the Government should then take. We had only those two Companies incorporated by Act of Parliament. Were we to give the contract to one or the other, we would necessarily have given offence to one section or the other, and also given an undue preponderance to one Province over the other. The consequence was that the Government took advantage of the clause in the Act relating to the aid that Parliament allowed the Government to give to this undertaking. We took advantage of that clause, and formed a new Company, composed of some of the leading men of the Canada Pacific Company and of the Interoceanic Company, adding to them some other leading men of the Dominion.

The composition of the new Company has already been described by Sir John A. Macdonald, and I have only to say that I would have only to repeat what he has just said on that point. As to the names, that is a correct description. The Charter of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company was given, I think, in the first days of February, 1873, if I am not mistaken.

Q.—Will you now proceed to the other branch of the subject, respecting the money furnished for the elections?

A.—As I have already stated, there was no bargain of any kind. I mean that neither the Government nor any member of the Government, so far as I know—and I would have known of it if it had been otherwise—made any bargain or agreement by which the Government, or any member of the Government, was to receive any sum of money, or any advantage from Sir Hugh Allan, or from anyone else, for the granting of the Charter, or for the influence of the Government, or any member of the Government, or for the services of the Government, or of any one of them. Respecting the sums of money that Sir John A. Macdonald had stated as having been received for the Ontario elections, I know nothing. Respecting the sums of money furnished to the Montreal Central Election Committee, I knew nothing either.

CANADA.

During the Session of 1872 I had a conversation with Sir George Cartier, my Quebec leader, on the elections that were coming on, and I stated to him that we should divide the work in Lower Canada, in order that our friends should be able to refer with certainty to one of us, in case they needed advice or otherwise. It was so understood between us, and I went farther—I told him the experience I had had at previous elections, and that I could not myself provide the funds that might be required in my region without help from the exterior. That of course I had friends that could help me to a certain extent, but that he was aware that the great wealth of the Province of Quebec was centred in Montreal, and not in Quebec, and that therefore I would expect that whenever he obtained from his wealthy friends in Montreal contributions to the election fund for the Province of Quebec, he should remember that I should have a share to help in the election contest of my region—that is, the eastern part of the Province of Quebec. He promised me that he would do his best. Whilst on this subject I may say that, alluding to the charge that has been made publicly in a letter published in the 'Montreal Herald' by George W. McMullen—a charge that Mr. Abbott had been authorized, by he does not say whom, to promise me $25,000 for my good will, or for my services, or future services in connection with the Pacific Railway, and that Mr. Abbott had reported having done so; I may say first, that Mr. Abbott never told me that he was authorized to promise me $25,000, or any other sum. Mr. Abbott never promised or offered me anything. He never spoke to me of anything of the kind, and therefore, in so far as I am concerned, that charge is false. I leave, of course, to Mr. Abbott, who may be examined on a future day, to say whether he was authorized to do anything of the kind, and whether the charge made against him, that he said he had promised anything of the kind, is true. So far as I am concerned, I say positively that he never spoke to me on the subject, and never promised me anything at any period. The only time I had a conversation on election matters with Mr. Abbott was, I believe, some time during the Session of 1872, when he, having occasion to come to my department to see me about some matter connected with a public work in his county, I spoke to him, as being one of my best political friends from my own Province, on the prospects of the electoral contest that was to take place during the summer. I told him that the last contest had been a severe one for me, in so far as my small purse was concerned, and that, of course, my position being more prominent now than it was then, I was afraid that the claims or the calls upon me would be still greater, and on that he remarked that it would not be fair that the burden should all fall on my shoulders, but that certainly I should be helped by my friends. That is the only conversation I ever had with Mr. Abbott on that subject, and of course it is one of those conversations I could have had with any other political friend supporting me in Parliament or supporting me out of Parliament; and I may add that Mr. Abbott never spoke to me about the Pacific Railway, or the Bills that were before the House, and he never asked my support of any of the measures that were then before the House, or asked whether I would support or oppose them. In consequence of the conversation I had with Sir George Cartier, as I stated just now, during the elections of 1872, I received from Sir George Cartier, by the hands of Sir Hugh Allan, $15,000, he (Sir Hugh) stating that he was instructed by Sir George Cartier to remit me that sum for the election fund of my region. Some time afterwards I received a note from Sir Hugh Allan stating that on my giving a receipt to Mr. Abbott he (Mr. Abbott) was instructed to deliver me, also by direction of Sir George Cartier, $10,000 additional for the same object. As I was about leaving Ottawa for Quebec during the elections, and understanding that Sir Hugh Allan had gone to Newfoundland, I telegraphed Mr. Abbott at Montreal to be kind enough to meet me on board of the Quebec boat at Montreal, which he did. I told him there that I had received a note from Sir Hugh Allan, as I stated just now; that I had asked no money from Sir Hugh; that the sum of $15,000 that he had sent me before came from Sir George Cartier; that I had understood from Sir George Cartier that any sum of money that he would send to me would be a portion of the subscription of his wealthy friends in Montreal, and that therefore I could not for a moment think of giving a receipt or of receiving any money on any condition whatever, and that if this sum of $10,000 was not on the same footing as the $15,000 first sent, I could not receive it. Moreover, if there had been any misunderstanding about the first sum, and if that first sum was not a pure gift on the part of the subscribers to the fund, I would go down to Quebec, and would return that amount immediately. Mr. Abbott told me that there must be some misunderstanding, that he was sure that there must be no intention of putting any condition or exacting any receipt about this money. So we parted. Mr. Abbott sent me afterwards the $10,000 without any condition, and I believe stated that his explanation to me was the proper one. Some time afterwards

Sir George Cartier, whom I had seen en passant in Montreal, and who had ask me in what position I found myself about the elections in my region, was informed by me that, besides my own election and what I had contributed personally to others, I was short to the amount of $7,500 or $7,600. He told me he thought his Election Committee would have to provide for that additional sum; and some time afterwards I received it with a note from Sir Hugh Allan, stating that Sir George Cartier had instructed him to hand me that amount. I never had any communication on this subject with Sir Hugh Allan, beyond what I have just stated.

By my statement the Commissioners will see that none of that money was employed in paying the expenses of my own election.

Q.—Did you take as active an interest in the negotiations concerning the building of the Pacific Railway in the earlier stages of it, as other members of the Cabinet?

A.—No. The first negotiations were conducted by Sir John A. Macdonald principally. The negotiations between Sir Francis Hincks and Sir Hugh Allan and others were conducted as coming from himself at the beginning; and, as Sir John Macdonald stated correctly when we heard that he was favouring the introduction of the American interest in the proposed Railway Company, we expressed our dissent from that action; and from that moment until the end, the Cabinet never wavered on that point, showing their determination to exclude Americans from the Pacific Railway Company.

Q.—Do you recollect about the time that that decision was arrived at?

A.—The formal decision on that point was, I think, in April or May, 1872, but I am not sure.

Previous to the Session of 1872, that determination was arrived at on the part of the Government. Although, perhaps, it was not known to outsiders, yet it was the settled policy previous to the Session of 1872, and when we met Parliament and had an opportunity of seeing the members of the House of Commons, it was clear that any other policy would fail.

Q.—Were you present at any of the interviews mentioned by some of the witnesses, and also in Mr. McMullen's letter relating to this matter?

A.—No; I was not present when the American gentlemen were there.

At the first interview I understood that there were only two members of the Government present—Sir John Macdonald and Sir Francis Hincks. The second interview was reported to me on my arrival here, I think I had gone to Montreal or Quebec.

Q.—You have no recollection of having ever met those gentlemen in conference?

A.—No; I never met them. I never saw Mr. George McMullen.

Q.—Had you ever any conversation with Sir Hugh Allan on the subject of the agreement they had entered into?

A.—No.

Q.—Then you know very little of that?

A.—Very little, indeed.

Q.—Did you take any part in the efforts which were made to bring about an amalgamation of the Interoceanic and the Canada Pacific Companies?

A.—Nothing more than as a member of the Privy Council.

Q.—You knew that the negotiations were going on?

A.—Yes. The action was determined in the Privy Council before being taken.

Q.—Respecting the organization of the Canadian Pacific Company and the appointment of Directors, you state that the evidence you would give would be that given by Sir John A. Macdonald?

A.—Exactly what he gave. The Hon. Mr. Beaubien, who was specially selected by me, was so selected to represent the interests of the District of Quebec, not as opposed to that of Montreal, but as being distinct from that of Montreal. That was the object I had in view in selecting him from that portion of Lower Canada.

Q.—Sir Hugh Allan was elected President of that Board?

A.—Yes.

Q.—Have you any knowledge of any influence being used to procure him that position?

A.—I am not aware that the Government used any special influence or any influence to bring about his election.

Q.—Do you know whether his election was unanimous or not?

A.—I understood it was.

Q.—You have no personal knowledge on that subject?

A.—No; I was not present.

Q.—Had you any communication with Sir Hugh Allan upon the subject of money to be furnished for the elections before your communication with Sir George Cartier?

CANADA.

A.—No, never ; at no time.

Q.—You had no conversation with him on the subject ?

A.—No.

Q.—Do you know how much he subscribed in all for the elections ?

A.—No ; I don't know.

Q.—Have you in your possession the letter that Sir Hugh Allan wrote, to which you have referred ?

A.—No. I don't keep any of these letters, nor any letters that are mere formal letters. It has always been a rule with me as soon as I have finished a letter to destroy it, unless it is an official letter to be filed in the department. But my own letters I destroy, and I think, by what I have seen since, that I was perfectly right in this.

Q.—Do you remember the terms of that letter ?

A.—No ; there was nothing special in it.

Q.—Did it relate to the advance of that $10,000 ?

A.—Sir Hugh Allan stated, so far as I can recollect, that Mr. Abbott would pay me, or hand me $10,000, and that Sir George Cartier had wished him to send it to me on my giving him a receipt.

Q.—Was that the only condition in the letter ?

A.—As far as I can recollect, there was no other condition than that.

Q.—You have said, I believe, that you received another letter from Sir Hugh Allan, enclosing the last sum you received ?

A.—No, I don't think there was any note with it ; if there was any, it was simply stating that, " I send you $7,000, or $7,600, by order of Sir George Cartier." I think he must have sent some such note as that, but I have no special recollection of it.

Q.—You don't remember the terms of the letter ?

A.—No ; it was nothing more than a mere business letter that might be written by one person to another.

Q.—He mentioned to you that he had sent you that sum of money ; did he say anything else ?

A.—No.

Q.—Did he not say anything else ?

A.—He said, " by the direction of Sir George Cartier," or " by the wish of Sir George Cartier."

Q.—Nothing more than that ?

A.—No.

Q.—You say you mentioned to Mr. Abbott that unless it was a free gift on the part of the subscribers to the fund you would go to Quebec, and at once return the first $15,000.

A.—Yes.

Q.—Why did you make that remark ?

A.—Because when I saw that Sir Hugh Allan, in his letter, stated that Mr. Abbott had $10,000, which he would hand me, or send me, or pay me on my sending a receipt, or giving a receipt, I thought that meant that it was not a mere subscription, and therefore thinking that the same thing might apply to the first $15,000 that had been sent, and for which no receipt had been given, I stated at once to Mr. Abbott that if this money that had been sent by direction of Sir George Cartier was not a mere gift on the part of the subscribers, I must return it, and I was going down to Quebec and would return it at once. The reason for that was apparent. The object I had in view when I spoke to Sir George Cartier in the Session of 1872 was to see that the heavy expenditure of the elections should not fall on me, and that I should not be responsible for the whole amount, and if this had not been a mere gift on the part of the subscribers, I would have found myself responsible for the whole amount, which I would not undertake to be.

Q.—You use the word " gift " in opposition to " loan "—not a loan but a gift ?

A.—Yes, that is what I mean.

I wish to add in regard to Sir George Cartier on another point. It is that from the beginning he showed his opposition to the introduction of Americans or American capital in the Pacific Railway Company to be established or to be incorporated. He expressed himself so to me more than once, stating, I cannot recollect his exact words, but the meaning of the conversation was this, that he would not allow the Americans to build our railway. Their interests commercially speaking being different from those of the Dominion ; and that we had in Canada and in England men who could find the necessary capital, and who would have the necessary skill to build this railway. He was very positive and never wavered on that point.

Q.—Do you know anything of the letter from Sir George Cartier to Sir Hugh Allan of date the 30th of July ?

A.—No. I know of no letter except that which has been published in the newspapers. There is one of that date published.

Q.—Do you know of any other letter of that date which has not yet been published?

A.—No.

Q.—Did Sir George Cartier mention any such letter to you?

A.—I never had any conversation with him about that.

To the Hon. Mr. Campbell, through the Chairman:

Q.—You stated that you concur in Sir John Macdonald's statement of the mode in which the present Directors of the present Company were chosen?

A.—Yes.

Q.—Did Sir Hugh Allan exercise any influence in the choice of these Directors?

A.—No, not that I am aware of; and if he had exercised any influence, there is no doubt I would have known it from the knowledge I had of the business of the Council.

Q.—Did not both Sir Hugh Allan and Mr. Abbott press for the appointment of a person in lieu of Mr. Foster, when the Government arrived at the determination that no member of Parliament should be on the Board, as Mr. Foster's nominee in fact?

A.—Yes, they did.

Q.—And no such appointment was made?

A.—No such appointment was made.

Q.—They continued to press for the appointment up to the last moment, did they not?

A.—They did.

By the Commissioners:

Q.—Who was the person put forward?

A.—I think Mr. Foster's brother.

Q.—And they were pressing for the appointment of Mr. Foster up to the last moment, until they were told, in fact, it was no use?

A.—Yes.

Q.—So Sir Hugh Allan exercised no influence in the selection of the persons who are on the Board?

A.—None whatever.

And further deponent saith not, and this his deposition having been read to him he declares it contains the truth, persists therein, and hath signed.

IN THE MATTER OF THE COMMISSION

Appointing CHARLES DEWY DAY, ANTOINE POLETTE, and JAMES ROBERT GOWAN, Commissioners to inquire into and report upon the several matters stated in a certain Resolution moved by the Hon. Mr. HUNTINGTON in the House of Commons on the second day of April, A.D. 1873, relating to the Canadian Pacific Railway.

Present: THE COMMISSIONERS.

On this eighteenth day of September, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and seventy-three, personally came and appeared before us, the above-named Commissioners,

SANDFORD FLEMING, of the City of Ottawa, Civil Engineer, who being duly sworn, deposeth and saith:

Q.—You reside in Ottawa, I believe?

A.—Yes, at present.

I am a Civil Engineer.

Q.—Do you know Sir Hugh Allan?

A.—I know him very slightly.

Q.—Do you know Mr. G. W. McMullen?

A.—I do not know him.

Q.—Have you any knowledge of an agreement between Sir Hugh Allan and Mr.

CANADA.

G. W. McMILLAN, representing United States capitalists for the construction of the Canada Pacific Railway with American funds?

A.—None whatever, except what I have recently seen in the newspapers.

Q.—Were you brought in relation to the parties to that transaction at the time it was going on?

A.—Not at all.

Q.—You therefore know nothing at all about it?

A.—Nothing of my own knowledge.

Q.—Have you ever had any conversation with Sir Hugh Allan relating to it?

A.—No conversation whatever.

Q.—You were, I think, one of the Provisional Directors of the Canada Pacific Railway Company?

A.—My name is in the Charter of the present Company. I was not connected in any way with any of the Companies that were incorporated by Act of Parliament.

Q.—When did you first become interested in the movements for the construction of the Pacific Railway?

A.—In 1871. I was called upon by the Government to conduct the surveys.

Q.—That was all your connection with it until you were appointed a Director of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company?

A.—Yes, until I was asked by Sir John Macdonald to consent to be one of the Directors.

Q.—About what time were you requested to become a Director?

A.—It must have been in January of this year, 1873. I am not quite sure, but I think it was only about two or three weeks before the date of the Charter, the Charter is dated the 5th of February.

Q.—How many Directors are there upon that Board?

A.—I believe there are thirteen names in the Charter.

Q.—They are all upon an equal footing as Directors?

A.—Yes.

Q.—Who is President?

A.—Sir Hugh Allan.

Q.—Were you present at his election?

A.—I was.

Q.—Was there any difference of opinion on his election?

A.—I don't think there was. It seemed to be agreed upon by common consent that he should be President.

Q.—What were the motives which induced the unanimous election of Sir Hugh Allan?

A.—He had taken a very active part in the whole affair, and he was one of the wealthiest men, if not the very wealthiest man. He seemed disposed to embark his capital in this enterprise to a very large extent, and it was also thought that he would as President be better able than almost any other man to influence capitalists in England to join in the work.

Q.—Was it considered an advantage to the undertaking to have him at the head of it as President?

A.—It was then considered so unquestionably.

Q.—You have extensive experience and reputation, and knowledge as an Engineer, Mr. Fleming. Can you give an opinion as to the pecuniary promise of this enterprise under the Charter. Does it appear to you to be of a profitable character?

A.—Anything I can say on that head must be very speculative. I suppose I have had a better opportunity of judging than any other member of the Board, on account of being connected with the surveys; but I always had grave doubts about the financial success of the scheme.

Q.—Did you accept a Directorship from a desire, or with the expectation of making money out of it?

A.—I accepted a Directorship because it was pressed on me by the Premier. I hesitated very much about accepting it, and did not do so solely with the idea of making money out of it.

Q.—Do you know anything about the general elections in 1872—about the raising of funds for the purpose of carrying them on?

A.—None whatever. I was not in this part of the country at the time.

Q.—And nothing has since come to your knowledge with respect to these elections?

A.—Nothing, except what anyone can read in the public papers.

Q.—You stated the reasons which seemed to operate with the Board in selecting Sir

Hugh Allan as President. Were they the reasons which operated with you—that is, his wealth, his position, his facility for obtaining means, and so on; were these the reasons which operated with you?

CANADA.

A.—I think so. Everything pointed to Sir Hugh Allan as the proper man.

Q.—Had you any other reasons than those you have named for giving him your support as President?

A.—I never gave the matter very much consideration. Everything pointed to Sir Hugh Allan as the proper man to be President of the Company. His name was first on the list of names given in the Charter, and he had no rival.

Q.—Was any influence used with you personally to induce you to support Sir Hugh Allan as President?

A.—I am not aware of any. It seemed to be generally understood by everybody that he should be President. He seemed to have no rival.

And further deponent saith not, and this his deposition having been read to him, he declares that it contains the truth, persists therein, and hath signed.

PROVINCE OF ONTARIO, }

Appointing CHARLES DEWEY DAY, ANTOINE POLETTE, and JAMES ROBERT GOWAN, Commissioners to inquire into and report upon the several matters stated in a certain Resolution, moved by the Hon. Mr. HUNTINGTON, in the House of Commons, on the second day of April, A.D. 1873, relating to the Canadian Pacific Railway.

Present: The COMMISSIONERS.

On this nineteenth day of September, in the year of our Lord, one thousand eight hundred and seventy-three, personally came and appeared before us, the above-named Commissioners,

Sir HUGH ALLAN, of the City of Montreal, Knight, who being duly sworn, deposeth and saith:

I am a resident of Montreal.

Q.—You have taken an active interest in the negotiations and operations for the constructing of the Canada Pacific Railway?

A.—I have.

Q.—There are a number of letters which have been found in a package entrusted by you and Mr. G. W. McMullen, whom I suppose you know, in the hands of Mr. Starnes, and we desire, in the first place, to prove those letters to be in your handwriting. Will you take the package and examine it, and state if they are so?

A.—With reference to the parcel itself, it was not I who put it into the hands of Mr. Starnes, or made it up. I cannot swear positively as to the originality of the package. I can, however, identify my own handwriting.

Q.—These letters now shown to you, were they all written by you to the gentlemen to whom they are addressed?

A.—Yes; they were private letters for private information, and not for publication at all.

Q.—Are the telegrams also correct?

A.—I think so. I have only a knowledge of their general terms.

Q.—Are there any other contents in that sealed package which you can identify; that is, for instance, the sealed packet and other documents, one a letter addressed to the Hon. Henry Starnes, is that your letter?

A.—Yes; that is my signature.

Q.—Is that Mr. McMullen's signature to it also?

A.—I think so.

CANADA.

There is also another envelope here containing a cheque for $17,500, and I hereby produce and fyle it, marked "N."

Q.—What was the letter addressed to Mr. Starnes with the memorandum and agreement?

A.—The letter is herewith produced and fyled, marked "O."

Q.—You have said that you have taken an active interest in the negotiations for the construction of the Canada Pacific Railway. I will now read to you the formal charges that have been made against the Government on that subject, with the view of receiving a statement of what you know about them. Will you have the goodness to state all the facts within your knowledge relating to the subject matter of these charges?

A.—If the Court will permit me, I will read a statement which I have drawn up relating to the matter.

With reference to this statement, and any other I may make, I wish the Court to understand that at this distance of time—from one to two years—during which many changes have taken place, and, as a matter of course, I cannot exactly charge my memory as to conversation about facts and figures which then took place, and therefore I can only state what occurred to the best of my knowledge and belief.

The witness then made the following statement:—

I have for some years past taken a strong interest in the development of railway communication throughout the Dominion of Canada, and particularly through the district of country lying to the westward of Montreal, with a view to increasing the facilities of communication between the seaboard and Western America. And that, amongst other projects, my attention was early directed to the scheme for constructing a railway between Montreal as the most westerly Atlantic seaport, and the Pacific Ocean.

That in the autumn of 1871 I learned, in conversation with Sir Francis Hincks, that certain American capitalists had proposed to the Government, through Mr. Waddington, to organize a Company for the purpose of building the Canadian Pacific Railway, but that no action had been taken upon their proposition.

That, thereupon, inasmuch as no movement appeared to be contemplated in Canada for the purpose in question, and I doubted if Canadian capitalists could be induced to subscribe to it to any large extent, I obtained from Sir Francis Hincks the names of the persons who had been communicating with the Government, and immediately placed myself in correspondence with them, for the purpose of endeavouring to form a Pacific Company, in advance of the measures which were expected to be taken by the Government at the then ensuing Session of Parliament.

That, accordingly, after a certain amount of negotiation, I visited Ottawa in company with some of these gentlemen, and we had an interview with the Government, referred to by Sir John, on or about the 5th October, 1871. Sir John's account of that interview accords perfectly with my recollection of what took place. On the 23rd December, 1871, I entered into an agreement with certain American capitalists. I now produce a copy of that agreement, omitting only the names of the other signers, which I conceive I have no right unnecessarily to drag before the public.

The witness here reads the agreement, a copy of which is produced and fyled marked "P."

There was also a supplementary contract made at a future day. I had no recollection of this contract until within the last few days, and if I had been asked, would have said I had never seen it. There is no question but that the contract was entered into and that I was one of the signers.

Witness here reads supplementary contract, a copy of which is produced and fyled, marked "Q."

Neither the Government as a whole, or any member of the Government, ever saw that agreement or had any knowledge of its existence, as far as I know, until very recently.

On looking at the deed of agreement it will be seen that it was stipulated that the Road should be built by the route and on the terms prescribed in the Act to be passed respecting it, and it was further understood that in addition to the route north of Lake Superior, a branch was to be constructed from Lake Nipissing to Sault Ste. Marie, with a branch to Georgian Bay near the mouth of French River. At Sault Ste. Marie the river was to be bridged and the line carried along the south shore of Lake Superior to Duluth where it would join the North Pacific from which line another branch would lead to Fort Garry.

From Fort Garry westward to the Pacific it was intended the Road should proceed on the route afterwards determined by the surveys, and it was regarded as a possibility that the Northern Pacific, when it got as far West as the Missouri River, might be defected so as to join the Canadian Pacific, get the advantage of our easier pass through the mountains, and run on its track to some point west of the mountains, where they would again separate; the Northern Pacific passing south to New Westminster, and the Canadian Pacific seeking the shore of the Pacific Ocean at such point as determined by the surveys.

I favoured this scheme, because it not only gave us such a Pacific Railroad as we might desire, but also the advantage of a direct connection with the States of Northern Michigan, Wisconsin, Minnesota, and Dakota, the traffic and produce of which would naturally find its way to and from the seaboard through Canada, as being much the shortest, and consequently the cheapest route, even for the traffic of New York and Boston.

Thus, in place of, as has been alleged, sacrificing the interests of Canada to the United States, these plans, if carried out, would have been a greater benefit to Canada than any other scheme of communication that could be desired, and would have given a double communication with Fort Garry. And with regard to this agreement I most distinctly and explicitly declare that neither in the agreement itself, nor in any conversation or negotiation connected with it, was there any stipulation, statement, or expressed plan, which had for its object any retardation of the work, or any other purpose, than its completion throughout, at as early a day as would be consistent with reasonable economy in building it. And more particularly I declare that there was no intention expressed or implied, either in the agreement or in the negotiations which accompanied it, of placing it in the power of the Northern Pacific Railway, or any other Company, or body of men, to obstruct the enterprise in any manner or way whatever.

I am bound to say here that these New York gentlemen behaved throughout all my negotiations with them in the most honourable and consistent manner.

Although the organization at first gave them a majority of Directors, when it was thought that this might give rise to objection, they at once agreed that the majority should be British subjects, residing in Canada; and they consented to abide by all the regulations and conditions that the Parliament or Government of Canada might impose upon them. They never proposed to make the Road subservient to the Northern Pacific, nor to use it in any way otherwise than for the best interests of Canada.

It was arranged that the Americans would advance money for necessary preliminary expenses, and they paid in $40,000 American currency for this purpose.

A large portion of this was spent to their perfect satisfaction, but owing to the subsequent changes in the aspect of affairs I thought it better, without any application from them, to return to them the entire amount, and I did so. There was no other money contributed by the Americans in any form or for any purpose to which I was a party.

Soon after my return from New York I wrote to Toronto with the view of enlisting gentlemen in the scheme, and the first person I applied to was the Hon. D. L. Macpherson, to whom I explained the whole scheme, and asked him to join the organization. This he declined to do on the plea of its connection with the Americans.

I found the general feeling of the people in Toronto rather cool towards the Pacific Railroad, because their city did not lie on the direct line of the proposed Road, though they could not deny the great merits of the scheme in a public point of view.

They feared that the western traffic would, by the proposed road, be carried past them to Lower Canada.

No further steps of importance were taken by myself or associates up to the time of the opening of the Session of Parliament at Ottawa in respect of the projected Company, except that I placed myself in communication with the Government, offering to organize a Company which would undertake the construction of the Road, and discussing the question of the facilities and aid which the Government would probably recommend to be furnished by the country, and in the course of these discussions and negotiations I endeavoured, as far as possible, to secure for myself the position of President of the projected Company, which was the position my associates were willing to allow me; and to which I thought myself entitled from the active part which I took in the great national enterprise to which the agreement and negotiations in question had reference. And as to this point I had reason to believe from the first that the Government was prepared to admit my claim.

That when the time for the Session of the Canadian Parliament approached, I applied to Mr. Abbott to prepare the requisite legislation; and shortly after Parliament had opened, I proceeded to Ottawa for the purpose of ascertaining how matters were progressing, and what prospect there was of a successful prosecution of the undertaking by myself, and the persons who were then associated with me. That previous to this time, however, I had communicated with a large number of persons in Canada on the subject of the proposed Company, requesting their co-operation and assistance, and endeavouring to induce them to subscribe for stock to such an extent as I thought fair, considering their position and means.

CANADA.

And though I did not meet with any great measure of success in procuring subscriptions of stock, yet it was quite as great as I had anticipated when making my arrangements with the American capitalists. In my negotiations with them, therefore, I provided for the distribution of the stock which those gentlemen were willing to subscribe, or which I believed they would eventually be willing to subscribe upon the formation of the Company, as mentioned in my letter of the 28th February, 1872, already referred to.

When I visited Ottawa, as stated in the last paragraph, I ascertained by personal observation and communication with the members of the House that a strong prejudice had arisen against any connection with American capitalists in the formation of the proposed Company, the fear expressed with regard to that subject being that such capitalists would find it for their interest rather to obstruct the Canadian Pacific, and further the construction of the Northern Pacific, than to act in the interests of Canada, by pressing forward the Canadian Road. And though I did not share this fear, and always believed, and still believe, that the persons who proposed to be associated with me would have gone on with the enterprise in good faith, to the best of their ability, yet I found the feeling for the moment so strong that I judged it expedient and proper to yield to it, and therefore consented that the legislation to be presented to the House should exclude foreigners from the Company, and that the Directors should be exclusively Canadian.

A Bill incorporating the Canada Pacific Company was then introduced into the House by Dr. Grant, who had been a prominent advocate of the Canadian Pacific scheme, and had introduced in the last previous Session a similar measure at the instance of the late Mr. Waddington and others, who were then interesting themselves in the project.

Notwithstanding that the Bill which was so introduced, contemplated by its terms the exclusion of foreigners, I did not feel by any means convinced that the Government would insist upon any such condition, believing as I did, and do, that such a proposition was impolitic and unnecessary. I did not, therefore, feel justified in entirely breaking off my connection with my American associates, although I acquainted them with the difficulty which might arise if the Government took the same position which the majority of the people with whom I conversed at Ottawa appeared to do. I was aware that by the terms of the Bill introduced by the Government, they would have a controlling power as to the terms of the contract, and I was willing to abide by their decision as to the extent of interest, if any, which foreigners might be permitted to hold.

And until that decision was communicated to me, I felt in honour bound by the agreement I had made to leave the door open for the entrance of my American associates into the Company, unless the contingency arrived of a distinct prohibition by the Government against admitting them. And in informing them of the progress of the affair in Canada, as I did on certain occasions as an individual and without implicating the Company, of which I was a member, I consider that I was only acting fairly by them. And I did not intend thereby to bind, and, as I conceive, did not in any way bind or compromise, to my views, the other members of the Canada Pacific Railway Company, with whom I did not think it necessary to communicate at all on the subject of my occasional correspondence with my former American associates, the more especially as that correspondence was entirely private and confidential, and, moreover, was written with such inattention as to accuracy of expression as might be expected in correspondence intended only to be seen by those to whom it was addressed. During my stay at Ottawa I had some communication of an informal character with members of the Government, and I found that they were still disposed to recognize the value of my services in endeavouring to organize a Company, but in view of the rivalry which appeared to exist in respect to the Pacific scheme, and the strong array of Canadian names which had been obtained by the Inter-oceanic Company as associates in its project, nothing definite leading me to expect any preference for myself or for the Company which I was endeavouring to organize, or indeed anything definite relating to the project, was said by the members of the Government with whom I then communicated. It appeared to me that while their intentions and opinions had been freely expressed to me when no Company other than that which I was proposing to organize was likely to be formed, the presence of competition amongst Canadians for the contract had decided them to allow matters to take their own course until they should have been enabled to decide after the formation of the Canadian Companies what line of conduct would be most conducive to the interests of the country. And there was, therefore, very little said or done during the Session which gave me any clue to the views of the Government with respect to the course of action which they would probably ultimately adopt.

In order to make my narrative intelligible, it is necessary I should recall to mind the Legislation of the Session of 1872, as regards the Pacific Railroad. During that Session two Companies were incorporated with precisely similar powers. The Interoceanic Company, of which Mr. Macpherson was a leading member, and the Canada Pacific Company, in which I took a prominent part. The Acts of Incorporation of these Companies conferred on them no grant or right to the contract. A third Act was passed, a Government measure which empowered the Government to grant 50,000,000 acres of land, and $30,000,000 in aid of the construction of the Railway, and to contract for its construction and running, either first with any Company incorporated for the purpose during that Session, or second with any two or more Companies amalgamated for the purpose, or third, with any Company which the Government might create by letters patent for the purpose.

After the Session, the Canada Pacific Railway Company, of which I was a member, proceeded to organize and notified the Government that they were prepared to take the contract for building and running the Pacific Railway on the terms and conditions mentioned in the Government Act. They caused stock books to be opened in various parts of the Dominion, in conformity with the Act, and took such initiatory steps and such other proceedings as were necessary to enable them to act as an organized corporate body. That it soon after became evident to me that the Government would be best pleased to see an amalgamation of the two Companies incorporated by Parliament, in order that united action might be secured and the greatest strength obtained in the formation of a Canadian Company. I therefore opened negotiations with the Interoceanic Company, for the purpose of endeavouring to effect such an amalgamation, and at the same time the Canada Pacific Company placed itself in communication with the Government with relation to the same subject. It was thereupon intimated that the Government were also desirous that the amalgamation should take place. That thereupon, Mr. Abbott, a member of the Canada Pacific Railway Company, proceeded to Toronto to meet Senator Macpherson, and if possible to arrange terms of amalgamation that would be satisfactory to both Companies. And after a discussion of the matter during two or three days, in Toronto, between him and Mr. Macpherson, he reported to the Canada Company that there did not appear to be any material difficulty in the way of our amalgamation, except that the claim which I made to be President of the amalgamated Company, and to have the nomination of an equal number of the members in the new Board to that nominated by Mr. Macpherson, could not be acceded to. Mr. Macpherson's proposal was, that he, as representing the Interoceanic Company, should have the nomination of a larger number of members in the amalgamated Company, than I, and that the question of the Presidency should be left to the Board of Directors. With regard to the Presidency, Mr. Abbott informed the Company that Sir John Macdonald expressed himself as being favourable to my election as President, and that any influence the Government might possess among the members of the amalgamated Company, would be exercised for the purpose of aiding in my election to that office, and that probably the difficulty as to the nomination of members to the new Board between myself and Mr. Macpherson might be obviated in some way. In other respects he reported that he could find no divergence of opinion as to the amalgamation of the two Companies between myself and Mr. Macpherson.

After receiving Mr. Abbott's report of the negotiations at Toronto, I felt satisfied that no difficulty would occur in bringing them to a successful termination. And as the late Sir George Cartier happened to be in Montreal shortly afterwards, and I was taking considerable interest in his re-election, I met him and had an unofficial conversation with him on the subject of the Charter, on several occasions urging that the influence of the Government should be used to procure the amalgamation upon such terms as I considered would be just to myself and the Company over which I presided.

On the 29th July, 1872, I received a message from Sir George Cartier asking me to see him the next day. I requested Mr. Abbott to accompany me, and I discussed the whole question with Sir George, who stated his views fully.

He communicated to me a telegram he had received from Sir John A. Macdonald, of which the following is a copy:—

“SIR GEORGE CARTIER, MONTREAL.

“July 26, 1872.

“Have seen Macpherson. He has no personal ambition, but cannot in justice to Ontario concede any preference to Quebec in the matter of the Presidency, or in any other particular. He says the question about the Presidency should be left to the

CANADA.

Board. Under these circumstances I authorize you to assure Allan that the influence of the Government will be exercised to secure him the position of President. The other terms to be as agreed on between Macpherson and Abbott. The whole matter to be kept quiet until after the elections. Then the two gentlemen to meet the Privy Council at Ottawa and settle the terms of a provisional agreement. This is the only practical solution of the difficulty, and should be accepted at once by Allan. Answer.

(Signed) "JOHN A. MACDONALD."

And Sir George Cartier on that occasion gave me the assurance which he was by that telegram authorized by the Premier to convey to me.

That on further discussion with Sir George Cartier as to the course which the Government would probably take with regard to the amalgamation and the contract to be granted, I urged upon him certain modifications of the terms of the above telegram from Sir John Macdonald, and finally Sir George came to entertain the opinion that I was entitled to have certain of those modifications conceded to me, and expressed his willingness to recommend it to his colleagues. Being desirous of having as definite an expression of opinion from Sir George, as he felt himself justified in giving, I requested that he would put what he stated verbally to me in writing, and accordingly on the 30th July, 1872, he wrote me the following letter :

"DEAR SIR HUGH,

"Montreal, July 30, 1872.

"I inclose you copies of telegrams received from Sir John A. Macdonald; and with reference to their contents I would say that in my opinion the Governor in Council will approve of the amalgamation of your Company with the Interoceanic Company, under the name of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company; the Provisional Board of the amalgamated Company to be composed of seventeen members, of whom four shall be named from the Province of Quebec, by the Canada Pacific Railway Company, four from the Province of Ontario, by the Interoceanic Railway Company, and the remainder by the Government; the amalgamated Company to have the power specified in the 10th section of the Act incorporating the Canada Pacific Railway Company, and the agreement of amalgamation to be executed between the Companies within two months from this date.

"The Canada Pacific Company might take the initiative in procuring the amalgamation, and if the Interoceanic Company should not execute an agreement of amalgamation upon such terms, and within such limited time, I think the contemplated arrangement should be made with the Canada Pacific Company under its Charter.

"Upon the subscription and payment on account of stock being made, as required by the Act of last Session, respecting the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, I have no doubt but that the Governor in Council will agree with the Company for the construction and working of the Canadian Pacific Railway, with such branches as shall be agreed upon, and will grant to the Company all such subsidies and assistance as they are empowered to do by the Government Act. I believe all the advantages which the Government Act empowers the Government to confer upon any Company, will be required to enable the works contemplated to be successfully carried through, and I am convinced that they will be accorded to the Company to be formed by amalgamation, or to the Canada Pacific Company, as the case may be.

"I would add, that as I approve of the measures to which I have referred in this letter, I shall use my best endeavours to have them carried into effect.

"Very truly yours,

(Signed) "GEO. E. CARTIER."

I observe that it has been stated that there was a postscript to the foregoing letter. I declare positively that there was no such thing, and I now exhibit the original letter to the Commission, in support of what I say, but I do not dispossess myself of it. An authentic copy of which, however, is herewith produced and filed, marked "R."

I positively declared that up to the date of this letter I had not any understanding of any kind or description with the Government, either directly or through any other person, than that contained in Sir John Macdonald's telegram of the 26th of July, which is given above; and that telegram and the above letter from Sir George Cartier contained everything that was ever stated or agreed to between any member of the Government and myself, on the subject of a Pacific Railway project, up to that date.

On the same day that I received the above letter from Sir George Cartier, I informed Sir John A. Macdonald of the substance of it, and asked for his sanction to the views which it contained. But he declined to concur in the terms of Sir George's letter, telegraphing to him (Sir George Cartier) that he would not agree to them, and that he would come down to Montreal and confer with him respecting them.

Hereupon I immediately informed Sir George Cartier that I should consider the letter addressed to me as being withdrawn, and to my knowledge Sir George telegraphed to Sir John that he had seen me, and that as he (Sir John) objected to Sir George's letter, it had been withdrawn. I also telegraphed to Sir John on the same day (July 31st) to the effect that I had seen Sir George Cartier, and that he (Sir John) might return my letter or regard it as waste paper, and that I was satisfied with the telegram of the 26th, as expressive of the views of the Government.

These two telegrams are, I understand, produced by Sir John A. Macdonald with his affidavit.

I positively and explicitly declare, that excepting so far as an understanding between the Government and myself is expressed in the foregoing correspondence, I had no agreement of any kind or description either verbally or in writing, by myself or through any other person, in respect of the contract for the Pacific Railway or of any advantage to be conferred upon me in respect of it.

In one of my letters in the published correspondence dated 6th August, 1872, I appear to have said, "Yesterday we entered into an agreement." The word "yesterday" was used inadvertently for "recently," or "some days ago."

That this was merely a slip of the pen will appear from the letter following in the published correspondence, and which is dated the day after, 7th August, in which, referring to the same agreement, I again used the word "yesterday."

There never had been anything that could be called an agreement, except that arising out of Sir John Macdonald's telegram of the 26th July which remained untouched, Sir George's letter of the 26th July, which I have just exhibited, and my own to Sir John A. Macdonald being considered withdrawn.

As we were leaving Sir George said to me, in his usual abrupt manner, "Are you not going to assist in our elections?" or words to that effect.

I replied that as on former occasions I would no doubt do so to some extent, but I wanted to know how much he required. He said it was impossible to tell, but from the opposition raised to the Pacific Railroad project, it might amount to $100,000.

I thought this was a large sum, but I felt that the interests involved in the issue of the approaching general elections were most important in a national point of view. It seemed to me to be a question whether the policy of the Administration with reference to railroads, canals, harbours, light-houses, and emigration was to be approved of or not; that policy I thought then, and still think, deserving of the support of all those who would really care for the development of the resources of the country. In addition to these public reasons for giving pecuniary assistance to the Government in the late general elections, I had personal reasons, which will be readily appreciated even by those who cannot understand any higher motives. As a person largely interested in the carrying trade, I could not fail to desire the success of every scheme which would increase the communications with the interior of the continent.

In addition to this, my feelings were aroused by the attacks on myself personally, as well as on the Government, the ground of attack on the latter being mainly on its Pacific Railway policy, and as I approved of that policy, I therefore determined to give the Government all the assistance in my power, and in answer to George's request, I asked him to state to me in writing what he wanted me to do.

In the afternoon we again waited on Sir George, and he gave me a letter of which the following is a copy:—

(Private and Confidential.)

"DEAR SIR HUGH,

"Montreal, July 30, 1872.

"The friends of the Government will expect to be assisted with funds in the pending elections, and any amount which you or your Company shall advance for that purpose shall be recouped to you.

"A memorandum of immediate requirements is below.

CANADA.

Q.—Have you got that letter in your possession?

A.—I have, and I hereby produce it before the Commission, but do not wish to dispossess myself of it; an authentic copy is herewith produced and fyled, and marked “S.”

As the letter now appears, the memorandum is for $110,000, but at the time it was written the first three items amounting to $60,000 only were mentioned. Sir George said, however, that they could talk of that afterwards. Accordingly I paid over the three first sums of money to the gentlemen indicated. Afterwards Sir George requested me to send a further amount to Sir John A. Macdonald of $10,000, and $10,000 to Mr. Langevin, and $30,000 to the Central Committee of Elections; and the three sums last mentioned in the memorandum appended to the letter were then added to it by Sir George. I accordingly remitted $10,000 to Sir John Macdonald, $30,000 to the Central Committee, and left $10,000 with Mr. Abbott for Mr. Langevin, to be paid upon getting from that gentleman a receipt for it. In Sir George Cartier’s letter of the 30th July, namely, the one to which I have secondly alluded, there is an undertaking on the part of Sir George that my advances would be paid back to me. I did not see well from what source this money could be repaid, but Sir George held out some hope that his political friends would contribute to make it up. Beyond this there was nothing that I can recall as to the manner of repayment. On leaving Sir George I said to Mr. Abbott, that I saw no possibility of my ever being repaid these contributions. Neither then nor on any other occasion had I any correspondence with Sir George as to the repayment of these sums.

I left Montreal for Newfoundland I think early in August, and only returned at the end of the month, and except by infrequent telegrams I had no communication with Montreal during that time. Among these telegrams I had two from Mr. Abbott, informing me that Sir George wanted $20,000 more for the General Committee, and $10,000 for Sir John. I authorized Mr. Abbott to pay over these sums, and placed the money at his disposal.

I think I also received telegrams from Mr. Abbott telling me that Mr. Langevin would sign no receipt, and asking my authority to hand him the money without any receipt.

This last telegram did not reach me in time to be acted upon, and I have since learned from Mr. Abbott that Mr. Langevin gave no receipt.

I heard of Sir George’s defeat while in Nova Scotia on my way back. In this way on my return I found that the limits of payments which I had first agreed to had been exceeded, and with subsequent advances they finally stood as follows:

To Sir George E. Cartier’s Committee	-	-	-	-	-	$85,000
To Hon. Sir John A. Macdonald towards election expenses in Ontario	-	-	-	-	-	45,000
To Hon. H. L. Langevin towards electoral expenses in Quebec	-					32,600
						<hr/> $162,600

I also paid for the assistance of other friends of my own in connection with the elections between $16,000 and $17,000.

These sums, with the preliminary expenses on the Pacific and various railroads in which I was engaged, more or less directly connected with the Pacific enterprise, made up the amount of my advances to about $350,000.

After the elections I made another attempt to amalgamate the two Companies with the assistance of the Government, by addressing the following letter to the Hon. D. L. Macpherson:—

“DEAR SIR,

“Montreal, September 5, 1872.

“I received, some time ago, a communication from the Government, informing me that it was deemed advisable that our two Companies should unite and form one Company, for the construction of the Canadian Pacific Railroad, and expressing a hope that the suggestion would meet with the approval of the two Companies. No doubt you also received a similar communication.

“In conformity with the wish of the Government, the Canada Pacific Railroad Company, of which I am President, is prepared to amalgamate with your Interoceanic Company, and I consider it is for both our interests that the amalgamation should take place as soon as possible.

“I have therefore directed a meeting of the Provisional Board of my Company to be called for the purpose of authorizing the execution of a deed of amalgamation being agreed upon.

"I understood that the Government would approve of such an amalgamation upon the following conditions:—

"1st. That either of the Charters should be the Charter of the amalgamated Company.

"2nd. That the Provisional Directors of the amalgamated Company should be seventeen in number, of whom four should be named by you, four by me, and the remainder by the Government.

"3rd. That the Board thus constituted should elect the Provisional Chairman or President.

"As the Canada Pacific Company has opened stock books in conformity with the Act, and has retained them at the different points required by the Act since they were so opened, I would suggest that the proposed subscriptions should be inserted in those books, subject to allotment by the Provisional Board, to be constituted under the deed of amalgamation. And the books could then remain open at such points as may be ordered by the Provisional Board for further subscription, either in this country or in England. By thus availing ourselves of the proceedings of the Canada Pacific Company, the time within which the Company can be regularly organized will be greatly shortened, and the amalgamated Company will be in a position, at an early date, to proceed with the financial arrangements requisite for commencing the work next spring.

"I shall be happy to hear from you as early as possible on the subject of these suggestions, with any others which you may feel disposed to make, should you entertain the idea of an amalgamation; and in that event you might consider it desirable to call your Board together, in order to act in concert with our Board in carrying out the amalgamation as soon as possible.

"Arrangements should also be made, and powers obtained, to enable us to negotiate and execute a contract with the Government.

"For this purpose a meeting at Ottawa of an Executive from each Company may be necessary, and I will be prepared to meet you there when required.

"Your obedient servant,

(Signed) "HUGH ALLAN.

"Hon. D. L. Macpherson, Toronto, Ont."

This offer was again rejected, and on grounds similar to those formerly given, and I made no further attempt at amalgamation, but the Government continued in their endeavours to induce the Inter-oceanic Company to amalgamate, till towards the end of the month of November.

A little before this time, however, a Memorandum was communicated to me, which had been received by the Government from the Inter-oceanic Company, which appeared to destroy the prospect of amalgamation, and although the Canada Company endeavoured to remove the objections made by the Inter-oceanic Company, they failed in doing so, and the idea of amalgamation was shortly afterwards finally abandoned.

Thereupon the Government informed me that it was decided that the contract should not be given to either of the Companies alone, but that the Government would incorporate a new Company of the prominent members of the two incorporated Companies, and any leading Canadians who might be disposed to join them and able to give assistance, and could be induced to subscribe the stock in the proportions which the Government had decided upon, which proportions are those embodied in the Charter. And from that time the efforts of all parties interested in the project were directed towards procuring the association together of the most prominent men of both Companies in the new Company to be incorporated under the terms of the Government Act of the previous Session. And it was, as the result of these efforts, that the present Company was formed, composed, in a majority of instances, of gentlemen with whom I had no communication whatever, and not in any respect as the consequence of any understanding between myself and the Government. From that time also communication between myself and my former associates ceased, having finally been broken off by myself, as soon as I ascertained the desire of the Government. And I state further, positively, that no money derived from any fund, or from any of my former American associates, was expended in assisting my friends, or the friends of the Government, at the recent general elections.

That with regard to the construction which appears to be intended to be placed upon the statements in the letter referred to as to the preliminary expenses connected with the Charter, I state most positively and explicitly that I never made any agreement or came to any understanding of any kind or description with the Government, or any of its members, as to the payment of any sum of money to anyone, or in any way whatever, in consideration of receiving the contract for the Canadian Pacific. I declare, that I did expend considerable sums of money in various ways which appeared to me to be advantageous to the Company I had organized, and calculated to strengthen my hands in endeavouring to obtain the contract for that Company, but that I did not on any occasion or in any way pay or agree to pay anything whatever to any member of the Government, or to anyone on behalf, or at the instance of the Government, for any consideration whatever, in connection with the Charter or contract. As may be gathered from the letters in question, I considered it to be my policy to strengthen my position as far as I possibly could with my own friends and fellow-citizens in the Province of Quebec, and more especially in so far as related to the Montreal Northern Colonization Railway, which I conceived would at some day be the outlet from the Canadian Pacific to the Port of Montreal. And a considerable portion of the money referred to in those letters was expended by me in furtherance of that project in many ways, and it was with these views in addition to those already stated, I contributed the money already referred to, but without any understanding or condition with the person receiving it.

CANADA.

I have already said that my subscription and loans to assist in the elections could not have been a consideration for my getting the Pacific contract as it is alleged in Mr. Huntington's motion, for on the 30th July nothing was settled. The plan then contemplated, and for months afterwards, was that of an amalgamation of the Pacific and the Interoceanic Companies; the plan finally adopted was the granting of a Charter to an altogether new Company of which it is true I was a Director, but in which I had little or no choice of my co-directors and no more influence than that conferred on me by the stock which I might hold. In point of fact some of the Directors were scarcely known to me, and to the appointment of some I was opposed.

So in fact the Canada Pacific incorporated by the Act of the Session of 1872 never got the contract and never had anything approaching to a promise of it. The contract was given to a body totally different and including for the most part persons who had nothing to do with that Company.

The terms of the Charter, the composition of the Company, the privileges which were to be granted to it, the proportions in which the stock was to be distributed having been matters for negotiation and settlement up to the last moment, and were only closed and decided upon while the Charter was being prepared in the early part of the present year. And the persons who finally composed the Company were only decided upon within a few days of the issue of the Charter; I, myself, being permitted to subscribe a similar amount of stock to that subscribed by other prominent members of the Company.

With reference to certain private and confidential letters published in the Montreal Herald, and to certain statements in those letters which may appear to conflict in some degree with the foregoing, I must in justice to myself offer certain explanations. I desire to state with regard to these letters that they were written in the confidence of private intercourse in the midst of many matters engrossing my attention, and probably with less care and circumspection than might have been bestowed upon them had they been intended for publication. At the same time while in some respects those letters are not strictly accurate I conceive that the circumstances to a great extent justified or excused the language used in them. With regard to the reference repeatedly made in those letters to the American interest in the stock of the Company, as I have already stated, I had made an agreement with the parties to whom those letters were addressed, associating myself with them in a Company projected for the construction of the Pacific Railway.

It was a very delicate and unpleasant thing for me bluntly to tell them that I would not carry out the arrangement; besides, although I came gradually to know how strongly opposed the Government was to the introduction of American capital and influence, and that this feeling had taken possession, to a considerable extent, of the public mind, still I had never been formerly notified by the Government that it was their intention positively to exclude foreigners and their capital in the organization of the Pacific Company.

And in consenting to the legislation introduced into the House, I thought I was only deferring to a prejudice which I myself considered without foundation. I did not hesitate to intimate that if a suitable opportunity offered, they should be permitted to assume a position in the Company as nearly like that which they and I had agreed upon as circumstances would permit. And as I entirely disbelieved the statements that were made as to their disposition to obstruct the Canadian Pacific, and considered that they might be of great use in furthering its construction, especially in the event of a failure of the negotiations in England, I had no hesitation in placing myself individually, in the position of favouring their admission into the Company, if circumstances should permit of it. It was in that spirit that what is said in my private letters, now published, was written to the gentlemen to whom they were addressed, and if matters had taken such a turn as to permit with propriety, of those intentions being carried out, I should have felt myself bound to adhere to them. But in point of fact, when the discussions as to the mode in which the Company should be formed were entered upon with the Government late in the autumn, I came to understand decisively, that they could not be admitted, and I notified them of the fact and that the negotiations must cease between us, by a letter which has not been published in the 'Herald,' but which was in the following terms:—

"MY DEAR MR. McMULLEN,

"Montreal, October 24, 1872.

"No action has yet (as far as I know) been taken by the Government in the matter of the Pacific Railroad. The opposition of the Ontario party will, I think, have the effect of shutting out our American friends from any participation in the road, and I apprehend all that negotiation is at an end. It is still uncertain how it will be given (the contract), but in any case the Government seem inclined to exact a declaration that no foreigners will have directly or indirectly any interest in it. But everything is in a state of uncertainty, and I think it is unnecessary for you to visit New York on this business at present, or at all, till you hear what the result is likely to be.

"Public sentiment seems to be decided that the road shall be built by Canadians only.

"Yours truly,
(Signed) "HUGH ALLAN."

I desire also to state further with regard to the envelope, and the papers which it contains which were placed in the hands of the Hon. Mr. Starnes shortly before my departure for England with the delegation of the Pacific Railway, that upon being informed by me that all negotiations between my former American associates and myself on the subject of the Canadian Pacific Railway must cease, large demands were made upon me by Mr. McMullen, based partly upon alleged expenditure by him, and partly upon a claim by him for compensation for his loss of time and service in the promotion of the enterprise, so long as he and his friends remained connected with it. These demands at first were of so extensive a character I declined altogether to entertain them. I was disposed to return to my American associates any money which they might have expended in the matter, and I was ready to compensate Mr. McMullen for the loss of his time and his expenses; but it appeared to me that the sum which he demanded was much greater in amount than all such disbursements and expenses could possibly have reached. I felt naturally that by trusting to the honour of my correspondents, and writing to them in a manner somewhat inconsiderate, I had placed it in their power to annoy me by the publication of those letters, and I feared that the outcry which might follow their publication in the columns of certain papers which have manifested unceasing hostility to the Canadian Pacific Railway might injure the prospects of the delegation in England. I therefore authorized an arrangement to be made with Mr. McMullen, by which a sum very much less than his original demands should be paid to him, the greater portion at once, but the remaining, and a considerable, portion on the delivery of the letters to me, after the present Session of Parliament, should they not be published in the interval. This was accordingly done. Mr. McMullen received the greater part of the sum agreed to with him, namely, $20,000, and the remainder, namely, $17,500, was placed in one of those envelopes in the form of a cheque, the other envelope containing, to the best of my belief, the same letters which have been published in the Montreal 'Herald' together with one or two others which do not appear there, but which would have established the rupture of all negotiations between the Americans and myself. And this arrangement was made on my behalf with Mr. McMullen, without the concurrence or knowledge of any member of the Government, none of whom were aware that the papers had been deposited in the hands of Mr. Starnes.

Q.—With regard to some of these letters which are in the parcel which you have proved, I see in that of the 28th February, 1872, you name a number of gentlemen to whom the stock was to be distributed. Had you obtained the consent of these gentlemen to receive that stock?

A.—I had not. I did not say that I had in any letter I have written. The mention was that $4,500,000 of the stock that was to be given to myself, Mr. McMullen, and Mr. Smith, was to be distributed amongst such parties in Canada as we thought would be beneficial to the Company; but the intention was that they should pay for their stock the same as anyone else. It was never contemplated that it should be given without payment.

Q.—Was this letter intended to convey the idea, or did it convey the idea, that these gentlemen had accepted the stock?

A.—I had no such intention. I merely stated that these would probably be the amounts we would have to contribute from our several stocks. I did not intend to convey the idea that these gentlemen had consented to accept, or had accepted, it in any form.

Q.—Did any of those whose names appear here accept the stock?

CANADA.

A.—None of them, unless they became Directors of the Canadian Pacific Railway.

Q.—Not at that time?

A.—No, not at that time.

Q.—I see in your letter of June 12th, 1872, this expression :—"I believe I have got the whole arranged through my French friends, by means you are aware of, and we have now a pledge of Sir George that we will have a majority, and other things satisfactory. I have told you all along that this was the true basis of operations, and anything else was powder and shot thrown away, and I think so still?"

A.—These were merely matters of conversation, and never amounted to anything like a pledge of any kind. I had been communicating with a vast number of people on the subject, and they generally received what I had to say to them favourably, and I thought I had succeeded in securing the good will of all parties regarding it.

Q.—There is a letter of the 1st July, directed to Mr. Cass, in which you give a very full account of your proceedings, and a detailed history of the course which you followed for the purpose of obtaining the influence which you desired in Parliament. Will you explain the expressions which you made use of there with respect to the means of securing Sir George Cartier and the majority in Parliament?

A.—There never was any means used to obtain Sir George Cartier or anyone else, except those I have already alluded to. In conversation with all the gentlemen, and in my intercourse with them from time to time, I was constantly talking to them on this subject, urging them to use all the means in their power, and I generally got their promise to that effect; but I did not use any improper means to acquire anything of that kind at all.

Q.—The impression that would be conveyed by this would be that you used some objectionable means for the purpose of purchasing the support of these men?

A.—I did not; indeed I did not.

Q.—You state "that Sir George then proceeded to give me the contract as required, in a way that there would be seventeen provisional Directors, of which Ontario would have eight and we nine, thereby giving us the control. We at once proceeded to organize a Company, and they named me President," and so on. What Company was that to which you referred?

A.—The original Canada Pacific; but we never got any contract. It was the opposite way. In the provisional Company I was made President. It was only a provisional Company, and was entirely abandoned.

Q.—Am I to understand that there was such a projected Company which subsequently resulted in nothing?

A.—There was, undoubtedly; but it resulted in nothing. There were only two Provisional Companies.

Q.—That was the Company you announced in your letter to Mr. Cass?

A.—Yes.

Q.—In the letters of the 6th and 7th August you state that an agreement had been entered into?

A.—That referred to the letter on the 30th July, and to Sir John A. Macdonald's telegram of the 26th July.

Q.—That, you state, I think, was an inadvertent statement?

A.—Yes, it alluded to the letter of the 30th July, and to Sir John A. Macdonald's telegram of the 26th July, which was the only agreement ever made.

Q.—Sir John's telegram?

A.—Sir George's letter of the 30th July, founded on Sir John's telegram, but it was subsequently objected to by Sir John and withdrawn.

Q.—Then you state in a letter of the 16th July, that Sir George Cartier announced to you that he did not intend to give the contract to your Company, and that he never had intended to do so. Is that the first distinct announcement you had?

A.—Yes; that was the first distinct announcement.

Q.—There are several allegations made; you have no doubt seen the published letters of Mr. McMullen?

A.—Some of them; but I don't think I have seen the whole of them.

Q.—There is one published on the 16th July, in the Montreal 'Herald,' and it contains an allegation with respect to the payment of several sums of money which he states you alleged to have paid. We will go over these sums in order that you may have an opportunity of stating what you have to say with respect to them. He says that he (meaning you) at one time announced that the $8,500 of which he speaks had been lent to Sir John Macdonald and Sir Francis Hincks, in sums of $4,000 and $4,500 respectively; with a very good knowledge that they were never to be repaid?

A.—No such transactions ever took place.

Q.—Did you ever make such a statement to Mr. McMullen?

A.—Not to my remembrance.

Q.—There is a reference to another sum of $50,000 about which you said you had some conversation with Sir Francis Hincks, and he said that at his time of life he should prefer an absolute payment of $50,000 to a percentage of the ultimate profits?

A.—No such conversation took place. I never spoke to Sir Francis Hincks on the subject of money in my life, in any form, in this connection.

Q.—Are you able to state whether you made that statement to Mr. McMullen or not?

A.—I do not recollect any such conversation.

Q.—As to the conversation with Sir Francis Hincks, as to securing for his son the position of Secretary to the Company at a salary of $2,000?

A.—That is an entire mistake which Mr. McMullen has made. Sir Francis Hincks applied to me to get his son an appointment in the Warehousing Company at Montreal. I don't know how Mr. McMullen came to know anything about it, but Sir Francis Hincks never applied for his son to be employed on the Pacific Railway. He was looking for employment for his son, and I was President of the Warehousing Company, and without any reference to the railway or the contract, he happened to ask me if I knew of anything that would suit his son, and this quite casually. He asked me something about whether there was anything in the Warehousing Company likely to suit him. I said I did not know, and he never got any appointment.

Q.—As to the allegation that several sums had been paid for different newspapers and $6,000 to Attorney-General Ouimet?

A.—I never paid any sum of any kind to Attorney-General Ouimet.

Q.—What about the newspapers?

A.—As to the newspapers, I discounted a note for the proprietors of 'The Minerve,' which they agreed to pay in advertising. I think that was the only transaction I had with any newspaper.

Q.—What amount was it?

A.—I think it was $4,000.

Q.—Then there was an indefinite loan of $10,000 to Sir Francis Hincks?

A.—I never loaned any money to Sir Francis Hincks.

Q.—In addition to the payments spoken of, Mr. Abbott was authorized to promise Mr. Langevin $25,000 to aid in the elections about Quebec on condition of his friends' assistance?

A.—I never heard of that before I saw it in the newspapers. He was not authorized by me.

Q.—And Mr. Abbott reported that he had done so?

A.—He never reported so to me.

Q.—Then there is another portion of this letter to which I wish to call your attention. It is as follows:—"After having Sir George sign the agreement as stated in the letter of the 6th August, he commenced paying money, but as he told me, having Cartier's order in each case, and taking his receipt therefor. When making the agreement he had no idea that the amount of money would be excessively large; and when it had run up to between $150,000 and $200,000, he became alarmed, and told Cartier that he must stop paying the drafts which were coming in so rapidly unless the whole Government would sanction the bargain. He then stated that Sir George sent to Ottawa and received a telegram from Sir John Macdonald confirming his action. After this Allan said he proceeded paying until he had advanced $358,000 in addition to the $40,000 drawn from New York. I promised to submit his statement to my friends in New York, and leave the matter for them to decide?"

A.—I was absent from the Province during the whole of that time, therefore the whole of that is impossible.

Q.—From what date?

A.—I left on the 13th of August, and did not return till the 3rd September, and the elections were going on during that time. A large amount of money was paid during my absence and before I went, and there was no money paid that I did not know of before I left, or did not sanction when I was away, therefore I could not possibly have made such a statement.

Q.—Did you at any time tell Sir George Cartier that you must stop paying the drafts which were coming in so rapidly, unless the whole Government would sanction the bargain?

A.—No, I never had any interview or conversation with Sir George Cartier on that subject.

CANADA.

Q.—The entire conversation you had with him was that already stated?

A.—Yes.

Q.—Do you know if Sir George sent any telegram to Ottawa on this subject, or received any?

A.—I never saw or heard of any.

Q.—You stated that the first intimation you received unfavourable to the admission of your American associates in the enterprise, was that letter of Sir George Cartier's of the 16th July?

A.—Yes, of the 16th July, 1872.

Q.—Had you at any time any stock in your name as a cover for the American capitalists, either in the Canada Pacific Company or in the present chartered Company?

A.—Never. No Americans that I am aware of have the slightest interest in the Canadian Pacific, either direct or indirect. I never had any stock in my name any time that represented Americans.

Q.—Can you state particularly the conversation which passed between you and Sir Francis Hincks at the first interview, when it was suggested to you to apply to American capitalists for assistance?

A.—At this distance of time I could not give any definite statement of the conversation, but I can give the general terms. Sir Francis Hincks came to my office in Montreal, and pointed out to me the fact that owing to the union with British Columbia, a railroad of that kind would have to be built; and that the Government had begun to inquire as to the means by which it could be built, and he himself was very anxious about it. They were not prepared to do anything, and had not made up their minds respecting it; but he wished to make inquiry in order to see in what way it could be carried out when the time came. He then stated that he felt very anxious that some of our own people should take it up and not leave it entirely in the hands of the Americans. He had no objection to American connections, but he thought the principal parties in it ought to be Canadians. He told me of an interview he had had with Mr. Waddington, Mr. Smith, and Mr. McMullen. He strongly recommended me to take up the enterprise, as being one which must redound greatly to any person who carried it out. He urged that it was a great enterprise; if the promoters succeeded they would be conferring a great benefit on the country. I was very reluctant to go into it at all. I felt that it was too large a matter, and too important, for a man with so much business on his hands as myself to engage in; but he was very urgent, and finally he persuaded me to agree to enter into it. At the same time I was very reluctant to do so. He then said that the best thing to do was to put myself in communication with those parties who have applied to us; you can make your own arrangement with them. You will find those gentlemen at New York, and you will find them more likely to take it up than the people in England, because they have already constructed two railways across the Continent, and are about commencing a third. They are much more likely to undertake it than our own people, who do not know anything about it, and who would be afraid of so large a sum.

Q.—Were you induced by that conversation to enter into communication with your American associates?

A.—I was.

Q.—Then I suppose you attached yourself rather strongly to the idea of building the Railway by these means?

A.—I did. I became, I may say, passionately enamoured of it, and determined that if it could be carried through by any means, even by a large expenditure of my own money, I would carry it through.

Q.—Except from Sir Francis Hincks did you receive any encouragement from the Government to enter into communication with your American associates?

A.—No, never.

Q.—From no other members of the Government?

A.—No. They were very reticent on the subject. After two or three months had elapsed when it appeared that the West had taken up opposition to it, the Government began to indicate that they were also opposed to it.

Q.—Did you ever receive any encouragement from any member of the Government except from Sir Francis Hincks?

A.—Never.

Q.—You felt a good deal disappointed at the result?

A.—I did indeed; very much disappointed.

Q.—With whom originated the idea of a new Company or the amalgamation of the two Companies?

A.—I think it was with Sir John Macdonald the whole of these things originated.

Q.—That was against your opinion and wish?

A.—It was. I was satisfied that the first arrangement would have been most successful.

Q.—Do you know when the Government became first acquainted with the agreement between you and your American associates of December, 1871? They were not aware of it at that time?

A.—No, not for long after.

Q.—Not at the time of the legislation of 1872?

A.—They were aware that negotiations were going on and had gone on, but they had never seen the agreement.

Q.—Did you consider the telegram of Sir John A. Macdonald of the 26th July, as the basis of an agreement to be made?

A.—Undoubtedly that was the basis, and the only basis, we had to go upon.

Q.—Has that basis been adhered to or departed from?

A.—As far as it could be it has been adhered to. It suggested an amalgamation, and at the meeting at Ottawa after the elections I acquiesced in all the proposals, and wrote to Mr. Macpherson, and requested him to meet me in Ottawa, to carry out Sir John's telegram of the 26th July.

Q.—By whom was Sir John's disapproval of the letter of the 30th July communicated to you?

A.—Sir George Cartier communicated it to me on the 31st July I think; but I think it was not direct to me, but to Mr. Abbott, and through him to me.

Q.—I mean the telegrams which followed the letter from Sir George Cartier of the 30th July?

A.—I sent a telegram upon the 31st, and I think Sir John telegraphed down immediately to Sir George Cartier his objection.

Q.—You stated that you were a very large subscriber of money for the support of the elections. That money was subscribed about what period; can you state the time?

A.—On the 30th July, I agreed to that amount of $60,000 or $75,000 I think, as stated in Sir George Cartier's letter. He mentioned the amount he required on that date. I agreed to that, and subsequently within a day or two before I left for Newfoundland he stated that he wanted a further sum, and I sent him over the letter to put down what he wanted, and he did put it down. I agreed to that also. That was the last I heard of the matter until I had gone to Newfoundland, and when I was in Newfoundland, I received two telegrams, I think from Mr. Abbott, on the subject of money. These telegrams I agreed to. He telegraphed me also with regard to the receipt from Mr. Langevin, but I did not get the telegram and did not know of it at the time.

Q.—The letter of Sir George Cartier of the 24th August, of which a copy is published, is in these terms:—"In the absence of Sir Hugh Allan, I shall be obliged by your supplying the Central Committee with a further sum of $20,000 upon the same conditions as the amount written by me at the foot of my letter to Sir Hugh Allan, on the 30th ultimo."

(Signed) "GEORGE E. CARTIER.

"P.S.—Please also send Sir John Macdonald $10,000 more on the same terms."

What was meant by these expressions, "the same conditions" and "the same terms?"

A.—It is difficult to say what Sir George meant by those words. He was not a man with whom you could talk very much, because in all the interviews with him he generally did most of the talking himself, and you could with difficulty say anything. I never understood exactly what he meant on any of these points. I was quite satisfied that he probably felt that he did not like to be under such very heavy obligations, and would endeavour at some future time, to make it up by subscription or otherwise. I did not think that he had any very definite idea, and I did not think it would be done.

Q.—He says, "as written by me at the foot of my letter to Sir Hugh Allan, of the 30th ultimo"?

A.—That is the recouping, I suppose.

Q.—Did you ever receive any other letter from Sir George Cartier on the subject?

A.—Never.

Q.—"The friends of the Government will expect to be assisted with funds in the pending elections, and any amount which you or your Company shall advance for that purpose shall be recouped to you." This is the letter to which he refers in the letter of the 24th August?

A.—Yes.

Q.—This was all the communication in writing between you?

A.—That was all the communication I ever had from Sir George on the subject.

CANADA.

Q.—And you had no further conversation with him than what you have mentioned which took place on the 30th July?

A.—I think I only saw him once or twice after the 30th July, previous to my leaving for Newfoundland. I was very much occupied, and during that time we had no further conversation on the subject of the money. He did not require any more then.

Q.—Had you any understanding with Sir George or any other member of the Government, or derived from any quarter that you were to receive certain advantages for the subscriptions which you gave—certain favours from the Government for the subscription which you gave—towards the elections?

A.—Certainly not.

Q.—Had you any expectation of receiving any such favours?

A.—No, I had not the slightest.

Q.—Have you received any favours from the Government?

A.—I have not.

Q.—What is your position in the Canadian Pacific Railway Company?

A.—I am President of the Company.

Q.—Have you any other advantage than that?

A.—None whatever, except the paying out of money.

Q.—Were you elected President through the influence of the Government?

A.—Not to my knowledge. I am not aware that the Government exercised any influence over anyone. I was elected unanimously, and many of the persons I had never seen before, and did not know.

Q.—What was your motive in subscribing so largely? I will ask you a preliminary question, Had you ever subscribed so much in any previous election?

A.—Never anything like it, and on this occasion I was actuated by a variety of motives. They did not all come into operation at the same time, but from time to time. I was very desirous to support the present Government in its commercial views. The policy that it had inaugurated was entirely according to my feelings and wishes, as being right and proper for the development of the country and for the advantage of the Dominion. They had undertaken a very large emigration scheme and very large canal expenditure, so as to make our internal communications superior to any other country, and to bring down all the produce from the West in this direction, which I was very much interested in their doing. They had undertaken to enlarge the harbour of Montreal to a very great extent. They had undertaken and built a vast number of lighthouses all through the Dominion, and their commercial policy was of the most enlightened character, and such as I entirely approved of; and I thought it was my duty therefore to sustain that policy, and I was to a large extent influenced by that motive, partly of course in consequence of my own interest in it, and partly in consequence of the great development of the country which it was sure to bring about. Then again I was interested in the Northern Colonization Road. I had expended a large sum of money in bringing it to the point it had then reached. Its prospects were not so brilliant at that time as they are to-day, and there was some doubt whether it would go on or not, but I saw at once that if the Pacific Railway was built the Northern Colonization Railway would become a necessity. Montreal especially could not do without it; could not do without a direct connection with the Pacific. That road would have carried all the trade which the Pacific Road might bring across the Continent for shipping by sea. I had a further interest, inasmuch as the members of the present Government were among my own friends and acquaintances; I had known them for many years, and although I am no politician myself, and never voted at a Parliamentary election in my life except once, yet the members of the Government were persons with whom I was always in contact, and I wished to assist them in every way possible. I was also interested as being largely engaged in the carrying trade, and I saw that my interest was to support the present Government in their position.

Q.—You had a very large sum of money invested in your steamships and other enterprises in the country?

A.—A very large sum.

Q.—This sum which you gave amounted to nearly $400,000; was that not sufficient to cramp you or distress you very much in your monetary affairs?

A.—Not at all; I gave it entirely from my own funds. I never borrowed any or asked any from anyone. I never encroached on the moneys of the firm. I did not even speak to my brother on the subject, and never drew a shilling from the firm for the purpose. It was entirely out of my own pocket.

Q.—Do you know how this money was distributed; how it was spent?

A.—I know nothing about it.

Q.—Sir George Cartier's interview with you was on the 30th July. When he asked you to subscribe, was any allusion made to the contract for the Pacific Railway?

A.—No, not more than the fact that the letter was written that morning.

Q.—He did not say "You have helped us, we will help you?"

A.—No.

Q.—Did he intimate anything of that kind?

A.—He did not.

Q.—Sir George Cartier in his letter of the 30th July mentioned about your being repaid, or recouped I think is the word he used. What did you understand by that; by whom were you to be recouped?

A.—That is one of the points on which Sir George did not give any explanation. He talked in his usual abrupt manner about money, and he said he would get up a subscription among the party to pay me back, or at least a portion of it. He did not suppose that he would be able to realize the whole of it, but he talked about getting up a subscription to pay back a portion of it. I myself did not believe that anything of the kind could be done, therefore I placed no confidence in the statement.

Q.—Was there anything to justify you in supposing that it would be repaid out of moneys to be devoted to the construction of the Pacific Railway?

A.—It was impossible, and it could not have been done if he had.

Q.—Do you know the Hon. Mr. Foster, Senator?

A.—I do.

Q.—Was Mr. Foster present at any interviews you had with Mr. McMullen?

A.—I could not say in reality, I am not certain.

Q.—Have you ever had any conversation on the subject of these matters with him, which are stated in Mr. McMullen's letter?

A.—I never had any conversation with him on the subject of the Pacific Railway at all, except that he was very anxious to become a Director, and I was very anxious to have him one. That is the only point on which I had any conversation with him. He never spoke to me about any of the other matters referred to, so far as I remember.

Q.—Can you not say whether he was present or not at any interview you had with Mr. McMullen?

A.—No, I cannot say.

Q.—Did you ever speak to him on any of the subjects respecting those payments of money, or the other allegations made by Mr. McMullen?

A.—Not that I remember. I think I never did. I may have had a conversation, but in a very slight and indirect manner, with Mr. Foster on this subject; but I don't remember ever speaking to him about it.

Q.—You say that you were absent from the 13th of August to the 3rd of September?

A.—I think those were the dates.

Q.—Have you with you any memorandum from your books showing when the different payments were made, and to whom they were made?

A.—I have not.

Q.—Can Mr. Abbott state when these payments were made?

A.—I cannot say. He would be more likely to be able to state them than I would. These different payments were made, I think, as stated in the letter published. I think on the 14th of August a further payment was made in my absence.

Q.—Then all the sums except that amount paid on the 14th of August would, I understand, probably have been paid before you left?

A.—Not the whole of them; probably more than one was paid after I left. I think Mr. Abbott paid three sums after the 13th August.

Q.—Would you have the goodness to look at that letter from Sir George Cartier, of the 30th July. I observe that the body of the letter is not in his handwriting, but the signature is his. In whose handwriting is the body of the letter?

A.—I think it is Mr. Abbott's writing.

Q.—Mr. Abbott stood in confidential relations to you apparently. What were they? What was the position in which he stood towards you? Was it as a professional adviser or otherwise?

A.—Scarcely as a professional adviser, and yet, to some extent, it was so. He was deeply engaged with me in all these railway schemes, and as such we had become closely allied in all matters of this kind. He was with me at all the interviews I had with Sir George Cartier, and I did nothing on any point without consulting him.

Q.—Then he was present at the time Sir George Cartier made this appeal to you to subscribe for the assistance of the Government at the elections?

A.—He was, but his recollection of what took place differs a little from mine. While

CANADA.

I think he mentioned $100,000, Mr. Abbott thinks Sir George did not mention any sum, but only spoke of a large sum.

Q.—Was he present at the interview from the first to the last?

A.—He was.

Q.—And had the means of knowing all that passed on the occasion?

A.—He had.

Q.—Did he, or did you, or did Sir George suggest a letter of request to be put in written form?

A.—I did.

Q.—Were the terms of the letter settled at that time?

A.—They were settled by Sir George himself, I think, without consulting us. He dictated the letter, I think, to Mr. Abbott, without allowing any interference.

Q.—Then this letter was written at the time?

A.—I am not sure whether it was written at the time or during the interval between the morning and afternoon.

Q.—You saw him again in the afternoon?

A.—Yes.

Q.—Was Mr. Abbott present then?

A.—Yes.

Q.—Was it then that the letter was signed?

A.—Yes.

Q.—Had you any conference in the meantime with Mr. Abbott as to the terms of that letter?

A.—I had not. We did not know what Sir George wanted, or how he proposed to state it at all. We were not going to dictate to him what he should say.

Q.—I should like to hear again if you remember the way in which Sir George approached the subject of a money subscription?

A.—It was in a very abrupt manner. As we were going out at the door after arranging the first letter of the 30th July, he turned about and said: "Will you help us at our elections"? or "Are you going to help us"? or something to that effect.

Q.—Did you make a reply?

A.—I did.

Q.—What was it?

A.—I said that I had been always in the habit of giving something to the elections, and no doubt I would do so on this occasion.

Q.—Who spoke next—what was next said?

A.—I am not sure; but I think it is possible that I said to him, "To what extent will you require assistance?" or, "What do you want?" and I also suggested that he should put in writing what he wanted.

Q.—Your recollection is that he said $100,000 would be wanted?

A.—Yes. Mr. Abbott thinks he did not mention any definite amount.

Q.—After he named that sum, what did you ask him to do?

A.—To put the request in writing.

Q.—Why did you wish the request in writing?

A.—I wished to have some authority for payment, and to know what I was doing.

Q.—What purpose did you think that would serve?

A.—Nothing beyond being more satisfactory to myself. Men of business generally require things to be done in that way.

Q.—I understood you that, notwithstanding what Sir George Cartier had said about making a subscription among his friends, and raising some portion of the same, you yourself had little hope of being recouped?

A.—Very little hope indeed.

Q.—Why did you think it necessary to have this letter written?

A.—Simply because, as I thought, as a man of business, I should have an authority for the large sums of money I was going to pay.

Q.—This, then, is the only document that you have which relates to any agreement or arrangement in respect of that money between you and any member of the Government, or the only one that was ever executed?

A.—The only one that I know of.

Q.—And no understanding or condition was made, though not expressed in writing, as to the receipt of that money, or as to the mode in which it was to be recouped, or as to some advantage which was to be given to you?

A.—None whatever.

Q.—I observe in the letter of the 7th August you speak very definitely. Have you a copy of that letter with you?

A.—I have not.

Q.—The words used are these:—"It is unnecessary to detail the various phases through which it passed, but the result is that we yesterday signed an agreement by which, on certain monetary conditions, they agree to form a Company, of which I am to be President to suit my views, to give me and my friends a majority of the stock, and to give the Company so formed the contract for building the road on the terms of the Act of Parliament." You explain that in using the word "yesterday" in your letters of the 5th and 6th of August, written to General Cass and Mr. McMullen, you merely meant to convey the idea that it was recently, the letters having been written in a hurried manner, you never supposing they would be published, and in both you refer to this document, and this only?

A.—I referred to both letters.

Q.—And this letter goes no further than what is contained in both documents?

A.—No further.

Q.—You say "signed an agreement." You were aware that any document which Sir George Cartier signed would not bind the Cabinet?

A.—Yes, I was aware of that.

Q.—Then why did you use the expression, "signed an agreement"?

A.—It was the expression used in the hurry of the moment; undoubtedly the agreement was just so made.

Q.—Was it upon any opinion you had expressed in a letter of the 1st in which you say:—"On a calm view of the situation, I am satisfied myself that the decision of the question must ultimately be in the hands of one man, and that man is Sir George Cartier, the leader and chief of the French party, who has held the balance of power between the other factions, and has sustained and kept in office and existence the entire Government for the last five years." Did you take what Sir George Cartier did as according to your view of the situation equivalent to an agreement with the whole Government?

A.—No, I cannot say that I did. I looked upon it simply as an agreement that he would promote our views when the time came, in the Cabinet, and until the telegram was made known to me that Sir John Macdonald declined to accede to it, I looked upon it as a kind of agreement.

Q.—You are still more definite in your letter to Mr. McMullen of the 6th, wherein you say, "He yesterday signed an agreement by which on certain monetary conditions they agreed to form a Company, of which I am to be President"?

A.—These were merely expressions made use of in consequence of the communication with Sir George Cartier. I had no communication with the Government at all.

Q.—And the only documents embodying what you have called an agreement are contained in this letter of the 30th July, by Sir George Cartier, and one other letter?

A.—The only ones.

Q.—This letter of the 30th July, will you have the goodness to look at it, the longer letter of the 30th July. In whose handwriting is that letter, the body of it?

A.—There are two writings in it, and I do not know either of them.

Q.—When was that signed?

A.—It was signed, I should think, between twelve and one o'clock on the 30th July.

Q.—On the occasion of the first interview?

A.—Yes.

Q.—On the first interview you say the money was spoken of?

A.—Yes, at close of it.

It was immediately after that interview that that letter was signed, and immediately afterwards the money was spoken of.

Q.—Was anything said about money before the longer letter of the 30th of July was signed.

A.—Nothing whatever.

Q.—Was Mr. Abbott present on that occasion also?

A.—Yes.

Q.—I do not desire to press the question which I am about to put, but I should like you to answer it if you have no objection. It seems a very large sum for anyone to give towards such a purpose, and as I only know by report your means and the extent of the capital employed in the various undertakings in which you are engaged in connection with railway and other great enterprises, if you have no objection, I should like you to give a general statement of the amount of capital you have in these undertakings. Of course it is a question I do not press if you do not choose to answer?

CANADA.

A.—I have no objection to answer. I consider that my property, invested in various ways connected with the country, in business of all kinds, amounts to about $6,000,000.

Q.—Then all the interest that you speak of in connection with your investments in this way would be promoted by the policy of the Government?

A.—It was with that intention that I supported them.

Q.—Was there any discussion as to the exact terms of this longer letter before it was signed?

A.—I think there must have been.

Q.—Do you remember what it was?

A.—I am not quite certain what it was, but I think I probably wished to have a larger amount of influence in the Company than the Government were willing to give me, and I think it was probable that that was the point that we discussed together. I think it was entirely the organization of the Pacific Railway, and I think it only referred to the amount of influence I would have in it, and nothing else.

Q.—Claims made by you for more favourable terms and not conceded by Sir George?

A.—Yes.

Q.—Are you aware that Sir George at one time, according to the evidence before us, had an opinion entirely unfavourable to the introduction, not merely of American control, but of American capital in this enterprise?

A.—I am aware that he had, up to the very last moment, when the ultimate contract was signed, and on that day when I had the interview with him in regard to this matter, one of the conditions was that no American capital or control was to be introduced into it.

Q.—Did you at any time consider him hostile to the interests you were desirous of promoting?

A.—I did.

Q.—Up to what period did you consider him decidedly hostile to the interests you thought it desirable to promote?

A.—Up to the time that a Committee of his constituents came up to Ottawa and visited him, for the purpose of influencing him on the subject. There was a large meeting held of his principal supporters in Montreal, and they, entertaining the opinion generally held in Montreal, as to his hostility to the organization we had formed, appointed a Committee to come to Ottawa and assure him that if he continued that hostility, he would not be re-elected for Montreal. I understood from them afterwards, that Sir George had agreed to abate his hostility and forward the views expressed by his constituents as far as possible, but I have no doubt it was that hostility which caused the loss of his election in Montreal.

Q.—When was that deputation?

A.—I think it was during the Session of Parliament.

Q.—That is the one Mr. Leblanc speaks of?

A.—The same.

Q.—You used all the influence you possessed in endeavouring to mould public opinion in unison with your own views; were you in any way instrumental in stimulating the feeling that prevailed in favour of views which Sir George did not approve of?

A.—I was no doubt very influential in raising public opinion in Montreal in favour of the scheme, and there is no doubt that meetings were held and means were used to diffuse information, which had a great effect in causing a feeling to arise against Sir George Cartier.

Q.—Did you know anything of this deputation waiting on Sir George Cartier during the Session; did you know anything of it before it was formed, or of the intention to form it before it was formed, or when did you first become aware of the appointment of the Committee?

A.—I first heard of it in Montreal. There was an intention of sending up a Committee for the purpose. I was aware that they had held a meeting and appointed a deputation, but I did not know anything about what the instructions to that Committee were, or what the action of the Committee was.

Q.—When did you first discover that there was a change in Sir George Cartier's views, or that yielding to the pressure of opinion he was disposed to change them?

A.—Immediately after the deputation called on him. I was at Ottawa within a few days of or at the time the deputation was here. I happened to meet Sir George, and I thought I observed some change in respect to his views.

Q.—Can you fix the date of that?

A.—I cannot.

Q.—Was Parliament in Session at the time you met Sir George?

A.—I think it was. I think it was within a day or two after that deputation was up here.

Q.—You were with a deputation that waited on the Government at Ottawa?

A.—Yes.

Q.—What is your recollection of what occurred on that occasion. What gentlemen were with you representing the interests you were desirous to promote?

A.—Mr. Smith, Mr. McMullen, and myself, I think, were the only ones to represent that interest. There was, perhaps, another, but I think there were only three. I think the members of the Government numbered altogether nine or ten, and the discussion was participated in by Sir Francis Hincks and the deputation. Sir George Cartier never spoke during the whole time. Very few of the other members spoke at all. No opinion was expressed by the Government on the subject.

Q.—Do you remember what was said?

A.—I remember that I explained to them the route by which it was proposed to take the railway, the advantages it would give to the Provinces, the means by which it could be built, and the results that would probably arise from it. I don't think anything was said by any member of the Government except merely asking explanations on points which they did not quite understand.

Q.—Was that the interview at which you were asked to make some proposal?

A.—It was.

Q.—What did you say?

A.—I said "Are you prepared to accept a proposal if I make one?" Sir John replied, "We are not prepared to accept any proposition;" then I said "I am not prepared to make one."

Q.—Returning to the money question once more, I understand you to say that you had no hope or expectation of receiving that money back again?

A.—Not the slightest.

Q.—You say you got this paper as a sort of business matter. Did you make any entry in your books as to the disbursement of that large sum of money?

A.—In my own private books.

Q.—What was the form of the entry?

A.—I don't keep it in regular style and make entries in it.

Q.—Is there any entry made which would indicate any source from which you expected to have those large sums repaid to you?

A.—A considerable portion of the money was expended in the Northern Colonization Road. I do expect to get back some portion of that money because it was legitimately expended for railway purposes. There was a large amount of money expended on the Pacific Railway, I having paid all the preliminary expenses connected with it. I do not expect to get that back. In all probability I will not. There was a large sum expended on the Ottawa and Toronto Railway. I think when that comes to be organized I will get that back. I have paid for surveys, and paid the commissioners for getting bonuses from the municipalities, altogether quite a large sum of money, and I expect to get that back. The portion of money paid to assist in the elections directly I don't expect to be repaid.

Q.—That is the money you disbursed to Sir George Cartier, Mr. Langevin, and Sir John?

A.—Yes.

Q.—And the subsequent moneys, paid through Mr. Abbott?

A.—Yes, amounting in all to $162,000.

Q.—Did you make any entry in your books about those particular sums. Did you separate them?

A.—No, I don't think I did. I imagine that my books contain merely a memorandum of the payments.

Q.—And you have no claim in any way for their repayment?

A.—No, not in the slightest.

To Sir John A. Macdonald, through the Chairman:

Q.—As I understand it, then, the agreement between you and the Government, or any member of the Government, may be considered to be confined to my telegram of the 26th July?

A.—I think so.

Q.—At the time that that telegram was sent to Sir George, on the 26th July, there had been no conversation with him or anyone about helping to contribute to the elections.

A.—No, not at all; it was after that.

Q.—It was after that, so that as far as that agreement was concerned there was no connection between your subscription to the elections and that telegram?

CANADA.

A.—None at all.

Q.—When Sir George and yourself entered into this agreement of the 30th July, varying the terms of my telegram, its terms were settled before there was any discussion about money matters?

A.—Yes, immediately after those terms were settled the discussion about money matters came up.

Q.—Then his letter, my telegram to him of the 26th, and his letter of the 30th July, were all before the conversation took place about the money matter. Then on receiving my telegram, or after having ascertained that I objected to the agreement of the 30th July, you replied to me next day that I might treat your letter as waste paper?

A.—I am not sure what day it was, but it was a day or two afterwards, at all events.

Q.—You authorized Sir George, also, to telegraph me that your letter might be regarded as waste paper, and that the agreement was my telegram of the 26th July?

A.—I did.

Q.—Therefore, any sums you may have advanced to aid in the elections, must have been after you were aware that I had rejected that letter of the 30th July of Sir George?

A.—I cannot say when the actual payments were made.

Q.—The agreements were made on the afternoon of the 30th July, and on the 31st you replied that your letter was waste paper?

A.—I am not sure when the payments were made, but I regarded them, at all events, as having been paid without reference to that matter.

Q.—You say that you considered it to be to your interest to support the Government and its policy in the various subjects you have mentioned?

A.—I did.

Q.—And that there was a danger that that policy might be discontinued or reversed in case of a change of Government?

A.—I apprehended it might be so. I did not know that there would be, but I apprehended that there might be.

Q.—Now in that communication in that paper, respecting the recouping, he (Sir George) says, "You or your Company." What Company does it refer to?

A.—I am not able to explain what Company was meant. I can only judge from analogy. Sir George had said before that the Americans were to have nothing to do with it, therefore he could not have meant them. The Canadian Pacific Railway Company was not formed, except provisionally, and had no fund. The only other Company that he could have possibly meant, was my own firm, and that never paid any of the money.

Q.—Sir George did not know of the agreements between you and the Americans, and could not have any reference to them?

A.—No; he did not know anything about it.

Q.—You never showed him that agreement, or made any communication to him on that matter?

A.—I did not, nor to any member of the Government.

Q.—And you kept that away even, I take it, from the other gentlemen connected with the Canada Pacific Railway?

A.—Except talking about it in general terms to Mr. Macpherson and the other gentlemen in Toronto, there was no knowledge of it whatever.

Q.—Sir George did not know of it; you never told him?

A.—No, he did not know of it; at least, not from me.

Q.—I need not ask you about the loan to me of $4,000?

A.—I have clearly stated that.

Q.—Not a word of truth in it?

A.—None.

Q.—Not only no $4,000, but no dollars at all nor cents?

A.—None.

Q.—You have stated that you did not give authority to Mr. Abbott to make arrangements with Mr. Langevin as spoken of in Mr. McMullen's letter?

A.—I do not remember speaking to Mr. Abbott at all on the subject.

Q.—I remark that you state that you gave a discount to 'La Minerve' newspaper. Was that a business transaction?

A.—A business transaction entirely.

Q.—Had it any reference at all to the Government or to the Pacific Railway?

A.—Not the slightest.

Q.—As a matter of fact, was that arrangement between the proprietors of 'La Minerve,' or with the individuals composing the firm?

A.—It was not with the proprietors of 'La Minerve.' It was with an individual and not with the Company.

Q.—You made them a discount at your Bank?

A.—I don't remember whether it was through the Bank or through myself. It was for a small amount; a mere business transaction.

Q.—Then there was no agreement?

A.—None.

Q.—Was there any telegram from me to you approving of or confirming the proceedings of Sir George Cartier, as stated by Mr. McMullen?

A.—You did not telegraph me at all that I know of.

Q.—Your received no telegram from me approving of Sir George Cartier's arrangement, and the only acquaintance you have of any telegrams from me was one disapproving of it?

A.—Exactly.

Q.—I see that Mr. McMullen speaks in this interview about your being a large gainer, and that you would be recouped by the Government deposits, to a large extent, in the Merchants' Bank?

A.—The Merchants' Bank has the smallest amount of Government deposits of any Bank of the same class, so that was quite impossible. The Merchants' Bank collects at various points for the Government, where its other agents have no branches, so there is a very small amount there, much smaller than is usual in other Banks.

Q.—Do you happen to remember the amount?

A.—It varies every day.

Q.—Can you state the average?

A.—I think it is from $200,000 to $300,000.

Q.—Any profits that might be made on these deposits, to whom would they go?

A.—To the shareholders of the Bank, of course.

Q.—And not to Sir Hugh Allan personally?

A.—By no means.

Q.—You get your portion?

A.—Yes, my share of the dividend, that is all.

Q.—Mr. McMullen states that you prepared a memorandum, setting forth all the telegrams, correspondence, and everything connected with the Pacific Railway, and threatened the Government to publish it, and that then they came to your terms. Is there any truth in that?

A.—None whatever.

Q.—Did you ever make any communication approaching to it?

A.—None whatever.

Q.—It is altogether a falsehood?

A.—Entirely.

Question by the Commission.

Had you any communication from the Government respecting the suppression of these letters?

A.—None whatever.

Q.—Or from Sir John, Sir George, or any other member of the Government?

A.—None whatever.

Question by Sir John Macdonald.

There is a statement by Mr. McMullen that I sent you a telegram stating that you had "a big thing," and "must shell out." Did you ever get such a telegram?

A.—I never got such a telegram.

Q.—Or anything like it?

A.—No, nor anything like it.

Q.—When in one of your letters, which has been referred to, to Mr. McMullen, or Mr. Cass, I forgot which, you say "by the means you know of," did you refer to pecuniary means, or political exertions by yourself, or how?

A.—I don't know.

Q.—What did you mean when you said in your letter of the 1st July, 1872, that means must be used to influence public opinion?

A.—It meant simply by newspaper articles and means of that kind.

Q.—Working up the public excitement and so on?

A.—Yes, the usual way in which such things are done.

And further for the present deponent saith not.

And on this 25th day of September the said witness re-appeared and made the following addition to his foregoing deposition:

In answering the question "Was anything said about the money before the longer letter of the 30th July was signed?" I wish to say that nothing was said about money

CANADA. — previous to the terms of it being agreed upon, but reference was made to it in a later period of the day.

And further deponent saith not, and this his deposition having been read to him, he declares that it contains the truth, persists therein, and hath signed.

Appointing CHARLES DEWEY DAY, ANTOINE POLETTE, and JAMES ROBERT GOWAN, Commissioners to inquire into and report upon the several matters stated in a certain Resolution moved by the Hon. Mr. HUNTINGTON in the House of Commons on the second day of April, A.D. 1873, relating to the Canadian Pacific Railway.

Present: THE COMMISSIONERS.

On this nineteenth day of September, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and seventy-three, personally came and appeared before us, the above-named Commissioners,

The Honourable JOHN J. C. ABBOTT, of the City of Montreal, Advocate, who being sworn, deposeth and saith:

Q.—You reside in Montreal?

A.—Yes.

Q.—You are an advocate?

A.—Yes.

Q.—And a member of the House of Commons?

A.—Yes.

Q.—Do you know Sir Hugh Allan?

A.—I do.

Q.—Have you been connected with him of late years in railroad operations?

A.—I have been associated with him in two or three railroad enterprises during the last year or two.

Q.—Do you know Mr. G. W. McMullen?

A.—I do.

Q.—You are aware of the charges relating to the construction of the Pacific Railroad, and the furnishing of money for the elections, recited in the Commission. Will you have the kindness to state in detail what you know of these matters?

A.—My first interview with Sir Hugh Allan on the subject of the Pacific Railway was very shortly after the Session of 1871. Then I suggested to him that this enterprise would be a fit object for gentleman of his position and wealth. To that he replied, "Well, put down your ideas in writing," but this I did not do for reasons which it is unnecessary to mention now. I did not take any further steps then. The next I heard of the Pacific Railroad from Sir Hugh was when he called on me in Montreal, I think in the month of March, 1872, and asked me if I would assist him, as he was going to take up the enterprise. I agreed to do so, and shortly afterwards I met Mr. McMullen at his house in the evening, at a dinner party or something of that sort. He (Sir Hugh) then told me that he had made an arrangement with certain American capitalists to form a Company to build this road; that he had been in communication with the Government about it, and that he thought they could organize a Company that would build it, and that they would get the contract. As far as I recollect, he did not show me either the contract or the supplementary contract on that occasion. In fact I did not see either the one or the other until within the last few days, except the contract which I saw for a moment at Montreal in the early part of this year, at a meeting I had with Mr. McMullen and two of his friends, and I have not yet read them carefully. He said that the Americans had sketched a Bill for the incorporation of the Company; that they thought the best mode of getting the road built was by a corporation, and he gave me these two Bills as a sort of basis for the preparation of the legislation that was required for the incorporation of the Company. I took them, and that was about all that passed on that occasion. I was not told who the people were, and I think did not know until a very considerable time afterwards, except that one of them was Mr. J. Gregory Smith. I did not know that there had been any formal agreement executed at that time, or if I had heard that there was, I did not know its nature. It amounted to this, that Sir Hugh Allan, probably recollecting my suggestion to him of the previous year, and knowing that I was frequently engaged in my professional capacity, in the organizations of corporations, applied to me to prepare the necessary Legislation for the Company to build the road.

I undertook to do that, and shortly afterwards Parliament met.

I don't know that I had any further interview or conversation, either with Sir Hugh Allan or Mr. McMullen, until after Parliament met. I came up to Ottawa about the first week of the Session, and I found that there was a very considerable feeling in the House against the admission of American influence into the Pacific Railway. In fact I suggested to Sir Hugh Allan and Mr. McMullen that there probably would be such a feeling, and that if they attempted to give to it the character of an American Company, they might not succeed in passing their Bill. When I reached Ottawa, however, I found this feeling much stronger than I had anticipated, and I found then for the first time that a Company had been partially organized in Upper Canada. A number of names had been got which were understood to be pledged to the formation of a Company to exclude American capital and American control. I conferred with a good many of the members, and with some of the Ministers in a general way about this, and I saw plainly that no Charter to incorporate a Company to build the road with American capital, or leaving the control of it in the hands of Americans, would be sanctioned by either the House or the Government. A short time after this Sir Hugh Allan came himself to Ottawa; I think I asked him to come, and I told him what I thought was the position of affairs, and that unless he set himself to work to organize a Canadian Company, and abandon his American project, he could not succeed in what he wished to do.

Q.—About what time was this?

A.—About three weeks after the opening of the Session. It must have been about the end of April, I should suppose. I had two or three conversations with Sir Hugh Allan on this point, and Mr. McMullen himself had been here before that, and I had expressed the same opinion to him. I told Sir Hugh this in the presence of Mr. McMullen, and after some consideration Sir Hugh authorized me to proceed with the preparation of a Bill for the incorporation of a Company that would entirely exclude American influence and American capital. I should not say American capital, we could not exclude that if people chose to put it in, but entirely to exclude American influence, and I understood from that moment that any agreement that had been made with American capitalists was at an end. Subsequently I told Sir John Macdonald our conversation; and I also approached Mr. Macpherson, and suggested to him, that as Sir Hugh Allan and his friends were willing to go into a Company composed entirely of Canadians, and entirely under the influence and control of Canadians, it would be better if he and his party, which was strong, should join with Sir Hugh Allan and his party, which was also strong, in forming one Company for the purpose of taking up this enterprise—that is one Canadian Company. Mr. Macpherson was not convinced that the connection between Sir Hugh Allan and his American friends had ceased, nor that the influence of those people had ceased in the Company; and this was one of the reasons, though not the only reason for his not yielding to my suggestion to form but one strong Company—the strongest Company the Dominion could raise, to proceed with the building of the road. Consequently I then prepared a Charter for the Canada Pacific Railway Company, which was the name given to the Company of which Sir Hugh Allan was the prominent man, and the Charter of the Interoceanic Company was subsequently prepared and printed in nearly the same language.

Q.—They were incorporated by Statute?

A.—Yes, but the incorporation did not take place for a considerable time after that. I think the Canada Pacific Bill was printed first, and the Interoceanic Bill afterwards, containing the clauses of the Canada Pacific Bill, and a few more, and the matter remained in that position until about the beginning of June. The policy of the Government as I understood, during that interval, was not settled with regard to these Companies; that is to say, they seemed to be unwilling that the incorporation of private Companies should proceed until their own measure, laying down the principles upon which they were prepared to act in carrying out the enterprise, should have either passed the House, or made such progress before the House, as would enable everyone to know what the project was really to be.

After this took place, the Bills were allowed to go before the Standing Committee on Railways.

Q.—The policy of the Government then to exclude American influence was known before these Acts of Incorporation were passed?

A.—It was known in this way, that everyone knew that there was a strong feeling on the part of the Government against American influence. No one knew, as far as I am aware, that there had been any distinct decision by the Government, but yet everyone in the House distinctly understood, that either the Government, or the greater number of the gentlemen composing the Government, were opposed to American influence being introduced into the Company, and more especially was Sir George Cartier known to be opposed to it. I know myself that on several occasions he expressed himself strongly against the admission of American influence, and appeared to show rather a hostile feeling towards the Allan Company; and to have the idea that they did intend to take the Americans into their organization. For some time he appeared to have that feeling. About the first week in June, I think, the Bills were allowed to go to the Committee.

CANADA

The Government Bill having been introduced, and its terms made known, the other two Bills were allowed to go to the Committee, and they were passed in exactly the same language. I do not think that there was any difference in them from one end to the other, except in the names of the corporators. The Canada Pacific Company's Bill had been framed with a clause, excluding absolutely all foreigners from being members of its Board, but the Interoceanic Company's Bill, as prepared, provided only for the exclusion of a majority of foreigners from its Board, and permitted a minority of the Company on the Board. Before the Committee, the form of the clause adopted by the Interoceanic Company was inserted in the other Bill, and I believe that both stood, and for that matter stand to this day, allowing a minority of foreign Directors; but up to that time there was this difference, that the Canada Pacific Company had provided for the exclusion of all foreign Directors.

Q.—That is, the draft Bill that you prepared for the Canada Pacific Company expressly excluded Americans?

A.—Yes, it excluded all foreigners.

Q.—The other Bill was in the terms you state, providing for a majority of Canadians?

A.—Yes. The Bills were read a first and second time and referred to the Committee on Railways, and in that Committee their terms were assimilated to each other in the form adopted in the Interoceanic Company's Bill.

Q.—With the approbation of the promoters?

A.—Yes; at least I cannot say that the question was ever submitted to the promoters of the Canada Company's Bill. I was representing them before the Committee, and as the Government were desirous of having the Bills in the same terms, and Mr. Macpherson's Company were unwilling to put in a clause excluding foreigners, I yielded to the suggestion that it would be better not to exclude them absolutely, and to make the Canada Company's Bill the same as theirs. Immediately after the Session there was a sort of provisional organization of the Canada Company. They appointed a President and Vice-President, and caused books to be opened throughout the Dominion. The books were opened in the principal towns in every Province in the Dominion, and notices were inserted calling for subscriptions of stock. The greatest possible publicity was given to these notices, and there was no restriction as to the amount which might be subscribed. The Company were anxious, so far as I knew, to get all the subscriptions they possibly could. The matter remained in that condition.

Q.—About what time were those books open for subscription?

A.—I think early in July, but I am not quite certain as to the date. Immediately after this provisional organization took place, the Company communicated to the Government the fact that they had so provisionally organized themselves, and applied to be granted the contract. They got no immediate answer to that, but shortly afterwards were informed, I think by a letter from the Government, that the Government desired that an effort should be made for an amalgamation between the two Companies.

Q.—Did you say that they applied for the Charter?

A.—They applied for the contract, stating their readiness to construct and run the road in accordance with the Government Act. Shortly after this they received an intimation from the Government that they would like to see an amalgamation of the two Companies, and they immediately communicated with Mr. Macpherson's Company urging such an amalgamation and expressing their readiness to make it on such terms as might be agreed upon; and also communicated to the Government their readiness to do this. Nothing came of it at that time. The elections then came on, and about the commencement of them, I think, I was sent by the Canada Company to Toronto to press upon Mr. Macpherson the amalgamation. I saw him in Toronto, and I also saw Sir John Macdonald there on one or two occasions. The substance of what passed between Mr. Macpherson and myself is detailed with sufficient accuracy in his own printed and sworn statement. The result was that there were only two points upon which there was any difficulty; one was that Mr. Macpherson could not agree to Sir Hugh Allan being President of the Company; the other was that Sir Hugh Allan would not agree to Mr. Macpherson's naming a preponderance of the Directors of the proposed amalgamated Company. These were the two points. This was communicated to Sir John A. Macdonald, and he at this time endeavoured to assist me in bringing about an agreement with Mr. Macpherson. I think he had one or two interviews with him; and when I left Toronto his impression was, as stated to me, that these little difficulties could be got over, and that we would succeed in this amalgamation. That also was my opinion. About the end of July, I think it was on the 29th of July, Sir Hugh Allan called upon me at my office, and asked me to accompany him on the following day, at 11 o'clock, to Sir George Cartier's house. He said that he had an appointment with him at that hour. To the best of my recollection Sir Hugh is mistaken in saying that I had been with him at previous interviews with Sir George Cartier. I do not think that I was with him except on the occasion of which I have just spoken, namely, the appointed meeting of the 30th July. Sir Hugh called upon me, and we went to Sir George's rooms and saw him there. Sir George and Sir Hugh had quite a lengthy discussion, which appeared to me to flow to some extent from previous interviews about the position of these Companies, about their amalgamation, about the prospects of the amalgamated Company in connection with the Railway; in fact, on the whole subject; and they came to agree in certain views about the matter, which were stated by Sir George and Sir Hugh plainly enough. The basis of their conversation was the telegram which Sir John A. Macdonald had sent Sir George on the 26th July, and Sir Hugh urged certain additional conditions beyond those mentioned by Sir John A. Macdonald. In point of fact, the telegram of the 26th July appeared really to settle nothing except what had been perfectly understood from the first, so far as I know, that Sir Hugh Allan was the fittest person to be President of the Company. That the Government considered him so, and considering him so would use their influence to obtain for him that position; but everything else connected with the railway and the enterprise was to be postponed until the elections were over. This position of affairs did not exactly settle one of the objects for which I understood Sir George and Sir Hugh had met. The people of Montreal, and a very large portion of the people of Lower Canada, were extremely anxious to know something about this railway and its prospects. They thought that the preponderance of the Upper Canada Company meant that the traffic of the Pacific Railway would be brought down to Toronto, and over the Grand Trunk to Montreal and the seaboard; while the preponderance of the Lower Canada Company would ensure a direct communication to Montreal with the Pacific Railway, by means of the Montreal Northern Colonization Railway, which the people were also very much interested in. In the interests of Sir George Cartier's election, as well as for other reasons, Sir Hugh appeared desirous of having something more definite settled than was contained in Sir John's telegram. The result was that they appeared to agree upon certain points in which Sir George was disposed to favour Sir Hugh's views. Sir Hugh then said to Sir George—"Now if you can put these points in writing for me, as you state them, I think they will satisfy our friends." Sir George was extremely busy, and was not a very ready penman at any time, and he said—"Mr. Abbott has heard our conversation, let him put down what he understands has passed between us, and come back this afternoon and we will close it up." We then rose to leave, and were leaving the room when Sir George addressed Sir Hugh on the subject of money in the manner which Sir Hugh has described. He said in an off-hand kind of way, "Are you not going to help us with our elections?" Sir Hugh said he would, or words to that effect, and said, "How much do you want," or "How much do you require?" or something like that. I understood Sir George to say that there would be a considerable sum required, as there was so much opposition on various grounds. Sir Hugh said, as far as I can recollect, "Well, write down what you want." Sir George said very rapidly, "You know you won't lose it all. Our party will make up the greater part of what you give, but we want it now," or something like that. My memory is very imperfect as to the exact phrases used, as I never endeavoured to recollect them until lately, when the matter became the subject of conversation. Sir George then said, "Very well; come back this afternoon. Let Mr. Abbott write a note requesting you to advance this money, and telling you that I will see that you are repaid, and come back this afternoon at such an hour and we will close the whole matter up." We left upon that; I went to my office, sketched a letter about the railway affair, either by dictation or otherwise, I don't remember now corrected it, and had it copied.

Q.—I would call your attention to these two letters now?

A.—I sketched those two letters.

CANADA.

Q.—You saw them, I suppose?

A.—I sketched them; I drew them. I sketched those two letters roughly, knowing, I thought, what to say with regard to the first—the railway affair—but knowing very little about the other. Sir Hugh called upon me, and I took these two letters I had sketched to Sir George Cartier's office with Sir Hugh Allan. The first letter, referring to the railway, Sir George was satisfied with as to the first two pages of it, but not with the third. The letter was written upon three leaves. He was satisfied with the first two leaves, but the conclusion of the letter did not exactly please him. He said “leave that off, and I will dictate to you what conclusion to put to it.” He then dictated the four or five lines which constitute the last sentence of the letter as published, signed it, and handed it to Sir Hugh Allan. The other letter with respect to the money he did not approve of, and struck his pen through the most of it, I think, if not the whole of it; wrote a few words upon the draft, and requested me to write it over for him, which I did, either from his dictation or the draft so altered by him. These are the two letters which Sir Hugh has produced this morning. I find that my recollection differs a little, but not materially, from that of Sir Hugh. I think that the terms of the first letter referring to the railway were agreed to, but that it was not written or signed at the first interview; that is, we were leaving, and after the terms had been agreed to, Sir George spoke to him about the money in the manner in which Sir Hugh Allan has indicated, and that in the afternoon the two letters were signed. That is my recollection of the circumstances connected with that. Subsequently, in fact I think some time after this, the question of the amalgamation of the two Companies was revived. We received an informal intimation from the Government, or some member of the Government, that it would be well to have a meeting at Ottawa, I think in the latter end of the month of September, with the Interoceanic Company, or with leading men from that Company, carrying out precisely as I understood it the telegram of Sir John A. Macdonald, of the 26th July. Several members of the Canada Company came to Ottawa accordingly, and some gentlemen, I think connected with the Interoceanic Company, also came, but of this I am not quite sure. At all events, on our arrival here, or shortly after, we were informed that the Interoceanic Company had sent in a Memorandum giving reasons for declining the amalgamation.

Q.—Is that the Memorandum published in the Blue Book?

A.—Yes, the first one. We saw several members of the Government about it, and requested to have a copy of that paper, that we might have an opportunity of answering it. They urged upon us to endeavour to answer it in such a manner as to remove the objections of the Interoceanic Company if possible, rather than get into an altercation with them, and so increase the difficulties of amalgamation. The paper was not communicated to us at Ottawa, but a copy was sent to us at Montreal. The answer was drawn up as we thought in a very conciliatory spirit; urging the amalgamation strongly, and endeavouring to dispose of the grounds of objection raised by the Interoceanic Company, and doing all that we could to endeavour to bring about an amalgamation. This answer was communicated to the Interoceanic Company, and they replied to it I think.

Q.—Was that the document of the 12th of October, signed by Sir Hugh Allan, yourself, and Mr. Beaubien?

A.—Yes; but I cannot remember the date. We were the provisional Committee. An answer was sent to that, which, I think, is also printed. On seeing that answer we thought that the attempt to amalgamate would prove unsuccessful, and I do not think the Canada Company took any further steps to bring about an amalgamation; but we were informed that the Government had taken up the matter and were making an effort, and of Sir John A. Macdonald's visit to Toronto to see Mr. Macpherson; and the probability at first of his succeeding and afterwards of his failure. These efforts were commenced before the elections, suspended to some extent during the elections, and recommenced towards the end of September and carried on until the end of November, with every desire, I think, on the part of the Canada Company to have been successful. After this, I think either at the end of November or the beginning of December, late in the autumn, at all events, Sir Hugh Allan was informed, and I myself I think verbally, also, that the Government intended to form a Company under the power given them by their Act; that they did not think that it would be proper to give the contract to either Company incorporated; that these Companies were to a very considerable extent sectional, and that the Company which should get the contract must be one that would fairly represent the whole Dominion. The Government then stated that they were endeavouring to get together a Company composed of such men as would fairly represent the whole Dominion, and would command confidence here and in England, where it was supposed the funds were to be obtained for building the road. Shortly after this a few of the gentlemen whom the Government had been consulting about the Company, met in Ottawa, and perhaps every week or so they met again, their numbers being increased each time by persons who were thought fit to come, and who were encouraged to come in. I think that in January the number had been pretty nearly filled up, and the framing of the Charter was proceeded with. At the meetings here I had always taken an active part, and given a good deal of attention to the whole subject, and I came gradually to be put forward without any formal appointment to represent those gentlemen in settling the details of the Charter; and the Government corresponded with me on several occasions in that sense, and caused me to visit Ottawa to meet members of the Government for the purpose of working up the Charter. And in that way during the month of January, and I think up to the 5th of February, the clauses of the Charter were discussed and the Charter framed, after a very great deal of discussion and attention on both sides. It was framed as it now is, and was issued about the 5th of February, of this year, in the form which it now assumes.

Q.—What number of interviews had you with the Government?

A.—We had several interviews with the whole Cabinet, but the details of the Charter were settled chiefly with Sir John A. Macdonald and the Hon. Mr. Campbell.

I don't know whether any narrative I could give you could proceed further than that I have given; but any further questions which the Commission may choose to put me I will be happy to answer.

Q.—Did you know of the correspondence between Sir Hugh Allan and Mr. McMullen and Mr. Smith, while it was going on?

A.—Nothing whatever. I had no idea of it at all.

Q.—Have you any personal knowledge about these telegrams of the 30th and 31st of July, to Sir George Cartier, respecting that letter of the 30th of July, embodying the new terms of agreement?

A.—No. I had no knowledge of them until very recently. I was under the impression until some time ago, that Sir John A. Macdonald concurred in Sir George Cartier's letter, but I cannot at this moment remember what caused that impression. It was without any foundation whatever, I am satisfied now.

Q.—Were you present at any of the meetings between Sir Hugh Allan and Mr. McMullen, except the one you have mentioned?

A.—I had an informal meeting on one occasion early in the Session, when I informed them—Sir Hugh Allan and Mr. McMullen—that unless the American project was laid aside, it would be useless to attempt to carry out their enterprise. I met them both frequently afterwards.

Q.—You have seen Mr. McMullen's published letter of July?

A.—Yes.

Q.—Do you remember the statements made with respect to the payments of, or promises of, sums of money?

A.—I don't remember sufficiently well what promise you refer to.

Q.—The first is, that Sir Hugh Allan announced to Mr. Smith and Mr. McMullen that $8,500 had been lent to Sir John A. Macdonald and Sir Francis Hincks?

A.—I know nothing whatever of that.

Q.—It also speaks of $50,000 which Sir Hugh Allan said it was necessary to pay to Sir Francis Hincks?

A.—I never heard of that except in the newspapers.

Q.—Did you ever hear Sir Hugh Allan mention either of these sums, or that they were expected by the parties to whom they were given?

A.—No, never.

Q.—Then the letter says: "In addition to the payments spoken of, Mr. Abbott was authorized to promise Mr. Langevin $25,000 to aid in the elections about Quebec, on condition of his friendly assistance, and Mr. Abbott reported that he had done so?"

A.—As regards that I think it is necessary to make a statement. In the first place, the statement in that form is entirely untrue, but it is quite true that I had a conversation early in the Session with Mr. Langevin about the expenses incurred in the elections at Quebec. Mr. Langevin mentioned to me that at the previous general elections he had been obliged to expend a very considerable sum of money, not very large in itself, but large comparatively, and he said he did not think it fair that the burden of those elections should rest entirely on him. He said he thought he ought to have a share of any funds subscribed in Montreal for election purposes to assist in Quebec, which he had not had in previous elections, and that they could not expect much of a subscription from Quebec to help the Government. I agreed with him in thinking that it was unfair that he should bear the burden of the Quebec elections, and I told him that in so far as I could have any influence in the matter I would try that he should have a portion of any fund which might be got up in Montreal for general election purposes. Talking over matters—and I think it is this that Mr. McMullen speaks of—it came out in conversation that probably the elections would cost in the district of Quebec, irrespective of his own, a sum of $25,000 or $30,000. I told him that as far as I could influence the matter I would endeavour to get something like that amount allotted to the district of Quebec. That is what took place between Mr. Langevin and myself. I did not at that time make any allusion to the position of the Canada Pacific and its Charter. I knew Mr. Langevin was a strong Lower Canadian, and I thought that his friends were all in favour of arranging the Pacific matter in such a way that there should be direct communication with the seaboard at Quebec and Montreal, and I assumed that in any matter in which he could support the views of the Lower Canadians he would do so, and we did not wish anything more. I never said anything more; I never reported that I had made any arrangement with Mr. Langevin, though, no doubt, I did mention it to Sir Hugh Allan, that if we got up a fund Mr. Langevin should have a part of it to the extent of $25,000.

CANADA.

Q.—Did you communicate this to Mr. McMullen?

A.—It is not likely that I would do so; though Mr. McMullen appears to have become aware of it. But there has been so much spying and betrayal of private documents and abstraction of private letters in the course of this affair, that it is impossible to say how Mr. McMullen became possessed of it.

Q.—I do not understand you?

A.—I mean that nearly if not all the papers published in the press relating to this Pacific affair have been obtained by illegal if not criminal means. For instance, the four papers which were published at the end of Mr. McMullen's second letter, must have been obtained by means which I think I may call criminal.

Q.—What papers do you refer to?

A.—I refer to the two telegrams and the receipts, the one from Sir John Macdonald to me, the one from me to Sir John Macdonald, the letter of Sir George Cartier to me, and the receipt of the Montreal Committee to me.

Q.—In whose possession were they?

A.—These papers were in my possession during the absence of Sir Hugh Allan in Newfoundland.

Q.—Have you them yet?

A.—No, I gave them to Sir Hugh Allan when he returned from Newfoundland, and it is quite obvious, at all events I am convinced of the fact, that those papers were either stolen from the private drawer in which they were kept while in my possession, or from the place in which Sir Hugh Allan put them.

Q.—You say Sir Hugh Allan has them now?

A.—I don't say he has them; I say I gave them to him on his return in September, 1872. I don't suppose these gentlemen had the originals in their possession, but they must have obtained them by bribing a confidential clerk or secretary who had access to them to copy them. For these reasons I say I don't know how Mr. McMullen got his information. It is barely possible that he could have heard it from Sir Hugh Allan or myself.

Q.—You were acting as confidential agent to Sir Hugh Allan with respect to the money?

A.—No, I don't think I was. Sir Hugh Allan asked me to assist him in this affair. I think the preponderance of his motive was that my professional practice had led me in the direction of this kind of business—the organization of Companies. I also took an interest as a public man in this particular railway, but I considered I was acting more as the solicitor of Sir Hugh than in any other capacity I can describe. I never was in any sense his agent.

Q.—I think you were made the medium through which the moneys were paid for election purposes?

A.—Only while Sir Hugh was in Newfoundland. I never had anything further to do with the moneys than this. I was present when those letters which I have described were talked about and signed, and when Sir Hugh Allan left for Newfoundland I was made the medium of communication with him with respect to three or four transactions.

Q.—Did any other sums come into your possession other than those subscribed by Sir Hugh?

A.—None whatever. I had nothing whatever to do with the distribution of the money subscribed for the elections.

Q.—What was the amount paid through you by Sir Hugh Allan for the elections?

A.—The first amount was $10,000.

Q.—At what date?

A.—I think it must have been about the 8th or 10th of August. It was $10,000 which he left in my hands to be given to Mr. Langevin. He wrote to Mr. Langevin, I think, informing him that the money was in my possession, and that on his giving me a receipt for it I would pay it. The first I heard of Mr. Langevin's action was his telegraphing me to meet him on the Quebec boat, which I did, on his way down to Quebec. He said he had received a letter from Sir Hugh Allan saying that on giving a receipt I would give him the money. He said he could not understand why such a receipt was asked from him. I told him I did not see that there was any reason for it either, and I did not think that there was any particular reason. He then said that he would have nothing to do with it; that he could not give me any receipt. He did not know what Sir Hugh Allan's reason was for asking it, and at all events he would not give any receipt whatever. It looked to him as if it might be said that it was not a free subscription to the elections at Quebec which Sir George Cartier had promised him, and unless it was, he would not take it at all; and moreover, he would on his arrival at Quebec return the $15,000 which Sir George Cartier had previously caused to be sent him. He appeared to me to be a little excited about the matter. I left him upon his expressing his determination not only to refuse that money but to send back the $15,000 which was the sum first paid. I telegraphed Sir Hugh Allan saying that Mr. Langevin did not feel disposed to give any receipt, and asking his authority to give Mr. Langevin the money without a receipt. I did not get an answer within two or three days, and knowing that the elections were going on, and that the money would probably be wanted, I took the responsibility of sending the money to Mr. Langevin by express, and wrote him at the same time telling him that I had done so.

The second sum, namely, $20,000, was paid to the Montreal Central Committee, I getting Sir Hugh Allan's authority to pay it, by telegraph. The third sum was $10,000, respecting which Sir John Macdonald telegraphed me. That I also informed Sir Hugh of, and obtained by telegraph his authority to pay it. I think these were all the sums of money I had anything to do with. I kept these vouchers, these letters and telegrams, in my private drawer in my office until Sir Hugh Allan returned from Newfoundland, and then I gave them to him.

Q.—Were they out of your possession at all?

A.—Not that I know of.

Q.—The $20,000 was given upon this letter of Sir George Cartier's to you of August 24th?

A.—Yes.

Q.—You are familiar, of course, with the terms of it, namely:—"On the same conditions as the amount written by me at the foot of the letter to Sir Hugh Allan of the 30th ultimo. Please send Sir John Macdonald $10,000 more on the same terms." What did you understand by those expressions in Sir George's letter to you?

A.—I understood him to refer to the letter of the 30th July, in which he informed Sir Hugh Allan that any advances he made would be recouped.

Q.—There were two letters of that date, both drafted by you in the first instance, then portions of them rejected, and the whole modified by Sir George. Do you remember the terms of your draft of your letter?

A.—No; I do not. My impression is that the third sheet of the longer letter was rejected because the conclusion did not please him, and my idea was that the objection was hypercritical, as it only referred to the phraseology.

Q.—Not to the matter, but only to the form of expression?

A.—Yes; you will perceive that the conclusion of the letter is a sort of statement that these being his views he would urge them upon his colleagues. The form in which the draft concluded was a little different from that, but not materially. He preferred his form, and he dictated it to me, and I wrote it as you see it.

Q.—What was your draft relating to the money?

A.—I think it was about the same length as the one produced, but I cannot say positively. I had a great difficulty, I remember, in saying anything about the details, because I did not understand how it could be recouped, and did not believe that Sir George could raise such a sum of money as he described from his party.

Q.—Were there in the draft any special terms or conditions upon which the money was to be advanced?

A.—I think not.

Q.—Do you think it corresponded in general meaning with the letter that is produced?

A.—I think so. I think it made some mention of the money being repaid out of such money or fund as could properly be appropriated to the purpose. It was a perfectly harmless letter, and one perhaps less open to misconstruction than the one which has been produced.

Q.—There was no difference as to the substance?

CANADA.

A.—Not that I recollect. Sir Hugh Allan informed me that he did not attach the slightest importance to the promise of repayment.

I think, if the Commission will allow me to refer to it, I remember a statement which appears in a Chicago paper, said to have been made by Mr. McMullen to some newspaper editor there, respecting an agreement which he says was executed subsequently to the 30th July, and he mentions a circumstance which he appears to think confirms his position in connection with the agreement. He says it was written by three clerks in my office, so that none of them might know its contents. No such agreement was ever prepared or written, but as a matter of fact the first letter which has appeared before your Honours was written by three clerks in my office. The first two pages were written by two different clerks, and the third leaf was written by a third clerk, and that is the paper of which some person, I have not the slightest doubt, who has been willing to betray confidence, has given him an inaccurate description, and caused Mr. McMullen to suppose that it was a different paper from that produced.

Q.—Why was it written by three clerks?

A.—Simply because the space of time between the interviews was so short, I had to write it out or dictate it, get it extended, corrected and recopied, and so I placed one sheet in the hands of each clerk to save time. If I had supposed it possible that any one of those clerks could have been bribed to disclose the contents of the paper I might have been more anxious to prevent their knowing what it contained, but I had no such idea and no such motive.

Q.—Were you present at any other interview, or do you know of any communication between Sir Hugh Allan and any members of the Government in relation to the subscription of money for the elections?

A.—No, I never heard of any other.

Q.—Do you know how these moneys were spent at all?

A.—I cannot say that I do. I have a general knowledge that they were expended in furthering the elections in different parts of the Province.

Q.—Sir George Cartier's election?

A.—Yes, and other elections. I do not know many of the details; I have personal knowledge of scarcely any of them. I was not a member of his Committee, and did not take part in his election, as I had enough to do in attending to my own.

Q.—Did you ever hear from Sir Hugh Allan an expression of expectation of receiving any advantage from the Government?

A.—He certainly had the expectation of receiving advantage. He expected to retain in power the Government whose policy he approved of, but as to the Pacific Charter, beyond sustaining in power the Government which was disposed to carry out the building of the Pacific Railway, I most unhesitatingly say that I never heard a word from him.

Q.—You were in very intimate relations with him on this subject?

A.—Yes. I did not see him very often, but he seemed to speak to me without any reserve.

Q.—Do you know Mr. Foster?

A.—Yes.

Q.—Was he present at any of your interviews with Mr. McMullen?

A.—I think he was present at interviews with Mr. McMullen during the Session. He was one of the Directors of the Canada Pacific Railway Company, and we desired to get him on the Board of the Canadian Pacific. He is a man of considerable railway experience, and I believe of capital. He was entirely in the confidence of the Company, and during the Session of 1872 assisted, to some extent, in getting the Bill through. And I have no doubt that Mr. Foster, Mr. McMullen, and myself frequently met during that Session.

Q.—Did you ever have any conversation in Mr. Foster's presence in relation to any sums of money to be paid to the Government or any member of it?

A.—To the best of my recollection, no. Nothing of that sort was ever contemplated at all to my knowledge, either during the Session or afterwards. The election fund, to which Sir Hugh Allan afterwards contributed, was not, I think, spoken of at all during the Session, except as I had previously stated. After the Session I saw very little of Mr. Foster, and nothing at all of Mr. McMullen for a considerable time.

Q.—Sir Hugh Allan mentioned that he had never given anything so large at any previous elections. Did it occur to you that this was a very large sum for him to give on this occasion?

A.—I know nothing of what he had given on previous occasions, but I certainly thought that this was a very large sum for him to give. At the same time it must be observed that he did not agree deliberately to subscribe the whole of this sum at once.

He contributed from time to time as the elections went on and as the money was needed. Probably he might have hesitated at subscribing so large a sum at once, but the feelings and interests which he himself has described probably led him, as the money was needed, to continue his contributions to a larger sum than he originally intended.

Q.—Do you know of any other facts which will throw light on his motives in giving this large sum?

A.—No, most certainly not. To my own mind Sir Hugh Allan's motives as described by him are perfectly clear. He is interested in the carrying trade to an enormous extent. About $3,000,000 of his fortune is invested in the carrying trade alone. I mean in sea-going steamers alone. He has also a large amount of money invested in the Inland carrying trade. He was forced, as he imagined, and not unwillingly, perhaps, to enter into an organization for an extensive series of railways providing for a second communication between the seaboard and the interior of the country. He had taken up with a vast deal of energy and enthusiasm this Pacific Railway scheme. He had been himself a member of the Canal Commission, if not the Chairman of it, and had taken great interest in that. On every one of these subjects the Government had a policy which was favourable to his views, and in my opinion three times the sum would have been well spent if it had been necessary to keep a Government in power, which had, according to his views, and my own too, the improvement of the country so deeply at heart as this Government appeared to have.

Q.—Did he think so at that time?

A.—Yes, certainly.

Q.—Did it not strike you as strange that he should contribute so largely?

A.—Not at all strange considering his position and his objects.

Q.—You say that you had several interviews with the Government, and more particularly with Sir John Macdonald and Hon. Mr. Campbell, discussing the terms of the Charter before it was finally settled. Did you propose any modifications in the original draft?

A.—Yes. The work which was done during, I think, about a fortnight of very close application to the Charter was of two kinds. One was a very critical examination of the phrases and language of the Charter, and that took up a good deal of time. The other did not take up so much time, namely, the discussions of certain modifications which were suggested on both sides to the original draft. I made several suggestions, some of which were approved, and some of which were rejected.

Q.—What was the general nature of the modifications you suggested?

A.—I suggested, I remember as one thing of importance, that there should be power granted to the Company to issue a further amount of stock, and Sir Hugh Allan had that very deeply at heart indeed, because he feared that an application to English capitalists to obtain money might be unsuccessful if these capitalists were not to have any share in the prospective advantages of the Road. That was discussed at considerable length with the Government, and finally the matter was submitted to the Government itself, and Sir Hugh Allan's views in this subject, and my own were overruled. There were several other points on which I desired to have modifications, for instance, the amount of bonds per mile. I thought that it was too small.

Q.—Did your views prevail?

A.—They did not prevail in that respect. I remember another subject which was considerably discussed, namely, as to the mode and in what proportions the money and lands were to be paid to the Company for the construction of the Road. The original design was that they should be paid on the certificate of the Government engineer. My idea was that there might be a difference of opinion between the Government Engineer and the Company, and I was anxious that there might be some independent tribunal to which the question should be referred, and finally a very guarded clause was introduced which provided a referee or referees for that purpose.

Q.—Did you propose any modification in the original draft having reference to the admission of American capital or American control?

A.—No; quite the contrary. From the moment I prepared the Bill for the House of Commons, I considered that the design of introducing American influence and control into the Road was abandoned. I did not regard it as impossible that it might be revived; that might depend upon the policy of the Government; but as far as I know the idea of carrying out the Road by American influence and capital was abandoned. My impression was that Sir Hugh Allan, while he authorized the organization being proceeded with on that ground, still appeared to entertain in his own mind the idea that some time or other we might be obliged to have recourse to American capital. That is the way in which I account for his having continued in private correspondence with the Americans.

CANADA.

So far as I and the Company were concerned, there was not the slightest idea of the introduction of American influence and capital. My efforts were directed to framing the Charter, or assisting the Government to frame the Charter, so as to exclude the possibility of it.

Q.—Were you present in Ottawa at the time the names of the gentlemen who appear in the Charter were settled on?

A.—They were not all settled on at once. It was a work of some time to collect together the Directors of the Company. I am aware that several gentlemen were spoken to, others were corresponded with, several came to Ottawa and saw the Government; and one by one fit people were selected from one part of the Dominion or another, until the full complement of thirteen was decided upon. I think the last one was not entirely settled upon until within two or three days of the signing of the Charter. I refer to Mr. Hall. He was not finally selected until two or three days before the Charter was signed, partly because Sir Hugh Allan and myself had urged the appointment of some one suggested by Mr. Foster, and partly because Mr. Foster himself was desirous of being represented on the Board, and partly, I believe, because Sir George Cartier had expressed a wish that Mr. Foster should be on the Board or represented on it.

Q.—Did you come to Ottawa instructed by the Company, or prepared to submit any names as Directors to the Government?

A.—No.

Q.—Did you submit any names?

A.—No, I never did. The only name on the Board that was submitted by any member of the Company?

Q.—Do you mean the Canada Company?

A.—No. The Canada Company ceased to have any existence, I may say, for the purpose of this Railway, when the design of amalgamating it with the Inter-oceanic Company was abandoned.

Q.—Still to some extent the interests of the Canada Company were represented?

A.—No, not in the slightest degree. When the project of amalgamation was abandoned, several gentlemen independent of any Company were asked to come to Ottawa to meet, with the view of discussing the details connected with a Company. I have not a very precise idea of the way they were got together at first, but I know that five or six gentlemen who desired to be interested in the formation of a new Company, met at Ottawa, and the Canada Company had no more to do with it than any imaginable company out of the realm.

Q.—Do you know if Sir Hugh Allan suggested any names to the Government?

A.—Yes, I know he suggested the name of Mr. Beaudry.

Q.—Any others?

A.—No others that were accepted. The only one I believe that Sir Hugh Allan was the means of introducing into the Company was Mr. Beaudry.

To Sir John A. Macdonald through the Chairman:

Q.—Speaking of the terms which were granted to the Canadian Pacific Railway Company by the Charter; and supposing that Sir Hugh Allan had had no connection in any way with the Company, from what you know of the policy of the Government, and from the communications between members of the Government and yourself and the Board, would not the same terms have been granted?

A.—I have not the least doubt they would. I think the terms of the contract and Charter were settled without the remotest reference to Sir Hugh Allan any more than to any other member of the Board. I never knew a suggestion of his, however much it might be pressed, if it appeared unreasonable that was not rejected without ceremony. I don't know of any favour or concession ever having been made to him.

Q.—Then you are satisfied that if the construction of the Road had been confided to the Inter-oceanic Company, they would have got the same terms?

A.—I am quite satisfied of it.

Q.—Then these subscriptions for election purposes had no effect on the Charter?

A.—No; so far as I knew, and I believe I was in a position to know as much as any one, the subscriptions for the elections had no influence whatever upon the negotiations. I never heard them referred to.

Q.—Was it not the case that every effort made by Sir Hugh Allan to get any preponderance to his sectional influence was overruled?

A.—I don't know that he made any special effort to give a preponderance to his sectional interests in the Canadian Pacific Company, but in the Canadian Pacific Company, the efforts that he made were overruled; for instance, I know that he made some suggestions in respect to the amalgamation, and that they were overruled.

Q.—There is a quotation made in one of Mr. McMullen's letters. A series of paragraphs from the paper, communicated by the Canada Pacific Company to the Government, stating distinctly that so far as that Company was concerned, they had no connection with American capitalists?

A.—Yes.

Q.—That truly expressed the action of the Canada Pacific Company?

A.—Most decidedly.

Q.—Of which you were a member?

A.—Yes.

Q.—You were not aware of this correspondence with Sir Hugh Allan?

A.—I was not aware of it.

Q.—So that these communications between Sir Hugh Allan, Mr. McMullen and others, were matters personal to Sir Hugh Allan himself, for which the Canada Company were in no way responsible, and which they repudiated when they were known?

A.—Entirely so. Except as to the repudiation they did not become known until after the Canada Company had ceased to take any action in the Pacific matter?

Q.—Mr. McMullen in the discussion of the particular question refers to a trifling matter to which I might as well refer. Mr. McMullen said in effect, that at an interview which he had with Sir John A. Macdonald he gave him copies of documents, Sir Hugh Allan's drafts for the $40,000, and the receipts of Mr. Todd for the Private Bills expenses of the Canada Improvement and Canada Pacific Railway Companies paid by him?

A.—In that communication of Mr. McMullen he professes to slight or disparage the statement of the Canada Pacific Company, that they had nothing to do with the Americans, and he quotes in support of his pretension that they had, the fact that he had paid the House fees on the Bills which were introduced in the first instance in the House for the Canada Company. In point of fact, that fact is true, though the inference is not correct. I believe he did pay the House for the two Bills and some other trifling expenses.

Q.—What would they amount to?

A.—The House fees were $245.00 for which I got receipts. There were some other trifling expenses, probably amounting to $100 or $150 more.

The receipts for the House fees are herewith produced and filed marked "S." and "T." In fact Mr. McMullen did keep up a certain amount of connection with the promotion of the Pacific Bill, after he was perfectly aware that all connection with the Americans must cease. He was a Canadian himself, and was very anxious to keep himself connected with the scheme so far as he could, in hopes of something turning up in the end. He met Sir Hugh Allan occasionally. The Bills were called up in the Committee hurriedly, and it was necessary to have the fees paid on them before they could be passed through the Committee, and to the best of my recollection I said "I wish Sir Hugh would send the money," or "I wish I had the money to pay the fees," or something of that kind. He said he had money for such purposes, and he paid the fees. The matter had entirely slipped from my memory, as I supposed he had settled it with Sir Hugh Allan. However, when negotiating for giving up Sir Hugh Allan's correspondence last January, he told me that he had these receipts for the House fees, and the other small expenses I have mentioned. I told him to bring them to my office and I would give him a cheque for the amount unless Sir Hugh Allan settled with him. Sir Hugh Allan did settle with him, and Mr. McMullen gave up those receipts to me.

Q.—Are you aware what sum Sir Hugh paid him in relation to giving up the correspondence?

A.—The sum of $20,000.

Q.—Are you aware of what money he refunded of what he received from the United States capitalists?

A.—He told me that he had refunded it all.

Q.—Do you know anything about the sealed packet of letters left with Mr. Starnes?

A.—Yes. It was I who arranged for their deposit with Mr. Starnes. About the latter end of the year Mr. McMullen himself, I think, told me that he had a number of letters.

Q.—Letters of what year?

A.—Of 1871 and 1872, I think. He (Mr. McMullen) made an application to Sir Hugh Allan, claiming that his people had the right to command the services of Sir Hugh Allan in connection with the Pacific contract, and stated that Sir Hugh had not used them well, and that he ought to pay whatever advances they had made, and also for their loss of time and other claims. The demand made by Mr. McMullen amounted to a considerable sum. I think over $200,000, if not $250,000, in the first place, but this included the $40,000 Sir Hugh had received. Afterwards there was some little negotiation about it, and he reduced his claim somewhat, and finally he came to Montreal with Mr. Smith and Mr. Hurlburt. He read me passages from the correspondence, and showed it to me; stated to me his position, and added that he had been ill used, and spoke of his claim for a considerable sum of money. He also showed me the contract with his friends, which I glanced over to verify a statement he made as to its contents. I wrote him, with Sir Hugh Allan's authority, that so far as the disbursements went, Sir Hugh Allan was ready to pay them, and with regard to their services, he was ready to pay them a reasonable sum, but that the demand he was making was one which did not appear to me to be based on either of those principles, but was in fact such a demand as that Sir Hugh could not listen to at all. He came to Montreal, as I have stated, with Mr. Smith and Mr. Hurlburt, of Chicago. I had an interview with those gentlemen, and I then, for the first time, saw those letters. I think this was in January. I did not read them all, but I read, or heard read, extracts from some of them, which showed me their character. I saw at once that the publication of these letters which Mr. McMullen had threatened to publish, would produce a deal of outcry, and would probably interfere with the prospects of the deputation going to England to raise money for the Road. I thought it was best for Sir Hugh Allan to make any arrangement in reason, or out of reason, in order to get through with his mission to England before there was any row made about them. I therefore arranged with Mr. McMullen to accept $40,000 in American currency. He assured me that he had spent above $20,000, and the remainder he claimed as remuneration for loss of time of himself and his friends. But this arrangement did not include the $40,000 received by Sir Hugh Allan.

I thought it would be a prudent precaution to prevent the publication of these letters, and therefore to make the payment of part of the money dependent upon their not being published for a reasonable length of time. The paper read by Sir Hugh Allan, which was afterwards given to Mr. Starnes along with the sealed packet, was prepared by myself. It was submitted to Sir Hugh Allan and signed by him, and afterwards also signed by Mr. McMullen. The package was made up on the spot, and Mr. McMullen and I gave it into the hands of Mr. Starnes.

I also paid Mr. McMullen $20,000. The cheque for the remainder was to be delivered to him some time after the rising of the Session in the event of these papers not being published. He declared to me that there were no copies of them in existence, except the one which he had given to Sir John A. Macdonald, which is the copy referred to in the paper. He undertook also to procure the sanction of Messrs. Smith and Hurlburt to this arrangement, and he wrote a letter to Sir Hugh Allan, discharging him from all claims of every kind and description. I think Sir Hugh Allan has this letter which Mr. McMullen wrote to him. I also produce and fyle the letter which Mr. McMullen wrote to me marked "U."

Q.—Do you know Mr. McMullen's handwriting?

A.—I think I saw him write this letter.

Q.—Was that concession or payment made by Sir Hugh Allan at once or after consultation with you?

A.—It was made after the negotiation had spread over a couple of weeks, I should think, and after several notes and interviews had passed between Sir Hugh Allan and myself.

Q.—You were negotiating with Mr. McMullen?

A.—I was negotiating with him on behalf of Sir Hugh Allan as his Solicitor in the matter.

Q.—What did you say was the motive that induced Sir Hugh Allan to give a sum beyond the actual disbursements which were alleged to be $20,000.

A.—In the first place, I think, Sir Hugh recognized the fact that Mr. McMullen and his friends had really spent a good deal of time about their scheme, and that they had given themselves a good deal of trouble about it. I think he recognized also, that they should have some remuneration for that. I think he considered that the sum demanded for that was very large, indeed exorbitant, but he thought it was better to settle the matter than to have a great outcry and scandal, while he and the delegation to England were endeavouring to raise money for the Pacific Railway. I imagine that he saw that if these letters were published an immense deal more would be made out of them than their importance warranted, by any parties who were opposing the Pacific scheme, and he desired that their publication, if it were to take place, might not be until after his return.

Q.—When did you, Mr. McMullen, and Sir Hugh come to an understanding?

A.—It is mentioned in the paper which was fyled this morning.

Q.—As soon as you came to an agreement it was committed to writing?

A.—Yes.

Q.—Was it at your suggestion that a portion of the money was withheld?

A.—Yes.

Q.—You were acting as Solicitor for Sir Hugh Allan?

A.—Yes.

Q.—And thought it a reasonable and proper precaution to take?

A.—Yes. I thought it possible that there might be copies of these letters extant, and that no sooner would the money be paid than copies might appear in the newspapers. I thought that the retention of a portion of the money would operate as a check against anything of this sort.

Q.—“Within ten days after the end of the coming Session of Parliament, Mr. Starnes is requested,” and so on: why was that time fixed upon?

A.—Just for the same reason as any other time might have been fixed upon in order to give sufficient time to enable the delegation to go to England and return. The publication then would be better than during the Session of Parliament, as it would create less noise and scandal than during the Session.

Q.—The date is the 26th of February. When did Sir Hugh Allan leave for England?

A.—I think on the first of March.

Q.—For what purpose?

A.—As one of the delegation to try to raise funds for the Pacific Railway.

Q.—When did copies of these papers appear in the newspapers?

A.—The first time that copies appeared was on July 4th, in the ‘Montreal Herald,’ but the charge Mr. Huntington made in the House was supposed to be based on some copy which he had of these papers. I understood that he proposed to read papers which bore a resemblance to these documents.

Q.—You say that it was apprehended that the publication of these papers might affect the mission upon which Sir Hugh Allan went home to raise money. Do you know if it did?

A.—I am perfectly certain that it did. I was one of the delegation of four—composed of Sir Hugh Allan, Governor Archibald, Major Walker, and myself—and the chief difficulty we met with in England, was the feeling caused by the violence of the publications in this country, the extravagant charge made against the Company, causing the belief in the minds of English capitalists that the success or failure of the Company depended upon the success or failure of one of the great political parties in this country. People became convinced, as far as I could judge, when these charges were made and reiterated to such an extent, that if the Government maintained themselves in power, the Contract would likely be carried out and the Company go on; while on the other hand, if the Government were ejected from power, the Contract and the Charter would fall to the ground, and the road would not be built. They felt then that they were not only imperilling their money on the chance of the success of an enterprise sufficiently difficult in itself, but on the chance of one or the other of the political parties remaining in power. There was more hesitation from that notion, that any successful result would depend upon the success of one party or the other, rather than in view of the difficulty of the undertaking itself. This it was that prevented capitalists in England from subscribing; in fact that was the reason given by one large firm of capitalists, with whom the delegation made the greatest progress in negotiating for the money.

Referring to the deposition of Mr. White, I wish to state that the draft Bill which he supposed I had prepared, and caused to be printed on behalf of the projected American Company, was, to the best of my recollection, the draft Bill in print, which I have already stated, Sir Hugh Allan gave to me when he requested me to prepare the legislation for the Session of 1872.

And further deponent saith not, and this his deposition having been read to him, he declares that it contains the truth, persists therein, and hath signed.

Appointing CHARLES DEWEY DAY, ANTOINE POLETTE, and JAMES ROBERT GOWAN, Commissioners to inquire into and report upon the several matters stated in a certain Resolution, moved by the Hon. Mr. HUNTINGTON in the House of Commons on the second day of April, A.D. 1873, relating to the Canadian Pacific Railway.

Present: THE COMMISSIONERS.

On this twenty-fourth day of September, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and seventy-three, personally came and appeared before us, the above-named Commissioners,

FREDERICK CALVIN MARTIN, of the Town of Woodstock, in the Province of Ontario, who being duly sworn, deposeth and saith:

Q.—I will read over the terms of the charge which it is the duty of the Commission to inquire into, that you may know precisely what they are, and then proceed to put you questions.

Having heard the charge read, I will now ask you first as to the part of the charge relating to the agreement between Sir Hugh Allan and Mr. G. W. McMullen. Do you know Sir Hugh Allan?

A.—I do not.

Q.—Do you know Mr. G. W. McMullen?

A.—I do. He is a second cousin of mine.

Q.—Do you know anything of an agreement between Sir Hugh Allan and Mr. G. W. McMullen, acting for certain United States capitalists, whereby Mr. McMullen agreed to furnish funds for the construction of the Pacific Railway?

A.—I know that Mr. G. W. McMullen, with several other capitalists, were forming an agreement with Sir Hugh Allan to obtain the contract for building the Canadian Pacific Railway.

Q.—When did you become acquainted with that fact?

A.—First through friends or relations of Mr. McMullen's.

Q.—About what time?

A.—I think it was in 1871, the latter part of 1871.

Q.—Have you any knowledge whether any agreement took place between Sir Hugh Allan and Mr. McMullen and his friends, tending, or with a view, to the construction of the Pacific Railway?

A.—I have no knowledge from Mr. McMullen himself, except this:—Had a conversation with him; I think it was in April, 1872, at my father's house. I spoke to him on that occasion on the subject of the Pacific Railway. The first question I asked him was about the route that would be taken; whether the Road would not be obstructed by snow, and as to how they would overcome that difficulty. He said that he thought that the Road would go too far north for that; or north of the snow limit, I think, he expressed it. I asked him if the 'Globe' newspaper would not be strongly opposed to the building of the Canadian Pacific Railway, it being a Government measure. He said no, not to any extent.

Q.—Do you know anything about the terms of this agreement?

A.—I do not.

Q.—You had no other conversation with him?

A.—Not at that time?

In July, 1872, I left for Chicago, in order to visit him. I arrived on the 28th July, 1872, and spent a week there, and then went on out to the prairies. I came back to Chicago, and I think it was on my return I stayed there about a week and a half.

One day Mr. McMullen came into the room and said he had received a letter. Holding it in his hand, he said, "This is from Sir Hugh Allan." He read me a part of the letter, and he said, "Sir Hugh Allan is a tricky fellow and not to be depended upon, but I think we have got him so tightly bound by these letters that he dare not go back on us."

Q.—Is that the whole of the conversation?

A.—Yes.

Q.—Was any allusion made to the part which the Government were taking, or that the Government had taken any part in that agreement?

A.—No, there was not.

Q.—Was any allusion made to any members of the Government?

A.—There was not. There was something said about the elections, but nothing affecting the Government.

Q.—Have you had any communication with Mr. G. W. McMullen since that on this subject—since the publication of these letters?

A.—I have not. I have had a conversation with his brother, Harvard C. McMullen.

Q.—You have seen those letters of Mr. G. W. McMullen's which have been published?

A.—I have.

Q.—You had no conversation with him on the subject of those letters?

A.—Not with him; only with his brother.

Q.—Do you know anything about the subsequent portion of the charge, as to Sir Hugh Allan's advancing money for the purpose of the elections?

A.—I do not.

Q.—Did you take any interest in the elections in your own part of the country?

A.—I did.

Q.—Have you any knowledge of any money being supplied from Montreal for these elections?

A.—I have not.

Q.—Of the elections in Lower Canada, I take it you know nothing?

A.—Nothing except what I have got from the newspapers.

Q.—Where do you reside?

A.—At Woodstock.

Q.—What is your occupation?

A.—I am a lawyer.

Q.—Do you know anything more about the subject matter of the charge which you have heard read?

A.—I do not.

Q.—Have you ever had any communication with Sir Hugh Allan?

A.—No. I do not know Sir Hugh Allan.

Q.—Or with any member of the Government on this subject?

A.—No.

Q.—And this conversation which took place with Mr. G. W. McMullen is all that you know about the matter?

A.—It is, except what I heard from his brother. Nothing more than that.

Q.—Where was Mr. G. W. McMullen going when you had this conversation with him in April?

A.—He was at home then in Chicago. It was in Chicago it occurred.

The first conversation occurred at my father's house in Beechville, about five miles west of Woodstock. I think he was on his way then to Ottawa, but I am not certain.

Q.—I believe you mentioned the dates at which these conversations took place respectively?

A.—Yes. One was in April, and the other conversation was in July, I think.

Q.—Have you mentioned the year?

A.—It was in 1872.

Q.—What time in July?

A.—It was in August the second conversation took place.

Q.—What time in July was the first conversation?

A.—The first conversation was in April.

Q.—What time in April?

A.—I cannot say. I am not certain that it was in April, but I think so.

Q.—What time in August was the second conversation?

A.—About the middle of the month. I remained in Chicago at that time a week, and from Monday till Saturday I was out on the prairies, and then I returned to Chicago, and left there on the 21st August.

Q.—Did Mr. McMullen show you any papers?

A.—Nothing but this letter, and he did not hand it to me, but only read me a portion of it.

Q.—Do you remember the contents of it?

A.—I do not know that I do. I did not pay any particular attention to it at that time.

It was a letter that he received in August when I was there, from Sir Hugh Allan.

Q.—Was any person present besides Mr. McMullen and yourself?

A.—There was not. There were other persons in the house, but we were alone in the drawing-room at the time. It was at his brother's house.

Q.—Where did he take the paper from?

A.—I think he had it in his hand when he came in.

CANADA.

Q.—Was there anybody with him when he came in?

A.—No; he was alone. He had it open in his hand.

Q.—Was he apparently reading it?

A.—Yes. I was in the room when he came in. He then made the remark to me that I have mentioned.

And further deponent saith not, and this his deposition having been read to him, he declares that it contains the truth, persists therein, and hath signed.

IN THE MATTER OF THE COMMISSION

Appointing CHARLES DEWEY DAY, ANTOINE POLETTE, and JAMES ROBERT GOWAN, Commissioners to inquire into and report upon the several matters stated in a certain Resolution moved by the Hon. Mr. HUNTINGTON in the House of Commons on the second day of April, A.D. 1873, relating to the Canadian Pacific Railway.

Present: THE COMMISSIONERS.

On this twenty-sixth day of September, in the year of our Lord One thousand eight hundred and seventy-three, personally came and appeared before us, the above-named Commissioners,

THOMAS WHITE, junior, of the city of Montreal, who being duly sworn, deposeth and saith:

I am a resident of Montreal.

Q.—What is your profession?

A.—Publisher.

Q.—Publisher of what?

A.—The 'Montreal Gazette.'

Q.—Do you know the charges which are recited in the Commission; are you familiar with them, or shall I read them to you?

A.—I know them.

Q.—Do you know Sir Hugh Allan?

A.—I do.

Q.—Do you know Mr. G. W. McMullen?

A.—I do.

Q.—Have you any knowledge concerning any agreement between Sir Hugh Allan on one side and Mr. G. W. McMullen on the other, representing certain United States capitalists, relating to the construction of the Canada Pacific Railway?

A.—I have no knowledge of any formal agreement. I am aware that during the session of 1872 Mr. McMullen was in Ottawa representing certain American capitalists, as he stated, and was interesting himself in the construction of the Pacific Railway. During the earlier part of the session he was in very frequent communication with gentlemen in the House who were interesting themselves with Sir Hugh Allan in this enterprise, and I saw him frequently at that time, and had conversations with him. I am also aware that towards the close of the session Mr. Abbott, with whom I had frequent conversations, looked upon American connection as abandoned. I am aware too that Sir George Cartier, with whom I had frequent conversations during that session, was very much opposed to the American connection for the construction of the Railway, and was anxious to promote the interests of Mr. Macpherson's Company as an offset to it. I had one conversation with Sir George Cartier especially, in which, while professing a desire to see Sir Hugh Allan connected with the Company, he expressed his determination to have the Company so formed as to exclude the possibility of American connection.

Q.—Do you recollect the date?

A.—It was whilst the Bills were before the House. The conversation occurred before the close of the Session. It was at his own house and lasted two or three hours. The Northern Colonization Railway at that time was a prominent question in Montreal, and

I was giving it support through the newspaper, and it was in connection with that, that fears were entertained by some of the promoters of that scheme, that Sir George was opposed to it, and that this conversation arose.

Q.—When did your conversations take place with Mr. McMullen?

A.—In the early part of the Session. I had known Mr. McMullen for some fifteen years.

Q.—Do you know whether the Government gave him any encouragement in this scheme?

A.—I cannot say.

Q.—Had you any conversation with any other member of the Government than Sir George Cartier on the subject?

A.—No.

Q.—Had you any conversation with Sir Hugh Allan on the subject?

A.—I had conversations with him on general Railway matters. I understood his policy was to unite all the schemes with which he was identified as the easiest way to secure the construction of those in the Provinces of Ontario and Quebec.

Q.—Were you aware that he was associating himself with, or that negotiations were going on between him and those Americans?

A.—I inferred from the conversations I had with Mr. McMullen and Mr. Abbott that such was the case, but I had no direct knowledge of any formal agreement.

Q.—Was Mr. McMullen or any other person present at this conversation you had with Sir George Cartier?

A.—No.

Q.—Do you know anything more in reference to this branch of the subject?

A.—Nothing more.

Q.—Did you take any interest in the elections in Montreal in 1872?

A.—I did.

Q.—Were you on any of the Committees in Montreal?

A.—I was on the Committee for West Montreal but not on the Central Committee. I was frequently at the meetings of the Central Committee, but not a member of it.

Q.—Did you take any part in the election of Sir George Cartier?

A.—No direct part.

Q.—Were you on his Committee?

A.—I was not on his Committee.

Q.—Do you know whether any money was subscribed for the purpose of promoting the Montreal elections?

A.—I am aware that there was a fund as there always is at elections.

Q.—Do you know the amount of it?

A.—No, I have no knowledge of the amount of it.

Q.—Do you know whether Sir Hugh Allan was a subscriber to that fund?

A.—I have no personal knowledge that he was a subscriber.

Q.—In whose hand was the fund?

A.—Mr. Betournay, now Judge Betournay, was Chairman of the Committee, and I think any cheques that were drawn were drawn by him.

Q.—Cheques upon whom?

A.—Cheques upon the Metropolitan Bank.

Q.—Did you understand that the funds were deposited there?

A.—I understood that the funds of the Central Committee were deposited in the Metropolitan Bank.

Q.—Who drew those cheques?

A.—Mr. Betournay usually, I think. I saw him draw a good many cheques.

Q.—Do you know anything of the amount?

A.—No, I do not. I think the largest amount paid out was for canvassers. This system of canvassing has always prevailed in Montreal. The canvassers got their pay every Saturday.

Q.—Do you know of any understanding between Sir Hugh Allan and the Government, or any member of the Government or their supporters, for raising money for the elections?

A.—I do not.

Q.—Is there anything more that you have to state in relation to this matter?

A.—Nothing in relation to these charges.

To Sir John A. Macdonald, through the Chairman.

Q.—You say that you know that Sir George Cartier, in order to counteract any apprehended American influence, attempted to strengthen the Interoceanic Company?

CANADA.

A.—I am aware of it.

Q.—Do you know that Sir George favoured the introduction as corporators in that Company, of some leading Lower Canadians for that purpose?

A.—I am aware of it.

Q.—Can you mention their names?

A.—The names mentioned at the time were Mr. Tourangeau and Mr. Simard.

Mr. Tourangeau was one of the members of the House for Quebec East at that time, and Mr. Simard was the member for Quebec Centre.

Q.—They were corporators in Mr. Macpherson's Company?

A.—Yes.

Q.—You know pretty well all the names of the corporators in that Company, and in the Canada Pacific Company?

A.—Yes. I have looked at them frequently.

Q.—Are there any American names mentioned in either of those Companies?

A.—I think not.

Q.—Do you remember anything about an original draft of the Canada Pacific Railroad Charter?

A.—I think that Mr. Abbott caused the original draft of that Charter to be printed before the Session.

Q.—Before the Session of 1872 there was a draft of the Act of Incorporation of the Canada Pacific Railway Company; there were Americans included in that?

A.—There were.

Q.—Mr. McMullen's name was in it?

A.—I think so, and Mr. Smith's of Chicago.

Q.—That draft was abandoned?

A.—Yes. I think it was never introduced at all into Parliament.

Q.—How do you account for its being abandoned; was it because of Sir Hugh Allan's connection with Americans, and consequently that such an Act would not be acceptable to Parliament?

A.—That was, I understood, the reason for its non-presentation.

Q.—You then understood from Mr. Abbott, who was promoting the Bill which is now on the Statute Book, that all connection with the Americans had been abandoned?

A.—Yes, and towards the close of the Session that was the general impression in regard to the Canada Pacific Company.

Q.—Mr. McMullen must have known that at the time?

A.—He must have known it, but I have no knowledge that he did know it.

Q.—You say, with respect to the expenditure of money for the elections in Montreal, you were on the Committee for the Western Division?

A.—Yes.

Q.—You don't know personally what was the expenditure in Montreal East?

A.—I do not. I think it was very large.

Q.—You say the largest item in the expenditure was the payment of canvassers?

A.—Yes, the payment of paid canvassers. That was a plan which was adopted by both sides.

Q.—Both parties had paid canvassers?

A.—Yes.

Q.—Was there a very large expenditure for that purpose, besides other expenses, in Sir George Cartier's election?

A.—There must have been from the number of paid canvassers. I cannot form any estimate of the amount, but it was several thousand dollars, judging from the whole expenditure that took place.

Q.—Do you know anything about a sum of $25,000 being raised by the supporters of Mr. Jetté for his election?

A.—Nothing but the report prevailing at the time. There was a very large sum raised, and I understood it was $25,000.

Q.—To assist Mr. Jetté in defeating Sir George Cartier?

A.—Yes.

Q.—Do you not know that by some mysterious process a good deal of Sir George Cartier's money went to the other side?

A.—That was the impression at the time. There is no doubt of our being sold. Men who had been working with us were found on the day of the election to be working for the other party. That was the case in both the Eastern and Western Divisions. I do not know whether we were outbid or not, but these men were found working on the day of the election on the other side.

Q.—You have read Mr. McMullen's letters, in which he makes charges of corruption against the Government, and in fact everybody else?

A.—I have.

Q.—I think he has included you?

A.—He has.

Q.—Would you be kind enough, with the permission of the Commission, to state exactly your relations with Sir Hugh Allan, and also what were his relations with your newspaper?

A.—The copyright of the 'Gazette' was purchased from Sir Hugh Allan and Mr. Brydges by T. and R. White (our firm) in 1870. The plant of the office was leased to us—leased upon the understanding, or upon the condition, that after a certain expenditure in the way of salaries the profits should be divided, and that we should have the right to purchase within ten years for $30,000. The papers were made out, at Mr. Brydges' request, in the name of Sir Hugh Allan; hence our relations in the first instance with Sir Hugh Allan rather than with Mr. Brydges. After some time we became anxious to complete the purchase upon the terms agreed upon, and applied to Mr. Abbott, by whom the papers had been drawn in the first instance, or rather revised after being drawn by a notary,—we applied to him to arrange with Sir Hugh Allan for the purchase. Sir Hugh Allan was quite willing; but he thought he should be paid in cash, which was not convenient for us to do then. While these negotiations were going on through Mr. Abbott, the Montreal Northern Colonization Railway was the prominent subject of discussion at the time. Mr. Abbott sent for me one day, and told me that he thought he could have the matter arranged, and that in view of the support which the 'Gazette' had given to the Northern Colonization Railway, in which Sir Hugh Allan was deeply interested, he thought that there should be some consideration allowed for that, and that the Company would be disposed to agree to it. He therefore suggested that the papers be drawn up for $20,000 instead of $30,000. That was in January or February, 1872. We declined the arrangement, and said that we only wanted the purchase completed at the $30,000.

Therefore the first charge made by Mr. McMullen is entirely untrue. In the second letter of Mr. McMullen's there is a charge made that we threatened Sir Hugh Allan with exposure unless he consented to an arrangement before leaving for England.

Having now heard read the portion of Mr. McMullen's second letter, which refers to this matter, and on being asked if that statement is true, I say that the statement is true as a matter of fact. Matters were "fixed up." The statement is strictly true in that respect; but in regard to the impression which it conveys it is entirely false.

The efforts made to get the paper into our own hands were prompted by two motives: first, the business promised to be a profitable one. In the next place, Sir Hugh Allan's connection with public enterprises in different parts of the country rendered it necessary that Sir Hugh Allan's connection with the paper should cease, so that no person could be able to say that the 'Gazette' had any connection or was under the influence of Sir Hugh Allan.

We wanted the arrangement to be carried out, if possible, before Sir Hugh Allan left for England, and the paper transferred entirely over to us. After the papers had been drawn up—some four or five days before Sir Hugh left for England—he thought that he should have a larger interest upon the unpaid sums, and the papers had all to be made over again at a larger rate of interest. They were then signed before he left for England, the amount mentioned in them being that named in the first lease when we first purchased the good-will of the paper.

Question by the Commission:

Q.—With whom did you see the printed Bill, prepared by Mr. Abbott, that you speak of?

A.—With Mr. Abbott.

Q.—In what form was it?

A.—It was in the usual form.

Q.—Where was it printed?

A.—I am not very sure; I think it was printed in our office. I saw it first in Mr. Abbott's possession.

Q.—Did he give you a copy of it?

A.—No he did not.

Q.—Do you know of any one having got a copy of it?

A.—I do not.

Q.—You have no knowledge as to whether he exhibited it to any one else?

A.—I have not.

CANADA.

Mr. McMullen, I suppose, knew of it.

I knew such a Bill was printed, and that there were American names in it.

Q.—For what purpose did Mr. Abbott show you the Bill?

A.—Because we were in constant communication with regard to railway matters.

Q.—For what purpose did you say that he showed it to you?

A.—In the ordinary course of conversation; not for any specific purpose. I think I knew almost everything that was going on in connection with railway matters at that time.

Q.—The names of the American capitalists were Mr. McMullen and Mr. Smith. Were there any other names?

A.—No; I don't know of any others.

And further deponent saith not, and this his deposition having been read to him he declares that it contains the truth, persists therein, and hath signed.

IN THE MATTER OF THE COMMISSION

Appointing CHARLES DEWEY DAY, ANTOINE POLETTE, and JAMES ROBERT GOWAN, Commissioners to inquire into and report upon the several matters stated in a certain Resolution moved by the Hon. Mr. HUNTINGTON, in the House of Commons, on the second day of April, A.D. 1873, relating to the Canadian Pacific Railway.

Present: THE COMMISSIONERS.

On this twenty-sixth day of September, in the year of our Lord, one thousand eight hundred and seventy-three, personally came and appeared before us, the above-named Commissioners,

The Honourable HECTOR L. LANGEVIN, of the City of Ottawa, being recalled on the application of Sir John A. Macdonald, was by permission of the Commission, the second time examined, who being duly sworn, deposeth and saith:

Q.—I think you stated in your previous examination that you had taken part in the elections on the Ministerial side in the District of Quebec?

A.—I did.

Q.—And that you had raised funds for that purpose?

A.—Yes.

Q.—How much did you say you had raised; how much did Sir George Cartier send you?

A.—$32,000 I think.

Q.—Have you been a good deal connected with elections in your part of the country for many years?

A.—Yes.

Q.—Do you consider that that subscription or that expenditure was excessive in your part of the country, as compared with previous expenditures?

A.—I consider that the expenditure at the last elections was greater than at the previous elections, speaking of the expenditure in the elections around.

Q.—The expenditure on both sides was much larger in 1872 than in 1867?

A.—Yes, much larger.

Q.—Which was the most expensive election in your part of the country?

A.—I think it was Quebec Centre.

Q.—Who were the candidates?

A.—The candidates were Mr. Cauchon and Mr. J. G. Ross, merchant.

Q.—Can you form any idea as to the expenditure in that single election?

A.—I understand that the expenditure was—in fact I know that one of the candidates expended nearly $15,000, and I understand that on the other side the friends of the other candidate expended nearly $30,000.

Q.—You say that one of the candidates expended $15,000; who was that candidate?

A.—Mr. Cauchon.

Q.—How did you know that he expended that amount?

A.—I knew it from himself.

Q.—How do you know the expenditure on the other side?

A.—I do not know it from Mr. Ross, but I know it from some of his friends, and it is a matter of public notoriety in Quebec that the expenditure on that side was nearly double that on Mr. Cauchon's side.

Q.—There was a good deal of riot in that election?

A.—Yes, and loss of life also. One man was killed. Perhaps I might be allowed on that point to state this also, that none of the money that was entrusted to me for the elections was expended in this election of Quebec Centre. I make this statement specially because it has been stated outside, of course by my opponents, that they were not surprised now to find that there had been so much rioting and loss of life in that election of Quebec Centre; and, of course, I wish it to be well understood that I had no part in that election.

Q.—You stood aloof from the election, did you not?

A.—Yes. The fact is, Mr. Cauchon gave me to understand that he was friendly to the administration, and so did the friends of Mr. Ross, on the other side, give me to understand that Mr. Ross was also friendly to us; and finding therefore that our friends in Quebec Centre were divided, some supporting Mr. Cauchon and others Mr. Ross, I stated to Mr. Cauchon and to Mr. Ross's friends that under the circumstances the Government would take no part in that election, but that they would leave their friends to fight the battle out themselves, and elect what candidate they thought right under the circumstances.

Q.—Are you aware of the election contest in the Missisquoi?

A.—Nothing special.

Q.—That is not in your district?

A.—It is not in the region I was looking after.

Q.—You know nothing of the expenditure there?

A.—No, only by hearsay.

Q.—Do you know anything of the expenditure in Kamouraska?

A.—Not personally, but I understand it was very large.

Q.—Who were the candidates?

A.—The candidates were Mr. Pelletier on the Opposition side, and Mr. Routhier (now Judge Routhier) on the other side.

Q.—The expenditure was very large in that County?

A.—It was very large.

Q.—Have you any means of judging approximately of the expenditure there?

A.—If I could judge from public rumours, I should suppose that it was between $16,000 and $18,000.

Q.—On both sides?

A.—No; about $8,000 or $9,000 on each side.

Q.—Which is Mr. Fournier's County?

A.—Bellechasse.

Q.—Do you know anything about the expenditure there?

A.—No; but I understood it was large on both sides.

The fact is that in all the elections the expenditure was very large; much larger than usual. My political friends from the different portions of the eastern part of Lower Canada all state that the expenditure against them was such that they could not stand it. This accounts to a very great extent for the loss of some of the Counties there.

And further deponent saith not, and this his deposition having been read to him, he declares it contains the truth, persists therein, and hath signed.

IN THE MATTER OF THE COMMISSION

Appointing CHARLES DEWEY DAY, ANTOINE POLETTE, and JAMES ROBERT GOWAN, Commissioners to inquire into and report upon the several matters stated in a certain Resolution moved by the Hon. Mr. HUNTINGTON, in the House of Commons, on the second day of April, A.D. 1873, relating to the Canadian Pacific Railway.

Present: THE COMMISSIONERS.

On this thirtieth day of September, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and seventy-three, personally came and appeared before us, the above-named Commissioners,

The Hon. GEDEON OUIMET, of the City of Quebec, Provincial Secretary and Member of Public Instruction for the Province of Quebec, who being duly sworn, deposeth and saith:

Having heard read that portion of the charge contained in the Royal Commission, which reads as follows:

"That in anticipation of the Legislation of last session, as to the Pacific Railway, an agreement was made between Sir Hugh Allan, acting for himself and certain other Canadian Promoters, and G. W. McMullen, acting for certain United States capitalists, whereby the latter agreed to furnish all the funds necessary for the construction of the contemplated Railway, and to give the former a certain per centage of interest, in consideration of their interest and position, the scheme agreed upon being ostensibly that of a Canadian Company, with Sir Hugh Allan at its head."

I have no knowledge of such an arrangement, and I would add that, from communication with Sir George Etienne Cartier, Sir Hugh Allan, and some of the Directors of the Northern Colonization Railway, I was induced to think the contrary.

I do not know G. W. McMullen.

I do know Sir H. Allan.

I have never had any knowledge touching this arrangement, or any other of the kind.

I have no knowledge that the Government entertained the idea of entering into an arrangement of this kind. I say this because of frequent communications with the late lamented Sir George Cartier, who certainly entertained altogether contrary opinions.

I don't know that the Government, or any member of the Government, entertained the idea of entering into arrangements with Americans, or of forming any Company for the purpose of constructing the Pacific Railway in which American capitalists were to be included.

Q.—What was the nature of your relations?

A.—As a member of the Government of the Province of Quebec, I took an active part in the policy inaugurated by that Government in favour of the construction of railways within the limits of our Province, among others the Montreal Northern Colonization Railway. After the formation of that Company, the Government of Quebec did me the honour to select me as one of the directors to represent that Government in this Company. Beyond my interest as a member of the Government, I was much interested in the construction of that Railway, as being a proprietor in the City of Montreal, and also as a member in the Local Legislature for the County of Two Mountains, through which the contemplated Railway was to pass. I also took an active part with my friends in endeavouring to induce the citizens of Montreal to subscribe the million of dollars which was asked for that great enterprise. The question of a depot within or near the limits of the City of Montreal was considered one of vital importance for the town as well as for the province of Quebec. With a view to securing the success of the Railway, we addressed ourselves to Sir Hugh Allan in his capacity as a great financier and as an eminent man in our province, in the hope to secure a more easy and certain result. It was thus, when the Pacific Railway came up as an important political question in the Confederation, that I made efforts with my friends with a view to have this great Railway united with the Northern Colonization Railway, that it might pass through the Province of Quebec and have its depot within or near the City of Montreal; and it was then that I worked to favour the Pacific Railway, the object being to secure the success of the Northern Colonization Railway. My communications with Sir Hugh Allan were to this effect, and it was equally with the same objects in view that my name appeared as one of the provisional Directors in the Canada Pacific Railways Act of 1872; and concerning the appearance of my name in the Act of Incorporation, I may say that I only knew of its being there after the Bill had passed through the committee, and, as I said before, I was sufficiently favourable to the enterprise not to make any objection, and I made none. This Bill, which is 35th Vict., chap. 73, was discussed, I think, in the month of May, 1872, and I was then in Ottawa, not only in the interests of the Montreal Northern Colonization Company, but for the purpose of meeting my colleagues in the Quebec Government, the Honourable Messrs. Chauveau, Beaubien, Archambault, and Irvine. We had at the time several meetings of the Executive of Quebec, at Hull. This, then, was the interest which I had in this question of the Pacific Railway, an interest altogether relative to the Northern Colonization Railway. In a conversation which I had with Sir Hugh Allan in April or May, 1872, that gentleman asked me to neglect nothing in the interests of the Northern Colonization Railway. He also spoke to me in the interests of the Conservative party, to which he attributed his commercial prosperity in a great measure, and did not hide from me the fact that that party had already made efforts to maintain his Steamship Company, and that he was convinced the party had made sacrifices in his favour, or words to that effect. I did not fail to tell him that I was doubly interested myself in the success of the Northern Colonization Railway, of which he was President, as well from being a member of the Government of Quebec, as from being member of the County of Two Mountains, and that I should make efforts to have this line traverse the county that I represented.

The aid which I gave to Sir Hugh Allan relative to the construction of the Pacific Railway at Ottawa or elsewhere was of a friendly character as a citizen who was interested in this great enterprise, and interested more directly, as I have already explained, in the construction of the Northern Colonization Railway. Sir Hugh Allan, nor anyone else, ever engaged my service as advocate, nor in my character as Attorney-General of the Province of Quebec (a charge which I have already denied) in the interests of the Pacific Railway.

I procured the aid which I have already spoken of to Sir Hugh Allan because I was in communication with Sir Hugh Allan as a Director of the Northern Colonization Railway. I may add that Sir Hugh Allan appeared to honour me with his confidence.

I endeavoured to induce my friends from the Province of Quebec who were members of the House of Commons not to lose sight of the interests of our Province, and to favour the Northern Colonization Railway, and if that influence was favourable to the Pacific Railway, with a view to its union with the Northern Colonization Railway, I induced them to give it, but I did not, properly speaking, give any aid to the Pacific Railway as a question apart from the Northern Colonization Railway. I desire also to say that if I had not been interested in the Northern Colonization Railway I would have had nothing to do with the Pacific, because I was not a member of the House of Commons. For the rest, I cannot see what influence I could have outside of that which I have just mentioned.

Having had communication of letter which has been published in the newspapers, over the name of G. W. McMullen, and in which the following appears: “$6,000 to Attorney-General Ouimet for aid rendered at Ottawa,” as having been paid by Sir Hugh Allan, and being asked for any explanations on this point, I say in reply:—Having never been asked by the Company, nor by any person whatever in its interest, nor by any person for my services as a lawyer or otherwise, and it being impossible that I should be engaged by the Company in any quality as Attorney-General, my services as such being of no assistance either in the obtaining of the Charter or the contract, having acted only as a friend to the enterprise, as a citizen desiring it to come to a good end, I affirm that I never received the sum of $6,000 in question, nor any sum whatever. I affirm, moreover, that I never had, either directly or indirectly, either from the Company or from any friends of the enterprise, any promise of money, or of anything else.

I never received any sum of money from Sir H. Allan, nor from anyone else, either directly or indirectly, as I have already said. I was largely interested myself in the Northern Colonization Railway Company and road. I have in its interest disbursed considerable sums, and undergone much fatigue, but, God be thanked, without recompense, or hope of recompense, hoping only that to the Province of Quebec may accrue the benefits which will flow from the construction of the Northern Colonization Railway.

I do not know if Sir Hugh Allan paid $4,000 to the ‘Minerve,’ nor of the other sums mentioned by McMullen in his letter as having been paid by Sir Hugh Allan. I do not believe a word of them or of the other charges made by him.

I do not know whether the Government or any member of the Government had any knowledge of the negotiations spoken of before between Sir H. Allan and Mr. McMullen, nor do I know if Sir Hugh Allan had any negotiations with Mr. McMullen.

The second part of the charges contained in the Royal Commission is as follows: “That subsequently an understanding was come to between the Government, Sir Hugh Allan, and Mr. Abbott, one of the members of the Honourable House of Commons of

CANADA.

“ Canada, that Sir Hugh Allan and his friends should advance a large sum of money for the purpose of aiding the elections of Ministers and their supporters at the ensuing general elections, and that he and his friends should receive the contract for the construction of the Railway.”

I declare that I know nothing of it. I could say, however, that I had some conversation with Sir George Cartier in June, July, and August, 1872, in which he spoke to me of Sir Hugh Allan, the Allan Company, the Pacific Railway, and the Northern Colonization Railway. Sir George rebutted the idea of any connection of American capitalists with the Pacific Railway, and said that he never would consent to such a thing, and that he thought that the roads should be constructed without the aid of American capitalists. While expressing his appreciation of the merits of Sir Hugh Allan, Sir George Cartier did not appear to me to be on very friendly terms with him—that is to say, on terms of personal friendship. Nevertheless, he thought that Sir Hugh Allan, from his position, would be of great assistance to the Pacific Railway. He told me that he wished to see the amalgamation of the Macpherson and Allan Companies, and that he had been unjustly reproached with opposition to the Northern Colonization Railway in favour of the Grand Trunk Railway. I remarked to him that I regarded it as unfortunate that his Government had not settled this question of the contract of the Pacific Railway before the elections, because, I added, that this question would militate against him in the Province of Quebec, and particularly in Montreal East. I said to him also that Sir Hugh Allan had told me that he owed his commercial prosperity in a great measure to the Conservative party, and that I thought that Sir Hugh or his Company would aid him by influence or otherwise in his election. Sir George thereupon said that he could not entertain much hope that Sir Hugh Allan or his Company, meaning the Montreal Ocean Steamship Company, would come to his assistance, but as for himself (Sir George) he had several times put his portfolio in danger to maintain or obtain the subsidy for the Allan Company. Sir George told me this in that energetic language which he ordinarily used, and which is well known to those who were familiar with him. I had the honour to occupy myself in the election of Sir George at the last elections, and, notwithstanding that his friends urged him to let us make his election on the basis of the railway policy, and particularly the Pacific, he would not consent, saying that he would conduct his election on his own personal merits.

I have not any knowledge that Sir Hugh Allan advanced a sum of money to aid in the election of Ministers and their supporters. I went a few times to Sir George's Central Election Committee, but I know nothing of the distribution of the money. Of course I know from personal experience that it was necessary to spend money on that as on other elections.

No members of the Government ever told me that Sir H. Allan had advanced money for the elections, nor did Sir H. Allan ever tell me.

This conversation with Sir George Cartier, in reference to the road that I have mentioned, took place at several intervals, and I think that the last conversation I had with him was two or three days before the polling in the Eastern Division of Montreal, in which Sir George was a candidate.

Q.—Do you know the date on which the polling took place?

A.—Late in the month of August.

Being asked if I can give any explanation, or if I have any idea why my name is mentioned in McMullen's letter, as having received $6,000, I declare that I have no idea how my name came to be mentioned. The charge is wholly false.

And further deponent saith not, and this his deposition having been read to him, he declares that it contains the truth, persists therein, and hath signed.

July 26th, 1872.

Have seen Macpherson. He has no personal ambition, but cannot, in justice to Ontario, concede any preference to Quebec in the matter of the P., or in any other particular. He says the question about the P. should be left to the Board. Under these circumstances I authorize you to assure Allan that the power of the Government will be exercised to secure him the position of P. The other terms to be as agreed on between Macpherson and Abbott. The whole matter to be kept quiet until after the elections; then the two gentlemen to meet the Privy Council at Ottawa, and settle the terms of a provisional agreement. This is the only practicable solution of the difficulty, and should be accepted at once by Allan. Answer.

DEAR SIR,

Toronto, February 24, 1872.

Since writing to you yesterday I have seen Mr. D. L. Macpherson, of Toronto, who is member of the Dominion Senate, and rather an important person to gain over to our side. He has been applied to by our opponents, and uses that as a lever by which to obtain better terms from us. He insists on getting $250,000 of stock, and threatens opposition if he does not get it. You will remember he is one of those I proposed as a Director.

I will do the best I can, but I think that McMullen, you and myself, will have to give up some of our stock to conciliate these parties.

Letter No. 13.

MY DEAR SIR,

Montreal, July 1, 1872.

The negotiations regarding the Canadian Pacific Railroad are now approaching a termination, and I have no reason to doubt they will be favourable to us. I have been given to understand by Mr. McMullen that he has regularly kept you informed of the progress and position of affairs, hence I have not communicated with you on the subject as often as I otherwise would have done. No doubt he informed you that, thinking as I had taken up the project, there must be something very good in it—a very formidable opposition was organized in Toronto, which, for want of better, took as their cry, “No foreign influence”—“No Yankee dictation”—“No Northern Pacific to choke off our Canadian Pacific,” and others equally sensible.

So much effect, however, was produced both in and out of Parliament by these cries and the agitation consequent on them, that after consulting Mr. McMullen I was forced unwillingly to drop ostensibly from our organization every American name and to put in reliable people on this side in place of them. It will be apparent to you that at this point Mr. McMullen and I differed a little as to the means to be adopted to influence the Government itself. Two opposing Companies desiring to build the Railroad were formed, the one from Ontario having the greatest number of names, while that from Quebec had the greatest political power.

Mr. McMullen was desirous of securing the inferior members of the Government, and entered into engagements of which I did not approve, as I thought it only a waste of powder and shot. On a calm review of the situation I satisfied myself that the whole decision of the question must ultimately be in the hands of one man, and that man was Sir George E. Cartier, the leader and chief of the French party. This party has held the balance of power between the other factions. It has sustained and kept in office and existence the entire Government for the last five years. It consists of forty-five men who have followed Cartier, and voted in a solid phalanx for all his measures. The Government majority in Parliament being generally less than forty-five, it follows that the defection of one-half or two-thirds would at any time put the Government out of office. It was therefore evident that some means must be adopted to bring the influence of this compact body of members to bear in our favour, and as I soon made up my mind what was the best course to pursue, I did not lose a moment in following it up.

A Railroad from Montreal to Ottawa through the French country, north of the Ottawa river, has long been desired by the French inhabitants, but Cartier, who is the salaried solicitor to the Grand Trunk Railroad, to which this would be an opposition, has always interposed difficulties, and by his influence prevented it being built. The same reason made him desirous of giving the contract for the Canadian Pacific into the hands of parties connected with the Grand Trunk Railroad, and to this end he fanned the flame of opposition to us. But I saw in this French Railroad scheme, and in the near approach of the general election, when Cartier as well as others had to go to their constituents for re-election, a sure means of attaining my object, especially as I purposed to carry it through to the terminus of the Pacific. The plans I propose are in themselves the best for the interests of the Dominion, and in urging them on the public I am really doing a most patriotic action. But even in that view, means must be used to influence the public, and I employed several young French lawyers to write it up for their own newspapers. I subscribed a controlling influence in the stock, and proceeded to subsidize the newspapers themselves, both editors and proprietors. I went to the country through which the road would pass, and called on many of the inhabitants. I visited the priests and made friends of them, and I employed agents to go amongst the principal people and talk it up.

I then began to hold public meetings, and attended to them myself, making frequent speeches in French to them, showing them where their true interests lay. The scheme at once became popular, and I formed a committee to influence the members of the Legislature.

This succeeded so well that in a short time I had 27 out of the 45 on whom I could rely, and the electors of the ward in this city which Cartier himself represents, notified him that unless the contract for the Pacific Railroad was given in the interests of Lower Canada he need not present himself for re-election. He did not believe this, but when he came here and met his constituents he found to his surprise that their determination was unchangeable.

He then agreed to give the contract as required in this way, that there would be 17 Provisional Directors, of which Ontario would have 8 and we 9—thereby giving us the control. We at once proceeded to organize the Company (our Section), and they named me the President, D. McInnes of Hamilton, Vice-President; E. L. de Bellefeuille, Secretary; and the Honourable J. J. C. Abbott, Legal Adviser.

We have advertised that the books for subscription of stock will be opened 15th July at the different places named in the Act, and we have notified the Government that we are willing to take the contract for building the Canadian Pacific Railroad on the terms and conditions prescribed in the Act. The next thing to be done is to subscribe the stock, which must be done by British subjects only, and 10 per cent. of the subscriptions must be paid in cash at the time of subscribing. We have the right of subscribing nine-seventeenths (9-17) at present, and of taking up whatever the other party may not subscribe at the end of one month. I have arranged in the meantime that if you will send a certificate of the equivalent of $1,000,000 gold having been placed by Jay Cooke and Co. to the credit of the Merchants' Bank of Canada, Montreal, in their own Bank in New York, it will accept the cheques for the subscription, but no money will pass till the contract is entered into, and then 10 per cent. on the amount of stock awarded us will have to be paid in to the Receiver-General. Be pleased, therefore, to send me, as early as possible, powers of attorney to subscribe the stock and Jay Cooke and Co.'s certificate above mentioned. I have had several letters from England offering to take the whole thing up if we desire to part with it, but it looks to me to be too good to part with readily. If you desire any further information I will go to New York next week, if you desire it, and communicate with you personally. Please telegraph if you wish to see me, and the day. As you may suppose, the matter has not reached this point without great expense, a large portion of it only payable when the contract is obtained, but I think it will reach not much short of $300,000.

CANADA.

Yours faithfully,
(Signed) HUGH ALLAN.

I presume you desire that unless we can obtain and secure a majority of the stock you could not take any, but on this point I wish to be instructed.

Letter No. 19.

MY DEAR SIR HUGH,

Pictou, Nov. 6, 1872.

Since the receipt of your letter, the contents of which surprised me considerably, following so soon after our conversation at Montreal, and in view of the fact that the Government seem so much at sixes and sevens about the whole matter, I have of course communicated the substance of it to my friends. They are anxious to know whether such a decision will be arrived at, after the various pledges made, as will debar our Association from participation in the construction of the Railway. Whatever skirmishing may be done by way of talk, they can hardly have an idea that you will prove recreant to your business associates in an arrangement mainly of their own suggestion (I mean the Government who first requested you to write to Chicago). However much they may be beset with political problems, I do not believe they could get, in any other way, so difficult a one on their hands as they could by taking such a course. Mr. Ogden and party are now back from Puget Sound, and I shall take an early opportunity of meeting them.

I should like any possible positive information, and in case the affair goes so that our Association either directly or through you, cannot handle it, it would be well to know it. But as the Government could not expect you to go into it and leave the others out entirely, I should think you could have it arranged as we have several times talked, i.e. the stock held by you subject to private arrangement with the others. And whatever street rumour may say of public opinion, I should judge that this would do all that is needed.

Please let me hear from you.

Sir Hugh Allan, Montreal.

Truly yours,
(Signed) G. W. McMULLEN.

Copy of 1st Contract between Sir Hugh Allan and his American Associates.

New York, Dec. 23, 1871.

The undersigned hereby agree to associate themselves together for the following purposes, to wit;

First.—To form the Canadian Pacific Railway Company under a Charter substantially as agreed upon, and subject to such modifications or changes as shall be hereafter mutually assented to, which Charter is to be procured by Messrs. Sir Hugh Allan, Charles M. Smith and Geo. W. McMullen from the Parliament of Canada at its approaching Session.

Second.—Under and by authority of said Charter the undersigned propose to construct the said Railway.

For these purposes, we, the undersigned, each for himself and not for the others agree to subscribe in all the sum of ten millions of dollars to the capital stock of the said Canada Pacific Railroad Company as follows:—

The various names subscribed to this contract at the end of it except Allan, C. M. Smith and McMullen, and such others as they may associate with them shall subscribe five millions five hundred thousand dollars (\$5,500,000) and Sir Hugh Allan, Chas. M. Smith and George W. McMullen, and such others as they may associate with them, shall subscribe four millions five hundred thousand dollars (\$4,500,000) and it is further agreed that the above-named parties who shall subscribe five millions five hundred thousand dollars, shall pay in the sum of ten per centum on the whole ten millions of dollars of stock to be subscribed as aforesaid, into the Banking House of Jay Cooke and Co., in New York city, to the credit of the Canada Pacific Railway Company upon its organization to be used for the construction of the said railway and for such other purposes as the Directors of said Company hereafter to be elected shall determine, and it is also agreed that on the organization of said Railway Co., such a By-law shall be adopted as will prohibit any further assessments on the stock beyond the ten per cent. paid as before specified unless ordered by a vote of at least nine-tenths ($\frac{9}{10}$) of all the outstanding stock of the Company at some regular or special shareholders' meeting.

It is further agreed by the parties hereto, that they shall associate themselves together as the Canada Land and Improvement Co. which it is proposed shall be hereafter incorporated by the Parliament of Canada, for the purpose of constructing the said Railway, and for the purchase and sale of lands, and for other needed objects, and that their interests in the said Land and Improvement Co. shall be in the same proportions as their usual subscriptions to the railway stock, aforesaid, bear to the whole ten millions of dollars ($10,000,000) subscribed, and it is agreed that the contracts for building any or all of the various Sections of the Canada Pacific Railway, when let, shall be let to the said Canada Land and Improvement Co. at fair prices, and to the Canada Land and Improvement Company shall operate and be allowed the use of the said railway, during the period of its construction, without charge therefor, except the expense of keeping the same in good order and repair at their own cost, during such use and control of said railway.

It is also agreed that the first working capital of the said Canada Land and Improvement Company, shall be the aforesaid one million of dollars, to be paid in on the Railway Stock before-named, less any amounts previously expended by order of the Board of Directors, and shall also consist of such sums or profits as shall thereafter be received by it, from time to time from said Railway Company for construction and for work done in excess of the cost of such work, or so much thereof as may be necessary for the successful prosecution of said work. And it is expressly agreed that the first profits arising from the contracts above referred to, shall be used to reimburse (parties subscribing for $5,500,000) and their associates for the one million of dollars paid by them as a ten per cent. instalment on the Railway Stock aforesaid, with interest thereon at the rate of seven per cent. per annum.

And it is furthermore agreed that all, or at least a majority of all the stock or interest in both the Canada Pacific Railway Company and the Canada Land and Improvement Company, held by each of the undersigned, shall be placed in the hands of a trustee (who is to be selected by the undersigned), to be held by him during the time occupied in building the said railway, or until two-thirds of the owners or representatives of said stock, so held by said Trustees, shall elect to terminate said trust, and the said stock shall be voted on by the said Trustee or his successor, meanwhile, at all the meetings of stockholders, as he shall be directed to vote by the owners of a majority thereof. It is hereby agreed that after the one million of dollars heretofore mentioned, with the specified interest thereon, has been refunded to the parties advancing it, then all divisible profits of both the Canada Pacific Railway Company and the Canada Land and Improvement Company, shall be divided among the stock-holders of each Company in proportion to the shares they severally hold.

It is hereby understood that the names "Canada Pacific Railway Co." and "Canada Land and Improvement Co." are used for the sake of convenience, and in case different names shall be adopted by the Canadian Parliament, or in case they shall fail to authorize any such Land and Improvement Co., then this agreement shall be understood to relate to such railway as shall be authorized to be constructed in accordance with the provisions hereof across British Territory to the Pacific Ocean, Gulf of Georgia, or Straits of Fuca, and to the Improvement Company or Association proposed to be organized to construct the same, which may be organized under and in accordance with the laws of any of the States comprising the United States, and its terms shall govern the parties hereto in relation to the same, in the same manner as if the names above-mentioned had been used in the said proposed Charters for said proposed organizations.

It is understood that no moneys in excess of one hundred thousand dollars shall be drawn from the funds of the proposed Canada Pacific Railway Company until the actual construction of the road begins unless by consent of the owners of or subscribers to at least two-thirds of the ten millions of dollars of stock to be subscribed in accordance with the terms of this contract.

The essential conditions of the Charter referred to are a subsidy of fifteen thousand dollars ($15,000) per mile for each and every mile of Road constructed, payable on the completion of sections of twenty miles, and a grant of lands equal to twenty thousand acres per mile from all the Road except for Fort Garry East, on the North Shore of Lake Superior to a junction with the section proposed to be built from Lake Nipissing to the Sault Ste. Marie on which the grant of lands is to be equal to twenty-five thousand acres per mile. The only forfeiture in case of failure to complete the entire road within the time specified is to be the right to finish the uncompleted portions, the payments being absolute on the completion of each section of twenty miles.

The amounts proposed to be subscribed by the various parties to this contract are as follows:—J. Cooke and Co., $1,000,000; D. McLaren, $500,000; Wm. B. Ogden, $637,500; J. Copy of Supplemental Contract between Sir Hugh Allan and his American Associates, dated March 28th, 1872.

Whereas it appears that the Canadian Government prefer to give a gross sum of money and a gross amount of land for the construction of the Canada Pacific Railway and the branch thereof from Fort Garry to Pembina or St. Vincent or the international boundary line in that vicinity, now therefore the undersigned agree to so alter their contract or agreement of December 23rd, 1871, as to agree to take thirty-five millions of dollars (\$35,000,000) in money (gold), and fifty millions of acres of land in amount, to be selected as proposed, and the money to be paid pro rata per mile as constructed, each mile to be counted as the one twenty-five hundredth ($\frac{1}{2500}$) part of the whole line to be built, and the land at the rate of twenty thousand acres for every mile of railway built, and in case in the judgment of our associate, Sir Hugh Allan, it should be deemed expedient by him to submit to the acceptance of thirty-three millions of dollars in gold (\$33,000,000) and fifty millions (50,000,000) acres of land as compensation for the construction of said road, he is hereby authorized to do so; and in case a further reduction in price is found to be indispensable in order to secure the contract for the construction of the said Canada Pacific Railway, then J. Gregory Smith, Sir Hugh Allan, G. W. McMullen, Geo. W. Cass, and Wm. B. Ogden are hereby constituted a committee with authority in them or a majority of them to submit to such further reduction in the money price to be paid in their discretion or any sum not below thirty millions of dollars (\$30,000,000) as they shall think necessary or advisable, and the said committee or a majority of them shall have power to make such assessments from time to time, for the general purposes of the Company, not exceeding in all one and one half per cent. of the amounts agreed to be subscribed by us to the stock of the Canada Pacific Railway Company as they shall deem expedient. The said assessments are to be considered as part of the one million dollars agreed to be paid on the stock contracted to be subscribed by us in the agreement of December 23rd, 1871, and to be subject to the same conditions of payment and refunding with interest as are therein set forth.

And we hereby authorize the said Committee to take such other action for us as they may deem necessary in the premises consistent with the general terms of the contract of December 23, 1871, and as modified hereby.

Certified Copy of Letter from Sir G. E. Cartier to Sir Hugh Allan.

DEAR SIR HUGH, Montreal, July 30th, 1872.

I enclose you copies of telegrams received from Sir John Macdonald, and with reference to their contents I would say that in my opinion the Governor in Council will approve of the amalgamation of your Company with the Interoceanic Company under the name of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, the Provincial Board of the Amalgamated Company to be composed of seventeen members, of whom four shall be named from the Province of Quebec by the Canada Pacific Railway Company, four from the Province of Ontario by the Interoceanic Railway Company, and the remainder by the Government: the Amalgamated Company to have the powers specified in the tenth section of the Act incorporating the Canada Pacific Company, and the agreement of amalgamation to be executed between the Companies within two months from this date. The Canada Pacific Company might take the initiative in procuring the amalgamation, and if the Interoceanic Company should not execute an agreement of amalgamation upon such terms and within such limited time, I think the contemplated arrangements should be made with the Canada Pacific Company under its Charter.

Upon the subscription and payment on account of stock being made as required by the Act of last Session respecting the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, I have no doubt but that the Governor in Council will agree with the Company for the construction and working of the Canadian Pacific Railway with such branches as shall be agreed upon, and will grant to the Company all such subsidies and assistance as they are empowered to do by the Government Act. I believe all the advantages which the Government Act empowers the Government to confer upon any Company will be required to enable the works contemplated to be successfully carried through, and I am convinced that they will be accorded to the Company to be formed by amalgamation or to the Canada Pacific Company as the case may be.

I would add that as I approve of the measures to which I have referred in this letter, I shall use my best endeavours to have them carried into effect.

Very truly yours,
(Signed) GEO. E. CARTIER.

APPENDIX.

To the Hon. LUCIUS SETH HUNTINGTON, of the City of Montreal, in the Province of Quebec.

SIR,

Ottawa, August 21, 1873.

I have the honour to enclose herewith a printed copy of the Royal Commission appointing Commissioners to inquire into and report upon the several matters stated in the Resolution moved by you in the House of Commons on the 2nd day of April last, relating to the Canada Pacific Railway, and to inform you that the Commissioners therein named will meet in the City of Ottawa, in the Parliament House, on Thursday, the 4th day of September next, at noon, for the purpose of making inquiry and taking evidence concerning the allegations contained in the Resolution and fully set forth in the Commission. You are requested to furnish to the Commission, with all convenient diligence, a list of the witnesses whom you may wish to examine, in order that they may be duly summoned to appear on the day and at the place above specified, and you are requested then and there to proceed with your evidence in the premises.

I have, &c.,

(Signed)

CHARLES D. DAY,

Chairman.

SIR,

Ottawa, August 21, 1873.

I have the honour to inform you, that the Commissioners appointed to inquire into and report upon the several matters contained and stated in a certain Resolution moved by the Hon. Mr. Huntington in the House of Commons on the 2nd April, 1873, relating to the Canadian Pacific Railway, will meet in the Parliament House, in the City of Ottawa, on Thursday, the 4th day of September next, at noon, for the purpose of making inquiry and taking evidence, under the authority of the Commission, concerning the allegations and matters contained in that Resolution, and that notice has been given to the Hon. Mr. Huntington to appear and proceed with his evidence then and there.

I have, &c.,

(Signed)

CHARLES D. DAY,

Chairman.

CANADA. SIR,

Montreal, August 26, 1873.

I have the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 21st of August instant, enclosing a copy of the Royal Commission, appointing Commissioners to inquire into and report upon the several matters stated in the Resolution moved by me, in the House of Commons, on the 2nd day of April last, and requesting me to furnish to the Commission a list of the witnesses I might wish to examine, in order that they may be duly summoned to appear, and to proceed with my evidence.

I have to call your attention to the fact, apparent on the face of the Commission, that it was as a member of the House of Commons, and from my place in Parliament, that I preferred these charges against Ministers of the Crown, and members of that House, which, on the 8th day of April last, entertained the charges, determined to investigate them itself, and appointed a Select Committee to inquire into it and report upon them; and to the further fact, apparent on the Journals of the House, that to the said Committee I furnished a list of some of the principal witnesses, whose evidence I believe could establish my charges, and I have always been ready to proceed to the proof thereof before the tribunal constituted by the House for the investigation.

The determination of the Commons to investigate these charges remains unaltered, and I deem it inconsistent with my duty as a member of Parliament, and a breach of the undoubted privileges of the House, to recognize any inferior or exceptional tribunal, created to inquire into charges still pending before the Commons, and so essentially affecting the privileges, dignity, and independence of Parliament.

I believe that it is a breach of those privileges, that a Royal Commission issued without the special sanction of the House, should take any cognizance of, or should assume to call on me to justify, words which I have spoken on the floor of the Commons, and for which I am responsible to them, and to them alone.

I feel that I should do no act which may be construed into an acquiescence in the attempt to remove from the Commons the conduct and control of the inquiry.

I believe that the creation of the Commission involves a breach of that fundamental principle of the constitution, which preserves to the Commons the right and duty of initiating and controlling inquiries into high political offences; that it involves also a breach of that fundamental principle of justice which prevents the accused from creating the tribunal and controlling the procedure for their trial; and that it is a Commission without precedent, unknown to the Common Law, unsanctioned by the Statute Law, providing by an exercise of the prerogative for an inquiry out of the ordinary course of justice into misdemeanour cognizable by the Courts, and consequently illegal and void.

Entertaining these views, you will not expect me to act otherwise than in conformity with them, and you will be satisfied that by my non-appearance before the Commission I intend no disrespect to the Commissioners, but am moved by the same sense of public duty which will constrain me at the earliest practicable moment to renew the efforts which I have been making since April last to bring to trial before the Commons of Canada the men whom I have impeached as public criminals.

I have, &c.,

To the Hon. Charles D. Day, Chairman,
Ottawa.

I REFERRED to the Law Officers of the Crown your Despatch of October 4,* requesting instructions for your guidance in the event of an Act being passed by the Dominion Parliament, purporting to authorize the issue of a Commission of Inquiry into the Pacific Railway question, and to give to such Commission the power of examining witnesses on oath, and I have now to inform you that in their opinion that course would be beyond the powers of the Parliament of the Dominion.

MY LORD,

Downing Street, November 22, 1873.

I HAVE to acknowledge your Lordship's Despatch of the 3rd instant,* forwarding copies of the evidence taken before the Royal Commission appointed to inquire into the issue of the Canadian Pacific Railway Charter.

I am glad to learn that your Lordship is of opinion that the Commission discharged its duty effectively.

(Signed) KIMBERLEY.

No. 13.

The EARL OF DUFFERIN to The EARL OF KIMBERLEY.

MY LORD,

Canada, November 7, 1873.

I HAVE the honour to inform your Lordship that on Thursday, the 23rd of October, I opened Parliament with a speech, of which I have already forwarded a copy in a previous Despatch.

2. On returning to their chamber the House of Commons, at the instance of Sir John Macdonald, adjourned until the following Monday, in order that members might have time to acquaint themselves with the contents of the papers which had just been laid upon the table of the House.

3. These papers consisted of the Report of the Royal Commission, and of the body of evidence it had collected, and of my Despatches to your Lordship in reference to the Prorogation of Parliament on the 13th of August, and to the issue of the Commission, together with your Lordship's reply thereto, of October the 9th,† in which you are good enough to convey to me, on the part of Her Majesty's Government, your approval of my conduct in reference to these two transactions.

4. I thought it desirable that these three latter documents should be communicated to the House of Commons for two reasons. In the first place, they contained a statement of certain facts which illustrated and supplemented the evidence taken before the Commission, and which no one but myself was in a position to furnish; and in the next, they clearly showed that whether exception could or could not be justly taken to the general course of procedure adopted by my Ministers, no foundation existed for the impression which at one time prevailed, that the Queen's Prerogative had been exercised unconstitutionally, or with partiality, or in the intention of interfering with the privileges of Parliament. It was the more desirable that this should be made patent, as it was currently reported—of course I cannot say with what truth—that instead of raising the main and essential question as to the culpability of the transactions between my Ministers and Sir Hugh Allan, some of the opponents of the Government were inclining to take a vote on a side-issue in reference to the Prorogation of Parliament on the 13th of August, and to the alleged breach of privilege it involved, with a view of binding to their party those Ministerialists who had signed the Memorial addressed to me on that occasion.

5. As the position thus proposed to be occupied might incidentally commit the House of Commons to an opinion on a Constitutional question which could not be sustained, and as it seemed of the last importance that the intention of Parliament should not be diverted from what was the real issue to a subordinate controversy, I thought it well to discourage the adoption of this latter alternative—should it be in contemplation—by bringing to the knowledge of the House of Commons your Lordship's Despatch and my own communications to which it was a reply.

6. The presentation of these documents to Parliament has been complained of in some quarters as evincing a desire upon my part to afford undue assistance to my Ministers. Such an impression could only have been generated in the heat and confusion of a party conflict. The major part of my Despatches consisted of a simple narrative of facts. If these facts were true—and their accuracy cannot be impugned—whether they told for or against my Ministers, no just man could have wished them to be withheld. As for any incidental remarks or inferences interspersed through the narration, such remarks and inferences referred to the aspect of affairs as they existed on the 13th of August, and not to the totally distinct and altered issues upon which Parliament was proceeding to adjudicate.

* No. 10.

† No. 6.

CANADA.

7. On Monday, the 27th of October, the House of Commons met at three o'clock in the afternoon, and proceeded at once to the consideration of the Speech from the Throne, the debate commencing with an able and moderate speech from Mr. Mackenzie, in which he moved the subjoined amendment as an addition to the second paragraph:—

“And we have to acquaint His Excellency that by their course in reference to the investigation of the charges preferred by Mr. Huntington, in his place in this House, and under the facts disclosed in the evidence laid before us, His Excellency's Advisers have merited the severe censure of this House.”

8. This amendment raises a perfectly fair and direct issue, it goes to the root of the matter, it founds itself upon the evidence taken by the Commission, and neither directly nor indirectly does it impugn the act of Prorogation. Indeed, on perusing the Report of the discussion which ensued, your Lordship will perceive that the objections which at one time were so vehemently insisted upon in regard to this proceeding have been, so far as my action was concerned, almost entirely pretermitted, that Mr. Blake stated he would not even refer to them, and that most of the speakers, with an instinctive appreciation of what the exigencies of the case demanded, confined themselves to the consideration of what are the main substantive charges against my Ministers.

9. On the second night of the debate Mr. James Macdonald, member for Pictou, an eminent supporter of the Government, moved a second amendment in the following terms:—

“And we desire to assure His Excellency that after consideration of the statements made in the evidence before us, and while we regret the outlay of money by all political parties at Parliamentary elections, and desire the most stringent measures to put an end to the practice, we at the same time beg leave to express our continued confidence in His Excellency's Advisers, and in their administration of public affairs.”

10. The discussion on the two foregoing amendments continued, with the exception of an intervening Saturday and Sunday, for seven successive days, that is to say, from Monday, the 27th of October, to Wednesday, the 5th of November.

11. On the morning of that day Sir John Macdonald asked for an interview, at which he informed me that although he and his friends had had reason to expect a considerable majority when Parliament met, some unexpected defections had since occurred in the ranks of his supporters, and that he had just received an intimation from one or two more, which so compromised his prospects as to render it his duty to tender me his resignation as well as that of his colleagues. He then repaired to the House of Commons, and brought a debate of almost unprecedented length and interest to a close by the announcement of his surrender of the seals of office, and of my having called upon Mr. Mackenzie to form a Government in succession to himself.

12. The discussion not having been brought to the test of a vote, it is impossible to state with certainty what the result of a division might have been. For some time before the meeting of Parliament, and at the outset of the Debate, the Ministerialist side were very confident of a majority of from 16 to 25. I confess I always considered these calculations over sanguine. On the other hand,—even at the last moment, when their chance of success seemed most assured,—the Opposition, I have reason to believe, did not calculate on a vote of more than 8 or 10 in their favour, so that under any circumstances the division would have been a narrow one.

13. It may not, however, be inopportune to remark, that the fact of every single member of the House but two, having been present in Ottawa and prepared to vote on this occasion, exemplifies in the most striking way how mistaken I should have been on the 13th of August, had I taken the ninety-two signatories to remonstrance presented to me, as representing a “majority” of Parliament. If the House had gone to a division on the day on which Sir John Macdonald resigned, it would have become apparent that,—leaving out of account the new members for Prince Edward Island,—ninety-two votes would have represented a “minority” of fourteen on the total number given.

14. Many of the speeches delivered during the course of this remarkable discussion were characterized by great ability and power, several of them having been of three and four hours' duration. Sir John Macdonald did not address the House until Monday evening the sixth day of the debate, when he spoke continuously for five hours. Mr. Blake followed him with a speech of equal ability and importance, and was succeeded by other members of weight and eminence. It is not necessary I should indicate any of these eloquent efforts for your Lordship's special notice, as from the report of the proceedings you will yourself be able to judge of the various kind of merit displayed by each.

15. Unfortunately the shorthand writer's notes have to be telegraphed to the principal journals for publication, and as I have already stated to your Lordship in a previous Despatch, errors and lacunæ unavoidably occur during so complicated a process. Notwithstanding the imperfections arising from this source, your Lordship will not fail to perceive that when called upon to deal with a subject of gravity and moment, there are probably few assemblies in the world to which in eloquence, dignity, and ability for Debate, the Parliament of Canada need yield the palm.

16. I cannot close this Despatch, which describes the concluding scene of the painful drama of which I have been a spectator, without calling your Lordship's attention to the fact that the result arrived at,—a result not only hailed with satisfaction by the victors,—but what is of as great significance, acquiesced in by the vanquished, has been reached by a patient adherence to those constitutional principles which your Lordship has recommended to my observance.

17. If instead of proroguing Parliament on the 13th of August, I had dismissed my Ministers, or compelled them against their will,—had that been possible,—into a line of action which should have eventuated in their premature overthrow, a cry far more loud and genuinely indignant, than that evoked by prorogation, would have been raised throughout the country; and the action of the Crown in rashly discarding or abandoning untried men whom Parliament had recommended to its confidence, would have been denounced with equal vehemence and far greater reason, as a high-handed act of the Prerogative. Nothing so disturbs the march of justice, so confuses an issue, so rehabilitates wrong-doing, as that any irregularity of procedure, any appearance of sharp practice should vitiate the action taken against the accused, and the destruction of my late Government under such circumstances would always have been regarded by its adherents as having been brought about by violent means, and through the uncalled for intervention of an Imperial officer.

18. If my Ministers have now fallen, they have fallen after they have had every opportunity of stating their case to the country, and of pleading their cause before a full Parliament. If the verdict has gone against them, it has done so under circumstances which leave them no ground of complaint against the Representative of the Crown.

19. On the other hand it must be apparent to those who take an adverse view of the conduct of the late Administration, that a result which they would probably designate as the vindication of the national credit and public reputation of the Dominion, has been brought about, not by an ill-considered and hasty exercise of Imperial authority, nor by the application of premature pressure from without, but by the free and spontaneous action of the Representatives of the Canadian people—a conclusion which they will hail with a satisfaction, proportionate to their power of appreciating the privileges of self-government, and to the importance they may attach to Canada being recorded in history as having proved competent to the guardianship of her highest interests.

20. During the whole of this unfortunate business, I have never doubted but that a strict application of the principles of Parliamentary Government would be sufficient to resolve every difficulty, and that a result would be eventually arrived at in harmony with the convictions and wishes of the Canadian people. Had it proved otherwise, I still held in reserve a Constitutional power equal to any emergency, and in the last resort I should have been quite prepared to have exercised it in whatever way the circumstances of the case might have justified.

Correspondence relating to the Negotiations for a Reciprocity Treaty between Canada and the United States.

No. 1.

The Earl of Dufferin to the Earl of Carnarvon.

(Extract.)

Canada, February 24, 1874.

I HAVE the honour of sending herewith a full copy of the approved Order in Council of the 23rd of February, of which I have already communicated by telegram a slightly abbreviated transcript.

My present advisers are very anxious to take advantage of the opportunity which seems about to present itself of re-establishing a Reciprocity Treaty between Canada and the United States of America. I imagine that the course they contemplate will be generally approved throughout the country, and they assure me that it will meet with the approbation of Parliament.

Inclosure in No. 1.

Report of a Committee of the Honourable the Privy Council, approved by his Excellency the Governor-General in Council, on the 23rd February, 1874.

THE Committee of Council have had under consideration a Memorandum, dated 23rd February, 1874, from the Honourable Mr. Mackenzie, reporting that he considers the present a most favourable opportunity for a renewal of negotiations for a Reciprocity Treaty between Canada and the United States of America, by which the claim for compensation, as regards the fisheries, might be settled without the reference provided for by Article XXII of the Treaty of Washington, and therefore recommending that the Imperial Government be requested to authorize the British Minister at Washington to enter into negotiations on that subject with the Government of the United States.

The Committee concur in the opinion above expressed, and advise that a copy of this Minute be communicated by your Excellency to the Right Honourable the Secretary of State for the Colonies, for the consideration of Her Majesty's Government.

The Earl of Carnarvon to the Earl of Dufferin.

My Lord,

Downing Street, March 5, 1874.

WITH reference to your telegram of the 24th February forwarding an Order in Council of the 23rd of that month, from which it appears that your Ministers are of opinion that the present is a most favourable occasion for a renewal of negotiations for a Reciprocity Treaty, and in which they make a formal request that an attempt may be made to settle in this manner, and without reference to a Commission, the claim for compensation in regard to the fisheries, I have now the honour to transmit to you a copy of a despatch addressed by the Earl of Derby to Her Majesty's Minister at Washington,* instructing him to take immediate steps for entering into negotiations with the United States' Government, with a view to the renewal of the Reciprocity Treaty.

2. Upon learning the strong desire of your Ministers that a renewal of the Reciprocity Treaty should be sought for, Her Majesty's Government, though they had been fully prepared to abide by, and were in no way apprehensive of the results of, the reference contemplated by the provisions of that Treaty, did not hesitate to accede to that desire; and it will be seen, from the tenor of the instructions addressed to Sir E. Thornton, that full effect was at once given to what were understood to be the wishes of your Government.

3. As a simple and obvious course of procedure the IIIrd Article of the Reciprocity Treaty was suggested as the basis of the negotiation, it being, of course, open alike to Her Majesty's Government, on behalf of Canada, as to the Government of the United States, to propose any modifications of, or additions to, that Article, or to widen the field of discussion by introducing questions which were not disposed of by the Treaty of 1854.

4. Your Ministers may rest assured that Her Majesty's Government are desirous to meet, as far as it may be practicable to do so, their reasonable wishes upon this subject, and that they will be prepared to give careful consideration to any further proposals which may be made by your Ministers during the course of the negotiations.

5. I may add that, with a view to save delay, you are at liberty to communicate unreservedly, though, of course, confidentially, with Sir E. Thornton as to the views of your Government, taking care, however, to transmit to me, at the earliest opportunity, copies of such correspondence.

The Earl of Dufferin to the Earl of Carnarvon.

My Lord,

Government House, Ottawa, March 17, 1874.

I HAVE the honour to acknowledge the receipt of a telegram dated 14th March from your Lordship, in which you have been pleased to signify your assent to the request of my Government that a Canadian gentleman should be associated with Sir Edward Thornton in the event of Her Majesty's Government authorizing the British Minister at Washington to enter upon a negotiation with the United States for the whole or partial renewal of the Reciprocity Treaty.

I have been requested by Mr. Mackenzie and his colleagues in the Administration to convey to your Lordship their sense of the consideration which has been shown to their representations by Her Majesty's Government in this matter.

I have further to inform your Lordship that it is perfectly understood by the Dominion Government that Her Majesty's Government, in consenting to authorize the substitution of a Reciprocity Treaty in lieu of the money payment secured to Canada in respect of her fishery claims under the Article of the Treaty of Washington, have done so at the express instance and solicitation of the Canadian Government.

It is also understood that the Canadian Commissioner will act under Imperial instructions, and that all propositions to be made to the United States' Government will be previously submitted to the Secretary of State.

I have communicated a copy of this despatch to the Privy Council.

The Earl of Derby to Sir E. Thornton.

Sir,

Foreign Office, February 27, 1874.

I TRANSMIT to you herewith a copy of a telegraphic despatch, received by Her Majesty's Secretary of State for the Colonial Department from the Governor-General of Canada,* from which it appears that the Council of the Dominion are of opinion that the present is a most favourable opportunity for a renewal of negotiations for Reciprocity Treaty between Great Britain and the United States, by which the claim of Canada for compensation on account of the admission of American fishermen to the Canadian fisheries might be settled without the reference to a Commission provided by the Treaty of Washington; and the Council accordingly recommend that Her Majesty's Government may be requested to authorize you to enter into negotiations on the subject with the United States. The Governor-General adds that he has no doubt that the Parliament of the Dominion will approve this policy.

Her Majesty's Government are ready to make, on behalf of Canada, the proposal which the Council desire, and they now authorize you to propose to the United States' Government to enter into a Treaty to renew the IIIrd Article of the Reciprocity Treaty of 1854, with a provision for preserving in force Articles XXII to XXV of the Treaty of Washington, in case the arrangement now proposed should fail to be carried out within a limited time to be fixed for that purpose.

It will, of course, be understood that, if the United States' Government suggest any modifications in the Article of the Reciprocity Treaty which you are now to propose to renew, it will be equally open to Her Majesty's Government to suggest on behalf of Canada any modifications or additions which, after communication with the Government of the Dominion, may appear expedient.

Sir,

Foreign Office, March 14, 1874.

I HAVE to acquaint you that the Canadian Government have recommended Senator George Brown for the appointment of Commissioner to be associated with you in negotiating the proposed Reciprocity Treaty, and that Her Majesty's Government have concurred in this recommendation.

The Earl of Dufferin to the Earl of Carnarvon.

My Lord,

Ottawa, March 27, 1874.

I HAVE the honour of forwarding a copy of an approved Report of a Committee of the Privy Council on the subject of establishing reciprocal trade relations between the United States and Canada.

I have, &c.
(Signed) DUFFERIN.

Inclosure in No. 7.

Report of a Committee of the Honourable the Privy Council, approved by his Excellency the Governor-General in Council on the 26th March, 1874.

(Extract.)

THE Committee of Council have had under their consideration the correspondence between his Excellency the Governor-General and the Secretary of State for the Colonies, relating to a settlement of the claims of the Dominion for compensation of the fishery privileges granted to the United States by the Washington Treaty.

The Committee having ascertained that no objection would be raised by Her Majesty's advisers to a settlement without having recourse to the arbitration provided for in the Treaty, agreed, after deliberation, to the proposed course.

It was accordingly decided on to dispatch a confidential Agent to Washington, and this mission having been accepted by the Honourable George Brown, that gentleman proceeded to Washington early in February, and speedily succeeded in ascertaining that a general willingness existed on the part of leading Statesmen of the United States to enter into a new Commercial Treaty embracing the settlement of the claims of Canada for such compensation.

Upon receiving Mr. Brown's Report, application was made to the Imperial Government to authorize the British Minister at Washington to open negotiations with the United States' Government for more extended trade relations between the two countries, and at the same time requesting that a Canadian be appointed Commissioner to act with Sir Edward Thornton in such negotiations.

These requests were acquiesced in, and the Honourable George Brown was empowered to act as Imperial Commissioner on behalf of the Canadian Government.

In carrying on the negotiations the Canadian Commissioner will keep clearly in view the circumstances that the Government of Canada is desirous, on general principles, to afford every facility for the encouragement of international trade as mutually beneficial to both countries, conferring not alone pecuniary advantages, but tending to foster and strengthen a feeling of national friendship so desirable in the interest of peace and good neighbourhood to two countries occupying the geographical position towards each other of the United States and Canada, and that any measure which will tend to promote and maintain friendly intercourse and harmony between our neighbours and ourselves through the free interchange of commodities, so that it be not seriously prejudicial to our industrial interests, will receive the support of the Dominion Government.

Mr. Brown will communicate this view to Sir Edward Thornton, accompanied with the representation that the Government of Canada do not propose any modification in matters of trade and commerce which would in any way injuriously affect Imperial interests.

The Committee further advise that a copy of this Minute be sent to Mr. Brown, and that the Honourable A. J. Smith, Minister of Marine and Fisheries, be requested to proceed to Washington at an early day to confer with Mr. Brown more fully, and render such assistance as may be necessary to a perfect understanding of the whole question.

No. 8.

Sir E. Thornton to the Earl of Derby.—(Received May 11.)

(Extract.)

Washington, April 28, 1874.

I HAVE the honour to inclose copy of a paper which Mr. Brown and I yesterday submitted to Mr. Fish.

The greater part of this document is occupied with the history of the last fifty years of the trade relations between Canada and the United States, and shows the advantage which the United States, as well as Canada, would derive from greater liberality in those relations.

Mr. Fish took the document, and said that he was much occupied at this moment with Congressional business, but that he would take our proposals into consideration, and would let us have an answer as soon as he could.

Inclosure in No. 8.

Memorandum on the Commercial Relations, past and present, of the British North American Provinces with the United States of America.

THE Undersigned, Joint Plenipotentiaries of Her Britannic Majesty, with full powers for the negotiation and conclusion of a Treaty with the United States relative to Fisheries, Commerce, and Navigation, deem it fitting that, at the outset of the negotiations with which they have been charged, they should submit for the consideration of the Secretary of State some suggestions in regard to the commercial relations between the United States and the Canadian Dominion, which may not be unworthy of attention.

All the figures used in this memorandum are taken from the official documents of the United States' Government, except when otherwise stated.

When the British North American Provinces of Canada are spoken of, all the Provinces now composing the Dominion, and also the Island of Newfoundland, are included therein.

An impartial examination of the commercial relations that have existed between the United States and the British North American Provinces for the last fifty years, cannot fail to establish, we venture to think, beyond all doubt, that the traffic between them has been exceedingly valuable to both countries, but that the United States have, from first to last, reaped the largest advantage from it.

In the twelve years from 1821 to 1832 (both years inclusive) the United States official records show that the exports of the United States to the British North American Provinces were of the aggregate value—

							Dols.
In home products, of	30,591,117
In foreign products, of	403,909
Total United States exports	31,401,326
And that the entire imports of the United States in the same period from the Provinces were but	7,684,559
Leaving a balance of trade in favour of the United States of no less than	23,716,767

In the thirteen years following the above period (1833 to 1845), the same state of things is found, with a steady increase on the aggregate of traffic. The exports of the Republic to the British North American Provinces were—

							Dols.
Of domestic products	54,082,537
Of foreign products	4,640,332
Total United States exports (1833 to 1845)	58,722,869
And the imports of the Republic from the Provinces were but	23,356,275
Leaving a balance in favour of the United States of	35,366,594

Transportation in Bond.

In 1846 we entered upon a period when the United States' Government, after very many years of earnest effort, succeeded in obtaining from Great Britain a relaxation of the old restrictive navigation laws with regard to the British Colonies. With it came the international drawback system for the encouragement of overland transportation to and from the Atlantic Ocean without payment of duties. Although this measure only extended to the transport of merchandize, it is instructive to observe the immediate and remarkable effect it had on the direct transactions between the Republic and the Colonies. The aggregate imports and exports between the countries immediately rose from 8,074,291 dollars, in the year 1845, to the following figures :—

							Aggregate Import and Export Trade.
							Dols.
1846	9,344,150
1847	10,329,470
1848	12,029,122
1849	10,931,147
1850	15,193,497
1851	18,708,045
1852	16,619,315
1853	20,691,360
Total	113,846,106

Thus, while from 1821 to 1832 the aggregate annual traffic between the countries averaged 3,257,153 dollars, and from 1832 to 1845, 6,313,780 dollars per annum—under the influence of a more liberal policy the traffic rose, from 1846 to 1853, to no less an average than 14,230,763 dollars per annum.

And the balance of trade still preponderated enormously to the advantage of the United States. In these eight years the Republic exported to the Provinces—

							Dols.
Of home products	55,072,260
Of foreign products	22,020,254
Total United States exports (1846 to 1853)	77,092,514
While the imports of the Republic from the Provinces were but	36,753,592
Leaving in favour of the United States, on eight years' transactions, the vast balance of	40,338,822

But, in addition to this direct interchange of merchandize, with its great preponderance in favour of the Republic, a large amount of the import and export traffic between Great Britain and the Provinces now began to be carried in bond over the canals and railways of the United States to Atlantic or inland ports, and thence dispatched to their ultimate destinations in American ships and steamers, vastly to the gain of the Republic, and without any corresponding advantage to the Provinces.

The Reciprocity Treaty.

The great success that thus attended this first partial experiment of reciprocal liberality in commercial intercourse between the two countries, led directly and easily to proposals for the much more decided measure of an interchange of the natural products of the two countries free of Customs-duty. For a number of years the subject was keenly debated in all its bearings; and it is instructive to look back on the record of those discussions, and observe the long list of distinguished American statesmen who were warm advocates of the measure.

The Reciprocity Treaty of 1854 was signed on the 5th June of that year, by Mr. Marcy, on behalf of the United States, and by the late Lord Elgin, as representative of Great Britain. Its happy effects were felt instantaneously; and it is only necessary to refer to the speeches and papers of the able men of all parties in both countries, who promoted the measure, and to analyze the official returns of its operation while in force, to arrive irresistibly at the conclusion that its results greatly surpassed the most sanguine anticipations of its originators and advocates.

The Treaty may be said to have been thirteen years in operation; for though nominally it began in 1854 and ended early in 1866, the traffic was pushed with such energy during the months of its operation in those two years, as to place them on an equality with the other years.

To obtain a just appreciation of the value of the traffic between the Republic and the Provinces during the thirteen years' operation of the Treaty, it is necessary to keep in mind that the Civil War in the States in the last four years of the Treaty's existence enhanced the value of commodities, and so deranged the industrial interests of the Republic as to give the Provinces a temporary advantage in the traffic, forbidding any fair deduction from it as to the ordinary course of trade in times of peace. In one year (1865-66) at the end of the war the exports of British North America to the United States rose, according to the United States' official records, to 54,714,383 dollars.

However profitable this casual advantage may have been to the provinces, it can hardly be regarded as an objection to the Treaty that in time of war, when the American husbandman was debarred from tilling his fields, the necessities of life were largely supplied under it without the addition of onerous Customs duties and Custom-house restrictions. Assuredly, had the Treaty not then been in existence, every ton of these supplies, under the pressing urgency of the case, would have found its way across the lines, probably with little reduction of profit to the producer, but great increase of cost to the consumer.

The grand fact remains that, under the operation of the Reciprocity Treaty of 1854, the aggregate interchange of commodities between the Republic and the Provinces, to promote which the Treaty was concluded, rose from an annual average of 14,230,763 dollars in the previous eight years to 33,492,754 dollars gold currency, in the first year of its existence; to 42,942,754 dollars, gold currency, in the second year of its existence; to 50,339,770 dollars, gold, in its third year; and to no less a sum than 84,070,955 dollars at war prices, in its thirteenth year.

And notwithstanding the anomalous character of the circumstances arising from the existence of civil war during so considerable a portion of the Treaty's existence, by which the imports from the Provinces were greatly increased in volume and value, and the exports to the Provinces as naturally reduced in quantity, the balance of trade, during the existence of the Treaty, was largely in favour of the United States. In the thirteen years of its operation, the Provinces purchased from the Republic commodities, according to the United States' returns, to the value of 346,180,264 dollars, and the Republic purchased from the Provinces 325,726,520 dollars, leaving a gross cash balance in favour of the United States of 20,454,246 dollars. But the balance was, in fact, much larger than this. During the first ten years of the Treaty, the transactions between the countries showed a clear balance in favour of the United States of 62,013,545 dollars. That balance appears, from the United States' returns, to have been reduced, by the operations of the following three years, to the amount of 20,454,246 dollars; but this arose, no doubt, from the inflated values at which the importations into the United States from the Provinces were made under the Treaty during the war, their being no Customs duty to necessitate accuracy and every temptation to over valuation on the part of the importer. According to the official returns of the several British Provinces, which are accurately kept, the Provinces purchased from the Republic, during the thirteen years in question, commodities to the aggregate value of 359,667,257 dollars gold valuation, and the Republic purchased from the Provinces 197,056,257 dollars, in same valuation, leaving, as the sum total of the results of the Treaty of 1854, an aggregate international traffic of 623,437,525 dollars, and a gold balance in favour of the Republic of 95,796,989 dollars.

Traffic with Canada in Comparison with other States.

The importance of the Canadian traffic under the Reciprocity Treaty can be most clearly seen, perhaps, by a comparison of it with the transactions which the Republic had with other foreign countries during the same years. The total exports of the United States from 1854 to 1866, both years inclusive, amounted to 4,000,000,000 dollars. Of this vast export traffic—

	Dols.
England and her possessions took	2,769,974	538
France and her possessions took	453,993,996
Spain and her possessions took	265,893,221
Germany took	207,308,647
Total	3,697,170,402

And all the rest of the world took the balance.

Of the above exports, Canada's share, as we have already seen, was 346,180,264 dollars, an amount equal to the aggregate exports taken from the United States in the same years by China, Brazil, Italy, Hayti, Russia, and her possessions, Venezuela, Austria, the Argentine Republic, Denmark and her possessions, Turkey, Portugal and her possessions, the Sandwich Islands, the Central American States and Japan, all put together. In marked contrast to this, however, the United States imported from these countries, in the same years, to the amount of 538,523,386 dollars, leaving a cash balance to be paid to them by the Republic of 192,109,610 dollars, while Canada paid over to the States a cash balance of 95796,989 dollars in gold.

Character of Traffic under the Treaty.

The character of the commodities purchased from the Republic by the Provinces during the existence of the Reciprocity Treaty is also worthy of special note. In the thirteen years of its operation, the total purchases by the Provinces of United States home productions, and of foreign articles imported by the United States' merchants, were as follows :—

							Dols.
Animals and their products	35,433,213
Breadstuffs	112,058,473
Other farm products	3,242,982
Timber	8,511,488
Manufactures	88,649,855
Miscellaneous	24,044,977
							<hr/>
Total home productions	271,940,988
Foreign commodities bought from the merchants of the United States and imported into Canada	62,379,718
							<hr/>

From this it will be seen that not less than 151,029,573 dollars of manufactured goods were purchased from the United States by the Provinces under the operation of the Reciprocity Treaty.

Transportation Traffic under the Treaty.

Did nothing more, therefore, than the volume of traffic between the countries and the comparative contributions of each country to it, enter into the question of relative advantages derived from the Treaty by each, no doubt could exist as to the United States having reaped much greater profit from the Treaty of 1854 than the Provinces. But there is another very important branch of the account. The transportation traffic sent to and brought from foreign countries by the Provinces, in bond, over the railways and canals, and in the ocean ships and steamers trading from United States ports, rose under the operation of the Treaty to an importance secondary only to the traffic in domestic productions. Previous to the negotiation of the Treaty this traffic had assumed considerable dimensions, but the vast increase that occurred under its operation must have drawn very large gains into the coffers of the Republic, and indirect advantages quite as valuable as the direct ones. No official returns of the goods thus passed over by the United States seems to have been preserved until the fiscal year 1867-68 ; but from the returns since published, we can form some idea of the great profit that must have accrued to the Republic while the Treaty was in force. These returns thus state the values of the foreign exports that passed over the United States in transitu during the past six years :—

Of this vast traffic, 115,241,704 dollars consisted of merchandize imported by the Provinces from other countries and carried over United States' railways and canals into Canada ; and 48,556,557 dollars of it consisted of produce exported abroad from the Provinces via the United States. The fact that these two amounts appear to make unitedly more than the whole aggregate of the United States' transit trade, arises from shipments made from one part of Canada to another, and consequently appearing in the list of goods going into the United States, as well as in that of goods sent out from the United States. Nearly the whole of the traffic in transitu of the Republic in these six years, was either sent from or sent to the British Provinces. And from its volume in these recent years, we may form some idea of its great extent under the operation of the Treaty, when Colonial facilities for transportation were so different from what they now are.

The value of so vast a carrying trade is not easy to arrive at. Dr. Young, the able chief of the United States' Bureau of Statistics, recently stated that inward ocean freights on goods "vary from 100 per cent. on [the value of] salt and some other bulky articles, to 2 or 3 per cent. on dress goods," and that the "average on merchandize alone is not much less than 8 per cent." Now, if the ocean freight on ordinary merchandize is 8 per cent., how greatly more must be the per-centage of overland freights; and how infinitely greater must be the per-centage on the value of farm produce than on ordinary merchandize? If it is further considered that on the transit traffic to and from Canada, inland and ocean carriage have both to be paid for, and that a large proportion of the commodities are heavy and bulky, it will at once be seen what a fertilizing stream is poured by the merchants of the Dominion over the railways, canals, steam-ships, commission agents, and port cities of the Republic, even from the limited share of their traffic now sent via the United States, under a policy of severe restriction.

Special Privileges under the Treaty.

Nor was it merely from the vast interchange of commodities and the great carrying trade in bond that the United States reaped their golden annual harvest from the Treaty of 1854. It must not be forgotten that, by virtue of that Treaty, the Canadian canals and the navigation of the St. Lawrence were thrown open to the ships and commerce of the United States, on precisely the same footing as to those of the Canadian people, who had spent vast sums in their construction. How largely the Republic profited by this concession, the enormous amount of American merchandize passed through the Canadian canals in American bottoms, at tolls so low as to do little more than defray the cost of attendance and maintenance, the public records of both countries amply establish. The sole return made to the Provinces for this concession was the permission to navigate Lake Michigan, and the promise of the United States' Government to urge upon the State Authorities of the Republic to extend to the Provinces the same free use of the American canals as they had extended to the Republic. This promise never bore any fruit.

The St. Lawrence Coast Fisheries Free under the Treaty.

But the crowning concession enjoyed by the United States, under the conditions of the Reciprocity Treaty of 1854, was the free use of the priceless coast fisheries of British North America. For this concession the able statesmen who represented the thirteen States in the peace settlement at the close of the revolutionary war, struggled long and earnestly. To secure this much valued possession, all the skill of American diplomatists, persistently employed for three-quarters of a century, was exerted in vain. Under the Treaty of 1818, the right to the sea-fisheries of the Gulf of St. Lawrence was resigned to the United States; but not until 1854, and then only as part of the Reciprocity Treaty, and terminable with it, did they obtain access to the most valuable portion of the fisheries, namely, those within three miles from the coast, bays, and creeks of the Provinces. What the value was to the United States of this concession it would not become us to discuss while an arbitration to determine the compensation to be paid Canada for twelve years' further enjoyment of it is pending, under the provisions of the Treaty of Washington. But, as illustrative of the enormous preponderance of advantages reaped by the United States under the Treaty of 1854, we may, perhaps, be permitted to quote one or two extracts from the Reports of two Commissioners, specially appointed by the United States' Government to inquire and report on the subject of Reciprocity, as to the value of this one item in the balance of the international account:—

"Without participation in the sea fisheries near the shores of the Colonies, our deep sea fisheries in that region will become valueless."—J. D. Andrews' Report, page 35.

"England possesses no nursery for seamen at all equal to her North American Colonial trade."—Ibid.

"The average number of French seamen engaged in the cod fishery [of the Gulf of St. Lawrence] from 1841 to 1850 was 11,500, and the average bounty paid annually was 3,900,000 francs, (780,000 dollars), equivalent to 67 dol. 60 c. for each seaman. France trains up in this manner able and hardy seamen for her navy, who would cost the nation much more if they were trained on ships of war."—Ibid.

"The United States' tonnage engaged in 1862 in the cod fishery was 122,863 tons; in the mackerel fishery, 80,596 tons: aggregate 203,459 tons. The returns of fish and oil from this tonnage for 1862 considerably exceeded 14,000,000."—E. H. Derby, p. 42.

"Seamen (United States) in fisheries in 1862, 28,048. . . . The fisheries break in at least 5,000 new seamen annually. . . . Six hundred sail have, in a single season, fished for mackerel in the Gulf of St. Lawrence and Bay of Chaleur, and taken fish to the amount of 4,500,000. . . . Nearly one-fourth of our fishing fleet, with a tonnage of 40,000 to 50,000 tons, worth 5,000,000 to 7,000,000 dollars annually, fish near the three-mile line of the Provinces.”—Ibid, p. 44.

Repeal of the Treaty.

Such was the Treaty of 1854, which the United States terminated in 1866, on the ground that the advantages from it were all on the side of the Provinces, and against the Republic. Well might the Commissioner of the United States' Treasury, (Mr. Derby), writing regretfully of the repeal, use these words :—“ It quintupled our trade with the Provinces, gave an impulse to public improvement, and utilized the new canals, railways, and other avenues of commerce.” And he might as truly have added :—“ Had the Provinces retaliated in the same spirit, it would have lost us the enjoyment of the shore fisheries of the maritime provinces, the use of the Canadian canals, and the navigation of the St. Lawrence River, all of which we enjoyed without consideration.”

Fortunately, the Provinces did not act in the same spirit. They thoroughly believed in the practical good sense of the United States' people—especially with such a balance sheet to look back upon as the results of the Treaty of 1854 present. They assumed that there were matters existing in 1865-66 to trouble the spirit of American statesmen for the moment, and they waited patiently for that sober second thought which was sure ere long to put all things right.

Immediately on the repeal of the Treaty, Customs duties were imposed by the United States on nearly all the articles imported under it from the Provinces. The Canadian Tariff was very little changed, and, as will be presently shown, a large preponderance of the exports from the United States into the Dominion are still admitted free of duty. The use of the Canadian canals was continued to American shipping and commerce on precisely the same terms as to those of Canada. The free navigation of the River St. Lawrence was still left open to American craft, and the shore fisheries of the St. Lawrence were thrown open from year to year to American fishermen, on payment of a small license fee.

Effect in Canada of the Abrogation of the Treaty.

The industry of Canada had been largely directed to the supply of the American market with commodities for home consumption, as well as for foreign exportation, and the repeal in 1866 of the Reciprocity Treaty, under which so vast a trade had grown up, rendered imperatively necessary prompt measures to open new markets for the sale of Canadian produce. These measures were at once taken. Under the influence of the formal notice given by the United States in 1865, of their intention to terminate the Treaty, Federation of the Provinces, then under discussion, was hurried on, and became a fait accompli within fifteen months after its repeal. The Intercolonial railway was at once undertaken, at a cost of over 20,000,000 dollars, at the national expense, to secure direct connection to and from the Atlantic Ocean, at Halifax and St. John, on Canadian soil; and the last section of that road will shortly be opened for traffic. Commissioners were dispatched to the British and other West India Islands, and to South American States, to promote the extension of direct trade between them and the Dominion. The enlargement of the canals, the improvement of the navigation of the lakes and River St. Lawrence, the construction of the Bay Verte Canal, to connect the waters of the Bay of Fundy and the St. Lawrence, the subsidizing of ocean and river steam-ship lines, and the promotion of the great ship-building and fishery interests, all received a new and vigorous impetus.

These measures were attended with remarkable success. Only seven fiscal years have passed since the repeal of the Treaty, but already the loss inflicted by it has been more than made up, and excellent outlets in new directions opened for Canadian commerce; with an increasing annual proportion of the vast carrying trade formerly done for the Provinces by the railways, canals, and steam-ships of the Republic, transferred to Canadian hands. The traffic between the United States and the Provinces at once fell, from an average during the three years before the repeal (according to American official statistics), of nearly 75,000,000 dollars per annum to an average of 57,000,000 dollars per annum during the first three years following repeal;—the act of confederation, too, removed from the category of foreign commerce to that of home consumption, the large interchanges of commodities between the several sections of the Dominion; and the aggregate foreign commerce of the provinces consequently fell in the first year after the repeal of the Treaty to 139,202,615 dollars from 160,409,455 dollars in the previous year. As will be seen from the following statement, however, the trade of the Dominion speedily recovered from the blow, and the volume of its foreign commerce gradually increased until, in the seventh year from the repeal of the Treaty, it reached the great sum (for a people of 4,000,000 of 235,301,203 dollars, being 75,000,000 higher than it had ever reached in any year of the Treaty's existence :

Injurious effect of Repeal on United States' Trade.

The traffic between the United States and the Dominion still retained large proportions, notwithstanding the barriers now raised against it. The aggregate imports and exports which immediately before the repeal had been (according to the United States' returns) 67,909,162 dollars in 1864, 71,374,816 dollars in 1865, and 84,070,955 dollars in 1866, fell immediately after the repeal to 57,927,347 dollars in 1867, 56,624,493 dollars in 1868, and 56,287,546 dollars in 1869. But there the falling off stopped. The volume of traffic then began steadily to reascend, and reached 67,939,125 dollars in 1870, 71,927,077 dollars in 1871, 73,720,512 dollars in 1872, and 82,381,626 dollars in 1873, or within 2,000,0000 dollars of the highest point reached during the Treaty's operation. The aggregate traffic between the countries in the seven fiscal years since the repeal was 466,807,726 dollars.

But large as this volume of trade is, it is instructive to observe how small a proportion of the foreign commerce of Canada this now forms, in comparison with the share of it enjoyed by the United States while the Treaty was in operation. During its thirteen years' existence the aggregate exchange of commodities between the countries averaged 46 per cent. of the entire foreign commerce of the Provinces; and in its last year the average had reached not less than 52½ per cent. of their entire commerce. But since the repeal the case is totally altered. The proportion of the foreign commerce of Canada transacted with the United States from 52½ per cent. in 1866, fell, in 1867, to 42 per cent.; in 1868, to 41 per cent.; in 1869, to 40 per cent.; in 1870, to 42 per cent.; in 1871, to 40 per cent.; in 1872, to 36 per cent.; and in 1873, to 35 per cent. The average proportion of the commerce of the Provinces has been since the repeal but 38½ per cent., against nearly 50 per cent. in the last five years of the Treaty. Had the Treaty not been abrogated in 1866, and the per-centage of Canadian traffic with the States risen no higher than it did under the Treaty, the interchange of commodities between the countries in the last seven years would have aggregated 600,000,000 dollars.

Changed Character of the Traffic since Repeal.

But it is not only in the diminution of commerce that the United States have suffered by the abrogation of the Treaty. The changed character of the traffic now carried on between the countries, in comparison with that formerly done is also worthy of attentive observation. For example, the consumption of lumber throughout the Republic increases enormously every year, and indeed, all over the world. The home supply of it in the United States is fast disappearing; prices go up steadily; and here is the result, since the repeal of the Treaty, on the United States' purchases from Canada, of that one article :—

						Dols.
1866-67	Lumber exports to United States	6,437,860
1867-68	"	"	"	"	"	6,727,006

1871-72	"	"	"	"	"	8,410,917
1872-73	"	"	"	"	"	11,134,956

And the prices of lumber go up in prompt sympathy with the increasing demand, for the benefit of the lumber operators, who are in no need of sympathy in Canada, whatever they may be in the United States, but to the injury of numerous branches of industry in which wood forms an important element, and to the serious embarrassment of agricultural operations on prairie and other lands.

And so it is with fish, barley, peas, wool, hides, sheep, horses, and other articles of Canadian production, which cannot easily be got elsewhere. The demand from the United States is good and constant, notwithstanding the Custom-house barriers, and the prices keep steadily up.

Traffic driven from United States' Channels.

But in regard to wheat, flour, provisions, and other articles of which the United States have a surplus as well as Canada, the effect of the duties upon them has been to send through Canadian channels, direct to the maritime Provinces, the West India Islands and Great Britain, a vast amount of products that were formerly sold to New York and Boston houses, and shipped to these same markets through American channels. Where two countries alongside of each other have each a large annual surplus of the same article, and that article is in world-wide demand, heavy duties against each other can hardly be effective. The stuff will find its way to market by some route or other.

Canadians now large Exporters of Western Products.

The change in the other side of the account is equally instructive. The imports of domestic productions of the United States (as distinguished from foreign productions) into Canada, in the four years previous to the abrogation of the Treaty averaged 28,131,802 dollars annually; but on its abrogation they immediately fell to 20,548,704 dollars in 1867; and though they have since gradually recovered, so that the imports of the last seven years have averaged 25,649,349 dollars per annum, this was due, not to a demand for home consumption, but to the increasing carrying trade of the Dominion with foreign countries. The necessity of direct intercourse with foreign markets for Canadian products, forced on Canadian merchants by the repeal of the Treaty, led on to a considerable traffic with those markets in American domestic products; hence we find in the imports of Canada from the United States in the last four years, such items as the following :—

						1871-72.	1872-73.
						Dols.	Dols.
Meats—fresh, salted, and smoked	1,047,272	1,227,870

Wheat	4,450,404	6,894,247
						12,493,082	16,254,365

Large portions of these articles were purchased for foreign exportation, either in the raw state or after being manufactured in Canada. The general progress of this trade, though not consisting solely of American products, is pretty well indicated by the following official returns :—

							Dols.
1868	Exports of foreign goods	4,196,821

1873	"	"	9,405,910
Total in six years							46,583,312

The home consumption of American domestic products in the Canada market has, therefore, largely decreased since the repeal of the Reciprocity Treaty.

Balance of Trade now largely against the Republic.

But the most remarkable effect of the abrogation of the Reciprocity Treaty was the immediate change it produced in the balance of trade between the countries. From the year 1820 up to 1866, a term of forty-six years, there were only (according to the United States' returns) five years in which the annual transactions between the Republic and the Provinces did not show a large cash balance against the Provinces. But four of these five exceptions were merely the result of war prices and the over valuation usual in free entries. The entire interchange of traffic from 1820 to 1866 showed a cash balance in favour of the United States of 195,219,272 dollars. But this state of things came to a sudden end with the expiration of the Treaty, and the balances in favour of the Dominion have since been as follows :—

Diversion of Traffic from United States' Ocean Ports.

There is still another feature of the changed relations between the countries well worthy of special note. The time was when the merchants of New York and Boston controlled a large proportion of the import and export traffic of the British provinces ; but that time passed away with the Reciprocity Treaty. Customs duties, Custom-house restrictions and examinations, Consuls' certificates, and bonding entries and charges, with all their annoyances and delays, have acted severely against the traffic of these ports in Canadian products, and the railways and canals leading from them, and forced the business into more northern channels.

Mr. E. H. Derby, Special Commissioner of the Treasury, in his official report to Mr. McCulloch of 1st January, 1866 (page 81), makes this statement : " The commerce of Boston affected by the Reciprocity Treaty exceeds 27,000,000 dollars annually, namely : Imports from and exports to the maritime provinces, 6,000,000 dollars ; outfits and returns in deep sea fisheries, 11,000,000 dollars ; imports of wool, grain, and animals across the frontier of Canada, and entered there, with returns, at least 10,000,000 dollars." We have no personal knowledge as to the accuracy of this estimate, but no better authority on the point than Mr. Derby could be desired. But if this was the annual interest of one United States' port affected by the Treaty in 1866, when the entire annual foreign commerce of the province was little more than 100,000,000 dollars, how shall the gain of 5,000,000 or 6,000,000 dollars to the United States' Treasury, levied on such necessities of life as beef, flour, coal, lumber, &c., compensate the loss of driving away from the great marts of the Republic the lion's share of a traffic already amounting to 235,000,000 dollars per annum :

Comparative Importance of Canadian Traffic in spite of Restrictions.

But with all these barriers and drawbacks in the way of natural and easy traffic, it is in the highest degree instructive to observe how important the commercial transactions between the Republic and Canada remain, even now, in comparison with those between the United States and countries more remote. Permit us to analyze the export traffic of the United States for the fiscal year ending 30th June, 1872, in order to show this. In that year the entire export traffic of the Republic with foreign countries, including the trade in transitu, was as follows :—

					Dols.	Dols.
Of home products	549,219,718
Of foreign products	22,769,749
Of foreign products in transitu over the railways, &c., of the United States to foreign countries	31,385,320
Total United States export traffic, 1871-72					603,374,787
Of this vast traffic Great Britain and her Colonies (omitting Canada and Newfoundland) took from the United States—
Of home products	329,224,701
Of foreign products	8,844,872
Of goods in transitu	3,420,332
						341,489,905
Total export traffic						261,884,882

	Dols.	Dols.
Of this remaining traffic, the British North American Provinces took—
Of home products	27,774,091
Of foreign products	4,984,989
Of goods in transitu	24,098,114
Total British North American Provinces.. ..	56,857,194
Germany took	43,483,003
France and her possessions	34,704,730
Spain and her possessions	27,577,792	162,622,719
And all the rest of the world.. .. .		99,262,163

From these figures it will be seen that, in the year 1871-72, Great Britain and her Colonies (including Canada) took over 66 per cent. of the entire export traffic of the United States, and all the rest of the world but 34 per cent.

It will also be seen that, in that year, the Canadian Dominion and Newfoundland took 13,874,191 dollars more of the export traffic of the United States than did any country in the world outside the British Empire; that she took 22,152,464 dollars more of it than France and all her possessions, and more than double the amount taken by Spain and all her possessions.

A further analysis of the foreign commerce of the United States shows that, in the same year, the export traffic from the United States to the Dominion exceeded the entire exports of the United States to the Chinese Empire, the Russian Empire, Brazil, Mexico, Italy, Japan, Hayti, Venezuela, Denmark and her possessions, Chili, Portugal, and her possessions, the Central American States, the Austrian Empire, the Argentine Republic, the Turkish Empire, the Sandwich Islands, Sweden, Norway, Liberia, and Greece all put together. The total export traffic of the United States to these twenty countries, in home products, foreign goods, and goods in transitu, being 56,663,359 dollars, while that to Canada was 56,857,194 dollars.

A continued analysis of the United States' official Returns shows that, while Canada in 1871-72 thus swelled the export sales of the domestic and foreign goods in the United States, and the carrying trade of their ocean fleet and railways and canals, to an equal extent with the above twenty countries, the United States took that year from Canada in return but 40,991,432 dollars, of which 4,614,502 dollars was gold and silver, 1,180,790 dollars goods of United States' production returned to the States from Canada, and 691,299 dollars effects of immigrants passing through Canada into the United States. But, on the other hand, while the twenty countries above-named took, as above stated, but 56,663,359 dollars of the export traffic of the United States, their import traffic into the United States was no less than 108,377,613 dollars—of which only 7,218,620 dollars was gold.

Comparative Duties in the United States and Dominion.

Again: of the entire purchases by Canada from the United States in 1871-72 of home and foreign products (excluding the traffic in transitu from the comparison), articles to the value of 20,710,532 dollars were admitted free of duty, and only on 12,048,548 dollars was any duty paid. The total amount of duty levied was 2,216,215 dollars, or an average per centage on Canada's entire importations from the States (free and dutiable) of that year, of only $6\frac{3}{4}$ per cent. On the other hand, of the purchases by the United States from Canada in the same year, the articles admitted free of duty were to the value of but 9,329,881 dollars, and those subjected to duty 31,631,551 dollars. Indeed, as there were included among the free importations 4,619,502 dollars of gold and silver coin and bullion, 1,180,790 dollars of United States' productions returned to the States, and 686,800 dollars of effects of immigrants passing through Canada into the States,—the free importations of merchandize from Canada by the United States were, in reality, but 2,842,789 dollars, against 31,631,555 dollars, on which Customs duties were levied to somewhere about 25 per cent. on the entire importations of the year.

Same Facts demonstrated in 1873.

And the same state of things is found in the year ending 30th June, 1873. The declared value of the entire export traffic of the United States with foreign countries was as follows :—

						Dols.
Of home products	649,132,563

Of the above great amount of traffic taken from the United States by Great Britain and her Colonies Canada took—

France and her possessions took	36,083,266
Spain and her possessions took	29,257,121
And all the rest of the world took	100,234,468

Great Britain and her possessions took 67 per cent. of the entire export traffic of the United States for 1872-73, and all the rest of the world but 33 per cent.

With the exception of Germany (whose traffic exceeded that of the Dominion by only 3,367,681 dollars) Canada in this year was the largest customer of the United States outside the British Empire. She took 29,273,470 dollars of United States export traffic more than was taken by France and her possessions; more than double what was taken by Spain and her possessions; and more than the Russian Empire, Japan, Italy, Brazil, Mexico, Hayti, Peru, the Argentine Republic, Venezuela, Sweden, Norway, Denmark and her possessions, Chili, China, Uruguay, the Austrian Empire, the Turkish Empire, the Central American States, Portugal and her possessions, the Sandwich Islands, Liberia, and Greece all put together. These twenty-two countries took in all 64,901,145 dollars of the export traffic of the United States, of which 12,397,315 dollars was gold, while Canada alone took 65,356,740 dollars, of which only 4,269,181 dollars was gold.

On the other hand, the United States in the same year imported from Canada but 43,809,070 dollars, of which 6,159,538 dollars was gold, 1,211,155 dollars products of the United States returned from Canada to the States, and 729,985 dollars, effects of immigrants passing through Canada into the United States. The actual importation of Canadian merchandize was, therefore, but 35,708,392 dollars, while the twenty-two countries above-named, whose share of the United States export traffic of the year was but 64,901,145 dollars, including gold, or 52,593,830 dollars excluding it, sent into the United States in the same year no less than 131,101,423 dollars, of which but 2,104,393 dollars was gold. The "balance of trade" for the years 1872-73, therefore, was 52,593,830 dollars of export traffic from the United States into these twenty-two countries, and 128,997,030 dollars of imports into the United States from them, or 76,303,200 dollars against the United States.

And the contrast is even more marked when the United States customs duties on Canadian products are compared with those on the products of other countries whose commerce is of infinitely less moment than that of Canada. In the year 1872-73, of the 35,708,392 dollars of merchandize imported by the United States from Canada, only 4,334,285 dollars was admitted free of duty, and on the remaining amount of 31,374,107 dollars duties were levied to somewhere about 25 per cent. on the entire importations from Canada of that year. Canada, on the other hand, on her importations from the United States the same year, admitted merchandize to the value of 22,016,690 dollars entirely free of duty, and levied duties on only 16,555,866 dollars, to the amount of but 2,923,795 dollars, or 8½ per cent. on the entire importations of merchandize for the year. How different was it with the twenty-countries above-named. Of their importations into the United States, 102,501,338 dollars were received free of duty, and only on 29,200,085 dollars was any duty charged.

It is not for us to criticise in any way the manner in which the United States choose to impose their duties. We merely mention these things to remind you of the disadvantageous position Canada occupies in her transactions with the Republic, in comparison with that of other countries, whose transactions are not to be compared in extent or profit with those of the British provinces.

When, with all these facts before them, Her Majesty's Advisers invite the Government of the United States to reconsider the whole commercial relations of the Republic and the Dominion, with a view of placing them on a friendly and durable basis of reciprocal advantage, the question naturally presents itself, how it comes that, having prospered so well since the repeal of the Reciprocity Treaty of 1854, Canada now seeks for its restoration. The answer is as natural as the question. The population of the United States is 40,000,000, and that of the Dominion is but 4,000,000. The boundary between them is, for the most part, but a surveyor's line often unknown even to those who live beside it; and it is of the utmost importance to Canada that common interests and mutual good will should exist between the countries. And what so conducive to this end as commercial intercourse, generously carried on and mutually profitable? The people of Canada are not ignorant that a market near at hand is better than a distant one; and, good as their present markets are, they would gladly have the old one in addition. They comprehend the barrier that Custom-house restrictions throw in the way even of the existing traffic; and they seek to have these withdrawn. They are proud of their own St. Lawrence route, and intend to improve it to the uttermost for the benefit of the great West and their own; but would gladly use the ocean ports and other channels of commerce of the Republic, when freights and fares and friendly reciprocity draw them in that direction. And very great as have been the advantages always accruing to the United States from reciprocity, the Canadians can find only cause of hearty rejoicing at that, so long as they themselves continue to enjoy that moderate degree of prosperity with which Providence has blest them. There is no mystery or arrière-pensée, in their desire that the commercial relations of the Republic and the Dominion should be placed on the most kindly and unfettered and mutually advantageous basis consistent with their respective existing obligations, and with that connection with Great Britain which the Dominion so happily enjoys.

It was with these views and in this spirit that the Canadian Administration availed itself of the opportunity presented by the XXIInd Article of the Treaty of Washington to represent to Her Majesty's Government the advantage that would accrue to both countries by the substitution of a satisfactory Commercial Treaty in lieu of the money compensation to be paid (under arbitration) by the United States for twelve years' enjoyment of the coast fisheries of the Dominion. It was felt that if the large value placed by the Canadian people on their fisheries were not reasonably compensated by the results of the arbitration, a feeling of dissatisfaction might be engendered in the provinces, not conducive to international harmony; and that if, on the other hand, an award were made equal to the confident anticipations of the provinces, the good feeling restored in the United States by the Treaty of Washington might be sensibly impaired. To merge the matter in a general measure of mutual commercial concession, for the mutual advantage of both parties, and with injury or injustice to neither, seemed the fitting conclusion to be arrived at by the Governments of two great nations.

Her Majesty's Ministers were pleased to adopt the suggestion of the Canadian Government, and the matter having been brought under the attention of the Secretary of State, and through you, Sir, to the notice of the President of the United States, a friendly response was at once received, and the necessary measures instituted for opening formal negotiations.

In the interview which we had the honour to be favoured with by you at the State Department on the 28th March, we stated to you that Her Majesty's Government was prepared to accept a renewal of the Reciprocity Treaty of 1854 as a substitute for the arbitration provision of the Washington Treaty, in reference to the Canadian Coast Fisheries.

You, thereupon, suggested an enlargement of the scope of the Treaty, and we asked in what manner you would propose to enlarge it.

You replied that you had no proposition to make, but that you suggested, as topics for discussion—the enlargement of the Canadian Canals, so as to facilitate the transportation of the products of the great Western States to the Atlantic seaboard; and also the addition of certain classes of manufactures to the free list of the old Treaty.

We then stated that we were prepared to enter into an agreement for the enlargement of the Canadian canals.

In regard to the addition of certain classes of manufactures to the free list under the old Treaty, we reminded you that the revenue of the Canadian Dominion was largely obtained from a 15 per cent. ad valorem duty on manufactured goods, and that any articles made free in Canada under agreement with any foreign country must be made free to Great Britain. But we added that the Government of Canada was desirous to afford every facility for the encouragement of extended commercial relations between the Republic and the Dominion, in the belief that nothing could tend more to their mutual advantage, not only in a pecuniary sense, but as tending to foster and strengthen those friendly feelings that ought eminently to prevail between two peoples mainly derived from the same origin, speaking the same language, and occupying the geographic position towards each other of the United States and Canada. We conveyed to you the assurance of the Canadian Government, that acting in this spirit, and in the confidence that we would be met in the same spirit by the Government of the Republic, the assent of Canada will be heartily given to any measure calculated to promote the free and fair interchange of commodities, to reduce the cost of transportation, or conduce to the joint advantage of the two countries, so that it be not seriously prejudicial to existing industrial interests of the Canadian people.

In the spirit of this assurance, we invited you to suggest for discussion the classes of manufactures that you would desire to have embraced in the new Treaty. This you declined to do; but you urged that we should indicate the enlargement of the old Treaty likely to be acceptable to both countries. Without acquiescing in the propriety of this course, we yielded to your wishes, and now proceed to fulfil our promise to do so.

Suggestions.

We propose that the new Treaty shall be for the term of twenty-one years,—to inspire confidence among business men investing their capital in such extensive enterprises as would naturally follow from the completion of a comprehensive Treaty.

We propose that the Treaty shall provide for the free admission into the United States, the Dominion of Canada, and the Island of Newfoundland, of the following articles, as under the Treaty of 1854:

Animals of all kinds.	Meats, fresh, smoked, or salted.

We propose that during the continuance of the Treaty the coasting trade of Canada and of the United States shall be thrown open to the vessels of both countries on a footing of complete reciprocal equality.

We propose that the Canadian canals, from Lake Erie to Montreal, be enlarged forth with at the expense of Canada, so as to admit of the passage of vessels 260 feet in length, with 45 feet beam, with a depth equal to the capacity of the lake harbours.

We propose that, during the continuance of the Treaty, all the Canadian canals and the Erie, Whitehall, Sault Ste. Marie, and Lake St. Clair canals, in the United States, shall be thrown open to the vessels, boats, and barges of both countries on the same terms and conditions to the citizens of both countries; and that full power be given to tranship cargo from ships or steamers into canal-boats at any canal entrance, and also to tranship boats into ships or steamers at any canal outlet.

The free navigation of the St. Lawrence River having been conceded for ever by Great Britain to the United States under the Washington Treaty, but the free navigation of Lake Michigan having been conceded for ten years only by the United States to Great Britain under the same Treaty, we propose that both concessions be placed on the same footing, free from restrictions as to reporting at any port in the United States other than the port of destination.

We propose that during the continuance of the Treaty vessels of all kinds, built in the United States or Canada, may be owned and sailed by the citizens of the other, and be entitled to registry in either country, and to all the benefits thereto pertaining.

We propose that a Joint Commission shall be formed, and continued during the operation of the Treaty, for deepening and maintaining in thoroughly efficient condition the navigation of the rivers St. Clair and Detroit, and Lake St. Clair, on whichever side of the river the best channel shall be found; the expense to be defrayed jointly by the contracting parties, by contributions corresponding to the commerce carried on in these waters by them respectively.

We propose that a Joint Commission shall be formed, at joint expense, and maintained during the operation of the new Treaty, for securing the erection and proper regulation of all lighthouses on the great lakes common to both countries, necessary to the security of the shipping thereon.

We propose that a Joint Commission shall be formed at joint expense, and maintained during the continuance of the Treaty, to promote the propagation of fish in the inland waters common to both countries, and to enforce the laws enacted for the protection of the fish and fishing grounds.

We propose that citizens of either country shall be entitled, during the continuance of the Treaty, to take out letters patent for new discoveries in the other country, on the same footing as if they had been citizens of that country.

We propose that the best method of discountenancing and punishing illicit trade between the countries shall be the subject of consideration and co-operation by the Customs authorities of the two countries.

That in case a Treaty of Commercial Reciprocity should not have been concluded before the end of the present session of Congress, the right of adjudication of the claim of Canada to compensation for the fisheries, under Articles XXII to XXV of the Treaty of Washington, would in no degree be waived, and that in that event the fulfilment of the stipulations contained in those articles would be immediately proceeded with.

No. 10.

Sir E. Thornton to the Earl of Derby.—(Received June 30.)

(Extract.)

Washington, June 17, 1874.

I HAVE the honour to inform your Lordship that, after a great many conferences which Mr. Brown and I have had during the last few days with Mr. Fish, we have at length agreed upon a draft Treaty for the regulation of the commercial relations between the United States and Canada, which Mr. Fish has promised to send to the Senate to-morrow with a view to eliciting an opinion from that body whether it will be expedient to sign a Treaty on the basis of the stipulations proposed in the draft.

I have the honour to inclose a copy of this draft.

Inclosure in No. 10.

Draft of Reciprocity Treaty to be submitted to the Senate.

HER Majesty the Queen of Great Britain and the United States of America, being desirous of improving the commerce and navigation between their respective territories and people, and more especially between Her Majesty's possessions in North America and the United States, in such manner as to render the same reciprocally beneficial, have respectively named Plenipotentiaries to confer and agree thereupon, that is to say:—

* * * * *

Who, after having communicated to each other their respective full powers, found in good and due form, have agreed upon the following Articles:—

ARTICLE I.

It is agreed by the High Contracting Parties that, in addition to the liberty secured to the United States' fishermen by the Convention between Great Britain and the United States, signed at London on the 20th day of October, 1818, of taking, curing, and drying fish on certain coasts of the British North American Colonies therein defined, the inhabitants of the United States shall have, in common with the subjects of Her Britannic Majesty, the liberty, for the term of years mentioned in Article XV of this Treaty, to take fish of every kind, except shell-fish, on the sea-coasts and shores, and in the bays, harbours, and creeks of the Provinces of Quebec, Nova Scotia, and New Brunswick, and the Colony of Prince Edward Island, and of the several islands thereunto adjacent, without being restricted to any distance from the shore, with permission to land upon the said coasts, and shores, and islands, and also upon the Magdalen Islands, for the purpose of drying their nets and curing their fish; provided that, in so doing, they do not interfere with the rights of private property, or with British fishermen, in the peaceable use of any part of the said coasts in their occupancy for the same purpose.

It is understood that the above-mentioned liberty applies solely to the sea fishery, and that the salmon and shad fisheries, and all other fisheries in rivers and the mouths of rivers, are hereby reserved exclusively for British fishermen.

ARTICLE II.

It is agreed by the High Contracting Parties that British subjects shall have, in common with the citizens of the United States, the liberty, for the term of years mentioned in Article XV of this Treaty, to take fish of every kind, except shell-fish, on the eastern sea-coasts and shores of the United States north of the thirty-ninth parallel of north latitude, and on the shores of the several islands thereunto adjacent, and in the bays, harbours, and creeks of the said sea-coasts and shores of the United States and of the said islands, without being restricted to any distance from the shore, with permission to land upon the said coasts of the United States and of the islands aforesaid, for the purpose of drying their nets and curing their fish; provided that, in so doing, they do not interfere with the rights of private property, or with the fishermen of the United States, in the peaceable use of any part of the said coasts in their occupancy for the same purpose.

It is understood that the above-mentioned liberty applies solely to the sea fishery, and that salmon and shad fisheries, and all other fisheries in rivers and mouths of rivers are hereby reserved exclusively for fishermen of the United States.

In case any question should arise between the Government of Her Britannic Majesty and of the United States as to the common right of fishing in places not thus designated as reserved, it is agreed that a Commission shall be appointed to designate such places, and shall be constituted in the same manner, and have the same powers, duties, and authority as the Commission appointed under the said 1st Article of the Treaty of the 5th of June, 1854.

ARTICLE IV.

It is agreed that the Articles enumerated in Schedules A, B, and C, hereunto annexed, being the growth, produce, or manufacture of the Dominion of Canada or of the United States, shall, on their importation from the one country into the other, from the 1st day of July, 1875, to the 30th day of June, 1876 (both included), pay only two-thirds of the duties payable at the date of this Treaty on the importation into such country of such articles respectively; and from the 1st of July, 1876, to the 30th day of June, 1877 (both included), shall pay only one-third of such duties; and on and after the 1st day of July, 1877, for the period of years mentioned in Article XIII of this Treaty, shall be admitted free of duty into each country respectively.

For the term mentioned in Article XIII, no other or higher duty shall be imposed in the United States upon other Articles not enumerated in said Schedules, the growth, produce, or manufacture of Canada: or in Canada, upon such other articles, the growth, produce, or manufacture of the United States, than are respectively imposed upon like articles, the growth, produce, or manufacture of Great Britain, or of any other country.

ARTICLE V.

It is agreed that the Canadian canals on the main route from Lake Erie to Montreal, shall be enlarged forthwith, at the expense of the Dominion of Canada, so as to admit the passage of vessels drawing twelve feet of water; and the locks on the said canals shall be made of not less than 270 feet in length, 45 feet width, and not less than 12 feet depth on the mitre sill; and that the channel of the St. Lawrence River shall be deepened in the several reaches between the canals wherever the same may be necessary, so as to allow the free passage of vessels drawing twelve feet of water. And the work engaged to be done in this Article, shall be completed by the first day of January, 1880.

ARTICLE VI.

It is agreed that the Government of Canada shall construct, on or before the first day of January, 1880, a canal to connect the St. Lawrence River, at some convenient point at or near Caughnawaga with Lake Champlain. The dimensions of said canal shall be such as to admit the passage of vessels drawing twelve feet of water, and the locks shall be of not less dimensions than those named in the preceding Article.

And the United States engage to urge upon the Government of the State of New York, to cause the existing canal from Whitehall, on Lake Champlain, to Albany, to be enlarged, and if necessary, extended, or another canal, or canals, to be constructed of equal capacity with the proposed Caughnawaga Canal as hereinbefore specified; and the navigation of the Hudson River to be improved, so as to admit the passage from Lake Champlain to the lower waters of the Hudson River, of vessels drawing twelve feet of water.

ARTICLE VII.

Citizens of the United States may, during the term of years mentioned in Article XIII of this Treaty, carry in their vessels cargo and passengers from one Canadian port to another on the great lakes or River St. Lawrence. Reciprocally, inhabitants of Canada, subjects of Her Britannic Majesty, may, during the like period, carry in their vessels cargo and passengers from one port of the United States on the great lakes or River St. Lawrence to another on the said lakes or river. Citizens of the United States in their vessels, and inhabitants of Canada, subjects of Her Britannic Majesty, in their vessels, may, during the like term, carry cargo and passengers from any port of the United States or of Canada on the Red River or the waters connecting therewith, to any other port on the said river or waters connecting therewith.

ARTICLE VIII.

It is agreed that for the term of years mentioned in Article XIII of this Treaty, the citizens of the United States shall enjoy the use of the Welland, the St. Lawrence, and other canals in the Dominion of Canada (including the proposed Caughnawaga Canal) on terms of equality with the inhabitants of the Dominion of Canada.

And that, without interfering with the right of the Government of Canada, to impose such tolls on the aforesaid Canadian canals respectively, as it may think fit, the tolls shall be levied in relation to the number of locks on each canal without any drawback or discrimination, whatever the destination of the vessels, or whether one or more canal or canals or part of a canal be passed.

And it is also agreed, that for the like term of years, the inhabitants of Canada shall enjoy the use of the St. Clair Flats Canal, on terms of equality with the inhabitants of the United States, and that the navigation of Lake Champlain and of Lake Michigan, shall be free and open for the purposes of commerce to the inhabitants of Canada, subject to any laws and regulations of the United States, or of the States bordering thereon respectively, not inconsistent with such privilege of free navigation.

And the United States further engage to urge upon the Governments of the States of New York and of Michigan, to secure to the inhabitants of Canada the use of the Erie, the Whitehall, the Sault Ste. Marie Canals, and of any enlarged, or extended, or new canal, or other improvement connecting Lake Champlain with the lower waters of the Hudson River, which may be made as contemplated in Article VI, on terms of equality with the inhabitants of the United States.

And it is mutually agreed that full power shall be given and allowed to tranship cargo from vessels into canal boats and from canal boats into vessels at either terminus of every canal.

And further, that if the use of the Erie and Whitehall, or other canal connecting Lake Champlain with the lower waters of the Hudson River and of the Sault Ste. Marie Canal, be not granted to the inhabitants of Canada, on terms of equality with the citizens of the United States as contemplated in this Article, then the use of the proposed Caughnawaga Canal by citizens of the United States, as above contemplated, shall be suspended and cease until the use of the said canals in the United States shall be secured to the inhabitants of Canada as above contemplated.

ARTICLE IX.

For the term of years mentioned in Article XIII of this Treaty vessels of all kinds built in the United States may be purchased by inhabitants of Canada, subjects of Great Britain, and registered in Canada as Canadian vessels; and reciprocally, vessels of all kinds built in Canada may be purchased by citizens of the United States, and registered in the United States as United States' vessels.

ARTICLE X.

A joint Commission shall be established and maintained at joint expense during the operation of this Treaty for advising the erection and proper regulation of all lighthouses on the great lakes common to both countries, necessary to the security of the shipping thereon.

ARTICLE XI.

A joint Commission shall also be established at joint expense and maintained during the continuance of the Treaty, to promote the propagation of fish in the inland waters common to both countries and to enforce the laws enacted for the protection of the fish and fishing grounds.

ARTICLE XII.

It is further agreed that, the provisions and stipulations of this Treaty shall extend to the Colony of Newfoundland so far as they are applicable. But if the Imperial Parliament, the Legislature of Newfoundland, or the Congress of the United States, shall not embrace the Colony of Newfoundland in their laws enacted for carrying the foregoing Articles into effect, then this Article shall be of no effect; but the omission to make provision by law to give it effect, by either of the Legislative bodies aforesaid, shall not in any way impair any other Articles of this Treaty.

ARTICLE XIII.

This Treaty shall take effect as soon as the laws required to carry it into operation shall have been passed by the Imperial Parliament of Great Britain and by the Parliament of the Dominion of Canada on the one hand, and by the Congress of the United States on the other. If such legislative assent shall not have been given within months from the date hereof, then this Treaty shall be null and void. But such legislative assent having been given, this Treaty shall remain in force for the period of twenty-one years from the date at which it shall come into operation, and further until the expiration of three years after either of the High Contracting Parties shall have given notice to the other of its wish to terminate the same; each of the High Contracting Parties being at liberty to give such notice to the other at the end of the said period of twenty-one years or at any time afterward.

ARTICLE XIV.

When the ratifications of this Treaty shall have been exchanged and the laws required to carry it into operation shall have been passed by the Imperial Parliament of Great Britain by the Parliament of the Dominion of Canada on the one hand, and by the Congress of the United States on the other hand, then Articles XXII, XXIII, XXIV, and XXV of the Treaty of May 8, 1871, between Great Britain and the United States, shall become null and void.

ARTICLE XV.

This Treaty shall be duly ratified by Her Britannic Majesty and by the President of the United States, and the ratifications shall be exchanged either at Washington or at London within months from the date hereof, or earlier, if possible.

Sir,

Foreign Office, July 3, 1874.

I HAVE received your despatch of the 17th ultimo, forwarding the amended draft Reciprocity Treaty which Mr. Fish has promised to submit to the Senate; and I have to state to you that Her Majesty's Government approve your proceedings in the matter.

I am, &c.

(Signed) DERBY.

No. 12.

The Earl of Derby to Mr. Thornton.

(Extract.)

Foreign Office, July 3, 1874.

I HAVE considered the question of the revival of the Fisheries Commission in communication with Her Majesty's Secretary of State for the Colonies, who has also ascertained the views of the Canadian Government on the subject; and I have to instruct you to address a note to Mr. Fish stating that, on the understanding that the draft Reciprocity Treaty, as agreed to by him, will be considered by the Senate in December next, Her Majesty's Government will await the final result of the consideration which the Treaty may then receive in the Senate, before taking any fresh steps with regard to the Fisheries Commission.

You will add that Her Majesty's Government wish it to be clearly understood that their right to revert to the provisions of the Treaty of Washington for the appointment of the Fisheries Commission is in no way prejudiced by the delay that has occurred or may occur in consequence of the proceedings with reference to the Reciprocity Treaty.

No. 13.

Sir E. Thornton to the Earl of Derby.—(Received July 5.)

(Extract.)

Washington, June 23, 1874.

WITH reference to my despatch of yesterday's date, I have the honour to inform your Lordship that the draft Treaty for regulating reciprocal commercial relations between the United States and Canada was taken into consideration by the Senate yesterday afternoon in secret session. Mr. Brown and I have not yet been able to learn the precise decision which has been come to upon the subject; but we understand that the Senate, being of opinion that the time was too short to go into a thorough examination of so important a question, decided that its consideration should be postponed till the session of Congress, to be held in December next.

United States.
